

Congressional Record

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES

OF THE

THIRD SESSION OF THE
SIXTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS

OF

THE UNITED STATES
OF AMERICA

AND INDEX

VOLUME LXIII—PART 1

NOVEMBER 20 TO DECEMBER 4, 1922

WASHINGTON
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE
1922

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES

THIRD SESSION OF THE
SIXTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS

THE UNITED STATES
OF AMERICA

AND INDEX

VOLUME LXIII—PART I

NOVEMBER 20 TO FEBRUARY 1, 1902

UNIVERSITY LIBRARY OF MICHIGAN

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE
WASHINGTON
1902

Congressional Record.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS THIRD SESSION.

SENATE.

MONDAY, November 20, 1922.

The third session of the Sixty-seventh Congress commenced this day at the Capitol, in the city of Washington, in pursuance of the proclamation of the President of the United States of the 9th day of November, 1922.

The VICE PRESIDENT (CALVIN COOLIDGE, of Massachusetts) called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, as we meet together in special session we humbly crave Thy blessing. Grant that every act may receive Thy help, and that in all the deliberations of these days nothing but good shall be the outcome of the discussions.

We would not forget the family that has been afflicted, and while we think of the sorrow in the vacancy here we humbly beseech Thee for abundant comfort, Thou God of all consolation to widow and children. Reveal Thyself to us along the path of life until the journey ends, to Thy glory. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE PROCLAMATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proclamation of the President of the United States convening Congress in extraordinary session.

The Secretary (George A. Sanderson) read the proclamation, as follows:

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas public interests require that the Congress of the United States should be convened in extra session at 12 o'clock noon on the 20th day of November, 1922, to receive such communication as may be made by the Executive:

Now, therefore, I, Warren G. Harding, President of the United States, do hereby proclaim and declare that an extraordinary occasion requires the Congress of the United States to convene in extra session at the Capitol in the city of Washington on the 20th day of November, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon, of which all persons who shall at that time be entitled to act as Members thereof are hereby required to take notice.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 9th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1922, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-seventh.

[SEAL.]

WARREN G. HARDING.

By the President:

CHARLES E. HUGHES,
Secretary of State.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I make the point of no quorum. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk (John C. Crockett) called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Ernst	McKinley	Smith
Borah	Fletcher	McNary	Smoot
Brandeggee	France	Nelson	Spencer
Broussard	Gooding	Nicholson	Stanfield
Bursum	Harrell	Norris	Sterling
Calder	Harris	Overman	Sutherland
Cameron	Harrison	Owen	Swanson
Capper	Hefflin	Page	Trammell
Caraway	Hitchcock	Pepper	Walsh, Mass.
Colt	Kellogg	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
Culberson	Keyes	Ransdell	Warren
Cummins	Ladd	Reed, Pa.	Watson
Curtis	La Follette	Sheppard	Weller
Dial	Lodge	Shields
Edge	McCumber	Shortridge
Elkins	McKellar	Simmons

Mr. HEFLIN. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] is absent in attendance upon the funeral of William G. Sharp, deceased, former ambassador to France.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 357), which was read by the Assistant Secretary (Henry M. Rose), considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled, and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 358), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The Vice President appointed Mr. LODGE and Mr. SIMMONS as the committee on the part of the Senate.

HOOR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 359), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the hour of daily meeting of the Senate be 12 o'clock meridian until otherwise ordered.

DEATH OF SENATOR THOMAS E. WATSON.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, it is my sad duty to announce the death of my colleague, Hon. THOMAS E. WATSON, which occurred on September 26 in Washington, D. C.

His death was caused by overwork in his feeble condition. Time and time again I had urged him not to work so hard and not to remain so closely confined in the Senate, but he felt it his duty to be here battling for the common people whom he loved so well. No man in my State had so many personal friends, whose devotion to him made them followers at all times, and the number was larger at his death than ever before. He was the author of several histories which are regarded the world over as authorities. While a Member of the House he was the author of the first bill providing an appropriation for rural free mail delivery.

I shall not enumerate to-day his great services, but at the proper time I shall ask the Senate to set apart a day for memorial services.

I now submit the following resolutions and ask for their adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 360) were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow the announcement of the death of the Hon. THOMAS E. WATSON, late a Senator from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased Senator.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Senator the Senate do now adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions submitted by the Senator from Georgia.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to, and the Senate (at 12 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, November 21, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, November 20, 1922.

This being the day fixed by the proclamation of the President for the meeting of the third session of the Sixty-seventh Congress, the Members of the House of Representatives assembled in their Hall, and at 12 o'clock noon were called to order by the Speaker, Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLET.

PRESIDENT'S PROCLAMATION.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the proclamation of the President.

The Clerk read as follows:

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA—A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas public interests require that the Congress of the United States should be convened in extra session at 12 o'clock noon on the 20th day of November, 1922, to receive such communication as may be made by the Executive:

Now, therefore, I, Warren G. Harding, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim and declare that an extraordinary occasion requires the Congress of the United States to convene in extra session at the Capitol in the city of Washington on the 20th day of November, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon, of which all persons who shall at that time be entitled to act as Members thereof are hereby required to take notice.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 9th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1922, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-seventh.

[SEAL.]

WARREN G. HARDING.

By the President:

CHARLES E. HUGHES,

Secretary of State.

PRAYER.

The SPEAKER. The Chaplain will offer prayer.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, in all the earth Thou art the King of kings and the Lord of lords. Glory be to Thee from everlasting to everlasting. From Thy throne of infinite wisdom look with great favor upon our country, upon our Christian institutions, upon our President, and give gracious protection and nurturing care to all our fellow citizens. The Lord be pleased to direct the deliberations of this assembly. Bless all with vigor of mind and strength of body, and keep us in the realm of Thy love and in the domain of Thy kingdom. In all councils may decisions rest upon truth and righteousness. Let all friendships be heightened and transfigured with Thee, all leisure be deepened into peace, and all uncertainty strengthened into hope. Shadow our families with Thy tender, loving care. Bless officers and pages and all others who serve. O may the joy of our lives be in the sunshine of Thy mercy breaking through the mystery of Thy providence. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

ROLL CALL BY STATES.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll by States.

The Clerk called the roll by States, when the following Members answered to their names:

ALABAMA.

John R. Tyson.
Henry B. Steagall.
Lamar Jeffers.
William B. Bowling.

William B. Oliver.
Edward B. Almon.
George Huddleston.
William B. Bankhead.

ARIZONA.

Carl Hayden.

ARKANSAS.

William J. Driver.
William A. Oldfield.
John N. Tillman.

Otis Wingo.
Tilman B. Parks.

CALIFORNIA.

Clarence F. Lea.
John E. Raker.
Charles F. Curry.
Julius Kahn.

Arthur M. Free.
Walter F. Lineberger.
Philip D. Swing.

COLORADO.

William N. Valle.

Charles B. Timberlake.

CONNECTICUT.

E. Hart Fenn.

John Q. Tilson.

DELAWARE.

Caleb R. Layton.

FLORIDA.

Frank Clark.

John H. Smithwick.

Frank Park.
Charles R. Crisp.
William D. Upshaw.
James W. Wise.

Burton L. French.

Martin B. Madden.
James R. Mann.
Elliott W. Sprout.
John J. Gorman.
Stanley H. Kunz.
Fred A. Britten.
Carl R. Chindblom.
Charles E. Fuller.

John S. Benham.
Everett Sanders.
Richard N. Elliott.
Merrill Moores.

William F. Kopp.
Harry E. Hull.
Cyrenus Cole.

Daniel R. Anthony, jr.
Edward C. Little.
Philip P. Campbell.

David H. Kincheloe.
Charles F. Ogden.
Arthur B. Rouse.
Ralph Gilbert.

James O'Connor.
H. Garland Dupré.
Whitell P. Martin.
John N. Sandlin.

Carroll L. Beedy.
John E. Nelson.

T. Alan Goldsborough.
Albert A. Blakeney.
John Philip Hill.

Allen T. Treadway.
Frederick H. Gillett.
Calvin D. Paige.
John Jacob Rogers.
A. Platt Andrew.

Earl C. Michener.
John C. Ketcham.
Carl E. Mapes.
Patrick H. Kelley.

Sydney Anderson.
Charles R. Davis.
Oscar E. Keller.

John E. Rankin.
Bill G. Lowrey.
Thomas U. Sisson.

Frank C. Millsbaugh.
William W. Rucker.
Henry F. Lawrence.
Charles L. Faust.
William O. Atkeson.

Albert W. Jefferis.
Robert E. Evans.

Francis F. Patterson, jr.
Elijah C. Hutchinson.
Ernest R. Ackerman.
Randolph Perkins.

Frederick C. Hicks.
John Kissel.
Thomas H. Cullen.
Ardolph L. Kline.
Michael J. Hogan.
Andrew N. Petersen.
Lester D. Volk.
Meyer London.
Christopher D. Sullivan.
Nathan D. Perlman.
John F. Carew.
Walter M. Chandler.

Claude Kitchin.
Edward W. Pou.
Charles M. Stedman.

GEORGIA.

Gordon Lee.
Carl Vinson.
William C. Lankford.
William W. Larsen.

IDAHO.

Addison T. Smith.

ILLINOIS.

William J. Graham.
Clifford Ireland.
Frank H. Funk.
Allen F. Moore.
William A. Rodenberg.
Thomas S. Williams.
Richard Yates.

INDIANA.

William R. Wood.
Milton Kraus.
Louis W. Fairfield.
Andrew J. Hickey.

IOWA.

Cassius C. Dowell.
L. J. Dickinson.

KANSAS.

Homer Hoch.
James G. Strong.
J. N. Tincher.

KENTUCKY.

William J. Fields.
John W. Langley.
John M. Robison.

LOUISIANA.

Riley J. Wilson.
George K. Favrot.
Ladislav Lazaro.
James B. Aswell.

MAINE.

Ira G. Hersey.

MARYLAND.

J. Charles Linthicum.
Sydney E. Mudd.
Frederick N. Zihlman.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Frederick W. Dallinger.
Peter F. Tague.
George Holden Tinkham.
William S. Greene.

MICHIGAN.

Louis C. Cramton.
James C. McLaughlin.
Roy O. Woodruff.
Frank D. Scott.

MINNESOTA.

Walter H. Newton.
Harold Knutson.
Andrew J. Volstead.

MISSISSIPPI.

Ross A. Collins.
Percy E. Quin.
James W. Collier.

MISSOURI.

Sidney C. Roach.
Theodore W. Hukriede.
Leonidas C. Dyer.
Edw. D. Hays.
Isaac V. McPherson.

MONTANA.

Carl W. Riddick.

NEBRASKA.

Melvin O. McLaughlin.
William E. Andrews.

NEVADA.

Samuel S. Arentz.

NEW JERSEY.

Amos H. Radcliffe.
Richard Wayne Parker.
Frederick R. Lehlbach.
Archibald E. Olpp.

NEW YORK.

Isaac Siegel.
Benjamin L. Fairchild.
Hamilton Fish, jr.
Charles B. Ward.
James S. Parker.
Frank Crowther.
John D. Clarke.
Walter W. Magee.
Archie D. Sanders.
Clarence MacGregor.
Daniel A. Reed.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Homer L. Lyon.
Alfred L. Bulwinkle.

NORTH DAKOTA.
George M. Young.

A. E. B. Stephens.
Roy G. Fitzgerald.
Simeon D. Fess.
R. Clint Cole.
William W. Chalmers.
Israel M. Foster.
Edwin D. Ricketts.
John C. Speaks.

Alice M. Robertson.
Charles D. Carter.

Willis C. Hawley.

William S. Vare.
George S. Graham.
Harry C. Ransley.
George W. Edmonds.
James J. Connolly.
George P. Darrow.
Thomas S. Butler.
Henry W. Watson.
William W. Griest.
Clarence D. Coughlin.
John Reber.
Fred B. Gerner.
Edgar R. Kiess.
I. Clinton Kline.

W. Turner Logan.
James F. Byrnes.
Fred H. Dominick.

Charles A. Christopherson.
Royal C. Johnson.

B. Carroll Reece.
J. Will Taylor.
Wynne F. Clouse.

John C. Box.
Morgan G. Sanders.
Sam Rayburn.
Hatton W. Summers.
Clay Stone Briggs.
Daniel E. Garrett.
Joseph J. Mansfield.

Frank L. Greene.

Schuyler Otis Bland.
Joseph T. Deal.
Andrew J. Montague.
J. M. Hooker.

John F. Miller.
Lindley H. Hadley.
Albert Johnson.

Stuart F. Reed.
Harry C. Woodyard.

Henry Allen Cooper.
John M. Nelson.
Florian Lampert.
Joseph D. Beck.

OHIO.

James T. Begg.
Charles L. Knight.
Joseph H. Himes.
W. M. Morgan.
John G. Cooper.
Miner G. Norton.
Harry C. Gahn.

OKLAHOMA.

L. M. Gensman.
James V. McClintic.

OREGON.

Nicholas J. Sinnott.

PENNSYLVANIA.

John M. Rose.
Adam M. Wyant.
Henry W. Temple.
Milton W. Shreve.
William H. Kirkpatrick.
Nathan L. Strong.
Harris J. Bixler.
Stephen G. Porter.
M. Clyde Kelly.
John M. Morin.
Guy E. Campbell.
Thomas S. Crago.
Anderson H. Walters.
Joseph McLaughlin.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

William F. Stevenson.
Philip H. Stoll.
Hampton P. Fulmer.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

William Williamson.

TENNESSEE.

Ewin L. Davis.
Finis J. Garrett.
Hubert F. Fisher.

TEXAS.

James P. Buchanan.
Tom Connally.
Fritz G. Lanham.
Harry M. Wurzbach.
John N. Garner.
Thomas L. Blanton.
Marvin Jones.

VERMONT.

Porter H. Dale.

VIRGINIA.

James P. Woods.
Thomas W. Harrison.
R. Walton Moore.

WASHINGTON.

John W. Summers.
J. Stanley Webster.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Leonard S. Echols.

WISCONSIN.

Edward E. Browne.
James A. Frear.
Adolphus P. Nelson.

WYOMING.

[At large.]

Frank W. Mondell.

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and eighty-one Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MEMBERS ELECT.

The SPEAKER. The following certificates of Members elect are on file:

Mr. JAMES H. MACLAFFERTY, sixth California district.
Mr. A. R. HUMPHREY, sixth Nebraska district.
Mr. CHARLES L. ABERNETHY, third North Carolina district.
Mr. CLARENCE W. TURNER, seventh Tennessee district.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, Mrs. WINNIFRED MASON HUCK has been elected as a Member of the House at large from the State of Illinois to fill the vacancy caused by the death of her father. There is no contest or question about her election. Her credentials have not yet arrived. I ask unanimous consent that she may now take the oath of office.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request?
There was no objection.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, Mr. CHARLES L. GIFFORD has been elected from the sixteenth Massachusetts district. He is present. There is no question about his election, no contest, but the certificate has not yet arrived. I ask unanimous consent that he may be sworn in.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request?
There was no objection.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY, Mrs. HUCK, Mr. GIFFORD, Mr. HUMPHREY of Nebraska, Mr. ABERNETHY, and Mr. TURNER appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office prescribed by law.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming offers a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 440.

Resolved, That a committee of three Members be appointed by the Speaker on the part of the House of Representatives to join with the committee on the part of the Senate to notify the President of the United States that a quorum of each House is assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to, and the Speaker appointed as the committee on the part of the House Mr. MONDELL, Mr. MADSEN, and Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee.

NOTIFICATION TO THE SENATE.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 441.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has appeared and that the House is ready to proceed with business.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 442.

Resolved, That until otherwise ordered the hour of daily meeting of the House of Representatives shall be 12 o'clock meridian.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BRAND, indefinitely, on account of serious illness (at the request of Mr. CRISP).

To Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family (at the request of Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee).

To Mr. WEAVER, indefinitely, on account of illness (at the request of Mr. BULWINKLE).

To Mr. BURTON, for three days, on account of illness.

To Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. OSBORNE, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. DENISON, for 10 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. STEENERSON, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. GALLIVAN, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. MCFADDEN, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. DUNBAR, indefinitely, on account of serious illness (at the request of Mr. ELLIOTT).

To Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. BLACK, for two weeks, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. DRANE, indefinitely, on account of illness (at the request of Mr. BOWLING).

To Mr. JACOWAY, for one week, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. SWANK, for one week, on account of illness in his family.

DEATH OF SENATOR THOMAS E. WATSON, OF GEORGIA.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my painful duty to announce to the House that on the 26th of last September the distinguished Senator from Georgia, THOMAS E. WATSON, departed this life. At some future date I shall request the House to set apart a date when friends of the distinguished Senator may be given an opportunity to pay testimony to his high character and public services. I offer the following resolutions.

The Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

House Resolution 443.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. THOMAS E. WATSON, a Senator of the United States from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased Senator.

The resolutions were agreed to.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE CHARLES R. CONNELL, OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my sad duty to announce the death of the Hon. CHARLES R. CONNELL, a Member of Congress from the State of Pennsylvania. His death occurred in the city of Scranton subsequent to the adjournment of the regular session of Congress. At the proper time I shall request the House to set apart a day when there may be tributes paid to his life and public services. I submit the following resolutions.

The Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

House Resolution 444.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. CHARLES R. CONNELL, a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolutions were agreed to.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE JOHN I. NOLAN, OF CALIFORNIA.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound sorrow that I announce to the Members of the House the death of my late colleague JOHN I. NOLAN, a Member of Congress from the State of California. He was chairman of the Committee on Labor and a member of the steering committee of this House. He died last Saturday morning at St. Mary's Hospital, San Francisco. At a later date I shall ask the House to set aside a day on which his public services can be properly commemorated. In the meantime I offer the following resolutions:

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 445.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. JOHN I. NOLAN, a Representative from the State of California.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolutions were agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Senator and Representatives, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, November 21, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

694. A letter from the Public Printer, transmitting statement of travel performed by officers and employees of the Government Printing Office during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922; to the Committee on Appropriations.

695. A letter from the Public Printer, transmitting the average number of employees of the Government Printing Office receiving increased compensation during the first four months of the fiscal year 1923; to the Committee on Appropriations.

696. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a bill to provide for the immediate needs of enlisted men upon discharge from the naval service for the good of the service; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

697. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to grant leave of absence to officers and employees of the United States or of the District of Columbia when ordered to duty with the United States Naval Reserve Forces or the United States Marine Corps Reserve; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

698. A letter from the Second Assistant Secretary of Labor, transmitting list of useless papers to be disposed of; to the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers.

699. A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a detailed statement concerning the publications issued by the Department of Commerce during the fiscal year 1922; to the Committee on Printing.

700. A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting request for the immediate passage of H. R. 8980, for the relief of Prospero Monterroso; to the Committee on Claims.

701. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report of the American National Red Cross for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

702. A letter from the Acting Postmaster General, transmitting a statement showing the post offices where it was necessary to employ clerical assistance at a higher rate than $1,200 a year and the amount authorized at each office; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

703. A letter from the Public Printer, transmitting statement showing the purchases, exchanges, and repairs of type-writing machines in the Government Printing Office from July 1, 1921, to June 30, 1922; to the Committee on Appropriations.

704. A letter from the Second Assistant Secretary of Labor, transmitting detailed statement of the expenditures from the appropriations "Contingent expenses, Department of Labor, 1920," for the period from November 16, 1921, to June 30, 1922; "Contingent expenses, Department of Labor, 1921," for the period from November 16, 1921, to November 15, 1922; "Contingent expenses, Department of Labor, 1922," for the period from November 16, 1921, to November 15, 1922; and "Contingent expenses, Department of Labor, 1923," for the period from July 1, 1922, to November 15, 1922; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Labor.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. FOCHT: Committee on the District of Columbia. H. R. 12172. A bill to regulate pawnbrokers and their business in the District of Columbia; without amendment (Rept. No. 1256). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HILL: A bill (H. R. 12815) to pay adjusted compensation in three years in cash to veterans of the World War, to provide money to pay such adjusted compensation, to amend the revenue act of 1921, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BRITTEN: A bill (H. R. 12816) to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War through a tax on the manufacture, importation, and sale of beer and light wines, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. CURRY: A bill (H. R. 12818) providing for the adjustment of claims against the Government railroad in the Territory of Alaska; to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 12819) to amend the grade percentages of enlisted men as prescribed in section 4b of the national defense act, as amended; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12820) to prohibit the unauthorized wearing, manufacture, or sale of medals and badges awarded by the War Department; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WURZBACH: A bill (H. R. 12821) making provisions for the improvement of the channel from Aransas Pass to Corpus Christi, Tex.; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. PARKS of Arkansas: A bill (H. R. 12822) to enlarge and improve the post-office building at Camden, Ark.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 12823) to provide for the establishment of motor-truck mail routes to facilitate the collection and delivery of food products; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska: A bill (H. R. 12824) to amend the act of Congress approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. JONES of Texas: A bill (H. R. 12825) amending section 1322 of the revenue act of 1921; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ROGERS: A bill (H. R. 12826) authorizing the President to declare an embargo on coal; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12827) declaring an embargo on anthracite coal; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MORIN: A bill (H. R. 12828) to create a department of physical training at the United States Military Academy; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 12829) for the purchase of a site and for the erection of a post-office building at Eldorado, Ill.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. MADDEN: A bill (H. R. 12830) to forbid the payment of claims by the United States Shipping Board and/or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation unless such claims are filed within a certain time; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. SWING: A bill (H. R. 12831) to authorize the construction of a railroad bridge across the Colorado River near Yuma, Ariz.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MADDEN: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 388) to repeal an appropriation for payment of claims for damages to and loss of private property included in the deficiency act approved September 22, 1922; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. ZIHLMAN: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 389) authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission to give priority in car service in the interest of equitable distribution of building materials intended for immediate consumption; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BURROUGHS: A bill (H. R. 12832) granting an increase of pension to Mary F. Conway; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON: A bill (H. R. 12833) granting a pension to Gertrude A. Robinson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12834) for the relief of Vinson Slasor; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DYER: A bill (H. R. 12835) for the relief of E. S. Bailey; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12836) granting an increase of pension to Lucian Lindsey; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: A bill (H. R. 12837) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Hall; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KENNEDY: A bill (H. R. 12838) granting an increase of pension to Maria L. Westgate; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McPHERSON: A bill (H. R. 12839) granting a pension to Jerry M. Richardson; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12840) granting an increase of pension to Louisa L. Moore; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12841) granting a pension to Samuel T. King; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12842) granting a pension to Mollie F. Stinson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12843) granting a pension to Abram Jones; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12844) granting a pension to Leroy S. Klger; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12845) granting a pension to William Karch; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MacGREGOR: A bill (H. R. 12846) granting a pension to Frank Karazewski; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12847) granting an increase of pension to Harry W. Feldman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MORIN: A bill (H. R. 12848) to reimburse Michael F. Callaghan for injuries sustained in an accident with a Government-owned motor truck; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MOORE of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 12849) granting an increase of pension to James H. Barker; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PURNELL: A bill (H. R. 12850) granting an increase of pension to Grover Colter; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12851) granting a pension to Lavina H. Etnire; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12852) granting a pension to Jesse Wilcox; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12853) granting a pension to Frances E. Dunwoody; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RUCKER: A bill (H. R. 12854) granting a pension to James W. Fisher; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12855) granting a pension to Freeman A. Burris; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROBSON: A bill (H. R. 12856) granting an increase of pension to Cefie J. Cromer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12857) granting a pension to Sarah E. Campbell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12858) granting a pension to Litha I. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

6399. By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of E. L. Shepard, Frank Rieder, Raymond H. Bosworth, Mabel H. Benjamin, B. Little, George H. Zenner, C. A. Lehmann, G. C. Purdy, John W. Woodworth, and F. E. Latta, all of Chicago, Ill., urging an investigation of the prohibition enforcement in Chicago; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

6400. Also (by request), petition of the Presbytery of Dayton, Ohio, urging the passage of H. J. Res. 131; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

6401. Also (by request), petition of the Municipal Assembly of Dorado, P. R., indorsing Hon. E. Mont Reilly and his administration; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

6402. Also (by request), petition of Northern Star Sisterhood, No. 107, of Monessen, Pa., favoring the passage of the Sterling-Towner bill; to the Committee on Education.

6403. Also (by request), petition of Kennedy Baptist Church, Kennedy, N. Y., favoring the passage of H. J. Res. 159; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

6404. Also (by request), petition of citizens' organizations of Lithuanian extraction in Springfield, Ill., opposing curtailing the rights of foreigners; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

6405. Also (by request), petition of citizens' organizations of Lithuanian extraction in Greater New York, opposing the passage of H. R. 10860; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

6406. Also (by request), petition of the Baptist Missionary Convention of the State of New York, favoring the passage of H. J. Res. 159; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

6407. Also (by request), petition of Franklin Post, No. 1, American Legion, of Ohio, opposing allowances of any kind to soldiers of the World War dishonorably discharged from the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

6408. Also (by request), petition of the First Church, Worcester, Mass., urging the passage of H. J. Res. 131; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

6409. Also (by request), petition of the First Baptist Church, South Bend, Ind., favoring the passage of H. J. Res. 159; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

6410. Also (by request), petition of the woman's auxiliary to the presiding bishop and council, Protestant Episcopal Church, New York, approving the work of the hostesses in the Army camps and posts; to the Committee on Appropriations.

6411. Also (by request), petition of the Fifty-second Congress of the American Prison Association, urging the passage of House bill 12123, for the establishment of an industrial reformatory at Camp Grant, Ill.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

6412. Also (by request), petition of the Western Pennsylvania Ministerial Association of the Disciples of Christ, New Kensington, Pa., opposing war except for just principles; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

6413. By Mr. FENN: Petition of the Woman's Board of Missions of the Congregational Churches, for protection of peoples of the Near East; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

6414. By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Petition of the Thurston County Pomona Grange, Tumwater, Wash., opposing the ship subsidy bill; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

6415. By Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: Petition of Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, praying for changes in the immigration laws; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

6416. Also, petition of Cyprus Sisterhood, No. 65, Dames of Malta, Turtle Creek, Pa., and citizens of Pennsylvania, asking for the passage of the Towner-Sterling bill for the creation of a department of education; to the Committee on Education.

6417. By Mr. KENNEDY: Protest of citizens of Newport, R. I., of Greek and Armenian origin who served in armed forces of the United States in the World War, against the massacre of Christian inhabitants of Asia Minor by Turks; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

6418. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of Street & Smith Corporation, New York, N. Y., favoring the passage of House bill 11965; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

6419. By Mr. SWING: Petition of Fourth State Convention of the American Legion of California, favoring the passage of House bill 11449, for the protection and development of the lower Colorado River Basin; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, November 21, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father and our God, we thank Thee for another day—another day of opportunity, another day of possibility—and we recognize the privilege of making this day potent with hallowed influences that we can serve better our generation by Thy will. We invoke Thy favor here this morning and ask Thee to direct the councils of the day to Thy great honor and glory. Through Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Vice President being absent, the President pro tempore, ALBERT B. CUMMINS, a Senator from the State of Iowa, took the chair.

JOSEPH S. FRELINGHUYSEN, a Senator from the State of New Jersey; FREDERICK HALE, a Senator from the State of Maine; A. OWSLEY STANLEY, a Senator from the State of Kentucky; JAMES W. WADSWORTH, Jr., a Senator from the State of New York; ATLEE POMERENE and FRANK B. WILLIS, the Senators from the State of Ohio, appeared in their seats to-day.

On request of Mr. LODGE and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. LODGE and Mr. SIMMONS appeared, and

Mr. LODGE said:

Mr. President, the committee appointed by the Senate to notify the President have attended to the duty assigned to them and have the honor to report to the Senate that they saw the President of the United States and that he informed them that it was his intention to address the Congress to-day at half past 12 in the Chamber of the House of Representatives.

SENATORS FROM PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I present the credentials of GEORGE WHARTON PEPPER, senior Senator elect from the State of Pennsylvania, and DAVID A. REED, junior Senator elect from the State of Pennsylvania, which I ask may be read.

The credentials were read and ordered to be filed, as follows:

IN THE NAME AND BY AUTHORITY OF THE
COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA,
Executive Department.

To the President of the Senate of the United States:

This is to certify that on the 7th day of November, 1922, GEORGE WHARTON PEPPER was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Pennsylvania a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States until the 4th day of March, 1927.

Witness: His excellency our governor, and our seal hereto affixed at the city of Harrisburg, this 18th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1922.

[SEAL.]

By the governor:

BERNARD J. MYERS,

Secretary of the Commonwealth.

WM. C. SPROUL, Governor.

IN THE NAME AND BY AUTHORITY OF THE
COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA,
Executive Department.

To the President of the Senate of the United States:

This is to certify that on the 7th day of November, 1922, DAVID A. REED was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Pennsylvania a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States until the 4th day of March, 1923.

Witness: His excellency our governor, and our seal hereto affixed at the city of Harrisburg, this 18th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1922.

[SEAL.]

By the governor:

BERNARD J. MYERS,

Secretary of the Commonwealth.

WM. C. SPROUL, Governor.

Mr. LODGE. The Senators elect from Pennsylvania are here and ready to take the oath of office.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no objection, the several Senators elect will be sworn in at the same time.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to that course.

SENATOR FROM DELAWARE.

Mr. BAILL. Mr. President, I present the credentials of THOMAS F. BAYARD, Senator elect from the State of Delaware. I ask that his credentials may be read and that the oath of office may be administered to him.

The credentials were read, and ordered to be filed, as follows:

BY AUTHORITY OF THE STATE OF DELAWARE.

To the President of the Senate of the United States:

Be it known, an election was held in the State of Delaware on Tuesday, the 7th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1922, that being the Tuesday next after the first Monday in said month, in pursuance of the Constitution of the United States and the laws of the State of Delaware, in that behalf, for the election of a Senator for the people of the said State in the Senate of the United States.

Whereas the official certificates or returns of the said election, held in the several counties of the said State, in due manner made out, signed, and executed, have been delivered to me according to the laws of the said State, by the superior court of the said counties; and having examined said returns and enumerated and ascertained the number of votes for each and every candidate or person voted for, for such Senator, I have found THOMAS F. BAYARD to be the person highest in vote, and therefore duly elected Senator of and for the said State in the Senate of the United States for the residue of the constitutional term which commenced on the 4th day of March, in the year of our Lord 1917.

I, William D. Denney, governor, do, therefore, according to the form of the act of the general assembly of the said State and of the act of Congress of the United States, in such case made and provided, declare the said THOMAS F. BAYARD the person highest in vote at the election aforesaid, and therefore duly and legally elected Senator of and for the said State of Delaware in the Senate of the United States, for the residue of the constitutional term which commenced on the 4th day of March in the year of our Lord 1917.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the said State, in obedience to the said act of the general assembly and of the said act of Congress, at Dover, the 15th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1922, and in the year of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-seventh.

[SEAL.]

By the governor:

A. R. BENSON,

Secretary of State.

WM. D. DENNEY,

SENATOR FROM GEORGIA.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, after the death of my late colleague, Thomas E. Watson, the governor of my State appointed as his successor Mrs. REBECCA LATIMER FELTON. Her credentials were sent to the Secretary of the Senate and have been here for some days. I hope no Senator will object to her taking the oath of office. The Senator elect from Georgia, Hon. WALTER F. GEORGE, very generously and very graciously has withheld his credentials in order that Mrs. FELTON may take the oath, and, as I said, I hope no Senator will object. This will not in any way prejudice Mr. GEORGE's claims to his seat in the Senate, to which the people of my State have elected him, and his credentials will be presented to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia will present the certificate of appointment.

Mr. HARRIS. It is in the possession of the Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time,

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that a quorum of the House of Representatives had assembled and that the House was ready for business.

The message also announced that a committee of three were appointed by the Speaker on the part of the House of Representatives to join with the committee on the part of the Senate to wait on the President of the United States and to notify him that a quorum of the two Houses had assembled and that Congress was ready to receive any communication that he might be pleased to make, and that Mr. MONDELL, Mr. MADDEN, and Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee were appointed as the committee on the part of the House.

The message further communicated to the Senate the resolutions of the House unanimously adopted as a tribute to the memory of Hon. THOMAS E. WATSON, late a Senator from the State of Georgia.

The message also communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. CHARLES R. CONNELL, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The message further communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. JOHN I. NOLAN, late a Representative from the State of California, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 11579) to amend section 1 of an act approved January 11, 1922, entitled "An act to permit the city of Chicago to acquire real estate of the United States of America," in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 72) authorizing the two Houses of Congress to assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Tuesday, the 21st day of November, 1922, at 12.30 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Montana to yield to me.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives (H. Con. Res. 72), which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Tuesday, the 21st day of November, 1922, at 12.30 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate concur in the resolution of the House.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I now ask the Senator from Montana to yield further so that the Senate may carry out the order which has just been adopted.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. In the meantime the Senate will stand in recess until the order has been fulfilled.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (at 12 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.). In accordance with the order just adopted, the Senate will now repair to the House of Representatives.

Thereupon the Senate, preceded by its Sergeant at Arms (David S. Barry) and by the President pro tempore and the Secretary (George A. Sanderson), proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The address of the President of the United States this day delivered at a joint meeting of the two Houses of Congress is as follows:

The PRESIDENT. Members of the Congress: Late last February I reported to you relative to the American merchant marine, and recommended legislation which the executive branch of the Government deemed essential to promote our merchant marine and with it our national welfare. Other problems were pressing and other questions pending, and for one reason or another, which need not be recited, the suggested legislation has not progressed beyond a favorable recommendation by the House committee. The committee has given the question a full and painstaking inquiry and study, and I hope that its favorable report speedily will be given the force of law.

It will be helpful in clearing the atmosphere if we start with the frank recognition of divided opinion and determined opposition. It is no new experience. Like proposals have divided the Congress on various previous occasions. Perhaps a more resolute hostility never was manifest before, and I am very sure the need for decisive action—decisive, favorable action—never was so urgent before.

We are not now dealing with a policy founded on theory; we have a problem which is one of grim actuality. We are facing insistent conditions, out of which will come either additional and staggering Government losses and national impotence on the seas, or else the unfurling of the flag on a great American merchant marine commensurate with our commercial importance, to serve as carrier of our cargoes in peace and meet the necessities of our defense in war. There is no thought here and now to magnify the relation of a merchant marine to our national defense. It is enough to recall that we entered the World War almost wholly dependent on our Allies for transportation by sea. We expended approximately three billions, feverishly, extravagantly, wastefully, and impractically. Out of our eagerness to make up for the omissions of peace and to meet the war emergency we builded and otherwise acquired the vast merchant fleet which the Government owns to-day.

In the simplest way I can say it, our immediate problem is not to build and support a merchant shipping, which I hold to be one of the highest and most worthy aspirations of any great people; our problem is to deal with what we now possess. Our problem is to relieve the Public Treasury of the drain it is already meeting. Let us omit particulars about the frenzied war-time building. Possibly we did full as well as could have been done in the anxious circumstances. Let us pass for the moment the vital relationship between a merchant marine and a commercially aspiring nation. Aye, let us suppose for a moment the absurdity that with one $3,000,000,000 experience, and with the incalculable costs in lives and treasure which may be chargeable to our inability promptly to apply our potency—which God forefend happening again—let us momentarily ignore all of these and turn to note the mere business problem, the practical question of dollars and cents with which we are confronted.

The war construction and the later completion of war contracts, where completion was believed to be the greater economy to the Public Treasury, left us approximately 13,200,000 gross tonnage in ships. The figures are nearer 12,500,000 tons now, owing to the scrapping of the wooden fleet. More than half this tonnage is Government owned, and approximately 2,250,000 tons are under Government operation in one form or another. The net loss to the United States Treasury—sums actually taken therefrom in this Government operation—averaged approximately $16,000,000 per month during the year prior to the assumption of responsibility by the present administration. A constant warfare on this loss of public funds, and the draft to service of capable business management and experienced operating directors, have resulted in applied efficiency and enforced economies. It is very gratifying to report the diminution of the losses to $4,000,000 per month, or a total of $50,000,000 a year; but it is intolerable that the Government should continue a policy from which so enormous a Treasury loss is the inevitable outcome. This loss, moreover, attends operation of less than a third of the Government-owned fleet.

It is not, therefore, a question of adding new Treasury burdens to maintain our shipping; we are paying these burdens now. It is not a question of contracting an outlay to support our merchant shipping, because we are paying already. I am not asking your authorization of a new and added draft on the Public Treasury; I am appealing for a program to diminish the burden we are already bearing.

When your executive government knows of public expenditures aggregating fifty millions annually, which it believes could be reduced by half through a change of policy, your government would be unworthy of public trust if such a change were not commended, nay, if it were not insistently urged.

And the pity of it is that our present expenditure in losses is not constructive. It looks to no future attainments. It is utterly ineffective in the establishment of a dependable merchant marine, whereas the encouragement of private ownership and the application of individual initiative would make for a permanent creation, ready and answerable at all times to the needs of the Nation.

But I have not properly portrayed all the current losses to the Public Treasury. We are wearing out our ships without any provision for replacement. We are having these losses through deterioration now, and are charging nothing against our capital account. But the losses are there, and regrettably larger under Government operation than under private control. Only a few years of continued losses on capital account will make these losses through depreciation alone to exceed the fifty millions a year now drawn to cover losses in operation.

The gloomy picture of losses does not end even there. Notwithstanding the known war cost of $3,000,000,000 for the present tonnage, I will not venture to appraise its cash value to-day. It may as well be confessed now as at some later time that in the mad rush to build, in establishing shipyards wherever men would organize to expend Government money, when we made shipbuilders overnight quite without regard to previous occupations or pursuits, we builded poorly, often very poorly. Moreover, we constructed without any formulated program for a merchant marine. The war emergency impelled, and the cry was for ships, any kind of ships. The error is recalled in regret rather than criticism. The point is that our fleet, costing approximately $3,000,000,000, is worth only a fraction of that cost to-day. Whatever that fraction may be, the truth remains that we have no market in which to sell the ships under our present policy, and a program of surrender and sacrifice and the liquidation which is inevitable unless the pending legislation is sanctioned, will cost scores of millions more.

When the question is asked, Why the insistence for the merchant marine act now? the answer is apparent. Waiving every inspiration which lies in a constructive plan for maintaining prudence in safeguarding against another $3,000,000,000 madness if war ever again impels, we have the unavoidable task of wiping out a $50,000,000 annual loss in operation, and losses aggregating many hundreds of millions in worn-out, sacrificed, or scrapped shipping. Then the supreme humiliation, the admission that the United States—our America, once eminent among the maritime nations of the world—is incapable of asserting itself in the peace triumphs on the seas of the world. It would seem to me doubly humiliating when we own the ships and fail in the genius and capacity to turn their prows toward the marts of the world.

This problem can not longer be ignored, its attempted solution can not longer be postponed. The failure of Congress to act decisively will be no less disastrous than adverse action.

Three courses of action are possible, and the choice among them is no longer to be avoided.

The first is constructive—enact the pending bill, under which, I firmly believe, an American merchant marine, privately owned and privately operated, but serving all the people and always available to the Government in any emergency, may be established and maintained.

The second is obstructive—continue Government operations and attending Government losses and discourage private enterprise by Government competition, under which losses are met by the Public Treasury, and witness the continued losses and deterioration until the colossal failure ends in sheer exhaustion.

The third is destructive—involving the sacrifice of our ships abroad or the scrapping of them at home, the surrender of our aspirations, and the confession of our impotence to the world in general and our humiliation before the competing world in particular.

A choice among the three is inevitable. It is unbelievable that the American people or the Congress which expresses their power will consent to surrender and destruction. It is equally unbelievable that our people and the Congress which translates their wishes into action will longer sustain a program of obstruction and attending losses to the Treasury.

I have come to urge the constructive alternative, to reassert an American "We will." I have come to ask you to relieve the responsible administrative branch of the Government from a program upon which failure and hopelessness and staggering losses are written for every page, and let us turn to a program of assured shipping to serve us in war and to give guaranty to our commercial independence in peace.

I know full well the hostility in the popular mind to the word "subsidy." It is stressed by the opposition and associated with "special privilege" by those who are unfailing advocates of Government aid whenever vast numbers are directly concerned. "Government aid" would be a fairer term than "subsidy" in defining what we are seeking to do for our merchant marine, and the interests are those of all the people, even though the aid goes to the few who serve.

If Government aid is a fair term—and I think it is—to apply to authorizations aggregating $75,000,000 to promote good roads for market highways, it is equally fit to be applied to the establishment and maintenance of American market highways on the salted seas. If Government aid is the proper designation for fifteen to forty millions annually expended to improve and maintain inland waterways in aid of commerce, it is a proper designation for a needed assistance to establish and maintain ocean highways where there is actual commerce to be carried.

But call it "subsidy," since there are those who prefer to appeal to mistaken prejudice rather than make frank and logical argument. We might so call the annual loss of fifty millions, which we are paying now without protest by those who most abhor, we might as well call that a "subsidy." If so, I am proposing to cut it in half, approximately, and to the saving thus effected there would be added millions upon millions of further savings through ending losses on capital account—Government capital, out of the Public Treasury, always remember—and there would be at least the promise and the prospect of the permanent establishment of the needed merchant marine.

I challenge every insinuation of favored interests and the enrichment of the special few at the expense of the Public Treasury. I am, first of all, appealing to save the Treasury. Perhaps the unlimited bestowal of Government aid might justify the apprehension of special favoring, but the pending bill, the first ever proposed which carries such a provision, automatically guards against enrichment or perpetuated bestowal. It provides that shipping lines receiving Government aid must have their actual investment and their operating expenses audited by the Government, that Government aid will only be paid until the shipping enterprise earns 10 per cent on actual capital employed, and immediately that when more than 10 per cent earning is reached half of the excess earnings must be applied to the repayment of the Government aid which has been previously advanced. Thus the possible earnings are limited to a very reasonable amount if capital is to be risked and management is to be attracted. If success attends, as we hope it will, the Government outlay is returned, the inspiration of opportunity to earn remains, and American transportation by sea is established.

Though differing in detail, it is not more in proportion to their population and capacity than other great nations have done in aiding the establishment of their merchant marines, and it is timely to recall that we gave them our commerce to aid in their upbuilding, while the American task now is to upbuild and establish in the face of their most active competition. Indeed, the American development will have to overcome every obstacle which may be put in our path, except as international comity forbids. Concern about our policy is not limited to our own domain, though the interest abroad is of very differing character. I hope it is seemly to say it, because it must be said, the maritime nations of the world are in complete accord with the opposition here to the pending measure. They have a perfect right to such an attitude. When we look from their viewpoints we can understand. But I wish to stress the American viewpoint. Ours should be the viewpoint from which one sees American carriers at sea, the dependence of American commerce, and American vessels for American reliance in the event of war. Some of the costly lessons of war must be learned again and again, but our shipping lesson in the World War was much too costly to be effaced from the memory of this or future generations.

Not so many months ago the head of a company operating a fleet of ships under our flag called at the Executive Offices to discuss a permit to transfer his fleet of cargo vessels to a foreign flag, though he meant to continue them in a distinctly American service. He based his request for transfer on the allegation that by such a transfer he could reduce his labor costs alone sufficiently to provide a profit on capital invested. I do not vouch for the accuracy of the statement nor mean to discuss it. The allusion is made to recall that in good conscience Congress has created by law conditions surrounding labor on American ships which shipping men the world over declare result in higher costs of operation under our flag. I frankly rejoice if higher standards for labor on American ships have been established. Merest justice suggests that when Congress fixes these standards it is fair to extend Government aid in maintaining them until world competition is brought to the same high level, or until our shipping lines are so firmly established that they can face world competition alone.

Having discussed in detail the policy and provisions of the pending bill when previously addressing you, I forbear a repetition now. In individual exchanges of opinion not a few in House or Senate have expressed personal sympathy with the purposes of the bill and then uttered a discouraging doubt about the sentiment of their constituencies. It would be most discouraging if a measure of such transcending national importance must have its fate depend on geographical, occupational, professional, or partisan objections. Frankly, I think it loftier statesmanship to support and commend a policy designed to effect the larger good to the Nation than merely to record the too hasty impressions of a constituency. Out of the harmonized aspirations, the fully informed convictions, and the united efforts of all the people will come the greater Republic. Commercial eminence on the seas, ample agencies for the promotion and carrying of our foreign commerce, are of no less importance to the people of Mississippi and the Missouri Valley, the great Northwest, and the Rocky Mountain States than to the seaboard States and industrial communities building inland a thousand miles or more. It is a common cause, with its benefits commonly shared. When people fail in the national viewpoint, and live in the confines of community selfishness or narrowness, the sun of this Republic will have passed its meridian, and our larger aspirations will shrivel in the approaching twilight.

But let us momentarily put aside the aspiring and inspiring viewpoint. The blunt, indisputable fact of the loss of fifty millions a year under Government operation remains; likewise the fast diminishing capital account, the enormous war expenditure, to which we were forced because we had not fittingly encouraged and builded as our commerce expanded in peace. Here are facts to deal with, not fancies wrought out of our political and economic disputes. The abolition of the annual loss and the best salvage of the capital account are of concern to all the people.

It is my firm belief that the combined savings of operating losses and the protection of the capital account through more advantageous sales of our war-built or war-seized ships, because of the favoring policy which the pending bill will establish, will more than pay every dollar expended in Government aid for 25 years to come.

It should be kept in mind that the approximate sum of five millions annually paid for the transport of ocean mails is no new expenditure. It should be kept in mind that the loan fund to encourage building is not new; it is the law already, enacted by the essential unanimous vote of Congress. It is only included in the pending bill in order to amend so as to assure the exaction of a minimum interest rate by the Government, whereas the existing law leaves the grant of building loans subject to any whim of favoritism.

It should be kept in mind, also, that there are assured limitations of the Government aid proposed. The direct aid, with ocean carrying maintained at our present participation, will not reach twenty millions a year, and the maximum direct aid, if our shipping is so promoted that we carry one-half our deep-seas commerce, will not exceed thirty millions annually. At the very maximum of outlay we should be saving twenty millions of our present annual operating loss. If the maximum is ever reached, the establishment of our merchant marine will have been definitely recorded and the Government-owned fleet fortunately liquidated.

From this point of view it is the simple, incontestable wisdom of businesslike dealing to save all that is possible of the annual loss and avoid the millions sure to be lost to the Government's capital account in sacrificing our fleet. But there is a bigger, broader, more inspiring viewpoint, aye, a patriotic viewpoint. I refer to the constructive action of to-day, which offers the only dependable promise of making our war-time inheritance of ships the foundation of a great agency of commerce in peace and an added guaranty of service when it is necessary to our national defense.

Thus far I have been urging Government aid to American shipping, having in mind every interest of our producing population, whether of mine, factory, or farm, because expanding commerce is the foremost thought of every nation in the world to-day.

I believe in Government aid becomingly bestowed. We have aided industry through our tariffs; we have aided railway transportation in land grants and loans. We have aided the construction of market roads and the improvement of inland waterways. We have aided reclamation and irrigation and the development of water powers; we have loaned for seed grains in anticipation of harvests. We expend millions in investigation and experimentation to promote a common benefit, though a limited few are the direct beneficiaries. We have loaned hundreds of millions to promote the marketing of American goods. It has all been commendable and highly worth while.

At the present moment the American farmer is the chief sufferer from the cruel readjustments which follow war's inflations, and befitting Government aid to our farmers is highly essential to our national welfare. No people may safely boast a good fortune which the farmer does not share.

Already this Congress and the administrative branch of the Government have given willing ear to the agricultural plea for postwar relief, and much has been done which has proven helpful. Admittedly, it is not enough. Our credit systems, under Government provision and control, must be promptly and safely broadened to relieve our agricultural distress.

To this problem and such others of pressing importance as reasonably may be dealt with in the short session I shall invite your attention at an early date.

I have chosen to confine myself to the specific problem of dealing with our merchant marine because I have asked you to assemble two weeks in advance of the regularly appointed time to expedite its consideration. The executive branch of the Government would feel itself remiss to contemplate our yearly loss and attending failure to accomplish if the conditions were not pressed for your decision. More, I would feel myself lacking in concern for America's future if I failed to stress the beckoning opportunity to equip the United States to assume a befitting place among the nations of the world whose commerce is inseparable from the good fortunes to which rightfully all peoples aspire.

The Senate returned to its Chamber at 1 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m., and the President pro tempore resumed the chair.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Cummins	France	Hitchcock
Borah	Curtis	Gooding	Kellogg
Brandegee	Dial	Hale	Keyes
Broussard	Edge	Harrell	Ladd
Calder	Elkins	Harris	La Follette
Capper	Ernst	Harrison	Lodge
Colt	Fletcher	Heflin	McKellar

McKinley
McNary
Nelson
Nicholson
Norris
Overman
Owen
Page

Pepper
Pittman
Pomerene
Ransdell
Reed, Pa.
Sheppard
Shields
Shortridge

Simmons
Smith
Smoot
Stanfield
Stanley
Sterling
Sutherland
Swanson

Trammell
Wadsworth
Walsh, Mass.
Walsh, Mont.
Warren
Watson
Weller
Willis

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

SWEARING IN OF SENATORS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, with the consent of the Senator from Montana, I ask that the three Senators whose credentials, which will lead to no discussion whatever, have been presented and who are waiting here to take the oath may be permitted now to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senators from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Delaware will present themselves at the desk.

Mr. PEPPER and Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, escorted by Mr. LODGE, and Mr. BAYARD, escorted by Mr. BALL, advanced to the Vice President's desk, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to them, they took their seats in the Senate.

PUEBLO INDIAN LANDS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana indulge me for just a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to call attention to the bill (S. 3855) to ascertain and settle land claims of persons not Indian within pueblo Indian land, land grants, and reservations in the State of New Mexico, which passed the Senate in the closing days of the session, and which, I think, passed the Senate under a misapprehension as to what its terms are. I ask unanimous consent that the House be requested to return the bill to the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator state what is the purpose of the bill?

Mr. BORAH. The bill relates to certain Indian lands in New Mexico.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho that the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate Senate bill 3855? The Chair hears no objection, and the order is entered.

SENATOR FROM GEORGIA.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think we ought to dispose of the matter which is before the Senate at this time.

Mr. HARRELD. I merely wanted to introduce a bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I shall have to object to further interruption until the pending matter shall have been disposed of.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana kindly yield in order that I may introduce a bill? It will take but a moment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; I object to the transaction of any business whatever until the pending matter shall have been disposed of. It is a question of high privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana is entitled to the floor and will proceed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana resumed and concluded his speech, which is entire as follows:

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I am very sure there is no Member of the Senate who does not desire to accord to this estimable and worthy woman the high honor of sitting even for a brief period as a Member of this body, if he can do so consistently with his sense of duty. It would do very little credit, however, to this body or to her to admit her to membership if the Constitution, which we have all sworn to support by the oath she must subscribe, forbids it. As very grave doubt has been cast upon her present right to take the oath by the public statement of the governor of her State, I venture to submit for the consideration of the Senate some reflections upon the subject as well as some precedents in relation to it.

As the Senate has been advised, upon the death of the late Senator WATSON, Mrs. FELTON was appointed pursuant to the amendment to the Constitution and the laws of Georgia to fill the vacancy until the next election should take place. Writs of election were issued in that State in accordance with the amendment to the Constitution, and an election was held on the 7th day of November, as the result of which, as we have been advised unofficially by the public press, Mr. GEORGE was elected to fill the vacancy. Similarly we are advised that the board of canvassers of the State met, discharged their duties in the premises, and there was issued to him a certificate of election. Of these facts I understand there is no dispute.

The relevant provision of the Constitution is clause 2 of the seventeenth amendment, which reads as follows:

When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointment until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct.

The question is presented as to what is meant by an election as there used. Was the election accomplished when the voters deposited their ballots in the ballot box upon the 7th day of November last, or were the subsequent proceedings, the returns of the result, the canvassing of the returns, the certification of the result, and the issuing of a certificate, a part of the election? Was the election complete only when these things were done, or did it take place and become complete on the 7th day of November?

Further, the question is presented whether, even if the election was complete at that time, the sitting Member has not the right to sit until the credentials of her successor are presented to the Senate.

If it be true that the election took place and was complete upon the 7th day of November, it may be that the term of Mrs. FELTON expired on that day, although her successor might not until some time thereafter, namely, after the canvassing board had completed its work and a certificate of election had been delivered him, be in a situation to establish his title to the place. If that view is to obtain, there would then be a hiatus, an interim, during which the State would have but one representative in the Senate.

It has been contended, and I think with some degree of force, that the certificate is not absolutely essential to permit the admission of the Member. Members of the House are frequently sworn in without the presentation of certificates of their election, and oftentimes before the canvass has occurred. On yesterday several Members of the House were admitted to membership without the presentation of the official evidence of their election, either because the certificate had been delayed in transmission or because the canvass had not been completed. It could easily be conceived that the proper officers might willfully withhold the certificate, in which case the Senate would undoubtedly receive extraneous evidence to establish the fact of the election.

Moreover, it is maintained, upon reason as well as authority, that the Senate and House will take judicial notice of the fact that an election took place and of who was elected thereat. Courts take judicial notice of notorious facts of history. It would not be necessary, for instance, to establish by proof that the Battle of Gettysburg took place on the 1st, 2d, and 3d days of July, 1863. The court knows that as a matter of history. So as a matter of current history it is not improbable that we would take notice that Mr. BROOKHART, from the State of Iowa, and Mr. GEORGE, from the State of Georgia, were elected Members of this body at the late election. The Supreme Court of the United States quotes with apparent approval a paragraph from Greenfield on Evidence supporting this view. In a case in the State of North Dakota the court took judicial notice of the fact that certain gentlemen were elected members of the supreme court itself, the board of canvassers not yet having completed their work or certified the result as to the judgeships in question.

Important consequences necessarily follow from the adoption of either the one or the other view, namely, that the election was complete on the 7th of November or only after the canvassing board had declared the result. If, for instance, Senator GEORGE had died on the 8th day of November and before the canvassing board had completed its work, the question would arise as to whether Mrs. FELTON continued to be a Senator from Georgia until a new election should be held to fill the vacancy or whether her term of office having expired at midnight on the 7th of November the Governor of Georgia was entitled to appoint another person until the vacancy should be filled by election.

The question as to who should draw the salary, not only of the Senator, but of the clerks of the Senator, also becomes a matter of considerable importance. That feature of it was presented for consideration to the late Vice President Marshall, who ruled that the right of the appointee of the governor to the office, at least so far as the salaries of the clerks were concerned, expired on the night of the election. His views about the matter were expressed in a letter directed to the financial secretary of the Senate under date of October 15, 1918, which I ask be read at the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

THE VICE PRESIDENT'S CHAMBER,
Washington, October 15, 1918.

MY DEAR MR. PACE: In response to your inquiry as to the tenure of office of temporary appointment of Senators by the governors of the several States, I have the honor to give you the following opinion:

The supreme law of the land upon this question is the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Neither Congress nor the general assembly of any State of this Union can add to or take therefrom. The portion of the seventeenth amendment which has to do with this question reads as follows:

"When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct."

To my mind this clause authorizes the legislature of any State to empower the executive to make a temporary appointment until an election; that the legislature could either provide for a special election to take place within a reasonable time, or a fair construction of the constitutional provision would permit the legislature to delay the election until the next general election in the State.

It may be contended with some plausibility that the election might be postponed until the expiration of the term of the Senator whose death occasioned the temporary appointment. Personally, I do not so believe, nor is it needful under present circumstances to express an opinion upon this subject.

The tenure of office of those holding temporary appointments in the United States runs until the people have filled the vacancies by election, as the legislatures may direct. In all cases now under consideration the people will vote for United States Senators to fill the vacancies now being filled by these temporary appointments upon the 5th day of November next. The sole question for determination is, therefore, What constitutes an election?

The phraseology of the Constitution of the United States is radically different from that of many of the Commonwealths. Numerous State constitutions provide a tenure of office and then add that the incumbent shall hold the office for that period of time and until his successor is elected and qualified. In the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States nothing is said about holding beyond the election.

In the absence of disqualification to hold office, Senators will be elected on the 5th day of November next. They may be compelled to run the gamut of executive, administrative, judicial, and senatorial investigation before they are entitled to qualify and take their seats as Members of the United States Senate. They may fail to even reach the coveted positions. Equitably, it would seem that the present incumbents ought to be permitted to hold until the successors elected on the 5th of November have been sworn in as Senators of the United States. Such, however, is not the law. The tenure of office of all Senators now holding temporary appointment in the Senate of the United States will expire upon the 5th day of November next, and in the discharge of my sworn duty I can certify no compensation after that date.

I regret being compelled to render this opinion, but I think my duty as plain as a pikestaff.

Very respectfully,

THOS. R. MARSHALL.

CHARLES F. PACE,
Financial Secretary United States Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The conclusion arrived at by the late Vice President, as expressed in the letter just read, concerning the significance of the word "election" as used in the constitutional amendment, is in accordance with the common understanding in relation thereto. As the term is ordinarily employed it undoubtedly means the day upon which the ballots are cast—in this particular instance the 7th day of November. It was given that significance by the Supreme Court of the State of Alabama in the case of State ex rel. Tucker v. Harris (54 Ala. 203). A statute of that State declared the office of sheriff to be vacant unless the sheriff gave a bond within 15 days after the election. In that case the votes were not canvassed within that period, but it was held, notwithstanding, that the office became vacant if the sheriff did not give a bond within 15 days after the day on which the ballots were cast. That view is in accordance also with the form prescribed by the certificate of appointment of a Senator prepared by the Senate for the information of the executives of the various States after the adoption of the amendment, a copy of which is found on page 9 of the Book of Rules of the Senate. It reads as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate the following are convenient and sufficient forms of certificate of election of a Senator or the appointment of a Senator, to be signed by the executive of any State in pursuance of the Constitution and the statutes of the United States:

"To the President of the Senate of the United States:

"This is to certify that on the — day of —, 19—, A— B— was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of — a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th day of March, 19—.

"Witness: His excellency our governor —, and our seal hereto affixed at — this — day of —, in the year of our Lord 19—,

"By the governor:

"C— D—,

"E— F—,
"Secretary of State."

"Governor."

The date inserted undoubtedly would be, and I believe has uniformly been, the day on which the ballots were cast and not the day upon which the returns were eventually canvassed.

But, Mr. President, while I have the very highest respect for the opinion of the late Vice President upon a subject like this, and we all know that his views upon similar questions were characterized by saving good sense, it is quite evident that he passed upon the question without consideration of the precedents of the Senate, which seem to me all important, indeed controlling. Those, Mr. President, are unbroken to the effect that the appointee of the governor is entitled to sit until his successor, elected by the legislature under the old Constitution, presents himself at the bar of the Senate and claims his seat or, at least, until the credentials of his successor are in some other way presented to the Senate. The provision of the original Constitution was quite ambiguous as to the time when the right of the appointee ceased. It read as follows:

And if vacancies happen by resignation, or otherwise, during the recess of the legislature of any State, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies.

It was contended for a long time that by the plain language of the Constitution an appointee of the governor held his office only until the day on which the legislature of the State assembled. It was stoutly maintained that at least as soon as the legislature elected a Senator the right of the governor's appointee ceased. Finally it was contended that the right of the appointee did not cease until the person elected by the legislature presented his credentials; and the action of the Senate from the very beginning, Mr. President, has been in accordance with that theory. In connection with a report of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate made in the year 1851, a long list of cases, dating from the beginning of our Government, was given, showing that there have been the uniform practice and course of the Senate. Thus:

Thomas Posey, of Louisiana, appointed by the governor October 8, 1812, appeared and was classed November 27, 1812, qualified December 7, 1812, and took his seat, which he held until his successor, Mr. James Brown, elected by the legislature, appeared. Mr. Brown was elected December 1, 1812, and took his seat in the Senate February 5, 1813.

The appointee in that case held from December 1, 1812, when his successor was elected, until February 5, 1813, when the Senator elected by the legislature appeared.

Cristopher Gore, of Massachusetts, appointed by the governor May 5, 1813, took his seat May 28, 1813, and held until his successor, himself, appeared and qualified. Mr. Gore's credentials were presented June 4, 1813.

In that case the appointee of the governor held after his successor was elected from May 28, 1813, to June 4, 1813.

Jesse Wharton, of Tennessee, appointed by the governor March 17, 1814, took his seat April 9, 1814, and held until his successor, John Williams, appeared and qualified. Mr. Williams was elected by the legislature October 10, 1815, and appeared December 4, 1815.

As will be observed, there was a lapse of nearly 60 days; that is to say, the appointee of the governor served almost 60 days after his successor had been elected by the legislature.

The report from which I have quoted, Mr. President, was made in connection with a somewhat historic case. It arose by reason of the resignation of Daniel Webster in 1850. The facts are recited briefly in the syllabus of the case reported in Senate Election Cases, as follows:

Mr. Winthrop was appointed July 27, 1850, to fill a vacancy happening in the Senate by the resignation of Daniel Webster. February 1, 1851, Robert Rantoul was elected by the legislature to fill the unexpired term. February 4, Mr. Rantoul not having appeared to take the seat—

It will be observed that he had been elected February 1—

Mr. Winthrop offered a resolution, which was agreed to, "that the Committee on the Judiciary inquire and report to the Senate, as early as practicable, at what period the term of service of a Senator appointed by the executive of a State during the recess of the legislature thereof rightfully expires." The committee reported "that a person so appointed had a right to the seat until the legislature, at its next meeting, should elect a person to fill the unexpired term, and the person elected should accept, and his acceptance appear to the Senate; that presentation of credentials implied acceptance; that these views were sustained by precedents." The report was debated, but no action taken, the whole subject being laid on the table. Mr. Winthrop vacated the seat February 7, 1851, when Mr. Rantoul's credentials were presented.

Mr. President, it will be noted that if, as I have heretofore observed, the right of the appointee terminates on the day of the election—that is to say, on the day on which the votes are cast—there must, under any circumstances whatever, result a hiatus between that time and the time when his or her successor takes his seat. If he does not take his seat until a certificate is issued to him after the canvassing board has done its work, the period will be considerable in many instances, the State meanwhile being unrepresented; but if, indeed, we may take judicial notice of the election, without the necessity of a formal certificate of election, from such information as we can secure, still there must be a hiatus. That is to say, the result can not be determined until the night of the election, ordinarily; and though the Member proceeds at once to the Capital from a remote section of the country—California, or the State of Washington—at least four days must ensue until the successor of the governor's appointee can arrive to take his place, the State meanwhile being unrepresented. From my State a period of three days would elapse. We must consider these provisions in view of the conditions which obtained at the time the Constitution was adopted, when sometimes it took a week or two weeks to travel from distant States to the Capital.

It is said as a principle of physics that nature abhors a vacuum, and it is undoubtedly true that the law abhors a vacancy. The most liberal construction will, accordingly, be given to any statute or to any constitution so that there shall be no vacancy, so that the appointee or Member elect shall take his seat as his predecessor vacates it.

The views of the committee to which reference has been made and which considered the subject over 70 years ago are expressed in brief in its report. Its reasoning will doubtless be of interest to the Members who have followed the discussion. From that report I read:

The question presented by the resolution turns mainly upon the construction of the clause of Article I, section 2, of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that "if vacancies happen, by resignation or otherwise, during the recess of the legislature of any State, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the legislature, which shall fill such vacancies."

Your committee are of the opinion that the sitting Member under executive appointment has a right to occupy his seat until the vacancy shall be filled by the legislature of the State of which he is a Senator during the next meeting thereof. To fill such vacancy it is not only necessary to make an election, but that the person elected shall accept the appointment. And your committee are further of the opinion that such acceptance should appear by the presentation to the Senate of the credentials of the Member elect, or other official information of the fact, at which time the office of the sitting Member terminates. When the Member elect is present and ready to qualify his express acceptance is at once made known; and when his credentials are presented in his absence his acceptance may be fairly implied.

The report, Mr. President, gave rise to an extended discussion before the Senate. I shall not trouble the Senate with any extended reference to it; but I call your attention to the various propositions which were debated, as expressed by Mr. Bradbury, a Senator from the State of Maine and a member of the committee, who in the course of some remarks said:

Three distinct positions have been taken and are presented in the propositions that have been discussed, as to the time when the office of a person holding under executive appointment, to fill a vacancy in the Senate happening by resignation or otherwise during the recess of the legislature of any State terminates.

The first is that it terminates on the first day of the next meeting of the legislature of such State. This is the position of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Rhett] and is intended to be presented by his amendment to the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Davis].

The second is that such office terminates upon the presentation to the Senate, during the next session of such legislature, of the credentials of the Member elected to fill such vacancy. This is the position maintained in the report of the committee.

The third is that it does not terminate until the Member elected to fill the vacancy is present to take his seat. This is the position embraced in the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts.

I am sure you will be interested in what Senator Benton, of Missouri, said concerning the practice of the Senate, speaking, as is well known, from his 30 years' experience as a member of this body. He remarked:

I have been accustomed to see Senators who held appointments under the same form that the Senator from Massachusetts did sit in their seats until their successors arrived. And I have seen them when their successors arrived introduce them, get up, and give them their seats, and go out. I have seen that, and I have become accustomed to it. It corresponds to what I think is due to every State, what is due to the system of representation, that if there be any doubt at all in a question of this kind the benefit of that doubt should be given to the State. She should have the benefit of a full representation up to the last moment. There should be no gap or interval.

In the volume to which I have referred, the Senate Election Cases, the list of cases referred to in the earlier volume, in which is found the report made by the Senate Judiciary Committee in 1850, is supplemented by a large number of cases running down to the year 1913. It is headed:

A list showing all the appointments of Senators by governors of States prior to March 4, 1913, arranged in the order of time that the credentials were read in the Senate.

In no instance does it appear that any controversy was ever raised as to the right of the governor's appointee to sit and participate in the deliberations of the Senate until his or her successor appeared with the proper credentials.

These are all, of course, constructions of the original Constitution, and the seventeenth amendment was adopted in view of the practical construction given to the corresponding provision of the work of the fathers by the Senate itself. Under well-established principles of construction, the language being changed only so far as was necessary to express the purpose to change the method of election, the people indorsed the construction of the clause of the Constitution in question implied in the practice which had been observed by the Senate, and intended that the amendment should be similarly construed.

I have said this much because I did not like to have it appear, if the lady is sworn in—as I have no doubt she is entitled to be sworn in—that the Senate had so far departed from its duty in the premises as to extend so grave a right to her as a favor, or as a mere matter of courtesy, or being moved by a spirit of gallantry, but rather that the Senate, being fully advised about it, decided that she was entitled to take the oath.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the certificate presented by the Senator from Georgia.

The reading clerk read as follows:

THE STATE OF GEORGIA.

By his excellency Thomas W. Hardwick, Governor of said State.

To the Hon. REBECCA LATIMER FELTON, greeting:

Whereas, in conformity with the provisions of the constitution and laws of this State, you were on the 3d day of October, 1922, appointed Senator in the Congress of the United States:

Now, therefore, by virtue of the power and authority in me vested by the constitution and laws of this State, and in pursuance of your appointment, I do hereby commission you, the said REBECCA LATIMER FELTON, Senator in the Congress of the United States from the State of Georgia.

This commission shall continue in force from the 3d day of October, 1922, and until your successor is elected and qualified, unless the same shall be sooner vacated or annulled in the manner authorized by the constitution and laws of this State.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State, at the capitol, in the city of Atlanta, the 3d day of October, in the year of our Lord 1922.

[SEAL.]

THOMAS W. HARDWICK,
Governor.

By the Governor:
S. G. McLENDON,
Secretary of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Mrs. FELTON, being present, will kindly present herself at the desk to receive the oath of office.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harreld	Nicholson	Smoot
Bayard	Harris	Norris	Stanfield
Borah	Harrison	Overman	Stanley
Capper	Heflin	Owen	Sterling
Colt	Hitchcock	Page	Sutherland
Cummins	Kellogg	Pepper	Swanson
Curtis	Keyes	Pittman	Trammell
Dial	Ladd	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Edge	La Follette	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
Ernst	Lodge	Reed, Pa.	Warren
Fletcher	McCumber	Sheppard	Watson
France	McKellar	Shields	Weller
Frellinghuysen	McKinley	Shortridge	Willis
Gooding	McNary	Simmons
Hale	Nelson	Smith

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The Senator appointed will present herself at the desk to receive the oath of office.

Mrs. FELTON was escorted by Mr. HARRIS to the Vice President's desk, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to her, she took her seat in the Senate.

ALLEGED OUTRAGES IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I rise to a question of privilege, as one of the Senators from Louisiana, whose citizenship and institutions have been grossly misrepresented during the past three days by one of the newspapers of this city.

Mr. President, I was shocked and grieved to read in the usually conservative Washington Post of the 19th, 20th, and 21st instant, under scare headlines, on the first page of each day's issue, a most remarkable story of crime, lawlessness, and terrorism in Louisiana. If the statements in these articles were correct, the plight of my State would be sad indeed, but they are very far from the truth.

I can not conceive how such sweeping, libelous, extremely damaging statements in regard to an entire sovereign State—not to some community thereof—could have been given even ordinary publicity in a reputable newspaper, but when placed on the first page of one of the greatest journals in America, issued at the Nation's Capital, under headings so large as to attract universal attention, it is utterly incomprehensible. I can not believe the Post set out willfully and deliberately to slander and destroy the good name of Louisiana, but unless immediate retraction is made by it in the same conspicuous way that the libel was uttered, the effect is certain to be most injurious.

I traveled over several parts of Louisiana during the past six weeks and met a great many of its citizens. Conditions seemed to be normal everywhere; the courts were functioning as usual; the people were attending fairs and armistice-day celebrations with apparent relish; business was excellent in many places and poor in others; there was no general unrest; the press was free and outspoken on all subjects, including the Ku-Klux Klan; there was no more crime than usual.

I heard much comment about the Mer Rouge outrage, which probably resulted in the murder of two men under dastardly circumstances, and gossip connected individual members of the Ku-Klux Klan with this crime—I say probable murder, as the two men referred to disappeared months ago, have never been heard from since, and there is every reason to believe they were foully murdered. This deplorable affair was an isolated one, in a thinly populated community, and it cost the lives of but two human beings and the cruel beating of two others. No one has been tried for it as yet, but I am assured that evidence is being secured, and when obtained, that the murderers will be brought to justice and prosecuted with all the power which the attorney general of the State and the local authorities can muster.

This Mer Rouge crime, by odds the worst that has occurred in Louisiana during the past four years, pales into insignificance when compared to the horrors of the race riots of 1920 in Chicago; the West Virginia miners' civil war of 1921; and the Herrin, Ill., wholesale murders of helpless men because they wished to work, only a few months ago. It would have been a very unjust slander on the States of West Virginia and Illinois to say, because of these terrible crimes, that their courts had ceased to function; their citizens were in terror; their press had been silenced; outrages against persons were frequent and never punished, and so forth. And yet when a crime small in comparison with those of West Virginia and Illinois occurs in one of the 64 parishes of Louisiana, the whole State, with its nearly 2,000,000 people, is held up to scorn before mankind. The statements in the Post are vicious and untrue!

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I was much interested in the statement of personal privilege offered by the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL]. I would not refer to the subject were it not for the fact that I have some letters in my possession that may explain in part some of the statements made in the press in reference to law enforcement in Louisiana. I hope the news story about the power and influence of the Ku-Klux Klan in that State was exaggerated. I can not conceive of such an un-American spirit getting a foothold in any Commonwealth of the United States. It is difficult for Americans who believe in the Constitution to conceive of the special kind of intolerance alleged to be rampant in certain parts of this country.

Religious bigotry in individual cases may be explained, but it is inconceivable that there could be in this enlightened day and in a nation whose proud boast is "The land of the free and the home of the brave" the wholesale bigotry and prejudice against members of certain religious denominations and races that is alleged to prevail. Are we approaching a period in our history when groups of individuals demand that the principles laid down in our Constitution shall be applied to themselves but not to all other Americans?

There is no use of disguising the fact that this outlawry exists. It showed its heinous and venomous character here and there in the recent election. It is threatening control of the political machinery of our political parties. The letters that have come to me from most conservative and intelligent people in various parts of this country have astounded me with the extent and horrors of its practices. These letters seem to indicate that this organized spirit of intolerance is not only seeking to deny political rights to classes of our citizens but is even trying to destroy equality of opportunity, even for men and women in the humble walks of life, which is one of our most glorious inheritances.

The individual, organization, or political party that spreads a gospel of hate and dissension among our fellow citizens is striking a death blow at democratic institutions more destructive than that effort to destroy democracy which caused us to send our soldiers to fight in France in 1917. Let the leaders of all political parties refuse to silently accept the influence and support of secret organizations whose purposes are to promote propaganda of prejudice and persecution. The political party that does not repudiate such organizations will in time exterminate itself. The American people, when the issue is made clear, will not hesitate to support the Constitution.

The assertion, so forcibly denied by the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], that religious, civil, and human liberty is suppressed in that State may be exaggerated; but America is not free from this malignant propaganda while a single citizen of the most distant hamlet is denied complete protection against every form of religious prejudice and racial persecution.

The annihilation of such undemocratic and tyrannical movements ought to be led by those who are not of the religious or racial groups that are its victims. It is time for liberty-loving, broad-minded Americans to act before our free institutions be further undermined. Above everything else, let us not wait until the victims are driven in desperation to free themselves from religious and racial proscription by resort to religious and racial proscription.

I have a letter from the Governor of Louisiana addressed to an ex-service man, in which he asks this ex-service man to write Senators and Congressmen urging the Department of Justice to assist in bringing to justice those involved in a murder assumed to have been committed through the influence of the Ku-Klux Klan. I shall, without further comment, ask that the letter, addressed to me by a very reputable citizen of the State of New York, an ex-service man, in which he refers to the murder of one of his associates in the war, and the letter sent by the Governor of Louisiana to him in reference to the attempt to prosecute the murderers may be read at the desk. It is evident from the letter of Governor Parker that he has sought the assistance of the Department of Justice to bring at least some murderers to the bar of justice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the letters will be read as requested.

The letters were read, as follows:

JOSEPH MORNINGSTAR & Co. (INC.),
New York, November 9, 1922.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Senator from Massachusetts, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am sending you herewith a copy of the New Orleans Item which outlines the crime perpetrated in Morehouse Parish, La., and a letter from the Hon. John M. Parker, Governor of Louisiana, addressed to me.

The facts speak so clearly for themselves that any comment I may make upon them would be superfluous.

You are undoubtedly aware what the Ku-Klux Klan stands for and I know that you feel, as I do, that it is a privilege to line up on the other side.

The reason I am interesting myself in this case is because Fillmore Watt Daniel served overseas with me in the same company with the rank of sergeant, in A Company, Three hundred and thirty-sixth Battalion, Tank Corps. At the time of his enlistment Daniel was well beyond the draft age and could have been exempted in any case as an agriculturist. Nevertheless he left his old father to run one of the largest cotton plantations in that part of the country to do his duty as a citizen and a man, regardless of the technical justification the Government gave him for staying at home.

Just how well his State and country have rewarded him so far can be seen by the inclosed letter and newspaper.

Where the governor of a State admits that justice can not be secured through local authority it seems obvious that the Federal authorities gain jurisdiction, and the copy of the letter of Governor Parker clearly puts this case in that category.

If you could spare a small fraction of your time to see that justice is done there is no question in my mind that more good would come of it because of your eminence in the national standing.

While I have laid these facts before the Department of Justice I have had nothing of encouragement yet. A request from you and any of your colleagues that you may interest in this case would do more to right this grievous wrong than anything that I could do.

I can testify, as can Daniel's comrades, that he was a man of the highest character and moral integrity, a man who made himself beloved to his fellows because of his unfailing generosity, sympathy, and manliness.

During the whole exposé of the Klan by the New York World and other papers, never has such a flagrant case been noted.

Sincerely hoping that you will help us, his comrades, to see that justice is done, I respectfully subscribe myself,

JOSEPH MORNINGSTAR.

STATE OF LOUISIANA,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Baton Rouge, October 30, 1922.

Mr. JOS. MORNINGSTAR,
650 West Thirty-fourth Street, New York, N. Y.

DEAR MR. MORNINGSTAR: Don't think that I, for a second, let up in my determination to bring the murderers of Daniel to trial, if possible. I deeply regret to say that there is a very large per cent of Ku-Klux in Morehouse Parish, and, from the evidence received by me, Daniel was one of the few men who was absolutely fearless and openly defied them.

It will be necessary to use all the influence at your command to get the United States Government to take an interest in this matter, and for that reason I would appreciate your writing me at length your opinion of this man as a soldier, and put it in such a shape that I can send it to Washington with the certainty that it will bring results. If these results do not come quickly, could I impose upon you by asking you to get in touch with all your Congressmen and Senators, requesting that they take the matter up with the Department of Justice to see that not only is this matter probed to the bottom, but that the murderers are brought before the bar of justice? Every possible effort at my command is and will be used to that end.

Cordially yours,

JNO. M. PARKER, Governor.

RESIGNATION OF SENATOR NEWBERRY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the following communication, which the Secretary will read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

DETROIT, MICH., November 17, 1922.

Hon. CALVIN COOLIDGE,
The Vice President, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I inclose herewith a copy of my resignation which I have this day forwarded to the Governor of the State of Michigan, and I respectfully request that this be read into the records of the Senate as soon as possible.

Yours respectfully,

TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY.

DETROIT, MICH., November 18, 1922.

Hon. ALEX. J. GROESBECK,
Governor of Michigan, Lansing, Mich.

SIR: I tender herewith my resignation as United States Senator from Michigan, to take immediate effect.

I am impelled to take this action because at the recent election, notwithstanding his long and faithful public service and his strict adherence to the basic principles of constructive Republicanism which I hold in common with him, Senator TOWNSEND was defeated. While this failure to reelect him may have been brought about, in part, by over four years of continued propaganda of misrepresentation and untruth, a fair analysis of the vote in Michigan and other States where friends and political enemies alike have suffered defeat will demonstrate that a general feeling of unrest was mainly responsible therefor.

This situation renders futile further service by me in the United States Senate, where I have consistently supported the progressive policies of President Harding's administration. My work there has been and would continue to be hampered by partisan political persecution, and I, therefore, cheerfully return my commission to the people from whom I received it.

I desire to record an expression of my gratitude for the splendid friendship, loyalty, and devotion of those who have endured with me during the past four years experiences unparalleled in the political history of our country. By direction of the Democratic administration, these began immediately upon my nomination, by proceedings before a specially selected grand jury, sitting in another State, which, by a vote of 16 to 1, completely exonerated those who had conducted my campaign. Then followed my election, with every issue which has since been raised clearly before the electorate of the State. A recount was demanded, and after a thorough and painstaking review of the ballots by the United States Senate, I was found to have received a substantial majority. While this was in progress I was subjected, with a large number of representative men of Michigan who had supported me, to a trial, following indictments procured by a Democratic Department of Justice, which through hundreds of agents had hounded and terrified men in all parts of the State into believing that some wrong had been done. Under the instructions given by the court, convictions of a conspiracy to spend more than $3,750 naturally followed, and sentence imposing fines and imprisonment was immediately passed. All charges of bribery and corruption were, however, quashed by the specific order of the presiding judge.

On appeal, the Supreme Court of the United States reversed the action of the court below, because, as stated by Chief Justice White, of the grave misapprehension and the grievous misapplication of the statute, which was also declared unconstitutional. A protracted investigation before the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate resulted in a report sustaining my election; and after a bitter partisan debate the Senate declared that I was entitled to my seat.

In view of all these proceedings my right to my seat has been fully confirmed, and I am thankful to have been permitted to serve my State and my country, and to have the eternal satisfaction of having by my vote aided in keeping the United States out of the League of Nations.

For those who so patriotically and unselfishly worked for my election, and in defense of my own honor and that of my family and friends, I have fought the fight and kept the faith. The time has now come, however, when I can conscientiously lay down the burden, and this I most cheerfully do. If in the future there seem to be opportunities for public service, I shall not hesitate to offer my services to the State which I love and the country I revere.

Respectfully,

TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I shall not occupy the time of the Senate more than a moment. The communication which has just been read at the desk from Senator NEWBERRY is of great import. It will send a thrill of joy into every American home. It will be "glad tidings of good news" to all Americans. It augurs well for this session of Congress, that so soon after the recent political cyclone, we should begin, as we have to-day, by seating a distinguished lady as Senator from Georgia and then hearing read from the desk this communication of resignation.

Mr. President, individual Senators may err and majorities may make mistakes, but the good common sense of the American people in the end generally prevails. Their high ideals, their sense of justice, their allegiance to the purity of the ballot, their respect for the integrity of this body have wrung from unwilling hands what an autocratic and partisan majority in this body refused to do. The minority receives with pleasure, and I am sure all Americans with gratification, this communication. I congratulate the American people on what they have accomplished wherein the Republican Senate had failed. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Applause in the galleries is not permitted by the rules of the Senate, and a repetition will result in having the galleries cleared.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I wish to follow what has been said by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] with an expression of the hope that in the future the use of money on a scale so gigantic as to affect unfairly the electorate will not be repeated in the United States by either a Republican or a Democrat. I believe that we ought to pass a law which would forbid any man, a Republican or a Democrat or a man of any other party, holding a place on this floor where money has been used extravagantly and wrongly and contrary to a reasonable rule and a reasonable law to bring about his election.

The duty is upon us to pass an honest election law which will prevent the recurrence of this abuse. It ought to be done by this Congress before the session ends.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication which was read at the desk will lie on the table.

LIBERIAN LOAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 270) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States for the Government of Liberia.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], in charge of the unfinished business, will not consent to temporarily lay it aside until we can get through with morning business.

Mr. CURTIS. I was about to make that request. I ask unanimous consent to temporarily lay aside the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to make a very brief statement. I am advised by those interested in the unfinished business that we probably will make time by having it put over until to-morrow as there are some resolutions in regard to deaths of Members and other matters which Senators desire to have presented. I shall at the proper time ask that the joint resolution may go over until to-morrow, but at present I merely want to have it temporarily laid aside.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 11579) to amend section 1 of an act approved January 11, 1922, entitled "An act to permit the city of Chicago to acquire real estate of the United States of America," was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. STERLING (for Mr. ODDIE) presented a resolution of the Fernley Farm Bureau, of Fernley, Nev., protesting against the enactment of the so-called ship subsidy bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 4025) to permit Mahlon Pitney, an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, to retire; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 4026) granting a pension to Mollie E. Benson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HARRELD:

A bill (S. 4027) to make unlawful certain acts of individuals and officers at elections at which Senators or Representatives are candidates; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 4028) for the relief of John N. Halladay; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 4029) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Co. and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871, and acts supplemental thereto; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. REED of Pennsylvania:

A bill (S. 4030) for the relief of Capt. Murray A. Cobb; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McKINLEY:

A bill (S. 4031) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Little Calumet River, in Cook County, State of Illinois, at or near the village of Riverdale, in said county;

A bill (S. 4032) granting the consent of Congress to the State of Illinois, department of public works and buildings, division of highways, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Kankakee River, in the county of Kankakee, State of Illinois, between sec. 5, T. 30 N., and sec. 32, T. 31 N., R. 13 E. of the third principal meridian; and

A bill (S. 4033) granting the consent of Congress to the State of Illinois, department of public works and buildings, division of highways, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Kankakee River, in the county of Kankakee, State of Illinois, between sec. 6, T. 30 N., and sec. 31, T. 31 N., R. 12 E. of the third principal meridian; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. McNARY (for Mr. NICHOLSON):

A bill (S. 4034) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to extend the time for payment of charges due on reclamation projects, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A bill (S. 4035) for the relief of the owner of the steam tug S. L. Crosby; to the Committee on Claims;

A bill (S. 4036) to prohibit the unauthorized wearing, manufacture, or sale of medals and badges awarded by the War Department; and

A bill (S. 4037) to amend the grade percentages of enlisted men as prescribed in section 4b of the national defense act, as amended; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 4038) to amend section 21 of the Judicial Code; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 4039) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to consider, ascertain, adjust, and determine claims of certain members of the Sioux Nation of Indians for damages occasioned by the destruction of their horses; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. STERLING (for Mr. ODDIE):

A bill (S. 4040) to provide for the conservation of the natural gold resources of the continental United States and its non-contiguous territory by the payment of a bounty on newly mined gold to the producers thereof, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

A bill (S. 4041) to authorize the acquisition of a site and the erection of a Federal building at Lovelock, Nev.; and

A bill (S. 4042) to provide for additions and extensions to the United States post office at Reno, Nev.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER CO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Attorney General, in response to Senate Resolution 223, agreed to January 24, 1922, relative to any further proceedings contemplated in the case of the United States v. International Harvester Co. et al., which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., September 22, 1922.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of and to comply with Senate Resolution No. 223, calling on the Attorney General for information as to what, if any, further proceedings are contemplated in the case of United States v. International Harvester Co. et al. Omitting the preamble, the resolution provides—

"That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what action, if any, is contemplated by the Department of Justice to bring about a modification of said decree, in order that the same may comply with the real judgment rendered by the court in said case; or, if such course be not practical, whether the Department of Justice contemplates any other separate and independent action against said International Harvester Co. for the purpose of effectively restoring competitive conditions between the various corporations composing and comprising said International Harvester Co."

The Government's suit against the International Harvester Co. was filed in the United States District Court for Minnesota in April, 1912. The case was heard by the circuit judges of the eighth circuit, who held (Judges Smith, Hook, and Adams, concurring, and Judge Sanborn, dissenting) that the company constituted a combination in restraint of trade in violation of the Sherman Act, and entered a decree providing that—

"The business and assets of the International Harvester Co. be divided in such manner and into such number of parts of separate and distinct ownership as may be necessary to restore competitive conditions and bring about a new situation in harmony with law."

The Harvester company appealed from this decree to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the case was argued there in April, 1915. On June 2 the case was restored to the docket and was again argued at the next succeeding term and was a second time restored to the docket for reargument. In October, 1918, the Harvester company dismissed its appeal, and there was entered by the district court a decree of dissolution which had been negotiated by counsel for the defendant and the Attorney General. By the terms of the decree the Harvester company was required to sell and dispose of the harvesting machine lines made and sold by it under the trade names of "Osborne," "Milwaukee," and "Champion," together with the Osborne and Champion plants.

In compliance with the decree the International Harvester Co. has sold the Champion and Osborne lines. By a modification of the decree entered in the summer of 1920 the Harvester company has been relieved of the necessity of selling the plants, for the reason that the purchasers of the lines were already engaged in the harvesting implement business with plants of their own. The company has not disposed of the Milwaukee line for the reason that it has not found a purchaser therefor.

On May 4, 1920, the Federal Trade Commission made its report, entitled "Report on the causes of high prices of farm implements," mentioned in the preamble to Resolution No. 223. This report followed a comprehensive investigation of conditions in the farm-implement trade conducted pursuant to a resolution of the Senate. It condemns the decree in the Harvester case as wholly inadequate, because there was no provision for the disposition of either the McCormick or Deering lines of harvesting machines. These lines, it declares, were the predominant lines in 1902, when the Harvester company was formed, and have been continued as the principal ones by that company since, and no dissolution can have the effect to restore competitive conditions which leaves both in the hands of the same company. The report recommends, among other things, that the Harvester case be reopened, "so that a plan of dissolution be arrived at that will restore competitive conditions in the harvesting-machine business."

Paragraph (e) of the final decree provides as follows: "The object to be attained under the terms of this decree is to restore competitive conditions in the United States in the interstate business in harvesting machines and other agricultural implements; and, in the event that such competitive conditions shall not have been established at the expiration of 18 months after the termination of the existing war in which the United States is engaged (or at the expiration of two years from the date of the entry of this decree, in the event that said war shall be terminated within less than six months after the entry of this decree), then, in that case, the United States shall have the right to such further relief herein as shall be necessary to restore said competitive conditions and to bring about a situation in harmony with law; and this court reserves all necessary jurisdiction and power to carry into effect the provisions of the decrees herein entered."

1. After careful consideration of this language, and of such information as I have been able to obtain relative to the understanding of the negotiations of the decree, I am forced to the conclusion that this provision was intended to set up a test period in which it might be determined whether the relief granted was adequate to the purpose of the decree. In other words, that a period of 18 months from and after the conclusion of the war must elapse within which to judge of the efficacy of the decree before further proceedings may be had thereunder with a view to enlarging the relief. The paragraph does not provide, as has been assumed by the Federal Trade Commission, that during the period in question the United States shall have the right to further relief if competitive conditions have not been restored, but that the United States shall have the right to such relief upon a proper showing at the expiration of such period.

Answering specifically the first question propounded by the Senate, in my opinion the time is not ripe for further proceedings under the decree with a view to obtaining additional relief. At the expiration of the test period set up in the decree the Department of Justice, in consultation with the Federal Trade Commission, will consider what, if any, further relief may be necessary in order to effect the declared purpose of the decree and will take the necessary steps to give effect to the conclusions arrived at.

2. Responding to the alternative question asked in the resolution, I have the honor to advise you that the Department of Justice does not now contemplate any separate and independent action against the International Harvester Co. The Government having put in issue in the pending suit the entire question of the legality of the combination, and that question having been resolved in its favor and a decree entered, the Government is bound by that decree as well as the defendants, and the effect of the decree can not be avoided on the ground that it was improvidently negotiated by former officers of the Department of Justice. Unless the Harvester company shall by further acquisitions of competitors or by oppressive conduct give rise to a new cause of action, additional relief against it as a combination or monopoly will have to be obtained under the terms of the existing decree.

Respectfully,

GUY D. GOFF,
Acting Attorney General.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE CHARLES R. CONNELL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The resolution (H. Res. 444) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. CHARLES R. CONNELL, a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now adjourn.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I beg leave to offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 361) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. CHARLES R. CONNELL, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE JOHN I. NOLAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The resolution (H. Res. 445) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. JOHN I. NOLAN, a Representative from the State of California.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now adjourn.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask that it may be immediately considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the resolution offered by the Senator from California.

The resolution (S. Res. 362) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of the Hon. JOHN I. NOLAN, late a Representative from the State of California.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representatives, Mr. NOLAN, of California, and Mr. CONNELL, of Pennsylvania, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, November 22, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, November 21, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, clothed with patience and sympathy, Thou dost come with us day by day. In Thee is our faith, and Thou art the sum of all our hopes. Teach us our duty and show us how to employ its standards in their application to the public service. Bring all our citizens together into a true unity of interest and inspire them with a great desire for the things that shall ennoble our whole Nation. O Thou who dwellest in infinite strength, bring to pass the day when the new world shall come in which shall dwell peace, fraternity, and cooperation, and Thy glory shall cover the face of the wide earth. In the name of Jesus, the Prince of peace. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Senate Resolution 357.

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

Senate Resolution 358.

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed, to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

Pursuant to the foregoing resolution, the Vice President had appointed Mr. LODGE and Mr. SIMMONS as members of such committee on the part of the Senate.

Senate Resolution 360.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow the announcement of the death of the Hon. THOMAS E. WATSON, late a Senator from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives, and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased Senator.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the following titles:

H. R. 367. An act for the relief of J. Irving Brooks; and

H. R. 10144. An act conveying the peninsula of Presque Isle, Erie, Pa., to the State of Pennsylvania, its original owner, for public park purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 8062. An act amending subdivision (5a) of section 302 of the war risk insurance act.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the following resolution:

House Concurrent Resolution 72.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Tuesday, the 21st day of November, 1922, at 12.30 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution and bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 242. Joint resolution authorizing the erection on public grounds in the District of Columbia of a statue by José Clará personifying "Serenity."

S. 2212. An act for the future safeguarding of the White House collection of the presidential china.

S. 2872. An act to amend section 800 of the revenue act of 1921.

SENATE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution and bill of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 242. Joint resolution authorizing the erection on public grounds in the District of Columbia of a statue by José Clará personifying "Serenity"; to the Committee on the Library.

S. 2872. An act to amend section 800 of the revenue act of 1921; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 3300. An act granting a pension to Marie Doughty Gorgas.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR MILEAGE, ETC.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 12859, to provide for certain expenses incident to the third session of the Sixty-seventh Congress, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the appropriations for mileage and stationery for Senators, Members of the House of Representatives, and Delegates from the Territories, and expenses of Resident Commissioners, contained in the act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year 1923, are authorized to be paid to Senators, Members of the House of Representatives, Delegates from the Territories, and Resident Commissioners, for attendance on the third session of the Sixty-seventh Congress.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for session employees on account of the third session of the Sixty-seventh Congress: For 42 pages at $2.50 per day each from November 20 to December 3, 1922, inclusive, $1,470; for 3 session telephone operators at the rate of $75 per month each from November 20 to November 30, 1922, inclusive, $82.50; in all, $1,552.50.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which has just been reported. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I observe the first paragraph of this bill simply makes available at this time the mileage appropriation already provided for Members, Delegates, and so forth, for the regular session of this Congress.

Mr. MADDEN. That is all.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman a question which, I take it, will likely arise? Has he himself or his committee, or both, considered the question of mileage as applied to the next regular session of this Congress in the event that we make this available at this time?

Mr. MADDEN. There has been no consideration given to the question of mileage for the next regular session, but I say frankly to the gentleman from Tennessee and to the Members of the House that personally I think there ought not to be any additional mileage; that the payment of mileage already appropriated ought to apply to cover the entire period of this special session of Congress and the next regular session which will begin on December 4 next; that no additional appropriation should be made. So far as I am concerned, I am opposed to making any additional appropriation. I can not speak for the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I agree with the gentleman in his views, Mr. Speaker, but it seemed to me quite desirable at this time to have an official statement, and the gentleman can practically make an official statement on this subject.

Mr. MADDEN. I shall not submit for the consideration of the Committee on Appropriations any proposal to appropriate any additional sum for mileage for the period ending on the 4th of March next.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is contemplated, of course, that this extra session will run into the other?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; that it will merge into the regular session. I would say also, for the information of the House, that in 1913 a special session of the Congress was called on April 7. That session ran through the summer and up into the regular session of Congress beginning in December, and continued on until the next October. For 19 months the Congress was in constant session. Mileage at the beginning of the special session was made available, as this bill proposes now, but there was no additional appropriation for the regular session, and it would be unwise and unjust for us to undertake to make additional appropriations for the session about to begin on the 4th of December next and end on the 4th of March following. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman is following a good precedent. Will the gentleman kindly give us some information about the second paragraph, the item in respect to pages?

Mr. MADDEN. It is for the pay of the pages, who will be paid only for the period of their service from now until the 4th of December. After the regular session begins their pay is provided for in the annual appropriation bills. This is simply to meet the expenses between now and when that session begins.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I assume that this merely includes the House pages?

Mr. MADDEN. Just the House pages.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And the Senate will have to amend the bill to include their own pages?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; if there is any such thing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MADDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE TO WAIT UPON THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the committee appointed by the Speaker on the part of the House of Representatives to join with a committee on the part of the Senate to notify the President of the United States that a quorum of each House is assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make, I have the honor to report that the committee has performed its duty and that the President of the United States has informed the joint committee that he will be pleased to communicate with the Congress in person to-day.

Mr. Speaker, I submit the following concurrent resolution for a joint session to receive the communication of the President of the United States, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 72.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Tuesday, the 21st day of November, 1922, at 12.30 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

RECESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess, subject to the call of the Chair. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly, at 12 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m., the House stood in recess.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House (at 12 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m.) resumed its session.

JOINT SESSION OF SENATE AND HOUSE.

At 12 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m. the members of the President's Cabinet entered the hall and took seats on the left of the Speaker's rostrum.

At 12 o'clock and 29 minutes p. m. the Doorkeeper announced the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Members of the Senate.

The Members of the House rose.

The Senate, preceded by their President pro tempore and their Sergeant at Arms, entered the Chamber.

The President pro tempore of the Senate took the chair at the right of the Speaker, and the Members of the Senate took the seats reserved for them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following committee on behalf of the House to wait upon the President and escort him to the Hall: Mr. MONDELL, Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, Mr. EDMONDS, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, and Mr. LAZARO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate. On behalf of the Senate the Chair appoints the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANDELL], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

At 12 o'clock and 29 minutes p. m. the President of the United States, escorted by the committee of Senators and Representatives, entered the Hall of the House, was announced by the Doorkeeper, and stood at the Clerk's desk amid applause on the floor and in the galleries.

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT.

The PRESIDENT. Members of the Congress: Late last February I reported to you relative to the American merchant marine, and recommended legislation which the executive branch of the Government deemed essential to promote our merchant marine and with it our national welfare. Other problems were pressing and other questions pending, and for one reason or another, which need not be recited, the suggested legislation has not progressed beyond a favorable recommendation by the House committee. The committee has given the question a full and painstaking inquiry and study, and I hope that its favorable report speedily will be given the force of law.

It will be helpful in clearing the atmosphere if we start with the frank recognition of divided opinion and determined opposition. It is no new experience. Like proposals have divided the Congress on various previous occasions. Perhaps a more resolute hostility never was manifest before, and I am very sure the need for decisive action—decisive, favorable action—never was so urgent before.

We are not now dealing with a policy founded on theory; we have a problem which is one of grim actuality. We are facing insistent conditions, out of which will come either additional and staggering Government losses and national impotence on the seas, or else the unfurling of the flag on a great American merchant marine commensurate with our commercial importance, to serve as carrier of our cargoes in peace and meet the necessities of our defense in war. There is no thought here and now to magnify the relation of a merchant marine to our national defense. It is enough to recall that we entered the World War almost wholly dependent on our Allies for transportation by sea. We expended approximately three billions, feverishly, extravagantly, wastefully, and impractically. Out of our eagerness to make up for the omissions of peace and to meet the war emergency we builded and otherwise acquired the vast merchant fleet which the Government owns to-day.

In the simplest way I can say it, our immediate problem is not to build and support a merchant shipping, which I hold to be one of the highest and most worthy aspirations of any great people; our problem is to deal with what we now possess. Our problem is to relieve the Public Treasury of the drain it is already meeting. Let us omit particulars about the frenzied war-time building. Possibly we did full as well as could have been done in the anxious circumstances. Let us pass for the moment the vital relationship between a merchant marine and a commercially aspiring nation. Aye, let us suppose for a moment the absurdity that with one $3,000,000,000 experience, and with the incalculable costs in lives and treasure which may be chargeable to our inability promptly to apply our potency—which God forefend happening again—let us momentarily ignore all of these and turn to note the mere business problem, the practical question of dollars and cents with which we are confronted.

The war construction and the later completion of war contracts, where completion was believed to be the greater economy to the Public Treasury, left us approximately 13,200,000 gross tonnage in ships. The figures are nearer 12,500,000 tons now, owing to the scrapping of the wooden fleet. More than half this tonnage is Government owned, and approximately 2,250,000 tons are under Government operation in one form or another. The net loss to the United States Treasury—sums actually taken therefrom in this Government operation—averaged approximately $16,000,000 per month during the year prior to the assumption of responsibility by the present administration. A constant warfare on this loss of public funds, and the draft to service of capable business management and experienced operating directors, have resulted in applied efficiency and enforced economies. It is very gratifying to report the diminution of the losses to $4,000,000 per month, or a total of $50,000,000 a year; but it is intolerable that the Government should continue a policy from which so enormous a Treasury loss is the inevitable outcome. This loss, moreover, attends operation of less than a third of the Government-owned fleet.

It is not, therefore, a question of adding new Treasury burdens to maintain our shipping; we are paying these burdens now. It is not a question of contracting an outlay to support our merchant shipping, because we are paying already. I am not asking your authorization of a new and added draft on the Public Treasury; I am appealing for a program to diminish the burden we are already bearing.

When your executive government knows of public expenditures aggregating fifty millions annually, which it believes could be reduced by half through a change of policy, your government would be unworthy of public trust if such a change were not commended, nay, if it were not insistently urged.

And the pity of it is that our present expenditure in losses is not constructive. It looks to no future attainments. It is utterly ineffective in the establishment of a dependable merchant marine, whereas the encouragement of private ownership and the application of individual initiative would make for a permanent creation, ready and answerable at all times to the needs of the Nation.

But I have not properly portrayed all the current losses to the Public Treasury. We are wearing out our ships without any provision for replacement. We are having these losses through deterioration now, and are charging nothing against our capital account. But the losses are there, and regrettably larger under Government operation than under private control. Only a few years of continued losses on capital account will make these losses through depreciation alone to exceed the fifty millions a year now drawn to cover losses in operation.

The gloomy picture of losses does not end even there. Notwithstanding the known war cost of $3,000,000,000 for the present tonnage, I will not venture to appraise its cash value to-day. It may as well be confessed now as at some later time that in the mad rush to build, in establishing shipyards wherever men would organize to expend Government money, when we made shipbuilders overnight quite without regard to previous occupations or pursuits, we builded poorly, often very poorly. Moreover, we constructed without any formulated program for a merchant marine. The war emergency impelled, and the cry was for ships, any kind of ships. The error is recalled in regret rather than criticism. The point is that our fleet, costing approximately $3,000,000,000, is worth only a fraction of that cost to-day. Whatever that fraction may be, the truth remains that we have no market in which to sell the ships under our present policy, and a program of surrender and sacrifice and the liquidation which is inevitable unless the pending legislation is sanctioned, will cost scores of millions more.

When the question is asked, Why the insistence for the merchant marine act now? the answer is apparent. Waiving every inspiration which lies in a constructive plan for maintaining prudence in safeguarding against another $3,000,000,000 madness if war ever again impels, we have the unavoidable task of wiping out a $50,000,000 annual loss in operation, and losses aggregating many hundreds of millions in worn-out, sacrificed, or scrapped shipping. Then the supreme humiliation, the admission that the United States—our America, once eminent among the maritime nations of the world—is incapable of asserting itself in the peace triumphs on the seas of the world. It would seem to me doubly humiliating when we own the ships and fall in the genius and capacity to turn their prows toward the marts of the world.

This problem can not longer be ignored, its attempted solution can not longer be postponed. The failure of Congress to act decisively will be no less disastrous than adverse action.

Three courses of action are possible, and the choice among them is no longer to be avoided.

The first is constructive—enact the pending bill, under which, I firmly believe, an American merchant marine, privately owned and privately operated, but serving all the people and always available to the Government in any emergency, may be established and maintained.

The second is obstructive—continue Government operations and attending Government losses and discourage private enterprise by Government competition, under which losses are met by the Public Treasury, and witness the continued losses and deterioration until the colossal failure ends in sheer exhaustion.

The third is destructive—involving the sacrifice of our ships abroad or the scrapping of them at home, the surrender of our aspirations, and the confession of our impotence to the world in general, and our humiliation before the competing world in particular.

A choice among the three is inevitable. It is unbelievable that the American people or the Congress which expresses their power will consent to surrender and destruction. It is equally unbelievable that our people and the Congress which translates their wishes into action will longer sustain a program of obstruction and attending losses to the Treasury.

I have come to urge the constructive alternative, to reassert an American "We will." [Applause.] I have come to ask you to relieve the responsible administrative branch of the Government from a program upon which failure and hopelessness and staggering losses are written for every page, and let us turn to a program of assured shipping to serve us in war and to give guaranty to our commercial independence in peace.

I know full well the hostility in the popular mind to the word "subsidy." It is stressed by the opposition and associated with "special privilege" by those who are unfailing advocates of Government aid whenever vast numbers are directly concerned. "Government aid" would be a fairer term than "subsidy" in defining what we are seeking to do for our merchant marine, and the interests are those of all the people, even though the aid goes to the few who serve.

If Government aid is a fair term—and I think it is—to apply to authorizations aggregating $75,000,000 to promote good roads for market highways, it is equally fit to be applied to the establishment and maintenance of American market highways on the salted seas. If Government aid is the proper designation for fifteen to forty millions annually expended to improve and maintain inland waterways in aid of commerce, it is a proper designation for a needed assistance to establish and maintain ocean highways where there is actual commerce to be carried.

But call it "subsidy," since there are those who prefer to appeal to mistaken prejudice rather than make frank and logical argument. We might so call the annual loss of fifty millions, which we are paying now without protest by those who most abhor, we might as well call that a "subsidy." If so, I am proposing to cut it in half, approximately, and to the saving thus effected there would be added millions upon millions of further savings through ending losses on capital account—Government capital, out of the Public Treasury, always remember—and there would be at least the promise and the prospect of the permanent establishment of the needed merchant marine.

I challenged every insinuation of favored interests and the enrichment of the special few at the expense of the Public Treasury. I am, first of all, appealing to save the Treasury. Perhaps the unlimited bestowal of Government aid might justify the apprehension of special favoring, but the pending bill, the first ever proposed which carries such a provision, automatically guards against enrichment or perpetuated bestowal. It provides that shipping lines receiving Government aid must have their actual investment and their operating expenses audited by the Government, that Government aid will only be paid until the shipping enterprise earns 10 per cent on actual capital employed, and immediately that when more than 10 per cent earning is reached half of the excess earnings must be applied to the repayment of the Government aid which has been previously advanced. Thus the possible earnings are limited to a very reasonable amount if capital is to be risked and management is to be attracted. If success attends, as we hope it will, the Government outlay is returned, the inspiration of opportunity to earn remains, and American transportation by sea is established.

Though differing in detail, it is not more in proportion to their population and capacity than other great nations have done in aiding the establishment of their merchant marines, and it is timely to recall that we gave them our commerce to aid in their upbuilding, while the American task now is to upbuild and establish in the face of their most active competition. Indeed, the American development will have to overcome every obstacle which may be put in our path, except as international comity forbids. Concern about our policy is not limited to our own domain, though the interest abroad is of very differing character. I hope it is seemly to say it, because it must be said, the maritime nations of the world are in complete accord with the opposition here to the pending measure. They have a perfect right to such an attitude. When we look from their viewpoints we can understand. But I wish to stress the American viewpoint. Ours should be the viewpoint from which one sees American carriers at sea, the dependence of American commerce, and American vessels for American reliance in the event of war. Some of the costly lessons of war must be learned again and again, but our shipping lesson in the World War was much too costly to be effaced from the memory of this or future generations.

Not so many months ago the head of a company operating a fleet of ships under our flag called at the Executive Offices to discuss a permit to transfer his fleet of cargo vessels to a foreign flag, though he meant to continue them in a distinctly American service. He based his request for transfer on the allegation that by such a transfer he could reduce his labor costs alone sufficiently to provide a profit on capital invested. I do not vouch for the accuracy of the statement nor mean to discuss it. The allusion is made to recall that in good conscience Congress has created by law conditions surrounding labor on American ships which shipping men the world over declare result in higher costs of operation under our flag. I frankly rejoice if higher standards for labor on American ships have been established. Merest justice suggests that when Congress fixes these standards it is fair to extend Government aid in maintaining them until world competition is brought to the same high level, or until our shipping lines are so firmly established that they can face world competition alone. [Applause.]

Having discussed in detail the policy and provisions of the pending bill when previously addressing you, I forbear a repetition now. In individual exchanges of opinion not a few in House or Senate have expressed personal sympathy with the purposes of the bill and then uttered a discouraging doubt about the sentiment of their constituencies. It would be most discouraging if a measure of such transcending national importance must have its fate depend on geographical, occupational, professional, or partisan objections. Frankly, I think it loftier statesmanship to support and commend a policy designed to effect the larger good to the Nation than merely to record the too hasty impressions of a constituency. Out of the harmonized aspirations, the fully informed convictions, and the united efforts of all the people will come the greater Republic. Commercial eminence on the seas, ample agencies for the promotion and carrying of our foreign commerce, are of no less importance to the people of Mississippi and the Missouri Valley, the great Northwest, and the Rocky Mountain States than to the seaboard States and industrial communities building inland a thousand miles or more. It is a common cause, with its benefits commonly shared. When people fail in the national viewpoint, and live in the confines of community selfishness or narrowness, the sun of this Republic will have passed its meridian, and our larger aspirations will shrivel in the approaching twilight.

But let us momentarily put aside the aspiring and inspiring viewpoint. The blunt, indisputable fact of the loss of fifty millions a year under Government operation remains; likewise the fast diminishing capital account, the enormous war expenditure, to which we were forced because we had not fittingly encouraged and builded as our commerce expanded in peace. Here are facts to deal with, not fancies wrought out of our political and economic disputes. The abolition of the annual loss and the best salvage of the capital account are of concern to all the people.

It is my firm belief that the combined savings of operating losses and the protection of the capital account through more advantageous sales of our war-built or war-seized ships, because of the favoring policy which the pending bill will establish, will more than pay every dollar expended in Government aid for 25 years to come.

It should be kept in mind that the approximate sum of five millions annually paid for the transport of ocean mails is no new expenditure. It should be kept in mind that the loan fund to encourage building is not new; it is the law already, enacted by the essential unanimous vote of Congress. It is only included in the pending bill in order to amend so as to assure the exaction of a minimum interest rate by the Government, whereas the existing law leaves the grant of building loans subject to any whim of favoritism.

It should be kept in mind, also, that there are assured limitations of the Government aid proposed. The direct aid, with ocean carrying maintained at our present participation, will not reach twenty millions a year, and the maximum direct aid, if our shipping is so promoted that we carry one-half our deep-seas commerce, will not exceed thirty millions annually. At the very maximum of outlay we should be saving twenty millions of our present annual operating loss. If the maximum is ever reached, the establishment of our merchant marine will have been definitely recorded and the Government-owned fleet fortunately liquidated.

From this point of view it is the simple, incontestable wisdom of businesslike dealing to save all that is possible of the annual loss and avoid the millions sure to be lost to the Government's capital account in sacrificing our fleet. But there is a bigger, broader, more inspiring viewpoint, aye, a patriotic viewpoint. I refer to the constructive action of to-day, which offers the only dependable promise of making our war-time inheritance of ships the foundation of a great agency of commerce in peace and an added guaranty of service when it is necessary to our national defense.

Thus far I have been urging Government aid to American shipping, having in mind every interest of our producing population, whether of mine, factory, or farm, because expanding commerce is the foremost thought of every nation in the world to-day.

I believe in Government aid becomingly bestowed. We have aided industry through our tariffs; we have aided railway transportation in land grants and loans. We have aided the construction of market roads and the improvement of inland waterways. We have aided reclamation and irrigation and the development of water power; we have loaned for seed grains in anticipation of harvests. We expend millions in investigation and experimentation to promote a common benefit, though a limited few are the direct beneficiaries. We have loaned hundreds of millions to promote the marketing of American goods. It has all been commendable and highly worth while.

At the present moment the American farmer is the chief sufferer from the cruel readjustments which follow war's inflation, and befitting Government aid to our farmers is highly essential to our national welfare. No people may safely boast a good fortune which the farmer does not share.

Already this Congress and the administrative branch of the Government have given willing ear to the agricultural plea for postwar relief, and much has been done which has proven helpful. Admittedly, it is not enough. Our credit systems, under Government provision and control, must be promptly and safely broadened to relieve our agricultural distress. [Applause.]

To this problem and such others of pressing importance as reasonably may be dealt with in the short session I shall invite your attention at an early day.

I have chosen to confine myself to the specific problem of dealing with our merchant marine because I have asked you to assemble two weeks in advance of the regularly appointed time to expedite its consideration. The executive branch of the Government would feel itself remiss to contemplate our yearly loss and attending failure to accomplish if the conditions were not pressed for your decision. More, I would feel myself lacking in concern for America's future if I failed to stress the beckoning opportunity to equip the United States to assume a befitting place among the nations of the world whose commerce is inseparable from the good fortunes to which rightfully all peoples aspire. [Applause, the Members rising.]

At 1 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m. the President and the Members of his Cabinet retired from the Hall of the House.

Whereupon the President pro tempore and the Members of the Senate returned to their Chamber.

The SPEAKER. The joint session of the two Houses is now adjourned.

At 1 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m. the House resumed its session.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent—

Mr. CABLE (on request of Mr. ARENTZ) was granted leave of absence on account of important business.

Mr. BELL (on request of Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee) was granted leave of absence indefinitely on account of personal illness.

Mr. MCARTHUR (on request of Mr. HAWLEY) was granted leave of absence on account of illness and important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I think it would be interesting if the gentleman would withhold his motion for a moment to permit an inquiry. It would be interesting to Members of the House generally if they could know, providing the gentleman from Wyoming is in a position to state it, what the program will be to-morrow.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on Rules may present a rule to-morrow for the consideration of the shipping bill. That is likely to be done, although it has not been absolutely determined upon, but it is my expectation that a rule will be presented to-morrow for the consideration of the bill the balance of the week, beginning Thursday.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. To-morrow, of course, is Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. MONDELL. To-morrow would be Calendar Wednesday if it were not for the fact that we are within two weeks of the end of the session.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman understands one or two gentlemen desired a few minutes in which to address the House to-morrow, and I understood from the gentleman earlier in the day that that could be arranged.

Mr. MONDELL. I think that can be arranged, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries reported a revised bill to-day and I am advised that they have also filed a supplemental report and we have not had an opportunity to see it, and it may not be printed. I do not know just when, but representing those who are opposed to the bill I ask the privilege of having time within which to file minority views, say, until and including Saturday.

Mr. MONDELL. Not to interfere with the consideration of the measure, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I agree to that modification.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to have time within which to file minority views, not to interfere with the consideration of the measure. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, November 22, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts; Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. H. R. 12817. A bill to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 1257). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12387) granting an increase of pension to Emily E. Patison; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 12657) granting an increase of pension to George W. Powell; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 12723) granting a pension to Lewis Maple; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska: A bill (H. R. 12860) amending section 1 of the interstate commerce act; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. STEVENSON: A bill (H. R. 12861) providing for the erection of a monument at Cowpens battle ground, Cherokee County, S. C., commemorative of Gen. Daniel Morgan and those who participated in the Battle of Cowpens on the 17th day of January, 1781; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. McPHERSON: A bill (H. R. 12862) granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the World War; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. PARKS of Arkansas: A bill (H. R. 12863) for the purchase of a site and the erection of a building thereon at Warren, Ark.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BACHARACH: A bill (H. R. 12864) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a new public building at Pleasantville, N. J.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. FOSTER: A bill (H. R. 12865) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Mexican Wars and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers and sailors, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 390) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.

By Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas: Resolution (H. Res. 446) for the immediate consideration of H. R. 12817; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BACHARACH: A bill (H. R. 12866) for the relief of Thomas N. Emley; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FAUST: A bill (H. R. 12867) granting a pension to Elizabeth E. Shaw; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: A bill (H. R. 12868) for the relief of Bernard Joseph Maley; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12869) for the relief of Frank A. Brown; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12870) granting a pension to John H. Gibbs; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12871) granting an increase of pension to Ruben Riley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12872) granting a pension to Thomas Flynn; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12873) granting an increase of pension to Paul Claire; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FOSTER: A bill (H. R. 12874) granting a pension to Robert Clyde McBride; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12875) granting a pension to Tracey M. Halley; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12876) granting a pension to Elizabeth Hawthorne; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12877) granting a pension to Jennie Foster; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12878) granting a pension to Emma Van Duyn; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12879) granting a pension to Ella Knowlton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12880) granting a pension to Margaret J. Essex; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOORE of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 12881) granting a pension to James A. Kelley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12882) granting an increase of pension to James H. Barker; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SEARS: A bill (H. R. 12883) granting a pension to Bertha Mann; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SMITHWICK: A bill (H. R. 12884) for the relief of John N. Halladay; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SNYDER: A bill (H. R. 12885) granting a pension to Susan B. Cantlin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12886) to reimburse E. W. Hardendorf for supplies furnished the submarine chaser No. 328; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. STRONG of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 12887) granting a pension to Jacob F. Rosenberger; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TEMPLE: A bill (H. R. 12888) granting a pension to Lizzie C. Masters; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TINCHER: A bill (H. R. 12889) granting a pension to William B. Kimbrel; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VOLK: A bill (H. R. 12890) for the relief of George E. Doty; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12891) granting a pension to John F. Kilbride; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

6420. By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of San Francisco Labor Council, regarding the impeachment of the Attorney General and Federal Judge Wilkerson; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

6421. By Mr. CULLEN: Petition of the National Legislative Committee of the American Legion, Washington, D. C., favoring adjusted compensation for soldiers of the late war; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6422. By Mr. KAHN: Petition of the National Legislative Committee of the American Legion, Washington, D. C., favoring retirement of enlisted men of the Army after 25 years' service with retired pay of not less than $100 per month and allowances; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

6423. Also, petition of the National Legislative Committee of the American Legion, Washington, D. C., favoring the passage of S. 1565, providing for retirement under certain conditions of officers of the United States Army, other than officers of the Regular Army, who incurred physical disability in line of duty while in the service of the United States during the World War; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

6424. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of the Armenian Committee, of New Orleans, La., favoring freedom of Armenia; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

6425. By Mr. ROSSDALE: Petition of Creston Avenue Baptist Church, New York City, regarding the Turkish situation; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

6426. By Mr. SNYDER: Resolution of the Women's Club of Albuquerque, N. Mex., in regard to the proposed all-the-year national park in southern New Mexico; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

6427. Also, petition of the South Congregational Church of Utica, N. Y., favoring adequate protection of the minority population under Turkish rule and asking representation on the part of the United States in Near East affairs; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, November 22, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Gracious Father, Thou hast been with us in the days gone by. Thou art still the helper of those who trust in Thee. We can rely upon Thine own strong arm, Thy wisdom, and Thy graciousness in all the perplexities and burdens of life. Give us light in our darkness, strength in our weakness, and hope in our despondency, and ever lead us onward through the mazes and contradictions of possible trouble. We ask in Jesus' name. Amen.

CARTER GLASS, a Senator from the State of Virginia, and CHARLES A. RAWSON, a Senator from the State of Iowa, appeared in their seats to-day.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Fletcher	McKellar	Simmons
Bayard	Frelinghuysen	McKinley	Smith
Borah	Glass	McNary	Smoot
Brandeggee	Gooding	Nelson	Spencer
Broussard	Hale	Nicholson	Stanfield
Cameron	Harrell	Norris	Sterling
Capper	Harris	Overman	Sutherland
Caraway	Harrison	Page	Swanson
Colt	Heflin	Pepper	Trammell
Culberson	Hitchcock	Pittman	Wadsworth
Cummins	Kellogg	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Keyes	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	Ladd	Rawson	Warren
Edge	La Follette	Reed, Pa.	Willis
Ernst	Lodge	Sheppard
Felton	McCumber	Shortridge

Mr. HEFLIN. My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is absent on account of illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 12859) to provide for certain expenses incident to the third session of the Sixty-seventh Congress, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed enrolled bills of the following titles and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 3300. An act granting a pension to Marie Doughty Gorgas; H. R. 307. An act for the relief of J. Irving Brooks; and H. R. 10144. An act conveying the peninsula of Presque Isle, Erie, Pa., to the State of Pennsylvania, its original owner, for public park purposes.

ADDRESS BY MRS. REBECCA LATIMER FELTON, SENATOR FROM GEORGIA.

Mrs. FELTON. Mr. President, in my very remarkable campaign in Georgia, which, contrary to precedent, all came along after I was selected, one of the very amusing things that came to me by mail was a cartoon from San Antonio, Tex. The cartoon represented the United States Senate in session. The seats seemed to be fully occupied, and there appeared in the picture the figure of a woman who had evidently entered without sending in her card. The gentlemen in the Senate took the situation variously. Some seemed to be a little bit hysterical, but most of them occupied their time looking at the ceiling. Over the cartoon was written the wonderful words, "Will they ask the lady to take a chair?" [Laughter.] I want to return my thanks to-day for the beautiful, hospitable welcome that you have accorded to the lady when you gave her a chair.

I also want to return thanks to the noble men of Georgia. Georgia was very slow in her promises with reference to woman's suffrage. She has been rapid to perform, for Georgia is the first State in the Federal Union composed of 48 States where one chivalric governor went to the front and said, "Send that old lady there and let her look at the Senate for even a day."

The Senator elect from Georgia, Mr. GEORGE, said, "She shall have her day there," and I want to thank him in this presence. He is a worthy successor. I want to plead for your gracious attention to him. He has been most chivalric. The sitting Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] has been most obliging. Indeed, I feel that I am the happiest woman in the United States. I am at home in the Senate for a day. I appreciate this wonderful hospitality and the beautiful attention thus accorded to me.

I want to say further that I commend to your attention the 10,000,000 women voters who are watching this incident. It is a romantic incident, Senators, but it is also a historical event. If Lady Astor, from the State of Virginia, can go to London and be accepted as a member of the British House of Commons, you can take this remnant of the old South that has never flickered in her patriotism to her country and be very well assured that she is not going to discredit her commission.

Let me say, Mr. President, that when the women of the country come in and sit with you, though there may be but very few in the next few years, I pledge you that you will get ability, you will get integrity of purpose, you will get exalted patriotism, and you will get unstinted usefulness.

Mr. President and Senators, I thank you very much for this hearing. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

SENATOR FROM GEORGIA.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I present the credentials of WALTER F. GEORGE, Senator elect from the State of Georgia. I ask that his credentials may be read and that the oath of office be administered to him.

The credentials were read and ordered to be filed, as follows:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Atlanta.

TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that on the 7th day of November, 1922, WALTER F. GEORGE was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Georgia a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the unexpired term of the late Senator THOMAS E. WATSON, ending March 4, 1927.

Witness: His excellency our governor, Thomas W. Hardwick, and our seal hereto affixed at the capitol this 18th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1922.

THOMAS W. HARDWICK, Governor.

By the governor:
[SEAL.]

S. G. MCLENDON,
Secretary of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator elect from Georgia will present himself at the desk and take the oath of office.

Mr. GEORGE, escorted by Mr. HARRIS, advanced to the Vice President's desk; and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

EXPENSES OF THIRD SESSION, SIXTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS.

The bill (H. R. 12859) to provide for certain expenses incident to the third session of the Sixty-seventh Congress was read twice by its title.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations have already been in consultation in reference to the bill which has just been referred to that committee, and I am directed to report it favorably and to ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill just reported. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. WARREN. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 1, after line 11, under the head of "Senate," it is proposed to insert:

For 16 pages for the Senate Chamber, at the rate of $2.50 per day each from November 20, 1922, to December 3, 1922, both dates inclusive, $560.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR RANDELL.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, on November 10 last in New York, at the meeting of the National Merchant Marine Association held at the Grand Central Palace, the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANDELL] made a very instructive and interesting address relative to aid for shipping. I ask unanimous consent that his address may be printed in the Record in the regular 8-point type.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type as follows:

"To the members of the National Merchant Marine Association and to the other friends of the American merchant marine here to-night, I want to express, with all the emphasis in my power, my firm conviction that the problem of American shipping can not properly be regarded as a partisan issue, and that to treat it on the basis of politics will be disastrous not only to the merchant marine but to the Nation as well.

"Our shipping is no more a Republican or a Democratic institution than our Army or our Navy, to each of which it constitutes an indispensable adjunct held in reserve. It can no more be dispensed with than they can. It is not a luxury but a national necessity, for in it are combined a weapon of defense for the American Nation and an instrument to safeguard American industry.

"No matter what party might have been in power during the war, an expanded merchant marine must have been provided. No matter what party is in power now, our new-born merchant marine must be maintained. For just as no party truly representative of the American people could have shirked the responsibility of meeting the war need of providing ships to protect our fighting forces, so no party with the interests of the Nation at heart can now shirk the responsibility of keeping our flag on the seas.

"It was under a Democratic administration that the millions of tons of ships we now have were built. It is under a Republican administration that their future must be provided for. And if the American merchant marine fails, if it is abandoned and our place on the seas is surrendered to foreigners, together with our control of our own commerce, such a result must bring discredit to the Democracy that fathered the fleet, as well as to the Republicans that adopted it.

"I need not emphasize to you that failure is inevitable unless prompt steps are taken to equip our merchant marine so that the increasingly successful competition of foreigners can be met. Following the war the bulk of our imports and exports was carried in American ships, whereas to-day two-thirds of our overseas trade is transported by foreign vessels. In this change are reflected the steps whereby other nations, with their cheaper built and cheaper operated ships, aided by national support, have taken our carrying trade away from us. Our elimination as a commercial sea power of importance is inevitable unless vigorous legislation is promptly enacted that will enable us to regain our rightful place on the seas.

"Legislation designed to meet the situation has been prepared and is awaiting action by Congress. It provides for American shipping what every other maritime nation of importance has given to its merchant marine—subsidization. In addition, other aids are specified, calculated not only to benefit the ship and the shipper but the manufacturer, merchant, farmer, labor, and the Nation as a whole.

"I hear it stated from time to time that the Democratic Party can not support a plan of subsidy because the policies of the party are fundamentally opposed to such a policy. History, however, shows us that the very reverse is true. Under the early shipping policies of the Democracy the American merchant marine was developed to a point of efficiency and power beyond the trade fleets of all other nations. Under the laws framed by the founders of the Republic we had discriminating duties in favor of goods carried in American vessels, and as a result of these we transported nine-tenths of our exports and imports under our own flag for many years. Just before the late war, however, conditions had become exactly reversed, and it was the foreigner who carried the nine-tenths of our ocean commerce.

"What had happened? In the period from 1828 to 1850 we gradually gave up discriminations against the vessels of those nations which agreed not to discriminate against us. And then, when our hands were tied, foreign nations began to take up effectively the subsidization of their own vessels and our sea power began to wane.

"It was the Democracy which stepped into the breach at this crisis in American shipping affairs and initiated the American policy of ship subsidies. Two southern statesmen began it—Senator Thomas Butler King, of Georgia, and Senator Thomas J. Rusk, of Texas. Both advocated annual appropriations for the carrying of mails and the encouragement of American steamship building and navigation. President Polk stood strongly for this policy, and in 1845 and 1847 Congress passed legislation to this end. As to the effectiveness of this step inaugurated by the Democratic Party let me offer some Republican testimony from the majority report of the Merchant Marine Commission of 1904-5. That body was appointed by Congress and headed by the late Senator Gallinger. The report says:

"As a result of this enlightened statesmanship, the United States from 1850 onward for several years built more ocean steamships than Great Britain did, and better steamships, superior in size, speed, power, and commercial value. * * * The national policy thus approved would doubtless have continued unbroken to the present day but for the fierce and deplorable sectional quarrel that immediately preceded the Civil War. * * * In the white heat of this quarrel the mail subventions were withdrawn and the North Atlantic steamships, struggling hard with subsidized British rivals, were abandoned.

"The report continues—

"It is sometimes said that this national effort to create a steam fleet by mail subventions failed of its purpose. But it failed only because the effort was given up in the very crisis of the contest. A few years more would probably have made our steamships as securely masters of the North Atlantic as our packet ships and clipper ships had been before them.

"This tribute to subsidization, penned nearly 20 years ago, has an even greater bearing to-day than then, for now we have a mighty nucleus in hand for a mighty fleet. The ships are here, but they must be vested with competitive power before it is too late. Support of subsidy will not be an abandonment of Democratic policies but a renewal of the very ones on which the American merchant marine was set forth on a voyage to sea supremacy that ended with the goal in sight, and only then because the sailing orders were canceled. Let us not make this mistake again."

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I have a communication from the National Board of Farm Organizations transmitting certain resolutions adopted by that organization on the subject referred to in the address which has just been ordered printed in the RECORD. I ask that the communication may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C.,
November 21, 1922.

Senator DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: The National Board of Farm Organizations has taken a very strong position on the so-called ship subsidy measure. A copy of our resolutions against this bill is inclosed herewith.

Respectfully yours,

NATIONAL BOARD OF FARM ORGANIZATIONS,
By CHAS. A. LYMAN, Secretary.

REPORT OF MEETING OCTOBER 11, 12, 13, 1922.

NATIONAL BOARD FARM ORGANIZATIONS,
Washington, D. C., October 19, 1922.

SHIP SUBSIDY OPPOSED BY NATIONAL BOARD OF FARM ORGANIZATIONS.

Ship subsidy in general and ship subsidy in particular as embodied in the Jones-Greene bill H. R. 12021 are emphatically opposed by the National Board of Farm Organizations.

Clear-cut opposition to the ship subsidy bill is expressed in the resolution adopted by the semiannual conference of the National Board of Farm Organizations, held at its headquarters, 1731 Eye Street NW., Washington, D. C., October 11-13. The resolution reads as follows:

"Whereas it is apparent that the question of granting subsidies to our merchant shipping will soon be brought to a vote in Congress; and

"Whereas the farmers of the United States have been traditionally opposed to the granting of such subsidies; and

"Whereas the plan embodied in the Jones-Greene bill, which is now under consideration, contains many provisions that are extremely objectionable and would, in our opinion, be detrimental to the best interest of the country as a whole, if enacted: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That this body record an emphatic protest against the passage of this proposed legislation."

This opposition to the ship subsidy bill confirms the position taken by the directors of the National Board of Farm Organizations in regularly called session, July 5-6, in which it was stated that "the board desires emphatically to go on record against the ship subsidy bill, known as H. R. 12021." The resolution adopted at that time, in part, stated:

"Wherever bona fide groups of organized farmers have assembled in the past to consider this long-agitated question of ship subsidy the sentiment against it has been overwhelming; and during the recent months as farmers have been learning of this particular measure their voices have been raised against it more forcibly than ever.

"In addition to being opposed in principle to subsidizing private shippers or shipping corporations we wish to point out a few of the many objectionable features of the bill.

"Unprecedented and unwarranted autocratic powers are vested in the Shipping Board, as may be gathered from the fact that it is not required to make any financial accounting to Congress or the President, while at the same time it is permitted to sell Government-owned ships at private sale without competitive bidding.

"Ships costing several billions of dollars can and probably will be sold at 10 cents on the dollar, it is estimated. We shall lend over $100,000,000 at 2 per cent interest to recondition these ships when sold, and then pay the owners in round numbers, $150,000,000 in subsidies besides in the next few years.

The National Board of Farm Organizations protests the contemplated program, the effect of which can only end in disaster to the Nation. We earnestly request Congress to reject the measure."

PETITIONS.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of students of the senior division, Reserve Officers' Training Corps, of the Kansas State Agricultural College, at Manhattan, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation granting 50 cents per day to members of the senior division of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WILLIS presented resolutions adopted by the Presbyterian Church of New Harrisburg; the Presbyterian, United Presbyterian, Methodist Episcopal, Reformed, Church of Christ, and Lutheran Churches of Carrollton; the Methodist Episcopal and the Methodist Protestant Churches of Arlington; the Methodist Protestant, Methodist Episcopal, and Presbyterian Churches of Forrest; the Presbyterian, the Methodist Episcopal, the Lutheran, and Church of Christ Churches of Minerva; the Methodist, the Protestant Episcopal, the Evangelical Reformed, the English Lutheran, and the Presbyterian Churches of Upper Sandusky; and the Presbyterian and Methodist Episcopal Churches of Malvern, all in the State of Ohio, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented the petition of Rev. W. E. Watson and 200 other citizens of Steubenville, Ohio, praying for the enactment of the so-called Dyer antilynching bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania presented resolutions adopted by the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Pittsburgh and the Conemaugh Presbytery at Shelocta, both in the State of Pennsylvania, praying an amendment of the Constitution authorizing the enactment of uniform marriage and divorce laws, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Conemaugh Presbytery at Shelocta and the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Pittsburgh, both in the State of Pennsylvania, favoring an amendment of the Constitution prohibiting polygamy, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Conemaugh Presbytery at Shelocta; the united churches of Mifflintown, the united Protestant churches of Lewistown, the Lutheran Church of Georgetown, the united Presbyterian churches of Middleburg, the united churches of Reedsville, the Church of the Brethren of Huntingdon, and St. Peter's Reformed Church of Kelly Township, Union County, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. LADD presented the petitions of Mrs. Mable Filbin and 7 others, of Steele; J. N. Horgan and 17 others, of Neche; Seb Urlaub and 9 others, of Leroy; Mrs. Bert Johnson and 25 others, of Flaxton; Mrs. Clara Niles and 9 others, of Barton; Andrew Hamark and 5 others, of Hamar; Frank J. Lyon and 18 others, of Dogden; Andrew Ornhold and 13 others, of Williston; A. A. Delzer and 8 others, of Zeeland; Erwin Mattson and 9 others, of Fullerton; Peter Fincher and 11 others, of Menoken; Henry N. Hoganson and 2 others, of Lisbon; J. E. Kiefer and 42 others, of Hague; Mrs. J. O. Olson and 6 others, of White Earth; George Kunrath and 29 others, of Oakes; William Oelke and 7 others, of Hazen; C. P. Christianson and 30 others, of Bowbells; Mrs. H. B. French and 11 others, of Bowman; Mrs. J. C. Hopkins and 16 others, of Ryder; J. F. Clemons and 8 others, of Adrian; all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation stabilizing the price of wheat, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 4043) for the relief of Wyatt A. Marshall; and

A bill (S. 4044) authorizing the cancellation of the Indian trust patent which issued to Justine Sayers; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. STERLING (for Mr. ODDIE):

A bill (S. 4045) to regulate and control unincorporated cooperative contract loan, savings, and investment institutions operating under declarations of trust in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 4046) granting a pension to James R. Lewis; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KEYES:

A bill (S. 4047) providing for a readjustment of the rates of pay of chief pay clerks and chief pharmacists; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. HARRIS:

A bill (S. 4048) to pay $7,500 to Georgia Durham Watson; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 4049) for the relief of Joseph Edmund Hanlon (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 4050) to provide for the purchase and sale of farm products; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN:

A bill (S. 4051) to reinstate the lapsed term and converted insurance of Edward Owens Holloway; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 4052) to amend the retirement laws affecting certain grades of Army officers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 4053) for the relief of Edward Owens Holloway; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 246) providing for the delivery of mail notwithstanding failure to provide receptacles therefor; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

ADDITIONAL SENATE PAGES.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 363), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to employ five additional pages for the Senate Chamber, to serve from November 20, 1922, to March 31, 1923, and to be paid at the rate of $2.50 per day each out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

MERGER OF MEAT PACKERS.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I offer a Senate resolution and ask to have it read and that it then lie upon the table to be called up by me at the earliest opportunity.

The resolution (S. Res. 364) was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and hereby is, requested to report immediately to the Senate all information now in his possession relating to any proposed merger or mergers of large meat-packing companies, accompanying said report with a statement of the number of animals annually slaughtered under Federal inspection since January 1, 1919, and the proportion slaughtered by each of the five principal packers with their subsidiary and affiliated companies; also to report what action, if any, he has taken or contemplates taking in reference to such proposed merger.

FUNERAL EXPENSES OF THE LATE SENATOR WATSON OF GEORGIA.

Mr. HARRIS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 365), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate the actual and necessary expenses incurred by the committee in arranging for and attending the funeral of the Hon. THOMAS E. WATSON, late a Senator from the State of Georgia, upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

COMPENSATION AND MILEAGE OF SENATOR FELTON, OF GEORGIA.

Mr. HARRIS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 366), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to REBECCA LATIMER FELTON $287.67 for compensation, and $280 as mileage, the same being amounts due her as a Senator from the State of Georgia from November 8 to November 21, 1922.

MANUFACTURERS OF MAIL RECEPTACLES, ETC.

Mr. McKELLAR submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 367), which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the United States Senate the names of manufacturers of covers for door slots and also for mail receptacles for use of United States City Delivery Mail Service under requirements of the Post Office Department. The Postmaster General will include also the number of such slots or receptacles manufactured by each manufacturer since July 1, 1922, and the number now in process of manufacture.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I wish to introduce a concurrent resolution and to be permitted to make a brief statement relative thereto. Yesterday in the message of the President—

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator at this point?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORRIS. Is the resolution which the Senator submits a Senate resolution?

Mr. CARAWAY. It is a concurrent resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. I was going to ask, if it is a Senate resolution, that the Senator withhold it until the present order before the Senate may be completed.

Mr. CARAWAY. I will take only a moment of the time of the Senate.

Yesterday the President in his message asked that the Congress which he convened in extraordinary session should disregard the expressed wishes of the people as disclosed in the recent election and pass a ship subsidy bill. He says:

In individual exchanges of opinion not a few in House or Senate have expressed personal sympathy with the purpose of the bill and then uttered a discouraging doubt about the sentiment of their constituencies.

The President then says it would be discouraging—I am not quoting him literally, but in effect—if the Congress should heed a mandate from the people and refuse to pass legislation which was desired by certain interests. That is in effect the statement of the President which appears in his address in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday.

The President's exact language is as follows:

Having discussed in detail the policy and provisions of the pending bill when previously addressing you, I forbear a repetition now. In individual exchanges of opinion not a few in House or Senate have expressed personal sympathy with the purposes of the bill and then uttered a discouraging doubt about the sentiment of their constituencies. It would be most discouraging if a measure of such transcending national importance must have its fate depend on geographical, occupational, professional, or partisan objections. Frankly, I think it loftier statesmanship to support and commend a policy designed to effect the larger good to the Nation than merely to record the too hasty impressions of a constituency.

With that idea in view, Mr. President, I present a resolution expressing the sense of the Senate, the House concurring, that Members who have been repudiated by their constituencies should not by their votes attempt to fasten upon the people legislation which the people themselves at the polls have tried to repudiate.

In this connection permit me to say that for those Members of the Senate who go out, either because they were not candidates for reelection or because their people chose others in their stead, I have nothing but the kindest feeling, and I present the concurrent resolution not to reflect upon them or upon the ninety-odd Members of the House who were left at home by the will of the sovereign people, but to call attention to the wrongfulness of trying to pass through the Congress at an extraordinary session legislation that the people have sought to prevent. It was not the intention of the framers of the Constitution that legislation should be jammed through Congress after the general election and before the convening of the Congress elected in the November elections.

The length of time allotted discloses, if no other argument were available, that the expectation of the framers of the Constitution was that the legislation enacted in the short session of Congress should be merely routine legislation, such as the passing of appropriation bills and measures of that kind. Now, with an adverse mandate from the people against the proposed ship subsidy bill, the President calls Congress in extraordinary session and, in effect, says to its Members, "Do not regard the mandate of the people; listen to me. The people have already ordered your retirement to private life; the only hope you may entertain to continue on the Federal pay roll is an appointment, and the only man who can make that appointment is the President of the United States. Therefore, disregard the mandate of the people; jam through this legislation; fasten upon the backs of the American people $100,000,000 annually in subsidies and then look for help to the Executive, who alone can keep you from being compelled to earn a living as a private citizen." That is what the President's utterances mean; that is what the President was trying to say in as diplomatic language as the President knows how to say it—"Disregard the people; they have already repudiated you; look to me; the power yet rests in my hands to reward you if you hear my voice and disregard the voice of the people. A ship subsidy for my friends and an appointment for you."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Without discussing the question whether it would be better for the country and wiser that the old Congress should not legislate upon general subjects after the election of a new Congress and before the new Congress has qualified to legislate, what can the Senator cite to sustain his statement—

Mr. CARAWAY. That we have a constitutional right to forbid them to do it?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No. If the Senator will be kind enough to wait until I frame my question—

Mr. CARAWAY. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought he was through.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What authority can the Senator cite to substantiate his statement that it was the intention of the framers of the Constitution that the old Congress, some Members of which had been defeated, should be limited in their power to the passage of appropriation bills only and should not engage in any other legislation?

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, well, the length of time—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; the Senator said, if I understood him correctly, that the framers of the Constitution never intended that the old Congress should legislate upon anything but appropriation bills.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is exactly what I said.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I want to know what authority the Senator can quote as to the intention of the framers of the Constitution in that respect.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator asks me a question and then will not let me answer it because he is so anxious to repeat it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, no; the Senator has all the time there is to answer it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Not so long as the Senator is alive, because he will take most of it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have yielded the floor.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator did not happen to have it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator yielded to me.

Mr. CARAWAY. I referred, Mr. President, to the brief duration of the short session. The President himself realized that fact and dared not wait until the first Monday in December, when by law and under the Constitution the old Congress would reconvene, but did what no other President ever did in the history of the country, called Congress into a third session in order that they might pass this legislation in the present Congress, for he knows, and every man who may vote for this unholy subsidy knows, that if the time shall slip by until the Congress that was elected by the people last November may have an opportunity to pass upon it Congress will repudiate it. It does not need any argument to show that it was not intended that this Congress should do it. The life of the present Congress is so limited that even the President and the framers of the ship subsidy measure knew they could not pass it in the regular session of Congress, and so the President called this extraordinary session.

The concurrent resolution goes a little further, Mr. President. It suggests that chairmen of various committees out of harmony with the mandate of the people should not longer continue to be chairmen of those committees and obstruct the will of the people. This is a representative form of government; we hold our commissions from the people, and we have absolutely no moral right to vote contrary to their wishes, if they have had an opportunity at the polls to express their wishes. The President's entreaty that Senators and Representatives should disregard this mandate, I think, makes it opportune—indeed, imperative—that the Senate should say to him that we recognize the people are our masters and not the President of these United States, and that he has no power, no moral right, to absolve us from our obligation to the people, and should not ask us to betray the people and listen to him in order that he may fasten upon the people legislation that he knows the people repudiated on the 7th day of November, 1922. If this be not true, let this ship subsidy bill rest until the Congress that was elected in 1922 shall have an opportunity to express its views.

Why, even Senator Newberry—the man who paid the highest price for a seat that ever a seat in the Senate brought—had the good taste to say, when repudiated by the people of Michigan by the rejection of his colleague, who had supported his contention, that he had been repudiated by the people and that he ought not to participate longer in the making of legislation when his people did not want him to do it, and he resigned. Should other men have less consideration for the wishes of the people than Senator Newberry, who undertook to buy a seat in the Senate?

Mr. President, I presume that by ordinary parliamentary procedure the concurrent resolution would go to the Committee on the Judiciary; but I wish to ask that it be sent to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. [Laughter.] I wish to say for the consideration of the Senators who laughed, because they did not know what they laughed about, that if the concurrent resolution goes to the Committee on the Judiciary I have every reason to believe that it will slumber there, as some other resolutions that I introduced found a morgue there; and I should like to have the Senate itself pass upon this one. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there be objection, the concurrent resolution will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 29) was read and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

Whereas this is a representative government speaking for and interpreting the will of the people of the United States as expressed at the polls; and

Whereas no Representative in either branch of Congress has the moral right to support or vote for any measure which the people by their votes have repudiated; and

Whereas certain proposed legislation affecting a fundamental change in our economic and commercial policy is now recommended by the Executive for consideration by Congress; and

Whereas this proposed legislation has failed to receive the approval of the voters as evidenced by the elections recently held; and

Whereas Congress has been called into extraordinary session for the purpose of passing this legislation which the people have by imperative and unmistakable mandate repudiated; and

Whereas a Congress which adopts legislation in defiance of a popular mandate to the contrary would perpetrate an act of usurpation; and

Whereas many advocates of the ship subsidy bill in the present Congress have been rejected by emphatic majorities by their constituents; and

Whereas it is unwise to place in the hands of rejected public servants the power to adopt fundamental legislation; and

Whereas a sense of official propriety would suggest to the defeated Members the unwisdom of participating in legislation which, if enacted, would materially affect fundamental questions of public policy: Therefore be it

Resolved, I. That it is the sense of the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring) that all Members defeated at the recent polls abstain from voting on any but routine legislation, such as necessary supply bills, motions to adjourn, or motions to recess, and such other legislation as does not involve any material change of national policy.

II. That chairmen of committees, not in sympathy with the people's wishes as expressed at the polls, and who have an important effect on legislation, resign from their respective chairmanships so their places may be filled by those who are known to be willing to carry into legislative effect the mandate of the people as expressed at the polls on the 7th day of November, 1922.

III. That the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring) reaffirm their readiness to bow to the people's will, when expressed at the polls, and declare that the vote of want of confidence in the leaders which has been registered shall not be disregarded.

INVESTIGATION OF CERTAIN OIL LEASES.

Mr. WALSH of Montana submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 368), which was read:

Whereas under the act of Congress, approved February 25, 1920, entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain," it is provided:

Sec. 27. That no person, association, or corporation, except as herein provided, shall take or hold more than one coal, phosphate, or sodium lease during the life of such lease in any one State; no person, association, or corporation shall take or hold, at one time, more than three oil or gas leases granted hereunder in any one State, and not more than one lease within the geologic structure of the same producing oil or gas field; no corporation shall hold any interest as a stockholder of another corporation in more than such number of leases; and no person or corporation shall take or hold any interest or interests as a member of an association or associations or as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease under the provisions hereof, which, together with the area embraced in any direct holding of a lease under this act, or which, together with any other interest or interests as a member of an association or associations or as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease under the provisions hereof, for any kind of mineral leased hereunder, exceeds in the aggregate an amount equivalent to the maximum number of acres of the respective kinds of minerals allowed to any one lessee under this act. Any interests held in violation of this act shall be forfeited to the United States by appropriate proceedings instituted by the Attorney General for that purpose in the United States district court for the district in which the property, or some part thereof, is located, except that any ownership or interest forbidden in this act which may be acquired by descent, will, judgment, or decree may be held for two years and not longer after its acquisition: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit sections 18, 18a, 19, and 22, or to prevent any number of leases under the provisions of this act from combining their several interests so far as may be necessary for the purposes of constructing and carrying on the business of a refinery, or of establishing and constructing as a common carrier a pipe line or lines of railroads to be operated and used by them jointly in the transportation of oil from their several wells, or from the wells of other lessees under this act, or the transportation of coal: Provided further, That any combination for such purpose or purposes shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior on application to him for permission to form the same: And provided further, That if any of the lands or deposits leased under the provisions of this act shall be subleased, trusted, possessed, or controlled by any device permanently, temporarily, directly, indirectly, tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever, so that they form part of, or are in anywise controlled by any combination in the form of an unlawful trust, with consent of lessee, or form the subject of any contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade in the mining or selling of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, or sodium entered into by the lessee, or any agreement or understanding, written, verbal, or otherwise to which such lessee shall be a party, of which his or its output is to be or become the subject, to control the price or prices thereof or of any holding of such lands by any individual, partnership, association, corporation, or control, in excess of the amounts of lands provided in this act, the lease thereof shall be forfeited by appropriate court proceedings; and

Whereas it is currently reported that notwithstanding the provisions of the said act above quoted, by sundry devices certain individuals, acting in concert through the same or separate corporate organizations, or otherwise, actually, though they may not nominally, hold oil or gas leases issued under the said act in number greater than three in each of several States and greater than one within the geologic structure of each of a number of producing oil or gas fields, and that such interests in fact exercise control over the greater portion of the output of a number of such fields, in so far as the same issues from lands leased under the said act, the number of leases covering lands in such fields, being greatly in excess of three: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys or any subcommittee it may designate for the purposes be, and it hereby is, authorized and directed:

1. To inquire—

(a) Into all leases issued under the said act, to whom the same were issued, to whom the same or any rights thereunder were assigned or otherwise transferred, and the members of any association or the stockholders of any corporation acquiring such leases or any rights thereunder, at the time and since the same were acquired, with the business relation, if any, between any such associations or corporations, and how far, if at all, any two or more are controlled by one and the same management by a common stock ownership or otherwise.

(b) The area embraced in such leases and the State and geologic structure within which the lands embraced therein lie.

(c) Any contracts entered into by the holders of any such leases or any interest therein for the disposition of any oil or gas issuing from the lands embraced therein and the various parties through which the same or the products thereof pass before reaching the consumer, with the relation of any such parties to each other.

2. To report to the Senate the facts developed by such inquiry; and

3. To recommend such action by Congress or the executive departments, or both, as shall to the committee seem appropriate to accomplish the purpose of the statute above referred to and to prevent evasion of its provisions.

The said committee is hereby authorized to sit and perform its duties at such times and places as it deems necessary or proper and to require the attendance of witnesses by subpoenas or otherwise; to require the production of books, papers, and documents, and to employ stenographers, at a cost not exceeding $1.25 per printed page. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses and sign subpoenas for witnesses; and every person duly summoned before said committee or any subcommittee thereof who refuses or fails to obey the process of said committee or appears and refuses to answer questions pertinent to said investigation shall be punished as prescribed by law. The expenses of said investigation shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers of the committee or subcommittee, signed by the chairman and approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, those of us who were in some measure responsible for the legislation referred to conceived, at the time it was enacted, that by the provisions incorporated in the resolution we had insured the people of the country against the monopolization of these valuable lands of the Government and made certain that the interests which would be acquired under it would be distributed widely throughout the country, affording the people much-needed competition in the matter of the products of crude oil. Notwithstanding that, it is currently reported, as recited in the resolution, that at least in a number of the Western States a complete control exists in a great corporation and its allied interests of not only these Government leases but of the entire production of crude oil in this section of the country.

In a report made by the Federal Trade Commission to the Congress under date of June 30, 1921, certain conclusions are recited, among which are the following:

1. The geographic isolation of the Wyoming oil fields with reference to the prolific midcontinent and California fields and the absence of pipe-line transportation to the large consuming centers makes it necessary for the Wyoming producer to sell his crude petroleum to local refining companies.

2. There is greater concentration in the control of the production of crude petroleum in the Wyoming oil fields than in any other field in the United States.

3. From 1917-1919 the Midwest Refining interests and the Ohio Oil Co. controlled from 93 to 97 per cent of the Wyoming production.

The most prolific field in the State of Wyoming at the present time is the Salt Creek field. I am advised that it embraces an area of some 22,000 acres, of which no more than 2,000 acres, at the outside, are held in private ownership, the other 20,000 acres being held under leases issued under the provisions of the act of 1920. If, then, Mr. President, the Midwest Oil Co. controls from 93 to 97 per cent of the oil production of the State of Wyoming, the conclusion seems irresistible that it controls very much more of the production of the Salt Creek field than it is conceived it could control if the provisions of the act of 1920 were carried out according to the spirit of that law.

The situation is not much different in my own State, and the Salt Creek field in the State of Wyoming is adjacent to the Montana oil territory. The railroad commission of the State of Montana, acting as a public-service commission for my State, made complaint some time ago to the Federal Trade Commission of the exorbitant prices to which our people were subject in purchasing gasoline. It appeared that notwithstanding Montana had become an important producer of crude oil and the adjacent territory in the State of Wyoming was producing fabulously, the people of Montana were obliged to pay for gasoline a higher price than that paid by the people of any other State in the Union.

The subject was investigated by the Federal Trade Commission and the facts found as I have recited them. In the investigation by it conducted, though not directly in line with that contemplated in the resolution, the Federal Trade Commission found, among other things, that the production of crude oil and the refining of gasoline in the States of Montana and Wyoming are controlled by the Midwest Refining Co., either directly or through its subsidiary or affiliated companies. Montana is producing now from three different fields—the Cat Creek field, the Soap Creek field, and the Kevin field—the Cat Creek field being the field first brought in and up to the present time the most prolific producer. A large portion of the area within that field had passed into private ownership before it was conceived that it was valuable for the oil contained therein. But something over 10 per cent, at least, of the production now issues from lands which are operated under Government leases.

I shall not detain the Senate at this time to discuss the actual situation, but it is not substantially different from that recited in the report of the Federal Trade Commission. It seems inconceivable, Mr. President, that that company can control the production of these fields unless in some way or other it has acquired interests in violation of the act of 1920.

Accordingly, Mr. President, I feel that the Senate ought to be advised as to what the facts are, that it may be guided and governed in its future attitude toward this law. The resolution, of course, must go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but I believe that it would be advisable that a preliminary inquiry should be had by the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, and I shall ask that it be referred to that committee for its consideration. Upon the coming in of the report of that committee I shall ask the further reference of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Then it will have to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, if the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys decide that they will go ahead with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

A FARMERS' RURAL CREDIT BANK—WHO SHALL CONTROL IT, FARMERS OR BANKERS?

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, there has come to my attention a copy of a program of the forty-second annual meeting of the Academy of Political Science, to be held in Hotel Astor, New York City, on the 23d and 24th of this month. According to the program this annual meeting is to be given over to the discussion of the money problem. I make no apology for taking the time of the Senate to make certain observations at this time, because I believe there are certain movements going on that are of tremendous import to the people of this country. They demand discussion now; a little delay and it will be too late.

First, I desire to call to the attention of the Senate the personnel of the committee on program and arrangements for this forty-second annual meeting.

Samuel McCune Lindsay is chairman ex officio. Professor Lindsay is an author and educator on economic and financial matters, and his activities date back many years. In 1892 he was a special agent of the Senate Finance Committee to report on wholesale prices in Europe. His writings place him on record as to his financial theories, beliefs, and alignments.

E. E. Agger is another educator connected with Columbia University.

Irving T. Bush, of New York, of the Bush Terminal Co. and other Bush interests, is a business man with connections of great international trade interests.

Nicholas Murray Butler, the president of Columbia University, has been sufficiently eulogized on this floor, and very little speculation is necessary to determine as to his sympathies and connections.

Waddill Catchings, of 60 Wall Street, New York City, formerly in the export department of J. P. Morgan & Co. and now of important connections in the iron and steel industry, was a member of the advisory council of administration of war labor of the Department of Labor and was chairman of the war committee of the chamber of commerce.

Frederick Cunliffe-Owen, connected with the New York Tribune.

Will H. Hays, a lawyer, of Sullivan, Ind., who became distinguished when he was appointed chairman of the Republican National Committee, and later official censor of the motion-picture industry.

J. W. Jenks, an economist whose views and affiliations are very well known.

Joseph French Johnson, formerly financial editor of the Chicago Tribune, and rather prominently identified with the now more or less discredited monetary commission.

E. W. Kemmerer, another economist who was connected with the monetary commission, and who holds the distinction of having been in 1917 financial adviser to the Government of Mexico. The financial affairs of Mexico are still in a very bad condition, I believe. They probably will be so long as Mexico depends upon the international bankers of Wall Street to set her house in order.

BIG FINANCIERS INTERESTED.

Thomas W. Lamont, another bulwark of the house of Morgan. Ogden L. Mills, who was a member of the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry, and who probably obtained his experience as a practical farmer in connection with the handling of his affairs in the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, the Lackawanna Steel Co., the Mergenthaler Linotype Co., Shredded Wheat Co., Crex Carpet Co., the New York Trust Co., and various other matters in which his millions are interested. As a practical farmer, conversant with the needs of the farmer, he should be amply qualified—from the bankers' viewpoint.

George W. Perkins, jr., the son of another financier of J. P. Morgan distinction, and known to the International Harvester Co., United States Steel Corporation, great maritime and railway interests, and various other of the biggest interests in the country.

L. S. Rowe, the popular head of the Pan American Union, whom the Washington newspapers' society columns note as being very busily engaged in the giving and attending of interesting dinners and other social events.

Henry R. Seager, another economist—spelled in capital letters—connected with Columbia University.

E. R. A. Seligman, another professor and economist, whose hand has been laid heavily upon the American people and about whom more will be said later.

FEDERAL RESERVE INTERESTED.

Benjamin Strong, the governor of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, and who figured so prominently in the hearings before the Joint Committee of Agricultural Inquiry, and who has the courage to believe that his bank is not a governmental but a private institution.

Frank A. Vanderlip, about whom volumes could be written. We will have to content ourselves with saying that the records will show that he first came into prominence while holding a fiduciary position as Assistant Secretary of the United States Treasury. He negotiated a most questionable sale of the United States customhouse to the National City Bank of New York, of which he subsequently became president. The unrefuted statements in the public press prove this to have been a most unconscionable transaction, in which Frank A. Vanderlip, as Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, acted in the interest of the National City Bank and against the interests of the Government and the people of the United States. Since this occurrence he has consistently aligned himself with the money power.

Elit Wadsworth, now Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, in charge of foreign loans and railroad advances. We can not help but sympathize with the poor railroads; they will not have had enough of advances until the vaults of the Treasury have been turned over to them.

THE FEDERAL RESERVE AND WALL STREET FOR THE FARMERS.

Paul M. Warburg, a prince of the house of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., another Money Trust firm of international bankers. It is asserted Warburg is the father of the present financial system known as the Federal reserve system. He is the gentleman who devised the trap into which was led the entire American Nation; both the Democratic and Republican Parties were entangled in the meshes of the international bankers, and they succeeded in writing into law a financial system that is rapidly forging the bonds of debt slavery upon the American people, and these two organizations, having been parties to the crime, are now silent and wedded to the system. Warburg even had the nerve and courage to boast before a Senate committee that he had been successful in his plans.

H. Parker Willis, another economist, who was pushed to the front in the enactment of the Federal reserve act, and who translated onto paper and defended the ideas promulgated by Paul M. Warburg.

There are a few others on this committee about whom I have no special information.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that anyone who had given any serious study to economic conditions in this country would find no hesitancy in reaching the conclusion that this committee on program and arrangements—with the possible exception of a few who might be mingled in for "trimmings"—is constituted of minds entirely in accordance with the banking interests. Any program arranged by this committee for the discussion of "the money problem" would naturally be arranged with a viewpoint of developing the ideas of the big bankers. There is one satisfactory and interesting observation, however, and that is that the bankers themselves realize that there is a money problem up for discussion in this country. They are not dilatory in their preparation to meet it, but seem to be feverishly trying to direct it into channels of which they approve. In view of the statement of the bankers upon the conclusion of the recent meeting of the American Bankers' Association, held in New York City, that the bankers were ready to lead the people, it is not improper to presume that this conference to be held this week is but one of their bids for leadership.

There is, however, Mr. President, one particular phase of this proposed conference that is of particular interest at this time, and it is for that reason that I am taking this opportunity to discuss it. I refer to the third session of the conference, to be held Friday afternoon at 2.30 p. m., in the north ballroom of Hotel Astor, and the topic for discussion will be "The agricultural credit problem." One would not expect to hear much of the language of the real dirt farmer amid the splendors of the north ballroom, especially when those who gather around the board possess such illustrious financial antecedents and connections.

It is, of course, not contended that the big banking interests of the country do not have a right to gather in such a discussion, but those who have the real interests of the farmer at heart also have the right to warn him against accepting such advocates for their leadership.

SAVING THE FARMER FOR THE BANKS.

Let us notice for a moment the program for this third session. It is to be presided over by Edwin R. A. Seligman, already referred to. The program is as follows:

1. Introductory address of the presiding officer.
2. Agricultural financing.—Eugene Meyer, jr., managing director War Finance Corporation, Washington, D. C.; SYDNEY ANDERSON, public business permitting, Congressman from Minnesota, chairman Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry.
3. Fall in agricultural prices, causes and remedies.—George E. Roberts, vice president National City Bank, New York City.
4. Should the farmer have additional credits to enable him to hold his crops for better prices?—Jesse E. Pope, Washington, D. C.
5. Discussion.—Thomas P. Gore, former United States Senator from Oklahoma. Every cloud has a silver lining, and in this connection we are heartened that the name of former Senator Gore appears among the galaxy of intellectuals on the program. We are glad to learn that the farmers will have a friend in court and that their cause will be better and more favorably known because of his presence at the conference.

WARBURG, SELIGMAN, AND FARMERS.

Mr. President, according to that eminent authority on big financiers, Mr. B. C. Forbes, in his book, Men Who Are Making America, at page 403, it was in the home of Edwin R. A. Seligman where the decision was made that Paul M. Warburg should publish his views on the central bank idea, and that the propaganda should be started for the purpose of writing into our laws a financial system based upon the central bank idea as the ideal corner stone. This decision was made at a time when the country was in the throes of the financial stringency of 1907, and when the people were declaiming against the money power centralized in Wall Street—and whose ideas were to be put forth as the basis for the new currency system? Those of Paul M. Warburg, a descendant of international bankers, schooled and trained for an international banker, imported from Germany for the purpose of giving expression to the evolution of the international bankers' idea of a currency system, and a man who having come here in 1902 and become a member of that powerful firm of international banker, Kuhn, Loeb & Co., did not file his citizenship papers until he was ready to take his fight before the public, and then did not become a citizen until 1911.

BANK CREDITS AND PAUPERS.

What happened? In an attempt to distract the American people and satisfy their demands for monetary reform the monetary commission was authorized and sent abroad to investigate European systems and report to Congress a monetary plan. The commission went abroad and proceeded to interview bankers and financiers and investigate European banking systems, but they did not investigate the economic condition of the peoples who lived under the domination of these banking systems; neither did they report to Congress a monetary measure, but a bank credit measure. They found ideal banking systems, from the bankers' viewpoint and from a standpoint of banking prosperity, but they failed to show the pauperizing effects of those systems upon the peoples who endured them.

The next step was the Aldrich report, which was secretly written on Jekyll Island, and in which Mr. Warburg had such a prominent part. The Aldrich bill followed, and the Democrats rose in arms and defeated it. They deservedly received the plaudits of the Nation for their fight against the Aldrich bill and for the magnificent stand they took against the central-bank idea. The people rewarded them by placing them in power, with the mandate to effect financial reform, and that mandate was clearly against any such idea as embraced in the Aldrich bill. They conducted the Pujo investigation and exposed, in part, the Money Trust, and that disclosure showed that the firm of Paul M. Warburg—Kuhn, Loeb & Co.—was declared to be a member of that Money Trust. Notwithstanding that fact, they immediately nestled to their bosoms this self-same Warburg that had been the directing hand behind the Aldrich bill. The Aldrich bill was worked over, camouflaged, and disguised and placed before the people as a great achievement and as the means of emancipation of the people from financial slavery. The Republicans could not, had they desired, fight the measure effectually, because they were compelled to recognize the fact that it was the same proposition they had sponsored in the Aldrich bill. The result was that the voices of opposition were silenced, and the international bankers had captured both of the big political parties.

I do not know that the throwing over of George Harvey, with sympathies for the house of Morgan, and the taking on the ship of Paul M. Warburg, of the house of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., by the Wilson forces had anything to do with the capture of both parties, but I have long had my suspicions that it did have a great deal to do with it. It has long been rumored that there are two groups of the big international bankers who are continually battling silently against each other for financial domination, and there are many indications that such is true. However, that does not mean to say that they are at variance as to the system to be used, or that there is difference of opinion when it comes to the necessary legislation for their operations. In these matters they usually present a solid front, save where it obviously would be prudent to adopt a different method of procedure. Obtaining authorization for their system through legislative channels is entirely different from a fight between themselves for control of the system.

WHO CAN TELL?

All of this talk about who is the author of our present financial system is principally chatter. Some day I may deem it advisable to say something to this body about Mr. McAdoo and his connections with Kuhn, Loeb & Co.

But back to this proposed meeting in New York. We do know that Edwin R. A. Seligman, who is to preside over this rural-credit discussion, was one of the first men to figure in the plans for "putting across" the system, and he has faithfully awaited its beck and call ever since.

Then the program provides that we shall get some more instruction for the farmer from Eugene Meyer, jr., head of the War Finance Corporation, and another Wall Street manipulator. There are many indications that Mr. Meyer is greatly interested in the various cooperative movements throughout the country, and I have been informed that he has been in close cooperation with Mr. Aaron Sapiro, who has accomplished a great deal in the organization of these cooperatives, and is supposed to represent a great many of them as attorney, which representation affords a comfortable source of revenue. I have also been advised that Mr. Sapiro is very influential in obtaining aid for the cooperatives from the War Finance Corporation.

I would like to say this, Mr. President, the farmers have a great opportunity for helping themselves through the cooperative organizations; I have devoted a great deal of my life to a study of the problems of the farmer and I have long ago come to the conclusion that if he is to realize any permanent relief or aid through the cooperative movement he must be careful of his leaders. He must be sure to always keep control of his organization. Forbid the time may ever come when the unseen hand of Wall Street or any special group of financiers has the control of organized farmers in their grasp. If such come true, then their organization will prove a boomerang to come back and strike, a viper to curse and wound them in their adversity.

Then Mr. Roberts, of the great National City Bank, will also hand out some advice about the farmers; and so on, it goes.

Mr. President, I do not know whether or not this meeting proposes to go on record as favoring any special legislation, whether it will indorse a bill drawn by Mr. Meyer or one sponsored by Mr. Warburg or Mr. Roberts or anyone else. Perhaps they may now consider it inadvisable to do so.

I am convinced of this, however, that any recommendation they may make looking toward legislation for the farmer will be from the viewpoint of what is good for the bankers and not what is the best thing for the farmers.

According to the Washington Times, edition of November 21, 1922, on financial page, in an article by Harry Gusack:

Credit requirements of the live-stock industry as one phase of the rural-credits problem were discussed at a conference between Eugene Meyer, managing director of the War Finance Corporation, and a committee of the American National Livestock Association. The meeting probably will continue until to-morrow before a program adequate for that industry has been worked out to be included in the rural credit legislative program.

As a basis for the discussions, Mr. Meyer outlined three plans for farm financing as the basis for the rural-credits program. These are:

1. Provide financing through a centralized Government banking institute, operating with large Government capital and making loans somewhat as the War Finance Corporation has done—through branches or agencies.
2. Financing farm requirements through a number of financial corporations, each with moderate capital furnished partly by the Government, operating within a limited district, and relying upon its ability to sell bonds or debentures to the investing public in order to raise the necessary funds. Under this type of organization it is proposed to facilitate the sales of securities through tax exemption.
3. Take care of the financing of cooperative marketing organizations through existing financial machinery by modifying the laws and regulations governing the eligibility requirements of the Federal reserve system, and the financing of the live-stock industry by amending the national bank act so as to authorize the creation of federally chartered loan companies, operating with private capital under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency or the Federal reserve system.

Mr. President, all of these methods depend entirely upon the Federal reserve system for their success, and they can be defeated in their intended purposes by the power centralized in the 12 Federal reserve banks; and I might even say by the Second Federal Reserve Bank of New York alone, for that bank is, in practical effect, the central bank of the United States. It is also contended that it is now a private banking institution.

If either of these methods are adopted it will eventuate in further enslavement for the farmer and a pyramiding of more debts, when another period of "drastic deflation" could wipe out the remaining equities of the farmers.

However, it is not my purpose to discuss this phase of the situation at this time, but I intend to do so if either of the propositions reach this floor.

This is but further evidence to my mind, Mr. President, that a studied effort is now being made to get a well-fortified scheme brought before this Congress that will sail right through because it will have a long list of stereotyped indorsements behind it when it reaches Congress. As usual, the plan comes through some of the same old Wall Street crowd.

The fact that Mr. Meyer has received the indorsement of two administrations whose parties, according to the record, would seem to have surrendered to Wall Street on the money question, does not justify the farmers of this Nation in placing their destiny in his hands.

CONFIDENCE AND WALL STREET.

It is not very long to hark back to the time when there was a feeling in this country that Wall Street could not be depended upon to protect the best interests of the rank and file of the country. Now it appears that all leaders, all molders of legislative thought, to be considered dependable, must hail from Wall Street. There was a time when there would be many sincere and protesting voices raised against such a condition, but now there is silence where there should be indignation and wrath. Public officials seem to be taking the viewpoint that if there is a financial task to perform it must be done by some one of Wall Street ability and qualifications.

Will we ever learn? We have accepted the bankers' idea in this country long enough. They have always brought us to debts and hard times. The bankers' system has patently proved a failure. Will we continue to swear by it? When I say a failure, I mean a failure from the standpoint of the people. It has been an eminent success from the standpoint of the banker. Debts have piled up by the billions, and they continue to pile up, and they all bear interest, and the people pay the interest. While the banks and bankers are increasing the reserves and assets, the people are going more into debt. Our present financial system will never get us out, but will persistently mount the total of indebtedness. There is not a better illustration of that fact than the increase of mortgage indebtedness upon the farms of the United States since the operation of the Federal reserve act, and not a clearer illustration of the powers of that act than the results of drastic deflation in wiping out of equities in farms throughout the entire country.

SHALL WE PREDICT THE END?

Yet, with it all, we are content to rest on our oars and let the international bankers perfect their system. Not only that, but it is quite evident to me that there will be legislation offered to this body for the alleged purpose of giving the farmers a system of rural credits, and that such legislation will depend entirely upon the Federal reserve act for its success or failure. Mr. President, there could not be a more effectual way of abandoning the interests of the farmer and setting another trap for his enslavement.

Mr. President, evidently there will be some rural credit legislation offered to this body within a short time; I wish to place the farmers on guard at this time that if they are to get any legislation that will be of lasting benefit to them it must be on a basis of real money. No system of loaning of bank credits, or rural credits, or whatever alluring name may be offered, will serve to do anything else than to push the farmer further into the quagmire of debt.

It might also be added that if there is a persistent attempt to foist such a system upon the people of this country, there will be more than 18 new faces in this body during the Sixty-ninth Congress. The farmers are tired of being duped and fooled. They have a very good idea of what they want, and they are determined to have it.

Mr. President, what I have said to-day is not designed as destructive criticism nor is it aimed at those who would honestly endeavor to restore agriculture to a profitable basis. I have, however, endeavored to raise a warning voice against that type of class legislation too often enacted for the benefit of the little group of money and credit manipulators and at the expense of that larger group—the American farmers.

Banking and financial legislation secured in the past by this same group of men, together with their administration of the laws, are now responsible for the farmers' present deplorable condition whereby they, as a class, are in five short years reduced from reasonable prosperity and modest comfort to bankruptcy. These farmers must now resort, as other business men do, either to the Nelson cure or stagger under the load that will in the end completely crush them and drag down other business, including the bankers, with them.

Similar meetings to the one under discussion are now being held or planned for in other parts of the country, indicating that the bankers are about, as has been stated, to take the lead for better agriculture. Will they do so? I am sorry to say the signs as indicated by the past are not good. Unless the farmers are given constructive legislation and the control of their own banking and marketing affairs is left in their own hands, there will be worse than confusion, and if we adopt a system in place thereof which continues to exact a heavy tax from the producers for the benefit of the banker, the middleman, and the retailer, I predict it will not be satisfactory either to the farmer nor will it act as a panacea stimulating greater production, which means heavy losses to the producer, and the farmer will not be slow to discover the purport or to act in an effective manner as he is now being forced to do, not only for his own protection but likewise for the benefit of the consumer and that of all society and also of the State.

LIBERIAN LOAN.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 270) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States for the Government of Liberia.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, during the last session of Congress I offered to the joint resolution an amendment proposing an appropriation to provide for certain inspectors of locomotive boilers. It was, I think, generally agreed upon the part of Senators that the amendment should be adopted, but while the amendment was pending a deficiency appropriation bill was brought in and considered. An amendment providing for such an appropriation was adopted by the Senate to that bill, but in conference, I think on the day before the session of Congress adjourned, the amendment was stricken out. In view of those circumstances, I desire again to offer that amendment to the joint resolution.

It has been some time since the subject was considered, and I should like to examine the amendment. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] is familiar with the subject, and he made certain suggestions with respect to changing the amendment. I wish to obtain a copy of the amendment, and to prepare it so that it may be passed in proper form.

I ask the Senator from Kansas if he will be willing to let the joint resolution go over until to-morrow, in order that we may have an opportunity to look into the matter?

Mr. CURTIS. Can the Senator assure me that there will then be no debate on the amendment? The amendment was fully debated on a previous occasion.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not desire to say anything further in support of the amendment, for I think it was pretty generally agreed that it should be adopted.

Mr. CURTIS. If the amendment in the changed form in which it may be proposed will not lead to further debate, I shall be willing to let the joint resolution go over until to-morrow, for I should like to see the amendment prepared according to the recommendation of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the report of the Budget Bureau.

In reference to the suggested amendment I desire to say that previously, when the matter was under consideration, I asked the Senator from Mississippi to withdraw the amendment and to propose it to the appropriation bill. He very kindly agreed to delay consideration of the amendment until the deficiency bill should be under consideration. When the deficiency bill was taken up for consideration the amendment was attached to that bill, and I assured the Senator from Mississippi at that time that if the amendment were not retained, so far as I was personally concerned, I should not object to the amendment being offered to the pending measure. In view of that fact, I am perfectly willing—for I think such action will save time and we shall thereby get a better amendment—to let the pending joint resolution go over until to-morrow, if the Senator from Mississippi will assure me that, so far as he is concerned, there will be no further debate on the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not expect to debate the amendment at all, and I do not think there will be any debate on the amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] desires to say a few words in reference to another matter. As soon as he shall have concluded, I shall ask that the pending joint resolution be laid aside until tomorrow.

RESIGNATION OF SENATOR NEWBERRY.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I was unavoidably detained from the Senate on yesterday when the resignation of the former junior Senator from Michigan, Mr. Newberry, was presented or I should have then said what I intend now to say.

No more loyal American ever sat in the Senate of the United States than Senator Newberry. His patient, diligent, and efficient service, coupled with his unusual experience in the naval matters of the country, has been of distinct and conspicuous help.

Some day, Mr. President, the wrong which has been done to Senator Newberry and to his family will be generally recognized and will be righted, for the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], in the parting blow which I am sorry to say he saw fit to give to his retiring colleague yesterday, said one thing that was undoubtedly true, and that was that "the good common sense of the American people in the end generally prevails." I may add that in the end it always does prevail; and many of those who, for one motive or another, have joined in the unwarranted and unfair attacks upon Senator Newberry will come to recognize and acknowledge the injustice which they have done.

The frank, manly statement of the junior Senator from Michigan made upon this floor in connection with his case will be accepted as the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and the American people will realize that in spite of all the unjust and unfounded propaganda which has been and is promulgated in the country the essential facts are that during the entire primary campaign in 1918 in Michigan, of which criticism has been made, Senator Newberry was not present in the State of Michigan, but was constantly, during the primary campaign as well as during the general campaign, in the service of his country in the Navy, and that the large amount of money that was spent in connection with the primary—$195,000—was collected and spent by a committee on its own authority and without Senator Newberry's knowledge or consent, and that not a dollar of the entire fund was furnished by him, and that every dollar was used for purposes of publicity, without taint of illegality or impropriety in its expenditure.

The problem in Michigan was to inform the citizens of that State of the things for which Senator Newberry stood as distinguished from the things which Mr. Henry Ford advocated—and there were thousands of patriotic, loyal citizens who believed then and believe now that the nomination of Mr. Ford would have been a national disaster.

It must be some satisfaction to the retiring Senator to know that when the conviction which sentenced him to the penitentiary upon the charge of having spent more than $3,750 finally came to be considered by the Supreme Court of the United States that tribunal unanimously set it aside as being founded upon mistaken interpretation of law and most unfair to Mr. Newberry, and by a majority vote declared unconstitutional the very law under which the action had been taken. It must be some satisfaction to him to know that the Senate, after a protracted hearing and recount of the ballots, determined his eligibility and his qualifications for the office; but no man can overlook the propaganda, continuous and insidious, damaging to the man and his family alike, that has created in the country an atmosphere as if there were something criminal or illegal or improper in the proceedings incident to the primary election in Michigan. There is not a shadow of foundation for any such judgment.

I say, Mr. President, that the time is coming when many of the men who have been strong and earnest in their attacks—for many of them are as fair men as are upon the floor of the Senate—will recognize the injustice which they have done to the junior Senator from Michigan, whose career before the election of 1918 and during that election and since that time in the Senate of the United States has been that of a conscientious, patriotic American, of signal ability and indefatigable diligence.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not care to recall a matter which I had supposed was closed, a matter which I think had better be regarded as concluded; but, as I am present in the Chamber, I am not quite willing to have the statements of the able Senator from Missouri go unchallenged.

I wholly disagree with the view which he takes of the matter, that this money was expended without the knowledge or consent of Mr. Newberry. I think the evidence is quite conclusive that it was expended both with his knowledge and with his consent. I should not mention this at all if it were not for the fact that the statement of the Senator goes into the Record, and should we who took the different view sit silent it might be regarded that we had changed our view with reference to that matter.

I think Mr. Newberry made just one mistake, and that was that he did not tender his resignation immediately after the Supreme Court passed upon the legality of the statute. He could have done so then with great propriety and gone back to his people for their view of the matter. I am of the opinion that in all probability he might have done so had he received the same advice then that he received after the election. But I do not care to go into the matter. I only wish to say, in a single sentence, that I think the record is conclusive as to the illegality of the expenditure of the money, and that the amount expended was intolerable. For Mr. Newberry individually I do not wish to speak harshly, but the system of politics which prevailed in his election is indefensible from the standpoint of law or of morals.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri is admirable in the trait that he is most loyal to his friends and that he is the last to forsake a cause. We once saw him stand by another. His name was Goldstein. And when the shroud that enwrapped Goldstein became too gold stained for even Lowden, whose agents had performed the operation, it was not so with the Senator. Aye, even after Goldstein had served notice upon those who sought to honor him that he would not accept the nomination, the distinguished Senator from Missouri stood adamant—defiant to the end. When others see that it is wise "to get out and from under," the Senator from Missouri remains constant and firm. His speech to-day is in keeping with his past record.

But I suppose the distinguished Senator from Missouri is about the only Senator who voted to seat Senator Newberry who feels a pang of sorrow over his resignation. Newberryism, which the people have come to understand to mean "the plundering of the people through the purchase of power," will not down. Like Banquo's ghost it will rise again, and it will haunt in future campaigns, as it has haunted in the last campaign, Senators who condemned by their votes the confession of an expenditure of the $195,000 for his election in Michigan and at the same time said, "We are going to seat you here. We want you to be one of us."

When the Senator casts his watchful eyes over the States that held senatorial elections on November 7 he will see that only two Senators who voted to seat Senator Newberry in the face of the facts, and who came up for reelection at that time, were returned. And both those by tremendously reduced majorities—majorities that permitted them only to squeeze in. All others who went before the people in that campaign and were compelled to answer the issue of Newberryism were swept from power. Their defeats answer the arguments of the Senator from Missouri better than any feeble expression that I might now utter. The people's wishes will prevail, and they have in this instance triumphed.

I am not going to be unkind by mentioning friends and distinguished colleagues who were dashed upon the sands of defeat in the recent storm because of the votes they cast for Newberry. Those who voted for him, and who have not yet gone before their constituents, can make two years from now further apologies for those votes. If the Senator from Missouri, and others of his way of thinking, desire to keep the issue alive, then well and good; but this fact we know from the expressions voiced by him to-day—that the resignation of Newberry was not written with a Spencerian pen.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, has the Senator from Mississippi forgotten that the two Senators who were most strong in their opposition to Senator Newberry—the one who led the attack, and one who ably seconded it—were themselves defeated at the polls? I refer to the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. If anything is to be deduced from the voice of the people along the line on November 7 last, of which the Senator from Mississippi has spoken, he will not forget the State of Ohio or the State of Nebraska.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know whether the Senator spoke in Ohio or in Nebraska or not. Looking at the results of the election, I presume he did; but may I ask the Senator whether he ever heard, in a single speech made by anyone who was opposing the reelection of Senator POMERENE in Ohio or Senator HITCHCOCK in Nebraska, criticism of the position they took with reference to unseating Newberry? The Senator's silence indicates he did not, and consequently there was no such issue there.

Mr. SPENCER. I was not in either of those States, and I certainly did not.

Mr. HARRISON. And the Senator never heard of it; did he?

Mr. SPENCER. That does not establish whether it happened or not.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, before moving to adjourn I wish to state that to-morrow I am going to ask the Senate to take up the unfinished business, House Joint Resolution 270, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States for the Government of Liberia, and try to pass it to-morrow.

I now move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, November 23, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, November 22, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name; Thy kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread; and forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil; for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory, forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana rises to a question of personal privilege. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Clerk to read from the New York Times of yesterday the statement which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

Governor Parker, referring to newspaper interview by Representative ASWELL, yesterday replied briefly but emphatically to Mr. ASWELL, saying:

"His statement is deliberately untrue. His district is one of the recognized heads of the Ku-Klux Klan in Louisiana."

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I ask that the reading clerk read the assault upon the State of Louisiana published in the Sunday morning Washington Post.

The Clerk read as follows:

[From the Washington Post, November 19, 1922.]

KU-KLUX KLAN RULES LOUISIANA, GOVERNOR ASSERTS; TO ASK PRESIDENT TO ACT; STATE OFFICERS POWERLESS—ON HIS WAY HERE TO INVOKE FEDERAL MARTIAL LAW TO RESCUE HIS STATE FROM DOMINATION BY THIS SECRET AND ALL-POWERFUL ORGANIZATION—COURTS OF THE STATE CEASE TO FUNCTION AND CITIZENS ARE IN TERROR—ATTORNEY GENERAL COMES WITH GOVERNOR TO ASK CENTRAL GOVERNMENT TO TAKE CONTROL—PEOPLE AFRAID TO DISCUSS SITUATION—PRESS IS SILENCED—OUTRAGES AGAINST PERSONS FREQUENT AND NEVER PUNISHED—STATE IN CHAINS OF AN INVISIBLE POWER—SIMILAR CONDITIONS REPORTED IN COMMUNITIES OF OTHER STATES.

SECTION OF THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION UNDER WHICH ACTION IS PROPOSED.

ART. IV, SEC. 4. The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government and shall protect each of them against invasion, and, on application of the legislature, or of the executive (when the legislature can not be convened), against domestic violence.

[By George Rothwell Brown.]

(Special dispatch to the Washington Post.)

(Copyright by the Washington Post.)

BATON ROUGE, LA., Nov. 18.—The Ku-Klux Klan has reached out boldly for civil power over officers of law and justice over an immense territory and has virtually reduced the sovereign State of Louisiana to the vassalage of the invisible empire.

The machinery of State government has almost ceased to function as the unseen power of the mysterious secret society exerts its force in the offices of State and local authorities and in the very courts of law.

Gov. John M. Parker has gone to Washington to lay the whole situation before President Harding, to inform the Federal authorities that State law has virtually come to a stop in Louisiana in the face of the mysterious power of the klan, and to ask the United States Government to take over the administration of the law in Louisiana or in certain specified portions of the State.

NO PRECEDENT IN 50 YEARS.

The governor's conference with the President on Monday will disclose to the country one of the most amazing and humiliating catastrophes in the whole history of American Government. Not since reconstruction times, at least, has any governor of a State laid bare to the Nation the fact that a secret power in that State has usurped the functions of government and brought the administration of the laws to a stop.

The Governor of Louisiana to-day is virtually helpless in the face of the power of the most gigantic secret organization which has ever reared its head in America.

GREAT SECRECY PRESERVED.

Not only has it become impossible for the State authorities to cope with the unseen power of the new Ku-Klux Klan, reared upon the ashes of that institution born of a highly emotionalized chivalry which saved white supremacy throughout the South in the "carpetbag" days which followed the close of the Civil War, but it is almost impossible to detect the presence of the vast invisible empire which apparently covers Louisiana, and has extended its way to adjacent States, where there is reason to believe conditions almost as bad as those in this State now prevail. Certain counties in Texas are reported through confidential "grapevine" channels to be in the grip of the invisible empire which has reared itself above the constitutional law of the State and dictates the administration of justice behind an impenetrable veil of mystery and intimidation.

WANTS THE STATE TAKEN OVER.

Governor Parker will appeal to the Federal Government to go into the State of Louisiana and take over the administration of government in the face of the complete paralysis of the local government, under an impelling constitutional mandate, which will leave the Federal Government no alternative but to act with promptness and vigor if the facts to be disclosed at the Washington conference on Monday justify that drastic course. That these facts will lead to the protection of the State government in Louisiana by the Federal authorities is a widely entertained opinion here in Louisiana, where the conditions which the governor will lay bare are as yet merely the subject of whispered confidences among trusted friends.

ORDERS SILENTLY CARRIED OUT.

The power of the "invisible empire" has settled like a shadow upon the State, and men scarcely dare to breathe what little they know of the inner secrets of the great secret society whose unuttered orders are silently and mysteriously carried out by invisible agencies which are superior to the constituted and elected law officers of the Commonwealth.

There is among men in this part of the South whispered speculation as to what course of action the Federal Government will pursue. The state of affairs to be disclosed by Governor Parker is so out of the whole ordinary experience of Americans as to be fairly stupefying. The very courts of justice are paralyzed.

STATE GOVERNMENT DEFIED.

Governor Parker will disclose that the State authorities have now become powerless to cope with the situation. His administration can not move hand or foot to enforce the laws, the administration of which in certain parts of the State has passed into the keeping of a secret government superior to the State, which sets the State itself at defiance.

Not only has the invisible empire usurped the functions of government but at every turn are disclosed evidences that in many instances the sworn officials of the State are themselves members of the Ku-Klux Klan.

The powers of the Federal Government which Governor Parker will seek to invoke are embodied in section 4 of Article IV of the Constitution of the United States, which reads as follows:

"The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion; and on application of the legislature or of the executive—when the legislature can not be convened—against domestic violence."

MURDERS AND OTHER VIOLENCE.

The extent of "domestic violence" in Louisiana under the State-wide sway of the invisible empire of the Ku-Klux Klan may be disclosed in the confidential communication to be made by Governor Parker and by the attorney general of the State, who has accompanied him to Washington. It has been reported that there have been a great many murders and other acts which, without a full possession of all the facts, would be classified as outrages against citizens.

It is a significant fact, however—and this must be borne in mind—that there is every evidence that the klan enjoys the support and confidence of thousands of the best and most law-abiding citizens of the State. The very scope which the secret society has attained bears testimony to this fact.

CLAIMS ON BEHALF OF KLAN.

It is claimed on behalf of the Klan that it stands for the maintenance of law and order and of Anglo-Saxon supremacy; that its actions setting at naught the law itself have been dictated by the highest feelings of patriotism; that it has punished the lawbreaker and the violator of the sanctity of the home; that it has driven from the community the worthless and the degenerate elements. Thus the system has its defenders, and has been able to extend its sway with such absolutism as to choke off and stifle the machinery of the law which stands in the way of the exercise of its will.

TERRIFYING TO THE LAWLESS.

The mystery which envelops the whole institution of invisible government constitutes one of its most baffling characteristics. Nobody knows who belongs to the klan; nobody knows when or where it will next strike. Its aspects as a supergovernment, taking the administration of the law out of the constitutionally constituted officials of the law and administering justice according to its own conception of what constitutes civil and social justice, render it peculiarly terrifying to the lawless and those who have fallen within whatever limits of ban may have been imposed by the secret objects of the society.

A man is seated in his office, and a stranger enters and asks for a confidential conference. A few minutes later that man is at the railroad office buying a ticket.

"Where to?" asks the agent.

MEN "JUST VANISH."

"It makes no difference, any place," is the answer. The man vanishes. The community knows him no more. There is whispered discussion and then the subject is dropped. The same thing happens again and again. Men mysteriously drop out of their accustomed haunts. Neighborhoods are suddenly relieved of the occasional individual long regarded with suspicion. A man who has been living with a low-caste woman, in violation of the moral code, bringing scandal to a community, suddenly decides to leave. Nobody knows why. He simply leaves and is heard of no more.

SIMILAR CONDITIONS ELSEWHERE.

From other States have gone to Washington reports of similar conditions in other communities. Evidence has been presented that the Klan has permeated the whole fabric of official life, that its members are themselves the officials charged with the enforcement of the law, and that the law is administered not according to the law of the State but according to the law of the invisible power lodged in what is known in popular parlance as the Ku-Klux Klan. Nobody really knows whether in fact this is the true name of the society.

In Louisiana conditions are said to be worse in Morehouse Parish, in the northern part of the State.

ASWELL'S REPLY.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, the scurrilous story just read by the Clerk from the Washington Post of Sunday, seriously reflecting upon the officers of the law and the people of the State of Louisiana, is false and infamous.

In my opinion it is entirely proper for the attorney general of a State to come to Washington to seek advice and assistance from the Department of Justice on any question of law enforcement, but it is quite another matter for the Governor of Louisiana to create a nation-wide sensation and inflict irreparable injury upon his State. Then, too, the governor's noisy methods do not capture criminals.

I propose calmly and without passion to present the simple record of fact in this case, which record to any fair-minded person reveals two facts:

1. That the story is utterly false and without justification or foundation of fact.

2. That to the humiliation and regret of all our people the Governor of Louisiana with his insatiable thirst for publicity is responsible for the grave injury done our State.

What should be done with a governor who for personal or political preferment would sacrifice or assassinate the fair name of his own State is a question to be settled by the people of Louisiana.

Nailing this libel of the law-abiding and patriotic people of my district and State, I present a copy of my telegram to each sheriff and judge in the eight parishes of my congressional district, located in the geographical center of the State, and responses from the law officers and citizens of every parish in the district. These telegrams come from Protestant, Catholic, and Jew, telling one and the same story which means that the evidence I present is irrefutable.

I ask the reading clerk to read these telegrams in order that the Members may hear the refutation.

The Clerk read as follows:

NOVEMBER 19, 1922.

Morning press here publish sensational story that Governor Parker, en route to Washington to invoke Federal martial law in Louisiana, to have Federal Government take control of our State government; that murders and outrages against citizens are frequent, State wide, and unpunished by local officers of the law, and that State and local government has ceased to function, with citizens in terror. Please wire me fully night letter exact situation in your parish. I believe these charges against our people are false and infamous, but I need official statement from you before matter comes up for action to-morrow forenoon.

J. B. ASWELL.

ALEXANDRIA, LA., November 19, 1922.

Hon. JAMES B. ASWELL,
Member Congress, Washington, D. C.:

Your telegram this date giving press reports at Washington, D. C., casting malicious slander on the State of Louisiana received. Such reports are absolutely false in truth and fact. The parish of Rapides, the third largest in the State, has never enjoyed a more peaceful epoch and a more universal observance of the law. This same condition prevails over the entire State of Louisiana. I have personally had occasion to visit various parishes in this State, from the State line of Arkansas to the Gulf of Mexico, in the past 10 days, and I can truthfully say that the citizenship of the State is with its peace officers for a full observance of all its laws, and I brand all reports or rumors for the necessity of Federal interference or martial law as absolutely unnecessary and without foundation or reason, and as being a most willful and malicious slander upon the fair name of this great State.

F. E. DAVID,

Sheriff Rapides Parish, La.

ALEXANDRIA, LA., November 20, 1922.

Congressman JAMES B. ASWELL,
Eighth Louisiana district, Washington, D. C.:

Your wire to Sheriff David read. As a native-born voting taxpayer of our beloved Louisiana, I brand Governor Parker's statements to the press concerning conditions existing in this State as malicious misrepresentations and utterly devoid of facts. Rather significant Governor Parker failed or refused to publish in Louisiana newspapers his intended visit to Washington or its purposes. Maybe his train company en route there affected his mental equilibrium, if such he has ever been possessed of. Am sure that majority wishes of Louisianians would be his commitment to sanitarium for treatment of mental derangements, preferably outside of Louisiana.

W. CANNON FLOURNOY.

COLFAX, LA., November 19, 1922.

Hon. J. B. ASWELL, M. C.

Washington, D. C.:

Violation of law less frequent than at any time in 20 years. Peace and harmony prevail except in very few cases of moonshiners. Press reports mentioned in your telegram false and infamous. Absolutely no foundation for any such expression.

J. W. DUNCAN.

MANY, LA., November 20, 1922.

Congressman J. B. ASWELL,
Washington, D. C.:

No more lawlessness in this parish or district than ordinarily, and courts are functioning properly.

J. H. BOONE, District Judge.

J. B. HILL, District Attorney.

WINNFIELD, LA., November 20, 1922.

J. B. ASWELL,

Representative, Washington, D. C.:

Governor Parker may need United States troops in Baton Rouge, but we don't need them in Winn Parish. The reports are absolutely unfounded, and so far as this parish is concerned conditions were never better. Recently Governor Parker told one of our citizens that this part of the State had given him no trouble.

R. W. OGLESBY, Judge.

W. T. HEFLIN, Sheriff.

A. W. RADESCICH, Representative.

MANY, LA., November 20, 1922.

Congressman J. B. ASWELL,
Washington, D. C.:

You can not denounce too strongly as absolutely false and uncalled for report that the crime and disorder are frequent or beyond control of officers. Every person accused of serious crime in Sabine Parish within the past 12 months has either been tried or is under arrest awaiting trial. The courts are doing their duty, and we are only bothered with petty offenses, such as bootlegging. Martial law would be a disgrace and a travesty on justice.

J. D. DABBY,
Sheriff Sabine Parish.

NATCHITOCHES, LA., November 20, 1922.

Congressman JAMES B. ASWELL,
Care House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Conditions in Natchitoches Parish and bordering parishes are very quiet. Very few violations of law; no mobs, no one fears for life or property; people harmonizing and are generally settling down to business. I can not conceive anyone making such rash, false, slanderous statements against Louisiana's good people. North and central Louisiana are in perfect order. Some one must have had a nightmare.

J. W. PAYNE,
Sheriff Natchitoches Parish, La.

NATCHITOCHES, LA., November 20, 1922.

Hon. J. B. ASWELL,
Washington, D. C.:

Any reports that outrages and murders against citizens are being committed or that law violators are going unpunished by officers throughout this State are false and untrue. Local government and citizens of my district cooperating. No terror among people. Conditions among citizens, law-abiding and quiet. Glad to refute such slanderous statements.

JAS. W. JONES, Jr.,
Judge Eleventh District Court of Louisiana.

COLFAX, LA., November 20, 1922.

Hon. J. B. ASWELL,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.:

Conditions in my parish for peace and quiet excellent. Could not be better under circumstances. No unrest among the citizens; only minor violations of the law, mostly caused by the whisky element. As for the need of martial law, such an idea is ridiculous, false, and infamous and without foundation. Such propaganda could only come from a revengeful mind to satisfy personal grudge. Officially I am in touch with the sheriffs throughout the State, being located in the center, thus know conditions generally to be excellent.

It is only the wicked who are peeved and looking for refuge under the guise of the Government.

I am exceedingly grieved to know our great State and its good people are being wrongfully accused.

L. O. CLINTON,
Sheriff Grant Parish, La.

LEESVILLE, LA., November 19, 1922.

Hon. JAMES B. ASWELL,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.:

Law and order prevail in Vernon Parish. Local officers performing duties. No disorders here and anticipate none; rumors to contrary absolutely false.

D. F. TURNER, Sheriff.

JENA, LA., November 19, 1922.

Hon. J. B. ASWELL,
Washington, D. C.:

In reply to your telegram, beg to advise that the statement referred to in Washington press as to willful violations of the law and that officers do not put forth every effort to enforce the law are absolutely false and there are not grounds for such statement. We have some minor violations of law, such as violating the Volstead Act and Hood bill. The conditions of our parish for the past three or four years have greatly improved as to respect of our State laws. We do know that our officers and citizens do not deserve any such unjust criticism. Our citizens and officers, with respect to the enforcement of law, will compare favorably with any parish or county in the United States. Your telegram is our first intimation of such complaint. From Governor Parker's speeches and newspaper clippings in Louisiana we note that most service complaints are against the Klan known as Ku-Klux Klan. If there is any such organization in La Salle Parish, we have no knowledge of it, and there has been no violations that have been attributed to the Klan. We assure you that we stand for enforcement of law and we do not need any Federal aid.

J. B. PEYTON, Sheriff.
F. E. JONES, Judge District Court.

MANY, LA., November 20, 1922.

J. B. ASWELL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Louisiana papers carry nothing about matter in message; think there must be some mistake made by newspaper. Everything quiet and orderly here.

W. H. VANDEGAER.

ALEXANDRIA, LA., November 19, 1922.

J. B. ASWELL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Press comment is false; we have the most prosperous and peaceful country in the United States; less crime committed in Louisiana than any other State in the United States.

JONAS ROSENTHAL.

MARKSVILLE, LA., November 20, 1922.

Congressman J. B. ASWELL,
Washington, D. C.:

Your telegram a great surprise; nothing of the kind exists or ever thought of. This part of the State as peaceful and law-abiding as ever in its history.

AMET GUILLOT, Sheriff.

MARKSVILLE, LA., November 20, 1922.

Congressman J. B. ASWELL,
Washington, D. C.:

Peace and quiet never more supreme, as at present no such conditions exist as referred to in your message.

S. ALLEN BORDELON, Judge.

ALEXANDRIA, LA., November 20, 1922.

Congressman JAMES B. ASWELL,
Washington, D. C.:

Your wire to Sheriff David read. The complained of conditions in this State and its parishes attributed to Governor Parker through daily press is purely imaginary on his part. I have lived in this State practically all my life and have never known conditions any more peaceful or orderly than at present.

SWORDS R. LEE.

ALEXANDRIA, LA., November 19, 1922.

Hon. J. B. ASWELL, Member of Congress,
Washington, D. C.:

Telegram to sheriff received. I wish to brand such charges as malicious unqualified lies. If press report true, I am sure Governor Parker has been misled by some false, malicious, cowardly friends possessed of solely mercenary motives. If such be the governor's attitude would recommend he be sent to Surgeon General for S. C. D.

MARVIN CAPELL, M. D.

ALEXANDRIA, LA., November 20, 1922.

JAMES B. ASWELL,
United States House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.:

Your wire date; have conferred with sheriff and others. Rumors absolutely without foundation; law and order never was better observed in Rapides than to-day. Surprised, and news came like thunder-bolt. Must be malicious statements from unreliable source. Our officers competent and doing their duty. No more peaceful community in the United States than this. You can most emphatically deny any allegation of need of martial law here. We resent any such statement being made and desire to know names of parties circulating such reports.

A. T. FELT,
General Secretary Alexandria Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. ASWELL. Gentlemen, these convincing telegrams from every parish in my congressional district should remove the stain from the fair name of our State, reveal the fine spirit of our people, and impress upon the country the magnitude of the crime committed against a State blessed not only with patriotic and progressive people but rich in natural location and varied resources little known to the world. [Applause.]

Louisiana contains 45,996 square miles of land and 2,328 square miles of landlocked bays, lagoons, and rivers.

Louisiana soils are divided into alluvial lands, sea or coast marsh, redeemable by levees and drainage, bluff land, prairies, long-leaf pines, hill lands, and oak lands.

Louisiana is composed of 28,000,000 acres of land, of which only about 5,500,000 are cultivated, and on these there are yearly produced crops valued at $350,000,000.

Louisiana's climate is admirable—breezy and cool in summer, mild in winter, healthful at all times. The State is not subject to extremes of heat in summer or of cold in the winter.

Louisiana's products are varied and abundant. Sugar, cotton, corn, rice, tobacco, oats, wheat, sorghum, jute, hemp, ramie, grasses, clovers, and forage crops; millet, potatoes, vegetables, oranges, lemons, mandarins, olives, figs, and grapes are produced with great profit and little labor.

Louisiana's live stock consists of sheep, horses, hogs, cattle, and mules. Her pastures are inviting, her waters are pure and refreshing, and her canebrakes in winter offer protection and forage.

Louisiana's railway system traverses 7,780 miles.

Louisiana leads all other States this year in highway construction.

Louisiana has more navigable rivers and a greater length of navigable waterways than any other State.

Louisiana's rivers, bayous, and lakes are mostly navigable and many run north and south through the entire State. They furnish transportation facilities for many commodities and create competition in rates. They furnish water for irrigation, are deep, running streams which abound in fish and furnish cool water for stock.

Every parish except four can be reached by navigable streams at some period during the year.

Louisiana produces one-half million bales of cotton annually.

Louisiana produces 95 per cent of all the cane sugar raised in the United States.

Louisiana grows more rice than any other State in the Union.

The strawberry and vegetable crops of Louisiana amount to more than $5,000,000 annually.

Louisiana's fishing grounds and oyster beds are famous and abundant and furnish the most delicious of these luxuries in the world.

Louisiana is the coming seat of the oyster industry of the United States. Her tidal bottoms, the home of the oyster, embrace 4,500,000 acres, a greater area of oyster waters than have Maryland and Virginia combined.

Louisiana's forests are magnificent and the varieties of her timbers numerous. They consist of oaks, hickories, ash, elms, gums, magnolias, pines, maples, cypress, and a quantity of others.

Louisiana is the first State in the Union in lumber production.

Louisiana's fuel-oil and natural-gas fields are unsurpassed in the United States. Some of her oil wells have a record of 3,000,000 barrels of oil each.

Louisiana has the greatest deposit of pure rock salt in the Western Hemisphere. It comes up to 99 per cent pure.

Louisiana's educational facilities are splendid. Every parish is well provided with public schools for both white people and negroes.

Louisiana's private universities, colleges, and schools are of high order.

Louisiana's State university and agricultural and mechanical college is an up-to-date institution, and within a few years will be entirely rebuilt.

Louisiana's normal college at Natchitoches is a splendid training school, offering great advantages in scholarly education.

Louisiana's polytechnic schools at Ruston and Lafayette are well equipped.

Louisiana's Southern University, a State school for negroes, is equal to any in the South.

Louisiana has a splendid deaf and dumb institute, a new institute for the blind, two charity hospitals, a soldiers' home, large and commodious buildings for the infirm, and an institution for the negro blind.

Louisiana has four State agricultural experiment stations—at New Orleans, Baton Rouge, Calhoun, and Crowley.

Health conditions in Louisiana are good. The death rate is far below that in many States in the Union.

Louisiana's towns and cities are progressive, thriving, businesslike, and anxious to welcome people from other sections.

Louisiana's people are law-abiding, liberty-loving, and God-fearing—red-blooded patriotic Americans.

Louisiana's wealth of sunshine and climate; her treasures of natural resources boundless and as yet untold; her minerals, forests, and fertile soils; her 7,000,000 acres of unoccupied cut-over lands; the world-famed hospitality of her citizens, all offer unexcelled opportunities for worthy people from other States to come among us, become citizens, and enjoy with us the astounding riches and opportunities of our State. Her population numbers less than 2,000,000, while there is room for 10,000,000 happy and prosperous people. We have extended a hearty welcome to all the worthy who choose to live among us. We love our country and, like Abou Ben Adhem, we love our fellowman. [Applause.]

The tide has turned to Louisiana. The cry throughout the land to-day is not "Young man, go West," but "Young man, go South," to Louisiana. Our people with open hearts and earnest purpose are eagerly inviting capital to be invested in our rare industrial and financial opportunities.

What a cruel blow below the belt industrially and financially to our hopes and purposes! How costly and difficult the regaining of former prestige! The impression by the publication of vile and groundless stories sent broadcast throughout the length and breadth of the land has placed in the public mind the belief that lawlessness, crime, murder, and bloodshed are rampant in the State of Louisiana. A dagger has been thrust into the heart of our people and unless withdrawn now the wound will be bleeding for years to come. The injury done to our State and people is appalling. We are charged with being a people more lawless than the Mexicans ever were and whose State government is more puny and feeble than that of Russia, but when the record is given in detail, thank God, the clouds will pass away and the sunshine of promise will burst upon us again with the country seeing Louisiana still marching forward in peace, in progress, in contentment, and in purpose equal to that of any other State. Like a rare gem in the crown forming the States of the Union, Louisiana will continue to radiate the glory of her proud people in their natural wealth and in their religious freedom and political independence. [Applause.]

The Governor of Louisiana now denies responsibility for the whole matter, but, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it is interesting to note that the sensational story was released in Baton Rouge Saturday night for the Sunday papers, as the governor dramatically left for Washington and gave out interviews along the way. Finding no committee, brass band, or banners to receive him at the station here, receiving scant encouragement from any Member of Congress, and meeting at the White House the big-hearted, personally lovable President, who cordially greeted him as he greets all his fellow citizens, the governor found a chilly reception when he asked for Federal interference in a sovereign State. [Applause.]

The governor then undertook to "kiss himself out" of the embarrassing situation by declaring he had not come to seek Federal interference and denying all responsibility for the murderous assaults upon the State of Louisiana in a letter to the Washington Post as follows:

Never since I have been reading newspapers have I known a writer to build such a fanciful superstructure on such a slight foundation of fact as has been done by George Rothwell Brown, of your staff, in the article sent you from Baton Rouge and printed with such display in your issue of Sunday. The article is a slander on Louisiana and on its chief executive.

I did not see your correspondent and he made no application for an interview. Most of his statements could have been disproven had he made even the most superficial investigation. To state that the klan "has reduced the sovereign State of Louisiana to the vassalage of the invisible empire" is one of the most extravagantly inaccurate observations I have ever known a newspaper man to make, and it is the more inexcusable because the man was on the ground. There is absolutely nothing on which he could have based his statement that "the machinery of State government has almost ceased to function."

There never has been the most remote idea on the part of anyone in Louisiana of appealing to the Federal Government "to go into the State of Louisiana and take over the administration of government."

I will not take the time to deny each of the many misstatements in your article, but can say it is 90 per cent inaccurate and conveys a totally wrong impression. The damage done by this article and the importance given it by the display with which you presented it will be made the subject of conference on my return to Louisiana, at which time it will be decided as to the further action that will be taken.

Masked men and invisible empires have no place in America, and I have denounced the Ku-Klux Klan as vigorously as I know how in its own stronghold. We have only begun to fight this movement, which strikes at fundamentals of orderly government. We will be able to rid Louisiana of this vicious development the more quickly if we can have the help of other States and of the Federal Government. We can deal effectively with our local situation if it can be cut off from the support and encouragement it is receiving from the outside. I have sought cooperation in an effort to meet the situation in the most immediate way, and to free the people of some of our communities from the terrorism in which they now are held. Since the klan does not work in the open, I may say that the problem presented is largely an investigational one.

You will note that in one paragraph he denies and in another he admits, then he denies and again he admits.

The governor says 10 per cent of the Post story is true. Let him tell the world who gave Brown that 10 per cent.

In his dilemma, as he denies he ever sought Federal control of Louisiana, the governor evidently forgot that on October 30, 1922, discussing the disappearance of a man in Morehouse Parish, La., as a result, citizens who reside there say, of a neighborhood feud which had existed for many years, in a letter to Mr. Joseph Morningstar, 650 West Thirty-fourth Street, New York City, the governor said:

It will be necessary to use all the influence at your command to get the United States Government to take an interest in this matter, and for that reason I would appreciate your writing me at length your opinion of this man as a soldier, and put it in such shape that I can send it to Washington with the certainty that it will bring results. If these results do not come quickly, could I impose upon you by asking you to get in touch with all your Congressmen and Senators, requesting that they take the matter up with the Department of Justice to see that not only is this matter probed to the bottom but that the murderers are brought before the bar of justice?

In sending Governor Parker's letter to Senator WALSH of Massachusetts on November 9, 1922, printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday, Mr. Morningstar, of New York

City, in an appeal to Senator WALSH to get Federal action in the Louisiana case, said:

Where the governor of a State admits that justice can not be secured through local authority it seems obvious that the Federal authorities gain jurisdiction, and the copy of the letter of Governor Parker clearly puts this case in that category.

Do these letters not prove that Governor Parker for many weeks has been trying to invoke Federal usurpation of the government of a sovereign State?

The President, of course, denied him Federal interference in Louisiana. Then, after repeated denials and admissions of his purpose in coming to Washington, the governor took a parting shot at the Louisiana situation in the afternoon papers of yesterday:

A man is a damnable coward to attach himself to such an organization and remain within it as one of its active forces. It is now my solemn duty to whip them. Louisiana will soon see a fight to the finish. The best people of the State are behind me, and I know I will win.

If we could have some help from the several States and from the Federal Government the matter of delving to the bottom of the rotten mess would be made easier.

I know nothing of the Ku-Klux Klan in Louisiana except from statements in the press, generally resulting from the governor's public threats, bluff, and bluster. With the exception of Mr. Simmons, of Atlanta, who appeared here in a public hearing, I have never to my personal knowledge seen a klansman. I was in every parish in my district in the summer and no one discussed the Ku-Klux Klan with me or sought in any way to connect me with the Klan or with its enemies. I am therefore free to defend the people of my district and State without reference to any fraternal or religious organization.

I am 100 per cent Louisianian and I resent the attempt to surrender the sovereignty of my State to Federal authority. [Great applause.] I resent the unwarranted and libelous assaults upon the law-abiding people of Louisiana. I gladly defend all the people of my State against such injustice. If these villainous published attacks as the record indicates were caused by assertions of the Governor of Louisiana, he presents a humiliating and pathetic spectacle playing cheap politics at the expense of our State to gain front-page notoriety. He may perhaps have his eye on our senior Senator's seat, or on the office of Vice President with the Progressive Republicans in 1924, who announce a meeting here early in December to take over the present Republican Party, now about to go into political bankruptcy, write its platform, and name its candidates. What difference to him whether Democratic Senator or Republican Vice President? Judging from the thrilling story sent out from Baton Rouge, the governor came, waved the red flag against the people of his State, and got publicity ahead of the Progressive show, perhaps to attract their attention. But I denounce in unmeasured terms the attacks upon the good name, the honor, the integrity, and the patriotic devotion of the law-abiding people of the great sovereign State of Louisiana, a people whose high regard for law and order, whose civic pride, whose moral integrity, whose ready obedience to law, whose unselfish devotion to State and country, whose fine Americanism are surpassed by none in this or any other land. [Applause.]

If the Governor of Louisiana finds himself helpless, if there is a crisis in Louisiana, a riot, an uprising, or public emergency, why has he not called out the State militia or assembled the Louisiana Legislature, instead of damning our State with a demagogic public appeal for Federal aid from a Republican national administration?

Upon what ground can Federal law be invoked in the Louisiana case? Why has not the Governor of New Jersey appealed for Federal aid in the Hall-Mills case? Establish this precedent, and should a southern darkey steal a chicken and the local authorities fail to catch him, Federal officers could be sent into the State to track him down and punish him for stealing the fowl. This proposal is too preposterous and absurd to be discussed among intelligent men. [Applause.]

It is inconceivable, it is monstrous that after 50 years of peace and patriotic devotion of the southern people to the flag of our country the governor of any State, North or South, should seek again to bring the damnable disaster of even a semblance of carpet-bag rule upon any sovereign State. I care not what others may do, but I for one will go to any humanly possible limit to prevent the enactment of this crime against my State, against a people so proud, so loyal, and so devoted to our country and her institutions. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, may I have the attention of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] for a moment? There are two gentlemen from Louisiana who desire about 10 minutes each to speak somewhat along the same lines as the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL] has just spoken.

Mr. MONDELL. How many?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Two. Will it be agreeable to the gentleman to let them speak now?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think it is entirely proper for these gentlemen to be heard.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILSON] may speak for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILSON] may address the House for 10 minutes?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana. [Applause.]

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to revise his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I merely wish to make a short statement expressing in a general way my grievous disappointment and indignation at the great injustice that has been done the people of my State and of my congressional district. It is useless to go into details about this matter. I have no particular criticism to level against anyone, except that which would naturally arise out of a condition of this sort; but as a citizen of Louisiana and as a Member of this House and as a representative of a great congressional district, I feel it is my duty to condemn in unmeasured terms the unwarranted assault upon local authorities and people of Louisiana and to defend them so far as possible against the statement that they are unable to enforce the law in Louisiana and to control their domestic affairs.

Gentlemen, out of all the pitiless publicity that has come to my State, out of all the insinuations that our local government has broken down, that lawlessness is rampant and that life is insecure, what do you find? Going over this entire record you will find presented to the Nation only one law violation in one locality.

I wish to assert here that Louisiana and the people of Louisiana are just as law-abiding as the people in any State of this Union. Probably the biggest question in America today is one of law and order, one of respect for and obedience to the legally constituted authorities. But in each State it is the duty and the province of the citizenship of that State, of the courts of that State, to enforce its own laws and punish those who violate them. I think the action of the President in notifying the people of Louisiana and the authorities in Louisiana that the Federal Government would not interfere because no Federal question was involved was admirable. [Applause.]

Now, in all this publicity and out of all the things appearing in the newspapers throughout the Union, in all the charges against my State as to lawlessness, I say they have only mentioned one crime committed in one locality, and I doubt if any other State could show a record equal to that. Since we have been here we have seen riots in Washington, midnight murders and assassinations. This District is under the jurisdiction of Congress. Why should the State of Louisiana come here for protection? The State of Kansas just now is having trouble similar to that ascribed to the State of Louisiana, but is attending to her own business and not asking any assistance at the hands of the Federal Government.

The parish of Morehouse, in my district, is the particular point under fire. I can say that Morehouse Parish is one of the most progressive and law-abiding parishes in Louisiana, and the town of Mer Rouge, where the crime is alleged to have been committed, is one of the best communities in the State. But if the crime referred to is ever to be ferreted out and punished, it will have to be through the authorities of the State of Louisiana and of the parish of Morehouse.

I want to express my appreciation to the Members of the House for the various assurances they have given that they do not believe the charges made against my State. [Applause.] The people of Louisiana, just as those in other States in the Union, resent any attempt to draw the Federal Government into taking charge of the local affairs and interfering with their local self-government. Every time that experiment has been tried it has resulted disastrously. We know what it means to the citizenship of any State to draw the Federal Government into interference with the local or State government.

Gentlemen, I wish once more to enter my solemn protest against this attempt to get the Federal Government to interfere with the affairs of our State, and to express my indignation on account of the damaging publicity that has been given the affairs of Louisiana through any attempt by officials of Louisiana or newspapers to destroy her prestige and the good name of her people by the imputation that she is helpless and impotent in any respect.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON. I will.

Mr. BUTLER. Is there any evidence anywhere that the governor has asked for Federal interference, except what is in the headlines in the newspapers?

Mr. WILSON. I think there is.

Mr. BUTLER. I have been watching for that and have not seen it.

Mr. WILSON. The governor's statement was that he came to this city for Federal assistance; that is his statement that was printed in the press. These newspaper articles state that the attempt was to be made to have the Federal Government take charge of the affairs in Louisiana, and that the local State government had broken down.

Mr. PARK of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON. Yes.

Mr. PARK of Georgia. Did not the letter of the governor, in which he denied the statement in the newspaper, bear out the very statements that the newspaper made?

Mr. WILSON. These letters are in the RECORD and will speak for themselves.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. SANDLIN] may proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I regret it as exceedingly unfortunate that the time of this body should be taken up by the discussion of matters of this kind. My colleagues from Louisiana have gone somewhat into the details in the discussion of what I believe and know is a base slander against the people of my State. I was much surprised on getting off the train Sunday morning to take up the Washington Post and reading the story which the gentlemen have referred to.

The evil effects of a slander against the character of anyone, when once circulated, can not be entirely eliminated. This is true with reference to a State.

However, I feel that I would not be representing my people did I not do all in my power to refute the effects of an unwarranted, uncalled-for, and vile slander which was contained in the article published in the Washington Post on last Sunday. I will direct my remarks to that part of the article which said—

That the courts of the State cease to function and citizens are in terror.

I have lived in the district which I have the honor to represent all my life. Previous to my service here I was connected with the courts of my State for 16 years in the capacities of prosecuting attorney and district judge.

I have just returned from Louisiana, where I spent two months amongst the people of my district. I personally know the Federal, State, and parish officers; saw and talked to most of them while there, and heard of no trouble of any kind of the nature as outlined in the Post's story.

The reason for the writing of this story I do not know. I can not say whether it was caused to further some one's political ambition or not. The article would indicate that the writer was in touch with the Governor of Louisiana and was representing his views. However, the governor has stated over his signature that he did not see the writer of this article. That is a controversial matter between the Governor of Louisiana and the Washington Post. But what I want the Members of this House to know is that the conditions in Louisiana, as given me by Representatives from other sections, and the conditions in my district as I know them would not justify the slanderous article which was carried in the Post on Sunday.

I know that this article is a gross and unfair misrepresentation of conditions as they really exist in Louisiana, and feel impelled to condemn and denounce it as an unjustifiable slander of our splendid people and the good name of our State. I can not lead myself to believe that the governor and chief law officer of our State could be so misinformed as to the law and the facts as to ask for Federal intervention to supersede and displace the legally constituted authorities of the State of Louisiana and destroy local self-government. I deny that any legal or constitutional authority exists for such a course as pointed out in the Post's story, which quotes section 4 of Article IV of the Constitution of the United States, as follows:

The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government and protect each of them against invasion and, on application of the legislature or of the executive (when the legislature can not be convened), against domestic violence.

For this section of the Constitution provides for action by the State legislature, when it could be convened, before any action is authorized by the governor; and yet the Post's article indicates that the governor and attorney general are ignoring this plain provision of the law and are seeking to set up a carpet-bag government in Louisiana without the consent of her people. Through this infamous, uncalled-for, and unwarranted article Louisiana has suffered irreparable injury, her people and authorities placed in a false light before the Nation, as evidenced by expressions from the press and pulpit here in the Capital City; and while I realize the injuries done our State can not be repaired and her loss of prestige fully restored, I feel that I voice the sentiment of her people, irrespective of rank, creed, or individual views with reference to any organization, when I enter my indignant protest and unhesitatingly assert that Louisiana is capable of local self-government and of the administration of her laws and the dispensation of justice through her own chosen officials and tribunals, which are as competent and patriotic as in any other State in the Union.

There are Ku-Klux Klansmen in Louisiana the same as in Washington, New York, Chicago, and Boston. Just why my State should be singled out for such outrageous slander and pitiless publicity is more than I can understand. I have just returned from Louisiana, and know of no conditions to justify in any respect the statements appearing in the press about the Ku-Klux Klan in Louisiana. The courts in Louisiana, Federal and State, are intact and able to function without any interference from the Federal Government. The intimation that the National Government should take charge of the State is an outrageous slander on Louisiana and will be resented by its citizens, irrespective of section or organization, be it secret or open.

We have a man at the head of affairs in this Nation who, I believe, before he will lend his aid to any such drastic action that has been proposed will demand more evidence than a newspaper report or statements from some one with political ambitions.

I am gratified with the expressions of Members of this body, coming from all sections of the country, who have frankly assured the Members from Louisiana that they do not believe these reports that have been carried in the press.

Summing the whole matter up, I say that it is all bunk. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, after what has been said with regard to the great and good State of Louisiana and in her defense, I think it might be well to have the Record record the fact that no one outside of the State of Louisiana, so far as I know, has suggested any extension of Federal control over that great Commonwealth. So far as I am informed, no one in authority in the Federal service, in Washington or elsewhere, has suggested, encouraged, or approved any extension of Federal authority over that Commonwealth. We all wish Louisiana well. We all have very great confidence in her. We approve what her representatives have said in her behalf, and on this side we are just as earnest as they are that Louisiana and all the States shall retain in full force and effect all of their sovereignty and work out their own problems. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its chief clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Senate Resolution 361.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. CHARLES R. CONNELL, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

Senate Resolution 362.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. JOHN I. NOLAN, late a Representative from the State of California.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 3855) to ascertain and settle land claims of persons not Indian within pueblo Indian land, land grants, and reservations in the State of New Mexico.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 2212. An act for the future safeguarding of the White House collection of the presidential china; to the Committee on the Library.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 10144. An act conveying the peninsula of Presque Isle, Erie, Pa., to the State of Pennsylvania, its original owner, for public park purposes; and

H. R. 367. An act for the relief of J. Irving Brooks.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 446.

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering H. R. 12817, a bill to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes. General debate on said bill shall continue until the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union rises on Saturday, November 25, at which time general debate shall terminate. The time for such general debate shall be controlled and divided equally by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries; that on Monday, November 27, the bill shall be taken up for amendment under the five-minute rule; that the consideration of the bill for amendments shall continue not later than the hour of 4 o'clock postmeridian on November 29, at which hour the committee shall rise and report the bill back to the House with such amendments as may have been agreed upon; whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and on all amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

With the following committee amendments:

Line 10, page 1, strike out the words "controlled and" and insert, after the word "equally," the words "between those in favor of and those opposing the bill and shall be controlled."

Page 1, line 11, after the word "member" insert "opposed to the bill."

Line 15, strike out the word "that" and insert the word "than" after the word "later."

After line 6, page 2, add the words "that in consideration of the bill any appropriation made in the bill shall not be subject to a point of order."

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, what has the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] suggested in relation to time for the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. POU. Would the gentleman from Kansas be willing to have 40 minutes on a side on the resolution? In view of the importance of the legislation to be considered I think there ought to be that much discussion.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think that is a fair suggestion.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for the discussion of the rule be limited to 40 minutes on a side, one-half to be controlled by myself and one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the resolution as amended provides that the shipping bill may be taken up for consideration. It allows three days of general debate, continuing until Saturday of this week, including that legislative day. It also provides for three days' consideration under the five-minute rule for amendment and for a vote upon the bill at 4 o'clock on the 29th day of this month. The rule leaves the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule open to the widest amendment on the floor. Indeed, in order to make it possible that the House itself shall have the greatest opportunity for considering the bill for amendment, the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries took the bill into the committee and inserted as a part of the bill many amendments that they had intended offering from the floor. This was done in order to save the time for the Members of the House to offer such amendments as they might deem proper. It is thought that three days devoted to amending the bill will give every Member of the House an opportunity for the presentation and discussion of such amendments as are offered for the purpose of bettering the bill.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. If I understand the provisions of the rule—I have not read it, but I have been advised as to its provisions and have heard the statement of the gentleman from Kansas—they are that commencing next Monday morning the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule, and that the bill shall be voted on not later than Wednesday, the 29th, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is true.

Mr. GARNER. I merely make this suggestion to the gentleman that in case—

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, I can not yield for suggestions.

Mr. GARNER. I would like to ask the gentleman another question. In case a respectable minority should undertake to offer amendments, say to the first 30 pages of the bill, they could occupy the three days in the offering of such amendments and there would be no opportunity to offer amendments to the remainder of the bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If amendments are offered in good faith for the purpose of bettering the bill, they can be discussed and disposed of on the floor in less time than is provided for in the rules. Opportunity to amend the bill is given under the rule. Any effort to filibuster, any effort to delay action, any effort merely to postpone action upon the bill will be thwarted by the rule calling for a vote upon the bill at the time provided.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I can not yield further because I have not the time. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time, and will ask the gentleman from North Carolina to use his time.

Mr. POUL. Mr. Speaker [applause], of course nothing that anyone could say would change the determination of the majority to put through this rule and probably hereafter to put through this vicious legislation. We can not but record our protest. The legislation proposed is in harmony with the policy of the Republican Party of always providing to give somebody $10 in order to enable that somebody to give somebody else $1. This bill is the final milestone in the announced program of the Harding administration in its return to normalcy. The first milestone was the tariff bill—the worst measure of its kind ever enacted by Congress. The second milestone was the so-called antilynching bill, and this is the third milestone. It is well that the administration called this extra session, because in the Congress which will follow this there will be 74 places which are known now by Republicans, but which will know them no more in the succeeding Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, this rule does give reasonable debate. The majority of the Committee on Rules, however, at the last minute inserted a provision which makes the appropriations that are provided for in the bill not subject to a point of order. We can only appeal from this day to another future day when the cause of the people will have a better opportunity. The action of the President in forcing this bill is plain defiance of the will of the American people if the recent election means anything. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS]. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, the rule makes in order a piece of legislation vastly important and quite naturally it will be seriously contested. It is easily understood why that contest is on. I am convinced that the bill opens the way to solve a serious problem, both from a commercial and defensive point of view. I am persuaded that whatever differences there might be in the minds of individual Members as to the proper method of proceeding, to materialize a real necessity, we are generally agreed that the United States ought to become a merchant marine power. There may be those among us who are willing to permanently give up all hope of staying on the sea. I doubt whether there is any great number who are willing to have the country abandon the sea. On the other hand, I think everybody is convinced that it is not a wise economic policy to employ our competitors to carry our overseas trade if it can be done by ourselves. Then, in addition to the economic importance, which is primarily commercial, all Americans can realize the importance of the national-defense element in an American merchant marine. It is needless for me here to comment upon that phase of the problem. Our recent experience makes it unnecessary for further comment. This bill is not the outline of a policy or a declaration of a new purpose of the Government as to whether we are going on the sea or not. We are already on the sea at terrific cost, and the question now before us is rather how are we going to operate our merchant marine; that is, how are we going to profitably run these vessels in the American merchant marine which are now already built? We have now at least 1,500 steel ships, only a small portion of which we are now operating. We must decide upon what we are to do with them. I am sure we will not scrap them as we did the wooden ships. The country does not want us to convey them to foreign flags and abandon the sea.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I will yield.

Mr. COCKRAN. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this bill is intended to apply only to ships now in existence and not to apply to ships to be built or operated in the future?

Mr. FESS. The bill is broader than that. The real significance is, What are we going to do with the 1,500 steel ships, 400 of which are in use and 1,100 of which are tied up to the wharves, and by the nature of the case must be expensive or finally deteriorate? When this bill becomes operative, if there is any lack of any character of ships that ought to be built to fulfill the complement of a necessary merchant fleet, of course under the bill that will be done.

I did not mean to use language in the narrow sense, but I meant to say that the big question with us now is how are we going to stay on the seas, not only employing the 400 vessels already in use but add to the vessels we are already operating those 1,100 others which are tied up at the wharf. What is our alternative? I take it that there is no possibility of operating these vessels under the plan of the subvention theory that was our method prior to the Civil War when we were a debtor nation. The mere fact that we built up a merchant marine at that time in that way is not now an argument that we could do it, because we have become a creditor nation instead of a debtor nation. In this case it will operate against rather than for us. If we employ the preferential tariff where we sell more than we buy, it will operate to our disadvantage. That is perfectly clear, and no one can seriously contend that that method is tenable. That leaves us the choice between Government operation or the plan of this bill. Whether it is better for us to go on with Government operation, which I know is very strongly supported by a great number of people in this country as well as by a great number of representatives in both bodies of Congress, I state to you gentlemen frankly that I am not in favor of that alternative. It would seem to me that our recent experience with Government operation of transportation would be decisive against Government ownership of a merchant marine. [Applause.] I think that the evidence of the inefficiency and the wicked extravagance that we have undergone in only recent times in our experiments in Government control ought for all time to put at rest that particular policy of operation. If you and I live long enough to see an end of its bad results, I shall be surprised. I know how a great number of our people argue in favor of it, conceding its inefficiency and wastefulness. They argue that we should go ahead and suffer the loss, no matter how much, so long as it distributes the cost of operation, because the loss will go to the persons who are operating it—that is, those who are employed in doing it—and we could therefore afford to suffer the loss, because while the public pays it it goes to that part of the public employed in the business. Well, the difficulty about that is that the difference in the cost between our operation and our competitors' operation is most largely the difference that we pay our labor in comparison with what is paid to our competitors' labor.

In Government operation the loss is paid out of the Government Treasury without any degree of efficient service. Political operation, which is tantamount to Government operation, from the nature of the case will sacrifice service for place or position and never look to results because no one is responsible, since no one bears the loss. If the Government does it, no one feels it; then why not distribute the cost to those employed, no matter what the loss may be?

If the difference in cost must be made up, then make it specific. And in reality the subsidy in this bill, if you care to call it so—and I do not run away from the word—in reality the subsidy is a subsidy to American labor. If there was no difference in cost of operation there would be no reason whatever for a subsidy. If we were willing to bring our labor to the basis of the labor of our competitors there would not be any doubt at all about our operating an American merchant marine, whether by Government or private enterprise. [Applause.] But I do not believe that it is the thought of the American Government and the American people to place our labor under the same conditions as that of our competitors, whether on the Atlantic or the Pacific. I do not believe that we are ready to go to the same level of either the scale of pay or the conditions under which they work. It has always been the policy of our Government, and especially when within the control of the Republican Party, to maintain the American scale of wages in order to maintain the American standard of living. With our protective tariff we have succeeded where our laws operate. Attempting on the sea where our laws can not control, we have been driven off the sea. It is because of our inability to cover the seas with American protective legislation that we ask for this protection of our American merchant marine. We aspire to maintain the higher standards of labor on the sea as we have ever done on the land. But with open competition on the sea we have placed our operations at such a great disadvantage in comparison with the operations of our competitors that we were finally driven almost off the seas.

Members of the House, I stand for the higher standards, and therefore I am not inclined to vote for a modification of the navigation laws looking to a reduction of the standard of American labor. There may be need of some revision in detail, but we will hold to the higher standards. If we do that, and that is a matter of law, then I think this Government—unless we are going to continue the business of Government operation, which to me is unthinkable—this Government must make up the difference between the cost of American ships under American law and the cost of operation of competitor ships under our competitors' laws. That difference will exist and must be made up, whatever be our policy on the seas. That seems to me absolutely certain. In Government operation it will be large and indefinite.

If we are to make up the difference, as I assume we must, then let us make it up specifically. Do not make it indefinite. If it is to be a subsidy to labor, let us not permit it under an extravagant, ineffective operation by the Government, where we suffer greater costs with less results, but let us specify what it is to be in the law and then hold those responsible for the efficiency of it responsible for making it a successful merchant marine. That is what this bill attempts to do.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is it the gentleman's contention that the benefits of this subsidy will inure alone to the laboring man involved in this question, and that none of the real profit will go to the operators of the ships?

Mr. FESS. The benefits will primarily be to the laboring men employed. I presume that there would be very little, if any, profit beyond what an operator would have, provided he were free to employ foreign labor under foreign conditions, which we will not permit him to do. Our national defense interest will prevent that practice if nothing else would do it. So far as the profit would go, I say to my good friend from Alabama that if the law would make it free for the American company to employ foreign labor, coolie labor, under the conditions that our competitors would employ them, he would make as much, if not more, profit than under this bill. In fact, we are frequently told that no subsidy is necessary if we would repeal these laws. But we will not agree to that. So far as I am concerned I would never agree to the employment on American ships, which might be needed in time of war, of foreigners who have no attachment to our Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Hicks). The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FESS. May I have two minutes more?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield another minute to the gentleman.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, as I see it, it is a choice either to go off the sea altogether, which to me is unthinkable, or continue Government operation, which I believe almost every Member of this House except those socialistic in belief will admit is inefficient and extravagant, as well as unwise, and I do not think creditable; or else some plan outlined as this bill proposes. For myself I am going to suggest that Government ownership at this time is not to be thought of. I am perfectly willing to go forward on the basis of this bill, and, as has been said before, whatever is to be paid by the Government toward the operation of the ships of an American merchant marine is a profitable business, as I think it will be returned ultimately to the Government. Otherwise I shall be greatly disappointed. [Applause.]

Mr. HIMES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I regret I can not. My time is up.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, to a stranger to our institutions and indeed to many who are familiar with our institutions it will surely seem very remarkable that an administration which only a few days ago was, if not wholly repudiated, at least wholly discredited should attempt with all the blandishments of Executive power to force through this Congress a measure to which it is tacitly admitted the great mass of the American people are opposed. And yet in the light of the history of one branch—or shall I say one element—of the Republican Party it is perhaps not strange that with the very death rattle in its throat it runs true to form and seeks to serve in its dying moments special interests and special privilege. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Of course, in a discussion on the rule one can not enter into the merits of the bill. I suppose it will be admitted—aye, claimed—that the President in his address to Congress yesterday presented the arguments in behalf of this measure as strongly as they have ever been presented and as strongly as they will be presented in whatever bodies may discuss it. It seemed to me to be a strong presentation if the premises be admitted, but we deny the premises. It also seemed to me that in some of the comparisons the President was singularly infelicitous. For instance, he compared that which is requested in this bill with the expenditures that have been made for public highways and for rivers and harbors. Surely no one will be deceived by that comparison. Public highways are built for all; rivers and harbors are improved for all commerce. You do not pay the truck man a subsidy for traveling over one of the highways that the Government builds. [Applause.] This is not a proposition for general public interest. This is a proposition for individual benefit at public expense.

It seemed to me also that there must be some doubt as to whether we could rely absolutely upon the assurance—and, of course, I do not mean to discredit the President's word in any way—that in no event would these expenditures exceed $30,000,000 and yet meet all the necessities that are claimed to exist. If that be true, then it seems to me the administration is driven to the position where it must admit that if now under the system under which these ships are being operated it is costing $50,000,000, but by turning them over to private ownership they can be operated for $30,000,000, then it is a tremendous reflection upon the administration of the Shipping Board as it now stands by the appointment of the present administration. [Applause.]

Oh, in very truth, this is the old, old fight. It is proposed to fix here a policy for 10 years, and which in all probability it is hoped means permanency, whereby the old Republican doctrine is to be carried out of taxing one man in order that another may thrive; to legislate in order that one group of men may live on the sweat of the brows of other men. That is the principle which is involved.

If the rule shall pass, of course, there will be more elaborate discussion of the bill in detail. I see no reason why the rule should pass. Some gentlemen who are opposed to the bill have said, "Oh, let us pass the rule and consider the measure." Why is it that we should pass a rule and consider a measure which we know the people do not want, to the exclusion of taking up business which we know the people do want? [Applause.] Why do not gentlemen who have made up their minds to oppose this bill in principle stop it now at the threshold by the defeat of this rule and let us turn to matters of greater moment for which there is a demand and upon which we could all agree substantially?

There are some objections to the rule itself. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] in his inquiry of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] pointed out one. This has been advertised as a very liberal rule. That will depend altogether. It has been advertised as a rule that does not restrict amendments. That will depend altogether. I do not know how many amendments are to be offered in this bill. It will depend altogether on whether the legitimate amendments have been reached by 4 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon as to whether it proves liberal.

There is another objection to the rule. That is the last amendment proposed, which makes in order the appropriations carried in the bill. This takes from the Committee on Appropriations the power given to it at the time the Budget was created, and around which in a certain sense the whole Budget system was built. It is proposed now to give to a committee of the House a power which the House itself could not exercise under the general rules.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we are prepared here and now, that if our own minds have not prepared us the election has prepared us, to meet this proposition at the threshold and check it at this time by the defeat of this rule. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee yields back two minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] should endeavor to get a good deal of satisfaction out of the fact that the American people have not been altogether satisfied, because in 18 months the Republican administration and the Republican Congress were not able to cure all of the evils and all of the ills that eight years of Democratic administration laid upon the country. [Applause.]

I am not at all surprised that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], realizing that one of the greatest scandals associated with the Democratic administration had to do with the building of the merchant fleet, and that one of the most difficult and trying problems laid upon the Republican administration and Congress was that of determining what should be done with the wreck of a merchant fleet the Democratic administration left us, does not now desire to have that question brought up for consideration.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] would prefer to be able to say in the campaign two years from now that the Republican Party and the Republican administration had made no effort whatever to settle what is confessedly and admittedly and beyond all question and peradventure one of the greatest and most trying problems before the people of the Republic. It would be easier for him and his party if at the end of two years they could say, "The Republican Party and the Republican administration were confronted with the question of what should be done to save something out of the enormous expenditure of nearly $4,000,000,000 made by the Democratic administration for a merchant fleet. The Republican Party has made no effort whatever to settle that great question or to determine whether we are to have a merchant fleet and a shipping policy. The Republican Party has allowed the intolerable conditions which it inherited to continue without making any effort to cure them."

Of course, I realize that the gentlemen on the Democratic side would prefer to be in that position two years from now.

What is the question before us? Is it a question as to whether, lacking an American merchant marine, we shall now proceed to the building up of such a marine and to the establishment of a great shipping policy? That is not the question at all. As was very clearly pointed out by the President of the United States in his address to us yesterday, the question is whether we shall go forward in a constructive way, whether we shall continue a policy of obstruction, or whether we shall enter upon a policy of destruction. Those questions this Congress can not escape. The expenditure was made. The fleet, such as it is, was builded. We have it. It is on our hands. What are we going to do about it? There is some difference of opinion in the country as to what should be done. There can be no difference of opinion among honest men as to the absolute necessity of entering upon a discussion of the question with a view of settling it in the best possible way. Gentlemen may not favor this bill. Gentlemen may find some of its provisions are not satisfactory to them. But gentlemen can not escape—at least gentlemen on the Republican side can not escape—the responsibility of meeting this issue. The conditions demand it. The country expects it. And without regard to what gentlemen's views may be as to the wisdom of the legislation, it seems to me it is the duty of the Congress and of gentlemen on both sides of the House, realizing the situation, to meet the issue squarely and vote for the consideration of the measure.

The gentleman from Tennessee objected because there is a provision in the rule which makes in order an appropriation carried in the bill. I have some doubts as to the wisdom of that appropriation. I am not certain how I shall vote on that question, but I do know that in taking up an important matter of this sort the House should not bind itself in advance. The House should not allow one Member, touching this highly important matter, and in this one particular case, to say that the House, or a majority of it, shall not have an opportunity to modify or change the general rule. The House ought to have that opportunity, and therefore it is wise, it is essential, in the interest of a full and a fair discussion of the legislation, that the House should have an opportunity to determine whether or not that appropriation is justified and shall be approved. In conclusion may I say that without regard to what gentlemen's views may be as to the wisdom of the legislation as a whole or in part, they can not escape, it seems to me, the duty of giving this Congress an opportunity to express its will and judgment touching this highly important matter. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming yields back two minutes. The gentleman from Kansas has 16 minutes remaining and the gentleman from North Carolina 29 minutes.

Mr. POUL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL].

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] in making his statement seems to attribute the defeat of his party to the fact that all of the ills of the country were inherited from the Democratic administration which has been out of power for two years. I am very much surprised that the distinguished gentleman should come here at this time after the recent experience and offer that argument, because the same statements were made in every voting precinct in the United States to the American people and they repudiated that doctrine entirely. The party to which the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming belongs has been convicted upon the record that they themselves have made, and as a member of the Democratic Party I am indeed glad that this issue is brought to the attention of the American people at this time. If there is any one issue upon which our party can go to the country it is upon this ship subsidy bill. Of all the bad legislation that has been enacted by the majority party in this Congress, in my humble opinion this is the worst measure of all that they have presented for our consideration. [Applause.] Now, gentlemen of the House, to get down to the merits of the rule and this proposition, I wish to have the record clear, and I state that the members of the Rules Committee on the Democratic side voted solidly against reporting this rule to the House, and I am fully convinced that when the measure itself comes before the House the Democratic Party will be recorded against the passage of the bill. I am delighted to hear that so many Members on the majority side of the House will join us in their protest against this measure. I am not reliably informed as to the situation on the majority side, but I did read a day or two ago in one of the leading Republican papers of the country that after a careful canvass of the House the majority leaders hoped to put the bill through the House by a majority of 25 or 30. You have on this side of the House now something like 169 majority, and if you can not summon more than a measly majority of 25 on that side there must be something radically wrong with the bill. [Laughter.]

Now, gentlemen, one reason why I ask the Members of the House to vote against the adoption of this rule is because the bill that is now before the House is apparently a new bill; at least so I am informed by some members of the committee that reported it. A bill was drawn many months ago and thoroughly discussed in the committee, and was put before the people. Now, as I am informed, even as late as day before yesterday the committee took up the bill, made many important amendments to it, most of them very objectionable, that they were not even discussed in the full committee, and the new bill which this House has not had any chance to study or even read, because the bill was only printed yesterday, comes before the House and we are asked to adopt it under a special rule, a bill that the membership of the committee has not had time to consider. This special rule is for the consideration of a bill which the membership of the House has not had time to consider, and therefore I am opposed to the rule and would like to see it defeated and this matter postponed, so that the membership of the House may have time to give it full consideration.

I can not understand why the majority leaders in this House are so insistent on putting this bill through under a gag rule at this time, or under a special rule, to be polite about it. Why, let me call your attention to the fact that you will have a majority in the next House. You will have a Republican Congress in both branches. The President in the White House is of your political persuasion, and why just a few days after election, in which the people have passed judgment on this measure, do you bring in a special rule here, and why in an extra session of Congress called upon this particular bill to ram it down the throats of the American people when your own party is going to be in power for the next two years? That very procedure in itself would convince me and, I believe, any fair-minded voter or citizen in this country that there is something radically wrong somewhere in this bill that necessitates the calling of an extra session and bringing in a special rule and undertaking to force this bill through the House.

I can not see any necessity for the rule or any necessity for this procedure at this time. If there was to be a change in the administration or in the Congress there would be some justification for your stand; but with your own party in power, I can not see the necessity. Ah, gentlemen, the truth is that the leaders of the majority side know that with a majority of 169 there is such a revolution of sentiment in the Republican Party that you do not dare to submit it to the next Congress, even though you have a majority in that Congress. [Applause on the Democratic side.] My friends, therefore, to keep the record straight, I want to call attention to the fact that the Democratic Party in this House has voted in committee, and I hope will vote on the floor, against the adoption of the rule, and then let us line up our forces in opposition to the bill.

Mr. Speaker, one thing in the President's message to the Congress yesterday impressed me very much. He called attention to the deplorable condition of agriculture in the Nation. Nearly one-half of our population are engaged in agriculture. Every well-posted citizen in the United States knows that the farmers of the country under this administration have suffered a deflation of their property to the extent of billions and billions of dollars. The President of the United States in his message yesterday recognized that fact, and said that within a short time—no definite time being stated, but at some time in the future—he proposed to come before the American Congress and make some recommendations in behalf of the American farmers. Let me put this question to you: With the deplorable condition of agriculture, in which nearly one-half of our population is engaged, why does the President come before the Congress, after calling the Congress into extra session, and ask it to pass a bill for a Shipping Trust, which will amount to hundreds of millions of dollars, putting that amount into the pockets of the trust, instead of squarely meeting the situation and coming before the Congress and asking relief for agriculture and the farmers of the Nation? [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. President, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, under our system of Government the Chief Executive has the power, and one might say the duty, of coming before the Congress and presenting legislation to it for its consideration. During the past eight years, since I have been a Member of this body, the Executive has exercised that function a great many times. I have become more and more convinced that the Chief Executive, who is elected by the people, has the right to have such legislation as he may suggest considered by the Congress. As I say, he is the Executive, he is elected by popular vote, and it is his privilege to present an issue if he desires so to do. I have never felt that any member of the President's party should be bound by the President's expressed views, however, and while I shall vote for the consideration of this bill upon the theory that he has a right to present it to the Congress, I shall oppose its enactment because I do not believe in it, nor do I believe that the people of the country desire its passage.

Mr. JOHN M. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I have only a few minutes, but I am glad to grant the gentleman a second or two.

Mr. JOHN M. NELSON. The gentleman is on the committee. In section 403 of the bill I find the following language:

All moneys in the fund are hereby permanently appropriated for the purpose of making such payments and the refunds authorized by subdivision (j) of section 416.

Does this rule safeguard that permanent appropriation?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I shall come to that in a moment, for I expect to discuss it if I have the time. To me the passage of this ship subsidy bill is a revival of the famous cost-plus system originated by Mr. Baker when he was Secretary of War, under which we wasted so much money in the construction of cantonments and in other governmental expenditures. The people of the country do not believe in the revival of the cost-plus system. They have had enough of it.

Of course, we have these ships. It cost the Government $3,000,000,000 to build them, and they must be operated in some way, either by the Government directly or through a ship subsidy. While in peace time I do not believe in initiating Government operation, yet the fact remains that we have these ships and it is a confession of inability on the part of this Republican administration if we say that the Government can not run those ships, now that we have them. You might just as well say that if the Government had constructed the railroads of the United States we would be compelled to turn them over to some private interest in order to run them at a profit after the Government constructed them. If we continue the policy of passing through the Congress of the United States measures that the people do not want and failing to pass measures that they do want, there will be no Republicans on this side of the House after a while. If we continue with this policy of not giving a bonus to the soldiers of the United States when the overwhelming public sentiment is in favor of it, and giving a bonus to men to run ships when the overwhelming public sentiment is against it, the party can not survive, and I submit to gentlemen on the Republican side of the House that this is the sort of measure that ought to be defeated. [Applause.] That does not mean that we ought not to support the rule. This is a very liberal rule. This is the kind of legislative issue that Congress ought to meet squarely. This is no gag rule. Any part of this subsidy bill can be voted up or down, in or out, and no Republican need have any doubt that he will have a free and untrammelled vote if this rule be adopted.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JOHN M. NELSON] brings up the question of the appropriation that is in the bill. If we are going to have a ship subsidy measure, we might just as well appropriate the money now as to put it off and appropriate it year by year for 10 years, as we would have to do. If we are going to have a ship subsidy, if we are going to adopt this cost-plus system and pay somebody a percentage on the money expended by the Government to run these boats, and we are going to have to spend some money, we might just as well do it now for 10 years as to have this question come up here year after year.

Mr. JOHN M. NELSON. The gentleman does not answer the question. I asked whether this rule would protect this appropriation. I want to vote for the rule; I think it is liberal, but I understand a clause has been inserted which now removes the right of a Member to make a point of order against the appropriation.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. In my opinion, the gentleman is wrong about that. The right to make the point of order is lost, but any Member of the House may take the floor and offer an amendment when the measure is under consideration in Committee of the Whole to make an appropriation for one year or to strike out the entire appropriation, so that it would be necessary for the Committee on Appropriations to bring in another bill. The rights of the House are absolutely protected under this rule as it is presented, and I would say that if they had not been protected I am satisfied that the rule could never have been reported from the Committee on Rules. As it is presented, I can see no reason for opposition to the rule by any man who opposes the ship subsidy bill.

Mr. POULSEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, no doubt Pikes Peak is one of the most prominent elevated points in the country, and from it one can see more United States territory on a clear day than from any other point in the Union. On the way to the summit of Pikes Peak there is what is called the halfway house. I am glad to note the arrival at the halfway house of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], and I believe that if he will continue along the line he is now traveling he will reach a point where he can really interpret the sentiments and feelings of the American people.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it has been said that one can tell the same thing so often that finally he comes to believe it is true. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDALL] has been making the same talk here on this floor so often to the effect that the shortcomings of the Republican Party lie in the fact of its inability to correct the shortcomings of the Democratic administration—he has told that so often that in charity I really believe there is some thread of conviction in his heart as to that assumption. Now, he said that the result of the election only proved that the American people had not been satisfied because the Republican Party in 18 months could not have undone all that the Democrats did in eight years. Of course, perhaps the gentleman from Wyoming has rather a more vivid recollection than some of us as to how the American people do regard the record of the Republican administration and a Republican Congress. But the gentleman from Wyoming, as usual, undertakes in his sweeping charge regarding the shipping program to lay all the blame at the feet of the Democratic administration. Why, we remember here when a Republican Congress was elected in 1918—by the way, the Republican Party has had four years to rectify all these assumed evils instead of 18 months—you remember, on the Republican side of the House campaign orators were constantly vocalizing complaints as to the American program of shipbuilding during the war. Charges of graft, waste, crookedness, inefficiency, and all that kind of thing were indulged in on frequent occasions. And so, finally, there was a resolution introduced in this House to appoint a committee of four Republicans and two Democrats who were to undertake to investigate the program of shipbuilding under the Democratic administration. That committee was appointed by the present Speaker of this House.

The chairman of that committee was the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the heir apparent to the Speakership. Mr. KELLEY of Michigan was on that committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER], the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HADLEY], four Republicans and two Democrats, and after months of exhaustive hearings here in Washington, hearings in New York, hearings in Philadelphia, after every witness who could be found throughout the country who either knew or was supposed to know or was accused of knowing anything about the shipbuilding program was brought before that committee, and after months of consideration, what did that committee find? I hold in my hand the report of that committee, known as the Walsh investigating committee. I can not read all, of course. But here is a significant clause from the concluding portion of that committee's report. I quote:

Considering the program as a whole (referring to the shipbuilding program under the Democratic administration) the accomplishments in the number of ships constructed, the tonnage secured, and the time within which the ships were completed and delivered, constitute the most remarkable achievement in shipbuilding that the world has ever seen.

[Applause.]

That is the language of the committee whose solemn duty it was to investigate and report upon those conditions.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield me one more minute?

Mr. POUL. I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. That was the conclusion of the committee whose duty it was to report to the House upon that question, and I place that against the belated plaint of the gentleman from Wyoming, who comes now and seeks to justify the difficulties in which the Republican Party finds itself in this charge that has long since been barred by all the rules of political fairness and political justice—I place against that empty charge the report of his own committee which shows the Democratic administration and its record in building the fleet of ships which served the United States and our allies in the war and carried food, munitions, and equipment to Europe for the finest Army that ever gathered under the flag and made possible the triumph of our armies in the tangled forests of the Argonne—this committee said that that program was the greatest triumph of shipbuilding in the history of all the world, and I trust the gentleman from Wyoming and others on that side will not seek to belie the report of their committee by their belated partisan attacks upon a marvelous record. [Applause.]

Mr. POUL. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN]. [Applause.]

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, I should begin perhaps by congratulating the House and the Committee on Rules on the broadening of vision that seems lately to have possessed these lords of the articles. Instead of proposing that a measure of this character shall be passed under limitations which preclude and prohibit amendments from the floor, they are now graciously pleased to accord this body three days of its own time to consider amendments to the pending bill. With respect to the provisions for general debate, I think the rule is reasonable. I have no quarrel with the principle of intrusting a Committee on Rules in a body of this size with power to decide or at least recommend the order in which measures shall be considered from time to time. But I do most strenuously object to the action of the committee in imposing a time limit on the power of the House to consider amendments.

The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] with considerable courage has announced that he is determined to oppose this bill, yet he supports the rule because he believes that he and every Member who dislikes some of its provisions will have a chance to offer any amendment that he considers necessary. And the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], while not going so far as the gentleman from South Dakota, yet does confess to a qualm of conscience about a certain provision, and intimates that unless opportunity were afforded to quiet his scruples by an appropriate amendment he would not support the rule. What certainty has either one of them that the House will have a chance to consider his amendment? Suppose the amendment is not reached when the time limit has expired. What will then be his remedy?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCKRAN. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman evidently misunderstood. I defended the rule. I defended a certain provision of the rule against the attack of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. I said that provision of the rule was highly important in order to give the House, rather than one Member of it, an opportunity to determine what the House would do in regard to a certain provision of the bill.

Mr. COCKRAN. How does the gentleman know the House will have that opportunity? Suppose the amendment is not reached. What is the gentleman's remedy then?

Mr. MONDELL. There is only one way by which by any possibility the House should fail to reach the last paragraph of the bill, and that is by a filibuster.

Mr. COCKRAN. Oh, I want no explanation based on mere assumption.

Mr. MONDELL. A filibuster so objectionable as to prevent progress. But we do not propose to allow that filibuster to be successful.

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman makes a statement which is wholly gratuitous. He assumes the existence of a filibuster. The assumption is wholly unwarranted, extravagant, preposterous. The House can always put an end to a filibuster by passing the previous question. Even in committee it can at any time close debate. What I object to is this, that the Committee on Rules should undertake of itself to determine in advance of any action whatever by the House that it is likely to reach a stage of filibustering after a certain date, while as a matter of fact at that very time it may be considering meritorious amendments. The House itself is not left the power to declare when it has completed legitimate enlightening discussion and when, therefore, it is proper to close debate. Would the gentleman from Wyoming accept such an amendment as this to the rule now proposed, where it now provides that the House shall proceed to vote at a certain time would he object to adding the words "provided that all amendments then pending, which in the judgment of the Chair are not offered for filibustering purposes, are then disposed of"? Will the gentleman accept that?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It would give altogether too much power to the occupant of the chair.

Mr. COCKRAN. Oh, well, if this side is willing to trust the occupant of the chair with that power, I think the gentlemen can compose his nerves. [Applause on the Democratic side.] As a matter of fact the gentleman from Kansas stated here that this limitation is proposed because in his judgment three days afford all the time that is necessary for disposal of amendments. Who is he to decide that? Is he wiser than the House?

The House will be here always competent to decide that very question. Why should this House, now at the very beginning of these proceedings, without knowing how far amendments that may be offered will be helpful, informing, and meritorious—or the reverse—declare that at a certain hour they shall all be shut out and that the House shall proceed to vote then upon a measure which, according to the gentleman from Wyoming and according to the gentleman from South Dakota, may still be in crying need of amendment?

But, Mr. Speaker, to expect consistency from gentlemen supporting a measure of this kind would be something so extravagant that whoever expresses a hope of it by that fact disqualifies himself from any pretense of capacity to instruct or enlighten his neighbors. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] The whole proceeding, the bill itself, the President's speech, the speech of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], are all so self-contradictory, so utterly inconsistent with their own propositions, that they strikingly illustrate the inevitable power of truth to assert itself, even through men and through lips that are bent upon perverting it. There is not a proposition laid down by the President which is not controverted and exploded by the arguments with which he seeks to support it. I have not time to consider them all in detail, but the one which is featured most conspicuously in the newspapers friendly to this proposal will serve to illustrate what I say. I will state it fairly. The President declares that this measure is necessary to save our "genius" for marine transportation. In God's name, if we have genius for marine transportation, for what earthly reason do we want the crutch of a subsidy for it? This measure is intended not to vindicate or to maintain our genius for shipping but to impeach and deny it; to declare that by genius, by commercial skill and ability alone we can not maintain an American mercantile marine, and that our only chance of succeeding in it is to plunge our hands into the Treasury—that is to say, into the pockets of men who are in no way concerned in it, and to withdraw from them the profits of their industry and transfer these profits to an industry that can not maintain itself. That is the necessary effect of this legislation if it pass; no other result can possibly flow from it.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] says he is in favor of this measure because if the ships are to be administered by Government agency that would be in effect a direct subsidy to labor, and he wants to give the subsidy in a form where it will first pass through the hands of certain gentlemen who will take care that it all remains in the hands of those who first touch it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Why is it that every attempt of the Republican Party to help men who labor begins and ends by enriching somebody else? Was there ever yet a subsidy brought in under Republican auspices to help a struggling, poor, impoverished industry? Every one has been and always will be a grant to some concern already enormously rich. If you want to help an industry that is impoverished and in difficulty, go out and give a subsidy to the farmer for every bushel of wheat he raises. I think such a subsidy would be vicious, but it would be infinitely less vicious than this. It certainly is more important that wheat be produced from the ground than that ships should sail the seas under one flag rather than another. This measure is to preserve the genius of American shipping, according to its authors—to make American shipping live not by virtue of its own merits but by levying on the profits of other industries which support themselves. There is no other way in which subsidies can be paid. Industries can not all be subsidized. If they were, there would be nobody putting anything into the Treasury, but everybody would be drawing moneys out of it. And this manifestly would be impossible. Where a subsidy of any kind is granted it must be drawn from the proceeds of other industries which get no aid and which therefore really succeed through commercial genius alone. So that the effect of this legislation, instead of encouraging the genius for American shipping or "genius" for anything else, is to penalize genius that incapacity may be made profitable. That is your policy. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I think it is safe to say that the question propounded by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRELL] as to why this measure is pressed now answers itself. Why do you press it now, when another Congress has been elected fresh from the people? I will tell you. You press it now because the new Congress is fresh from the people, and for that reason the new Congress would not permit the enactment of such an infamy as this. You are taking advantage of a feature of our Government—a feature that can not well be changed—which keeps a Congress in existence after its successor has been chosen because it is essential chiefly for the purpose of counting the electoral vote; for a body in existence with recognized authority is the only body capable of settling disputes rising out of a contested election. But when a lame-duck Congress is called in extra session to defeat the very purpose for what its successor was chosen, as in this case, then there may not be technical treason against the Constitution, but there is actual revolt against the spirit of our institutions. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, a good many people are fond of talking about the results of the late election. I think those gentlemen who have prospects of running for office again will perhaps be more susceptible to the lesson of that election than those upon whom the popular verdict has fallen with heavy, crushing, and final weight. Let me say to them that the verdict of that election is that this country is going to be democratic hereafter in fact as well as in name. [Applause.] And, mind you, I say that with very great deliberation, because I have seen it democratic in name, and with the Democratic Party in power, when it was not democratic in fact. Let me give this warning to both parties. This country has solemnly decided that it must be restored to its democratic foundation. The essence of democracy is contained in a very few words. No man must be permitted to take one dollar and enjoy it that is produced by the labor of others, or be deprived of one dollar that has been produced by his own labor. You can not pass this subsidy without taking the fruits of other men's labor and giving it to this bloated Shipping Trust. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] is always entertaining, whether instructive or not. [Applause and laughter.] It is a delight to hear him. The voice and rhetoric of the gentleman from New York have delighted audiences throughout the world. He justly enjoys the reputation of being one of the world's great orators; but we are dealing with a very practical question to-day.

First of all, may I advert to the provisions of the rule that have been mentioned in this discussion? The provision about which some questions have been asked and the only provision, I think, that has been criticized by gentlemen on the other side of the House is that provision that went into the rule by way of an amendment providing that any appropriation carried in the bill should not be subject to a point of order. That gives the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union an opportunity to pass upon that provision in the bill rather than the presiding officer, whoever he may be, during the consideration of the bill. Without that provision there is no question that a point of order would be made and that the Chair would pass upon it, and that he would, in all human probability, sus-tain the point of order. Leaving the proposition in the bill for consideration permits the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to say whether or not that provision as it is or as it may be amended shall remain in the bill. That is the whole thing, so far as that is concerned, and it is not depriving the House of any of its privileges or relieving it of its duties.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] criticizes the rule for limiting the time for considering the bill for amendments under the five-minute rule. The Committee on Rules has taken into account the number of pages in the bill, the debatable questions involved in the bill, and the number of amendments which were threatened—over 800—as a means of filibustering against the final passage of the bill. It was thought desirable by those responsible for the procedure in the House of Representatives that the consideration of this bill should be concluded before Thursday of next week. In order to do that the rule gave three days for the consideration of amendments. Now, there is no man in the House of Representatives who will say that germane or proper amendments to this bill, to any and all sections of it, may not be offered within that time. If gentlemen had 800 amendments for the purpose of filibustering against the final passage of the bill, that, of course, would make it impossible to reach all of the bill; but I assume that no such attempt will be made now, because the whole question of amendments is thrown open to the House, not alone to the committee in charge of the bill but to the membership, and the committee in charge of the bill has taken the amendments that it considered necessary and has incorporated them as a part of the bill and reintroduced the bill under another number in order to give the House the time for the consideration of the bill for amendments, as provided in the rule.

Now, just a word upon the condition that confronts us.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am sorry I can not yield. I have not the time.

No one can state as well as the President stated yesterday the situation that confronts the Congress and the American people at this time with respect to our shipping. If this were an original proposition I would not be here to-day and you would not be here to-day listening to me urging a special rule for the consideration of a bill providing for the adoption of a policy of this character. But we are here to deal with a concrete condition that exists in the country. We have over $3,000,000,000 worth of shipping property that must be dealt with by the Congress. The Executive can not deal with it without authority from us. That $3,000,000,000 worth of property is diminishing in value hour by hour. Over a thousand of the fifteen hundred ships that we have are at anchor, chained together, deteriorating in value every day, every week, every month, and every year, and it is only a question of a very short time until they will be absolutely valueless. Shall we do something to salvage that property? Shall we take up a bill that proposes a means of restoring that motionless fleet to the sea, of utilizing it, or shall we simply say that we refuse to take up the question at all? If we refuse to consider the question at all we admit the absolute impotence of the Congress to deal with such questions. I am not committed to the provisions of this bill. If any suggestion is made by any of the opponents of the bill, I am ready to give to such suggestion all the consideration to which it is entitled. I suggest that no man occupying the position of a statesman in the Congress of the United States can justify himself before the country or his constituents by simply saying, "I am opposed to this measure." He must say, "I am opposed to this measure because I have a better proposition to offer." If that better proposition is offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] or by any other gentleman I will vote for it. I will vote for it on a motion to recommit, I will vote for it as a substitute for this bill during its consideration, but the country is entitled to the work of statesmen in the consideration of this bill rather than the work of mere politicians. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. I suppose the gentleman is in the former class.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am going to vote my convictions, not as a politician but as I think the question before us affects the welfare of the whole country. I have voted for river and harbor appropriations, knowing that my constituents did not have a ship, were not interested as stockholders in a ship that would enter a port or sail into a harbor. I see no difference in principle between providing harbor facilities for the shipping interests of the country and providing that our own ships may use these facilities. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Would the gentleman favor a subsidy for steamboats that operate on the rivers that we improve?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have not come to that. If I ever have the opportunity, which is not at all probable, I will consider that question. I will not dodge it when it arises. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, all great nations have sought the seas. Our Nation in the past has been able to expend its energies and invest its capital on the land. We are now a continent thickly inhabited by one hundred millions of people, and we reach the sea on three sides. It is as important to this Nation to-day as to any of the great nations of the past, or any great nations of the present, that our ships should sail the seven seas carrying outward and inward commerce, and in order to do that we must meet such competition as the other nations that sail those seas offer us. Every other great nation having ships upon the sea gives government aid to its shipping interests. Whether that be a subsidy, or whatever it may be, they give the aid.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 10, page 1, strike out the words "controlled and" and insert, after the word "equally," the words "between those in favor of and those opposing the bill and shall be controlled."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 11, after the word "member" insert "opposed to the bill."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 15, strike out the word "that" and insert the word "than" after the word "later."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, after line 6 add the words "that in the consideration of the bill any appropriations made in the bill shall not be subject to a point of order."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. POU) there were 124 yeas and 71 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 200, nays 110, not voting 121, as follows:

YEAS—200.

Ackerman	Ellis	Johnson, Wash.	O'Connor
Anderson	Evans	Kahn	Ogden
Andrew, Mass.	Fairchild	Kearns	Paige
Andrews, Nebr.	Fairfield	Kelly, Pa.	Parker, N. J.
Anthony	Faust	Ketcham	Parker, N. Y.
Appleby	Fenn	Kirkpatrick	Patterson, Mo.
Arentz	Fess	Kissel	Patterson, N. J.
Atkeson	Fish	Kline, N. Y.	Perkins
Bacharach	Fitzgerald	Kline, Pa.	Perlman
Beedy	Foster	Knutson	Petersen
Begg	French	Kraus	Radcliffe
Benham	Frothingham	Langley	Ransley
Bixler	Fuller	Larson, Minn.	Reber
Bond	Funk	Lawrence	Reece
Bowers	Gensman	Layton	Reed, N. Y.
Britten	Gerner	Lea, Calif.	Reed, W. Va.
Brooks, Pa.	Gifford	Lee, N. Y.	Ricketts
Burdick	Glynn	Leibach	Riddick
Burtness	Goodykoontz	Lineberger	Roach
Butler	Gorman	Little	Robertson
Campbell, Kans.	Graham, Ill.	Longworth	Robison
Campbell, Pa.	Graham, Pa.	McDuffie	Rodenberg
Cannon	Green, Iowa	McLaughlin, Mich.	Rogers
Chalmers	Greene, Mass.	McLaughlin, Pa.	Rose
Chindblom	Greene, Vt.	McPherson	Sanders, Ind.
Christopherson	Griest	MacGregor	Sanders, N. Y.
Clarke, N. Y.	Hadley	MacLafferty	Scott, Mich.
Cole, Iowa	Haugen	Madden	Shelton
Cole, Ohio	Hawley	Magee	Shreve
Connolly, Pa.	Hays	Mann	Siegel
Cooper, Ohio	Hersey	Mapes	Sinnott
Cooper, Wis.	Hickey	Merritt	Slemp
Coughlin	Hicks	Michener	Smith, Idaho
Crago	Hill	Miller	Snell
Cramton	Himes	Mills	Snyder
Crowther	Hoch	Millsbaugh	Speaks
Curry	Hogan	Mondell	Sprout
Dale	Huck	Moore, Ill.	Stephens
Dallinger	Hukriede	Moore, Ind.	Strong, Kans.
Darrow	Humphrey, Nebr.	Morgan	Strong, Pa.
Dempsey	Husted	Murphy	Summers, Wash.
Dyer	Hutchinson	Nelson, Me.	Swing
Echols	Ireland	Nelson, A. P.	Taylor, Tenn.
Edmonds	Jeffers, Nebr.	Newton, Minn.	Temple
Elliott	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norton	Tilson

Timberlake
Tinker
Tinkham
Underhill
Vaile

Vestal
Volk
Volstead Walters
Ward, N. Y.

Watson
Webster
Williams, Ill.
Williamson
Winslow

Wood, Ind.
Wurzbach
Wyant
Yates
Young

NAYS—110.

Abernethy
Almon
Aswell
Bankhead
Beck
Bland, Va.
Blanton
Boies
Bowling
Box
Briggs
Browne, Wis.
Buchanan
Bulwinkle
Byrnes, S. C.
Cantrill
Carew
Carter
Clague
Cockran
Collier
Collins
Connally, Tex.
Crisp
Davis, Tenn.
Deal
Dickinson
Dominick

Doughton
Dowell
Drewry
Driver
Favrot
Fields
Fisher
Frear
Fulmer
Garner
Garrett, Tenn.
Gilbert
Goldsborough
Hammer
Harrison
Hayden
Hooker
Huddleston
Hull
James
Jeffers, Ala.
Jones, Tex.
Keller
Kincheloe
Kopp
Kunz
Lampert
Lanham

Lankford
Larsen, Ga.
Lazaro
Lee, Ga.
Linthicum
Logan
London
Lowrey
Lyon
McClintic
Mansfield
Martin
Montague
Moore, Va.
Nelson, J. M.
O'Brien
Oldfield
Oliver
Park, Ga.
Parks, Ark.
Pou
Quin
Rainey, Ala.
Raker
Rankin
Rayburn
Rouse
Rucker

Sabath
Sanders, Tex.
Sandlin
Sears
Sinclair
Sisson
Smithwick
Steagall
Stedman
Stevenson
Summers, Tex.
Tague
Ten Eyck
Tillman
Townner
Tucker
Turner
Tyson
Upshaw
Vinson
Voigt
Wilson
Wingo
Wise
Woods, Va.
Wright

NOT VOTING—121.

Ansorge
Barbour
Barkley
Bell
Bird
Black
Blakeney
Bland, Ind.
Brand
Brennan
Brooks, Ill.
Brown, Tenn.
Burke
Burroughs
Burton
Byrns, Tenn.
Cable
Chandler, N. Y.
Chandler, Okla.
Clark, Fla.
Clason
Clouse
Codd
Colton
Copley
Cullen
Davis, Minn.
Denison
Drane
Dunbar
Dunn

Dupré
Focht
Fordney
Free
Freeman
Gahn
Gallivan
Garrett, Tex.
Gould
Griffin
Hardy, Colo.
Hardy, Tex.
Hawes
Henry
Herrick
Hudspeth
Humphreys, Miss.
Jacoway
Johnson, Ky.
Johnson, Miss.
Jones, Pa.
Kelley, Mich.
Kendall
Kennedy
Kless
Kindred King
Kitchin
Klecicka
Knight
Kreider

Schall
Scott, Tenn.
Shaw
Smith, Mich.
Stafford
Steenerson
Stiness
Stoll
Sullivan
Swank
Sweet
Taylor, Ark.
Taylor, Colo.
Taylor, N. J.
Thomas
Thompson
Treadway
Vare
Ward, N. C.
Wason
Weaver
Wheeler
White, Kans.
White, Me.
Williams, Tex.
Woodruff
Woodyard
Zihlman

So the resolution was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. Dunbar (for) with Mr. Brand (against).
Mr. Kiess (for) with Mr. Williams of Texas (against).
Mr. Purnell (for) with Mr. Black (against).
Mr. Burton (for) with Mr. Taylor of Colorado (against).
Mr. Morin (for) with Mr. McKenzie (against).
Mr. Vare (for) with Mr. Kitchin (against).
Mr. Focht (for) with Mr. Byrns of Tennessee (against).
Mr. Woodruff (for) with Mr. Bell (against).
Mr. Olpp (for) with Mr. Weaver (against).
Mr. Kreider (for) with Mr. Garrett of Texas (against).
Mr. Bland of Indiana (for) with Mr. Gallivan (against).
Mr. Gahn (for) with Mr. Ward of North Carolina (against).
Mr. Free (for) with Mr. McSwain (against).
Mr. Taylor of New Jersey (for) with Mr. Thomas (against).
Mr. Cable (for) with Mr. Rainey of Illinois (against).
Mr. White of Kansas (for) with Mr. Jacoway (against).
Mr. Rhodes (for) with Mr. Barkley (against).
Mr. Newton of Missouri (for) with Mr. Hudspeth (against).
Until further notice:

Mr. Porter with Mr. Riordan.
Mr. Zihlman with Mr. Clark of Florida.
Mr. Moore of Ohio with Mr. Swank.
Mr. Hardy of Colorado with Mr. Hawes.
Mr. Barbour with Mr. Cullen.
Mr. Mott with Mr. Hardy of Texas.
Mr. Luce with Mr. Sullivan.
Mr. Denison with Mr. Dupré.
Mr. Kendall with Mr. Griffin.
Mr. Michaelson with Mr. Johnson of Mississippi.
Mr. Treadway with Mr. Drane.

Mr. Rosenbloom with Mr. Mead.
 Mr. King with Mr. Humphreys of Mississippi.
 Mr. Davis of Minnesota with Mr. Stoll.
 Mr. Mudd with Mr. Kindred.
 Mr. White of Maine with Mr. Johnson of Kentucky.
 Mr. Thompson with Mr. Overstreet.
 Mr. Osborne with Mr. Taylor of Arkansas.
 The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

BLINDED, ARMLESS, AND LEGLESS VETERANS.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8062) amending subdivision 5a of section 302 of the war risk insurance act, with Senate amendments thereto, and move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York calls up the bill H. R. 8062, on the Speaker's table, with Senate amendments, and moves to concur in the Senate amendments. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman please give us a brief statement of what the Senate amendments are?

Mr. FISH. The original bill called for an increase in pay from $20 to $50 per month for the nurses and attendants of the blinded, armless, and legless veterans, and other totally disabled veterans of the World War. The Senate amendment simply strikes out the words "all other totally disabled veterans" and leaves the bill to apply to the blinded, legless, and armless, who number about 300. I am willing to concur with the Senate amendment, although I would prefer the more comprehensive terms of the original bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. There was one amendment which the Clerk read that strikes out $50 and inserts $20, as I understood it. To what does that relate?

Mr. FISH. That must be an error in reading.

Mr. BLANTON. The Clerk read such an amendment.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some misunderstanding with respect to this matter, and I shall withdraw my request until to-morrow.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. KLECZKA, until Friday, on account of death in family.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. TIMBERLAKE to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Mr. Smith Gee, H. R. 2963, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 54 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, November 23, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

705. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting statement showing the amount of pay and allowances by ranks and ratings for officers and enlisted men of the Navy; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department.

706. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting a draft of a bill for the relief of the Turner Construction Co., of New York City; to the Committee on Claims.

707. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports of certain named bureaus and offices showing the exchanges during the fiscal year 1922 for labor-saving devices and report of the Chief of Engineers showing exchanges that were made during that year for all the districts of the Engineer Department at large; to the Committee on Appropriations.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12862) to pension soldiers and sailors of the World War, and the same was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SPROUL: A bill (H. R. 12892) granting the consent of Congress to the State of Illinois, the county of Cook, or the city of Chicago, separately or jointly, their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Little Calumet River, in the State of Illinois; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. PATTERSON of New Jersey: A bill (H. R. 12893) providing for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Gloucester City, N. J., and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. PARKS of Arkansas: A bill (H. R. 12894) for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Magnolia, Ark.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. LAMPERT: A bill (H. R. 12895) providing for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at Menasha, Wis.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota: A bill (H. R. 12896) to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 12897) to provide for the erection of a Federal building on the site owned by the Government of the United States and located in the city of Racine, State of Wisconsin, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CONNOLLY of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 12898) granting a pension to Sarah C. Ubil; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12899) for the relief of Catherine Woods; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 12900) granting a pension to Henry F. Clement; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ELLIOTT: A bill (H. R. 12901) granting an increase of pension to Hulda J. Gilmore; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12902) granting an increase of pension to Cynthia R. Hess; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FESS: A bill (H. R. 12903) granting a pension to William Kirk; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GREEN of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 12904) granting an increase of pension to Dorrance Shomo; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HIMES: A bill (H. R. 12905) granting a pension to Catharine Crawford; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HENRY: A bill (H. R. 12906) granting a pension to Delnora Deuel; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HUDDLESTON: A bill (H. R. 12907) granting a pension to Carrie M. Allison; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. IRELAND: A bill (H. R. 12908) granting a pension to Charlotte E. Rockhold; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12909) granting a pension to Ann Katherine Kindred; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KELLEY of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 12910) granting a pension to Martha White; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12911) granting a pension to Mary A. Parsons; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12912) to correct the military record of George W. Kelly; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KLINE of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 12913) granting a pension to Mary Irvin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KNUTSON: A bill (H. R. 12914) granting a pension to Cora E. La Page; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LAMPERT: A bill (H. R. 12915) for the examination and survey of Highcliff Harbor, Lake Winnebago, Wis.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. LAWRENCE: A bill (H. R. 12916) granting a pension to James C. Mooney; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McPHERSON: A bill (H. R. 12917) granting a pension to Mary A. Hatton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MAGEE: A bill (H. R. 12918) granting a pension to Mary E. Wood; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MONDELL: A bill (H. R. 12919) granting a pension to William G. Glasgow; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12920) granting a pension to Harry E. Thompson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PARK of Georgia: A bill (H. R. 12921) for the relief of the Georgia, Florida & Alabama Railway Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. REECE: A bill (H. R. 12922) granting an increase of pension to Martha Crawford; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12923) granting a pension to Frances E. Griffin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12924) granting a pension to Agnes Smith; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12925) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Hall; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12926) granting an increase of pension to James G. Shockley; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12927) granting an increase of pension to John T. Hyder; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12928) granting an increase of pension to John E. Crum; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. RODENBERG: A bill (H. R. 12929) for the relief of Harry Evans Nowland; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12930) for the relief of Chesley P. Key; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SCHALL: A bill (H. R. 12931) granting a pension to Cora F. Marlette; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LAMPERT: A bill (H. R. 12932) granting a pension to Theresa Gerughty; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12933) granting a pension to Nancy J. Cady; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12934) granting a pension to Julia A. Kelsey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12935) granting an increase of pension to Natalia Allen; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SCHALL: A bill (H. R. 12936) granting an increase of pension to James P. Aney; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12937) granting a pension to Isabel Newton; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12938) granting a pension to Simon H. Drum; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHREVE: A bill (H. R. 12939) granting a pension to Mary A. Hird; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12940) granting a pension to Sophia Hubbard; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12941) granting a pension to John H. Boyd; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SNELL: A bill (H. R. 12942) granting an increase of pension to Ellen E. Johnson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TINKHAM: A bill (H. R. 12943) for the relief of James L. Dalton; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12944) for the relief of James H. Lomasney; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12945) for the relief of John J. Corcoran; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12946) granting a pension to William Smallwood; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. VAILE: A bill (H. R. 12947) granting a pension to Charles H. Thompson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12948) granting an increase of pension to Richard C. Kimbrough; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WATSON: A bill (H. R. 12949) granting a pension to Clara H. Farnsworth; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHITE of Maine: A bill (H. R. 12950) granting an increase of pension to Charles Arthur Bordeaux; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12951) granting an increase of pension to Patrick A. Galvin; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

6428. By Mr. CONNOLLY of Pennsylvania: Evidence in support of House bill 12898, granting a pension to Sarah C. Ubil; to the Committee on Pensions.

6429. By Mr. CRISP: Petition of sundry citizens of the State of Georgia, urging the repeal of discriminatory tax on small-arms ammunition and firearms; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6430. By Mr. KELLEY of Michigan: Resolution of First Baptist Church of Mount Morris, Mich., indorsing proposed constitutional amendment to prohibit sectarian appropriations; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

6431. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of the American Legion national legislative committee, Washington, D. C., favoring adjusted compensation for ex-service men; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6432. By Mr. RAKER: Petition of Miss Minnie Provis, of Sutter Creek, Calif., urging support of the Bursum pension bill; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

6433. Also, petition of Roy M. Marks, of Placerville, Calif., relative to the transportation question; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

6434. Also, petition of the General Federation of Women's Clubs committee on Indian welfare, Riverside, Calif., relative to Senate bill 3855; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

6435. Also, petition of the Cannerymen's League of California, San Francisco, Calif., urging Federal action toward the protection of the lower Mississippi Valley; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

6436. Also, petition of Oakland Chamber of Commerce, Oakland, Calif., urging an appropriation for improving San Francisco Bay; to the Committee on Appropriations.

6437. Also, petition of Bakersfield Civic Commercial Association, Bakersfield, Calif., indorsing the Britten-Ladd metric standards bill; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

6438. Also, petition of the American Legion national legislative committee, Washington, D. C., urging support of the American Legion plan for adjusted compensation; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6439. Also, petitions of Robert L. Hanley, commander of Victory Post, American Legion, Los Angeles, Calif., urging support of Senator King's resolution to investigate the Veterans' Bureau; Bakersfield Civic Commercial Association, Bakersfield, Calif., indorsing the Capper-French truth in fabric bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

6440. Also, petitions of the Garden Club of America, California zone, and the Friday Morning Club of Los Angeles, Calif., against the passage of the "all year national park bill"; also petition of East San Diego Chamber of Commerce, East San Diego, Calif., urging support of the development of the lower Colorado Basin; also petition of Selma Chamber of Commerce, Selma, Calif., urging support of the Barbour bill, creating the Roosevelt-Sequoia National Park; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

6441. By Mr. MURPHY: Memorial of Martins Ferry Woman's Club, Martins Ferry, Ohio, favoring freedom for Christian people of eastern Europe; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

6442. Also, petition of Presbyterian, United Presbyterian, Methodist Episcopal, Reformed Church of Christ, and Lutheran Churches, in Carrollton, Ohio, favoring the passage of House bill 9753, the Sunday law; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

6443. Also, memorial of members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Amsterdam, Ohio, favoring independence for the Christian people of the Near East; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

6444. Also, petition of Presbyterian and Methodist Episcopal churches at Malvern, Ohio, favoring the passage of House bill 9753, the Sunday law; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

6445. By Mr. SHREVE: Petition of Gridley Chapter, No. 324, Order of the Eastern Star, Erie, Pa., favoring passage of the Towner-Sterling bill (H. R. 7; S. 1252); to the Committee on Education.

6446. By Mr. STRONG of Pennsylvania: Petition of the First Baptist Church of Kittanning, Pa., indorsing House Joint Resolution 159, proposing a constitutional amendment to prohibit sectarian appropriations; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

6447. Also, petition of East Brady (Pa.) Chapter, No. 311, Order of the Eastern Star, favoring the enactment of the Towner-Sterling bill (H. R. 7; S. 1252); to the Committee on Education.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, November 23, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we thank Thee for the land in which we live, for all its history toward right and truth. We bless Thee for the heritage thus given unto us and ask that righteousness may exalt the Nation, and along the track of the future Thy good pleasure may be realized and the desires of the people be such as shall meet with Thine acceptance. We ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

WESLEY L. JONES, a Senator from the State of Washington; HENRY L. MYERS, a Senator from the State of Montana; and OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, a Senator from the State of Alabama, appeared in their seats to-day.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Second Assistant Secretary of Labor, transmitting, pursuant to law, a list of papers and documents on the files of the Department of Labor which are not needed in the conduct of business and having no permanent value or historic interest, and asking for action looking to their disposition, which was referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments. The Vice President appointed Mr. BORAH and Mr. McKELLAR members of the committee on the part of the Senate, and ordered that the Secretary notify the House of Representatives thereof.

HARLEM RIVER SHIP CANAL.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to Senate resolution 347, agreed to September 9, 1922, information relative to the proposed modification in the channel of the Harlem River Ship Canal, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the petition of Mrs. Lela A. Frye and sundry other members of Northern Star Sisterhood, No. 107, Dames of Malta, of Charleroi and Monessen, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted at the Thirteenth Annual Convention, American Manufacturers' Export Association, at New York City, indorsing the constructive policy of President Harding on the subject of the American merchant marine, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted at the Fifty-second Annual Congress of the American Prison Association, at Detroit, Mich., favoring the passage of House bill 12123, for the establishment of an industrial reformatory at Camp Grant, Ill., which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the vice chairman of the national legislative committee, the American Legion, transmitting resolutions adopted at the Fourth National Convention of the American Legion, at New Orleans, La., favoring the passage of legislation providing adjusted compensation for ex-service men, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LADD presented the petitions of Henry Kutonen, of New Leipzig, and 9 others; Mrs. A. O. Helmsness, of Wildrose, and 9 others; W. A. Bartosh, of Kensal, and 6 others; C. J. Bliss, of Geneseo, and 3 others; Joseph Hillman, of Glen Ullin, and 9 others; Ivan Kjustad, of Watford City, and 27 others; M. McWethy, of Sutton, and 24 others; Andrew Halberson, of Williston, and 4 others; P. N. Stedje, of Bucyrus, and 8 others; Charles Brandt, of La Moure, and 2 others; Mrs. H. G. Soderling, of Bierman, and 40 others; William Oeffner, of Leeds, and 8 others; E. C. Keuger, of Linton, and 19 others; Edmond Florentin, of Rolette, and 27 others; C. J. Miller, of Glen Ullin, and 9 others; Ehtobold Kirchenmann, of Burnstad, and 8 others; Ole C. Melland, of Lima, and 46 others; John Quam, of Pekin, and 9 others; A. A. Hagen, of Alamo, and 22 others; and H. G. Haga, of Bergen, and 7 others, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation stabilizing the price of wheat, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. EDGE. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a telegram from the Real Estate Board of New Jersey favoring the passage of the ship subsidy bill. I also ask that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Western Union telegram.]

JERSEY CITY, N. J., November 22, 1922.

Senator WALTER E. EDGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

By the officers and board of governors of the Real Estate League of New Jersey, at their regular monthly session, held at the Elks' Club, in Paterson, N. J., November 22, 1922, it was resolved and unanimously carried that the ship subsidy bill be passed and become a law, believing it to be in the best interests of our Nation.

RAYMOND CONNOLLY, President.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on November 22, 1922, there was presented to the President of the the United States the enrolled bill (S. 3300) granting a pension to Marie Doughty Gorgas.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRANDEGEE:

A bill (S. 4054) for the relief of the Home for the Friendless, of Chicago, Ill.; the Silas Bronson Library, of Waterbury, Conn.; the Gettysburg College (formerly Pennsylvania College), of Gettysburg, Pa.; the Presbyterian Church of Bardstown, Ky.; and the Taylor Orphan Asylum, of Racine, Wis. (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McCUMBER:

A bill (S. 4055) to provide for the purchase of additional land for Wahpeton Indian School; to the Committee on Appropriations.

A bill (S. 4056) for the relief of the estates of Aaron Van Camp and Virginius P. Chapin;

A bill (S. 4057) for the relief of W. J. Benfield (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4058) for the relief of Albert Andrews (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CUMMINS:

A bill (S. 4059) granting a pension to Oscar Criswell (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TRAMMELL:

A bill (S. 4060) for the relief of Susan T. Smoke; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WALSH of Montana:

A bill (S. 4061) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to enter into an agreement with Toole County irrigation district, of Shelby, Mont., and the Cut Bank irrigation district, of Cut Bank, Mont., for the settlement of the extent of the priority to the waters of Two Medicine, Cut Bank, and Badger Creeks, of the Indians of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BALL:

A bill (S. 4062) providing for the comprehensive development of the park and playground system of the National Capital; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 4063) to provide credit facilities for the agricultural and live-stock industries of the United States; to amend the Federal reserve act; to amend the Federal farm loan act; to extend and stabilize the market for United States bonds and other securities; to provide fiscal agents for the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. BALL:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 247) providing funds for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property during the convention of the Imperial Council of the Mystic Shrine in the District of Columbia June 5, 6, and 7, 1923, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

COMPENSATION AND MILEAGE OF SENATOR FELTON, OF GEORGIA.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, there was introduced on yesterday by the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] a Senate resolution reading as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Rebecca Latimer Felton $287.07 for compensation, and $280 as mileage, the same being amounts due her as a Senator from the State of Georgia from November 8 to November 21, 1922.

The resolution was appropriately referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I hope, however, that the resolution will not be adopted by the Senate. I trust that we shall not throw further confusion into the matter by now exhibiting some doubt as to whether Mrs. Felton was really a Member of the Senate from November 8 to November 21. If she were a Member—and the Senate so decided by admitting her and swearing her in—she is to be paid out of the regular appropriation, just the same as is every other Senator to be paid his salary. This is not a matter which should be charged against the contingent fund of the Senate at all. If the appropriations do not cover the item, it will be very proper for the Committee on Appropriations to bring in a deficiency item in the deficiency bill to take care of it. The payment should be made as the payment of the salaries of all Senators is made, not out of the contingent fund of the Senate, but out of the regular fund.

It occurs to me that the manner proposed in the resolution is not the proper way to take care of this particular item. I feel like saying that it would throw a very grave doubt upon the action taken by the Senate in seating Mrs. Felton as a Senator.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I desire to say that I introduced the resolution at the suggestion of the financial clerk of the Senate. Of course if he will pay the amount due Mrs. Felton without the passage of a resolution by the Senate authorizing it to be done, I shall be delighted, and I trust that this may be done and thus avoid the necessity of pressing the resolution.

LIBERIAN LOAN.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate and proceeded with.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 270) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States for the Government of Liberia.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Fletcher	McKellar	Shortridge
Bayard	France	McKinley	Simmons
Borah	George	McNary	Smith
Brandeggee	Glass	Myers	Smoot
Broussard	Hale	Nelson	Spencer
Calder	Harrell	Nicholson	Stanfield
Cameron	Harris	Norris	Sterling
Capper	Heflin	Overman	Sutherland
Caraway	Hitchcock	Owen	Swanson
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Page	Trammell
Culberson	Kellogg	Pittman	Underwood
Cummins	Keyes	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Curtis	Ladd	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	La Follette	Rawson	Warren
Edge	Lodge	Reed, Pa.	Weller
Ernst	McCumber	Sheppard	Willis

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Secretary will state the pending question.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, when we adjourned last night it was with the understanding that the Senator from Mississippi would prepare a substitute for the amendment which he had previously proposed. The Senator has not yet arrived this morning, and I do not feel that we should go on with his amendment until he is present to offer the substitute for it which he desires to present.

Mr. HARRISON entered the Chamber.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Mississippi is now here.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I withdraw the amendment which I have heretofore proposed to the pending joint resolution, and move the amendment which I send to the Secretary's desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. At the end of the joint resolution it is proposed to insert:

To carry out the provisions of the act of February 17, 1911, "to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their locomotives with safe and suitable boilers and appurtenances thereto," as amended, as follows:

"For salaries of 35 additional inspectors whose employment is hereby authorized for nine months, at the rate of $3,000 per annum each, $78,750; for per diem in lieu of subsistence for said inspectors for nine months, $37,800; for transportation for said inspectors for nine months, $37,800; for allowances to said inspectors for nine months, $15,750; in all, fiscal year 1923, $170,100."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I trust the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi will not be adopted. We have already encumbered commerce with enough expense. I am opposed to increasing the number of officers beyond the necessary number for the transaction of any kind of business. Besides that, it does seem to me that the railroads should certainly have sufficient discretion to see that their rolling stock is maintained in proper condition. We need, rather, to decrease the cost of transportation instead of increasing the burdens and taxes of the people of the country. If we are ever going to stop piling up taxes, now is a good time to begin.

I think our Republican friends should take warning by what has just transpired, and that they should carry out some of the pledges of economy which they made to the people of the country. I am tired of business being tied down and impeded by so much governmental regulation. It seems to me that the railroads of the country, having operated for so many years, can certainly continue to do so without the additional burden which would be imposed upon them by the adoption of the amendment and the interference with their engines and other instrumentalities for the carrying of freight and passengers.

What we most need now is a reduction in freight rates and in passenger rates and not something which is going to increase our burdens and expenses by tying the hands of railroad officials. Indeed, transportation charges have become so high that one can hardly afford to ride on a railroad, and our products are rotting in the field at this time because of the high transportation costs. The cost of living is constantly increasing. It seems to me that we have reached a time when Congress should cease the creation of new positions. No doubt such places are created at the Government's expense for favorites who can not or will not make a living at private work. I refuse to take suggestions from the Interstate Commerce Commission or any other Washington body to create useless positions. I would much prefer the judgment of the engineer, who knows and operates his engine, than that of some theorist. We need common sense in business. This is another step tending toward Government ownership, which I am totally against.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am not the author of the pending amendment, but the amendment is an extract from a bill which I introduced some time ago, and I am very much in favor of its adoption.

I understand perfectly that the cost of government increases every year; that is inevitable. The history of this particular legislation may be very briefly stated. A few years ago Congress passed a law authorizing the inspection of locomotive boilers by a number of Federal inspectors. That was done in order to preserve the lives of those who travel upon railroad trains and also to preserve the property which was being transported. The outcome of that initial legislation was very gratifying. It was soon discovered that the railroad companies had not efficiently inspected and resolutely put aside the facilities that were unfit for use, and there were a great many lives saved and a great deal of property preserved by the original law.

The railroad companies were very much opposed—

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President—

Mr. CUMMINS. I will yield to the Senator in a moment. The railroad companies were very much opposed to the original enactment, but when, two years or two years and a half later, we came to expand the operation of the law so that it would embrace the supervision and inspection of the entire engine the railroad companies very frankly admitted that the service rendered had been invaluable and did not oppose the extension of the service to include the entire engine. I now yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator how he can demonstrate that a great many lives were saved and a great deal of property preserved by reason of the enactment of the law to which he has referred?

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator doubt that?

Mr. DIAL. Yes; I seriously doubt it. I do not see how it can be proved.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can only refer the Senator to the testimony of those who had to do with the operation of engines and to the comparison between the periods before and after the law was passed in order to establish the fact. I do not think that any railway employee or any railway manager will question the statement which I have just made.

The bill from which the amendment is taken was brought forward at the suggestion of the locomotive engineers and firemen, who are most directly involved in any accident which may occur to the boiler or to other parts of the engine.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President—

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I notice that for the salaries of inspectors there is provided an appropriation of $78,750, and then, in addition, a per diem, for which an appropriation of $37,800 is made; for transportation, $37,800, and for allowances, $15,750, a total of $91,350 for allowances of various kinds, as against $78,750 for salaries. I should like to ask the Senator would it not be entirely proper, inasmuch as the inspectors are inspecting property of the railroads, to require the railroads to give them their transportation? I should also like to have the Senator state, as I believe the amendment is taken from a bill introduced by him, what reason there is for the other allowances.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, answering the first question, I am opposed to compelling the railroad companies to furnish transportation to any Government employee. There ought to be a complete separation between the railroad companies and these governmental inspectors. If we require the railroad companies to furnish transportation, we in a measure link up the employee of the Government with the corporation, and, in my judgment, diminish to a degree the efficiency and the fidelity of the Government inspectors. That is the reason why there is a provision for transportation.

Mr. McKELLAR. I can see considerable force in that suggestion. I should now like to ask the Senator with regard to the allowances.

Mr. CUMMINS. We have now 50 inspectors. The country is divided into 50 inspection districts, and there is one inspector for each district. Under the present law each inspector is allowed $600 per year for his assistant or his stenographer or his helper, whoever he or she may be, and allowance includes, as I remember, the rent of the office in which the inspector is housed. Under the present scale of cost of buildings and rents and living, that allowance, in my opinion, is very inadequate, and it is proposed to be enlarged in order to meet the changed conditions of the present time as compared with the conditions when the law was originally passed.

I do not think there is anyone connected with the administration of the railroad law who does not recommend this legislation, who does not understand its necessity if we are to have efficient and constant inspection of locomotive engines, and I think it is due to the men who ride on the engines and drive them and the men who assist the engineers in the operation of the engines that they shall be protected just as far as the Government can protect them against imperfect and out-of-order engines.

I did not dream that this question would arise at this time, but if I had time to accumulate the evidence which has been taken before the committee of which I am chairman, in respect to the work which these inspectors have done, the number of engines which they have ordered out of service because they were imperfect, and, presumably, the number of accidents which have been averted, I believe the Senate would have no doubt whatsoever about the wisdom of this appropriation and this authority. If we are going to have an efficient constant transportation machine that will do its business with the fewest accidents and the least destruction of property, the amount of money that is here proposed to be appropriated can not be expended in a better way than to authorize these new inspectors and to increase the allowances for their expenses.

FRANCE AND GERMANY.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, we seem to be discussing a number of subjects that are foreign to the pending joint resolution, and I may be excused, therefore, for bringing in something which is also more or less foreign to it.

During the last few days America has been honored by a visit from a very distinguished French statesman. Clemenceau, the former prime minister of France, is in this country for the avowed purpose of setting before the American people certain criticisms of the policy of the United States, and in his opening speech he has expressed a willingness to exchange criticisms. It seems to me that this may be a good method to follow.

The great Frenchman who visits this country enjoys a wide popularity. My purpose in rising is not so much to criticize him but to state some of the widespread American criticisms of the present policy of his country.

If France were sending to this country a representative to plead with the American people for cooperation at this time, I think it would have been possible to select a man more appropriate for that service. While Clemenceau has not been known as an extreme militarist as compared with Poincaré and some other Frenchmen he has established the reputation, in the conference for the peace treaty at Paris, of representing an extremely harsh policy toward Germany.

In his work on the Wreck of Europe, Nitti, the Italian statesman, frequently discusses Clemenceau. While I think at times he holds him too much responsible for French policy, I am going to insert without comment this extract from his book concerning the great Frenchman.

In his book The Wreck of Europe, on page 110, Nitti says:

All his life Clemenceau has been a tremendous destroyer. For years and years he has done nothing but overthrow governments with a sort of obstinate ferocity. He was an old man when he was called to lead the country, but he brought with him all his fighting spirit. No one detests the church and detests socialism more than he; both of these moral forces are equally repulsive to his individualistic spirit. I do not think there is any man among the politicians I have known who is more individualistic than Clemenceau, who remains to-day the man of the old democracy. In time of war no one was better fitted than he to lead a fighting ministry, fighting at home, fighting abroad, with the same feeling, the same passion. When there was one thing only necessary in order to beat the enemy, never to falter in hatred, never to doubt the sureness of victory, no one was comparable to him, no one could be more determined, no one more bitter. But when war was over, when it was peace that had to be insured, no one could be less fitted for the work. He saw nothing beyond his hatred for Germany, the necessity for destroying the enemy, sweeping away every bit of his activity, bringing him into subjection. On account of his age he could not visualize the problems of the future; he could only see one thing necessary, and that was immediate, to destroy the enemy and either destroy or confiscate all his means of development. He was not nationalist or imperialist, like his collaborators, but before all, and above all, one idea lived in him, hatred for Germany. To render her barren, to deprive her of her supports, to destroy her—this was the consummation of the war which was proposed in the treaty of peace, and he and the financiers who surrounded him were the true artificers of the treaty of Versailles and of the policy which is still in force.

That was the judgment of the former prime minister of Italy with regard to this great statesman who has now come to plead with the United States for cooperation in present conditions; and the same author quotes in several places that statement of Clemenceau in the Chamber of Deputies in which he declared, in defending his course, that—

The treaties are a method of continuing the war.

So, Mr. President, I deprecate somewhat the character of this messenger who has come from France to ask the United States to cooperate with France in peace; and yet Clemenceau is mild in his attitude toward Germany compared with the present governing authorities of France.

It has been said by our representatives in Paris, particularly by Mr. Baruch in his book, that Clemenceau lost his position and was succeeded by others because it was considered that he had been too mild in his treatment of Germany. I mention this so as to emphasize the fact that the present attitude of France toward Germany is the extremest of the extreme, and that, violent as Clemenceau was in exacting the terms of peace with Germany, he was mild compared with the present Government of France in carrying them out.

So I am not here, Mr. President, to criticize the great French statesman; and what I present is merely a criticism of the present policy of France toward Germany, which it seems to me must be amended before France or any of her representatives can in justice call upon the United States for cooperation.

From this speech which was delivered by Clemenceau in New York the other night I am going to read one or two short extracts; and first let me call attention to this one. He says:

I have some friendly criticisms to bring, and I think it is worthy of you and of me that we exchange them in this most democratic way.

There I find a direct invitation to the American people to exchange the criticisms that we hold on the present French policy with the criticisms which Clemenceau brings upon our policy; and just at this point I may be permitted to say that I myself have been a severe critic of the attitude of the United States in leaving Europe, in forsaking the work of rehabilitation there at the very moment when our great moral force was needed above all other things. I feel that our desertion of that great duty in Europe at that time is now being felt by us in a very material way in the shape of penalties. We discussed the ratification of that treaty almost solely upon the League of Nations, and on this side of the Chamber I think we made the mistake of discussing it almost altogether from the altruistic standpoint; but I believe the time has come when the American people have begun to appreciate the fact that our failure to continue the work which we had started in Europe by helping in the work of getting Europe upon her feet is now being reflected in the United States by a very disastrous depression of business which has been continuing now for two years, and which, in my opinion, is going to continue for a good while yet to come. We have felt the destruction of our foreign markets; we have found, month by month, a constant falling off in our commerce; and the future will attribute that in part to the fact that we have done nothing to assist in the rehabilitation of Europe.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Nebraska seems to agree with M. Clemenceau as to the proposition that the United States departed from Europe before it could in honor do so. M. Clemenceau seems a little nebulous about what the United States would have been expected to do had it remained in Europe. It seems to me, in the intelligent discussion of this question, where we are practically invited to return to Europe, that there ought to be some degree of accuracy as to what is expected of us. Does the Senator understand that what M. Clemenceau desires is that we shall ratify the Versailles treaty and return to Europe for the purpose of executing it as France is now undertaking to execute it?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, of course, I agree with the Senator from Idaho that the statements by M. Clemenceau are too nebulous and too indefinite to enable one to draw a very direct conclusion; but my purpose in rising to-day is to mention in the RECORD what I believe are insuperable obstacles which will prevent the United States from any cooperation with France toward Germany as long as the present destructive policy is pursued. I am not basing that opinion upon any friendship for Germany. I am not basing that upon any dislike of France. I am putting it solely and only upon the basis that the United States might be glad to cooperate with the rest of the world in bringing about an establishment of real peace. To secure such a peace the dominant power in Europe to-day, France, must abandon the present destructive policy toward Germany. As long as that destructive course is pursued it is useless to discuss the matter before the American people.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is of the opinion that under the present policy of France we can not very well cooperate with France?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am.

Mr. BORAH. When has that policy been different since the signing of the armistice?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I shall undertake to point that out to the Senator, if he will permit me.

A little later on in his discourse M. Clemenceau used this language:

And now that we have peace, we must preserve peace.

It is a little inconsistent for M. Clemenceau to say that we have peace, when in his utterances in the Chamber of Deputies on several occasions he declared that "the treaty would be a means of continuing the war." But disregarding that, let us look at the methods which are now being adopted by the French Government. Let us see whether they tend to preserve the peace.

In the first place, France, in spite of the declarations of economists in all the countries of the world, continues to demand of Germany reparations that are absolutely impossible. That is the first obstacle. The demand has been of such a character, backed up by such conduct, as to warrant the suspicion, if not the belief, that France would rather have Germany fail in paying her reparations than to have Germany become commercially strong and able to meet reasonable reparations.

I thought I would insert in the RECORD at this time some evidence that Germany has paid all that could have been paid up to the present time. Numerous writers in all countries have stated that no power exists with which to get greater reparations out of Germany than have been paid up to this time, and I think it may be accepted as a fact, admitted by the intelligence of the world, that even if France should take military possession of Germany there would be no power in that occupation to wring out of Germany the reparations in accordance with the demands of France.

We behold in Germany a country at the present time which has lost about 7,000,000 of her population; which has lost 80 per cent of her iron-ore fields; which has lost almost her entire merchant marine; which has lost all of her colonies, and which has lost a large area of her country, so that in agricultural products the loss is even greater, in proportion, than the loss of population. So that at the present time Germany is able to raise only about 70 per cent, or at the most 75 per cent, of the food which her people need. Therefore, in the winter which is now coming Germany is entering upon a period of distress which inevitably will produce insurrection in that country, if not revolution. Only the other day we read in the papers of mobs gathering in the city of Cologne, I think it was, finally suppressed by the police; but that the mobs shouted only, "Hunger, hunger"; and that menace of hunger is coming upon Germany at such a rate that all who are able to get out of the country for this winter are doing so—getting into the countries adjacent thereto.

How is Germany to buy this 25 or 30 per cent of food which her people require to get through the winter? Germany has an export trade which is only half what it was before the war. Her export trade does not exceed her import trade. She can not pay in products because she has not any surplus products to sell. She can not pay in gold because Germany at the present time has only $238,000,000 available in her reserves that are at all identified and known. There may be gold buried in the ground, as there always is in time of war, but the available gold in sight is only $238,000,000, and Germany can not part with a dollar of that without endangering what remains of her commercial and financial fabric.

To say that a country afflicted like that, and situated as Germany is, producing and having a productive capacity of only about 60 per cent of her productive capacity before the war, could meet these enormous reparations that are demanded by France, is the uttermost nonsense, and all writers on economy and on politics all over the world have conceded the fact. Yet the demand is made insistently and is backed by the threat of military occupation. That is one indication that the policy of France is not calculated for the maintenance of peace but rather for the bringing about of war.

Another thing. Germany is now a republic. Yet what sort of a policy is France adopting? France is adopting the very policy which is likely to drive Germany into the hands of the militarists and the Junker class in Prussia or to drive her, in desperation, into the arms of the Bolsheviks; whereas if France merely desires peace, the policy of France should be to do everything to maintain Germany as a republic, as it is at the present time.

So, I say, the first indication I see that France does not desire peace is this insistent demand for impossible reparations.

Mr. President, saying this, I know full well the need France has for those reparations. I know that the Government of France has indorsed something like a hundred billion francs of indebtedness issued to pay for reparations in the regions of France which need restoration. I know that the French Government has taken that great load upon itself to carry on the restoration in France which she had expected Germany to do. But the fact that she has had to do it instead of getting Germany to do it does not excuse an enlightened government for demanding an impossibility of Germany at this time.

That is not all. The demand of impossible reparations does not strike me as the only evidence that France has not shown any sincere desire for peace with Germany. Let me call the attention of the Senate for the second time to the greatly provocative and disgusting policy of France in maintaining colored soldiers, black troops, along the Rhine, quartered by the thousands in German cities and towns. At the time I spoke on this subject several months ago I did not have before me the language of this book, written by this eminent Italian, and my information concerning the black troops was somewhat limited. Nitti, evidently after an investigation, in referring to the black troops on the Rhine, in several places in his book uses language some of which I will quote at this point. He is citing a number of causes which are leading to the wreck of Europe, and among others he cites this great moral cause:

The moral level of Europe is daily being lowered. The policies pursued toward the conquered have no parallel in modern history. Along the Rhine some of the most progressive cities in the world have been placed under guard of black troops of inferior race, and they are guilty of every form of violence, which they commit not through necessity but with the desire to insult and outrage. The conquered are deprived of their wealth by means of all kinds of parasitism and commissions of control, which in reality often amount to spoliation, and the methods employed bring back to mind the worst phases of the Middle Ages.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator as of what date that statement was made?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This is in the American edition, which appeared in this country in March, 1922. I realize what the Senator probably has in mind—that is, that possibly the black troops have been removed.

Mr. POMERENE. I had in mind that some statement was made on the floor of the Senate to the effect that they had been removed; but I did not remember the date.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The first inquiry I made on the subject was, I think, nearly two years ago, and at that time I was informed that the black troops had been removed, and there have been newspaper statements since the speech I made in the Senate, and even cablegrams from Europe, to the effect that the black troops had been ordered to Asia Minor, which, if they can not be kept in Africa, is probably the best place for them. But I have learned since that time that that has not been carried out, or at least it has not been carried out fully.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment on that subject?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. SPENCER. As a matter of fact, there are black troops on the Rhine to-day, but not of African descent. The Moroccans, the Arabs, are still there in some numbers. The War Department and the State Department both looked into the question of their conduct along the Rhine, to which the Senator so graphically alluded, and the result of the investigations of both the departments was that the conduct of the black troops was quite as good as the conduct of any body of troops assembled together. Originally there were black troops of African descent, but, with the possible exception of purely negligible clearing-up squads, they have all been relieved, and there are none of them there now. The Arabs are there, but so far as their conduct is concerned it is as good as that of other troops. The head of the foreign department of Germany officially declared some months ago that he regretted exceedingly the propaganda with regard to the conduct of the black troops on the borderland, because it was unfair and it was hurting the incoming guests, or visitors, who naturally would want to see that beautiful part of the Rhine. I think that is the situation to-day.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If they have been removed, it has been very recently. I will read something on the subject of the different African troops which have been there; but there really can not be any question as to the outrages that have occurred. They are vouched for by Nitti in this work, and they have been vouched for in so many different records that I can not think that they can be disparaged with any success. The matter has been so serious, as has been described, that a number of the towns along the Rhine have been compelled to levy taxes on their people for the purpose of building public houses of prostitution in order to protect their women folks, and an American who was present in several towns and saw the sights said it was disgusting to see the black troops line up there on pay day in the street in front of those houses waiting for their chance to get in.

Such a condition of things as that is unspeakable, and it is something in which civilized people all over the world are interested. It is a matter in which the United States has an interest, because the United States is in part responsible for the army of occupation being there.

On page 236 Nitti says:

And as the final insult to the conquered in the army of occupation backward races are represented. Thus the most cultured cities in Europe have been and are under negro violence which has been guilty of the most serious crimes. The German population has been subjected unnecessarily and, in order to satisfy the desire to offend, to physical and moral trials unknown for centuries in civilized countries. In April of 1921 there were still on the Rhine 14 or 15 colored regiments, 9 to 10 from Algeria, 2 from Tunis, 3 from Morocco, and 1 from Madagascar. There still remain, after the departure of 2 Senegalese regiments, some negro detachments.

They were taken out at one time, and then they were brought back this year. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] need not shake his head at me. I have had correspondence from reliable people in the occupied zone who have seen the troops there, and I have the impression that one reason why the withdrawal of American troops was delayed was because the American officers notified our Government that their places were being taken by black troops this year.

Mr. SPENCER. May I say to the Senator—

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me finish this quotation and then I will yield to the Senator.

There still remain, after the departure of two Senegalese regiments, some negro detachments. Documents have shown at length what outrages have been perpetrated by the troops of occupation and what crimes the negroes have committed. Henceforth everybody knows that the occupation has no military aim, but (like the confiscation of the Saar coal and the pretext of enormous indemnities and the splitting up of upper Silesia) only one aim is kept in view: Germany must be forced to the point of moral exhaustion and her unity in sentiment, and indeed even her political unity, broken.

I would like M. Clemenceau to justify before the American people in his next speech the putting or keeping of negro troops or the troops of any inferior race as an army of occupation among a white people. It can not be justified. There is no real reason for it, no military reason for it, and the conclusion is almost inevitable that it is done to goad the German people to violence in order to give an excuse for a military occupation of German territory.

I now yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not wish to enter into any controversy with the Senator, and I do not do so. I sympathize very strongly with his views. The presence of negro troops might be and is exceedingly objectionable, but the troops, when they are seen in assembly, are not negro troops. If the troops were quartered in southern cities they would not bear the faintest trace of negro troops. Their complexion is light. Their conduct is very good. Their speech is not at all African. It is the Moroccan or the Arab. They are educated and a higher class of people. Negro troops are not there. I do not mean to say there may not be a squad here clearing up what is left to be done, or a detachment there, but it is negligible. The troops there now are Arabs or Moroccans. They are not the Senegalese. They are not the African troops.

The War Department made an exhaustive study of the matter and reported clearly that wherever there had been an outrage, as there were, and wherever there was conduct that needed to be punished, and there had been, it had been promptly taken up and the offender had been severely punished, and that discipline among these troops measured well as compared with that of any other troops. I merely state that because I know the Senator from Nebraska wants the facts as much as I do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In my former speech on the subject I introduced some statistics which the Senator from Missouri would do well to look up. He made a brief visit to Germany and comes back with a certain impression. It may be that just at the moment there are no negro troops there, but if they are not there it is due to the protest which in this country has been made against them, and it does not do away with the fact that the motive for putting them there has not been explained. Why does a country desiring peace with another country, as Clemenceau says, put such an insult upon her neighbor's people? Why does it incite a violence, as it would by putting these half-civilized troops in a military occupation over white people? Even if they are not there at this moment, that does not do away with the necessity for some explanation to the world as to why they were put there.

Mr. BORAH. I think the Senator has a misunderstanding of what M. Clemenceau means by peace with Germany.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am a little afraid the distinguished statesman from France wants us to maintain an armed peace; that he wants us to help France to dismember Germany. I think that is the present policy. I think that is the intention of the French Government. I hardly think it can be the intention of the French people. There must be somewhere a French statesman who will rise and advocate a more reasonable policy. There must be somewhere in France French statesmen who will realize that Germany can not be destroyed as a great factor in the world without breaking other nations down, too, and France among them. The ruin of continental Europe is coming when Germany goes to smash, and, far away as we are, we in the United States have a direct material interest in that catastrophe, if it ever comes.

But now, Mr. President, just take a very recent act of the French Government as indicating the attitude toward the German people. Does it look as though the Government of France desired real peace with the people of Germany when we take into account the monument which was erected on armistice day on the German border? On this last armistice day on the German border a slab was erected bearing this inscription:

Here on the 11th day of November, 1918, succumbed the criminal pride of the German Empire, vanquished by the free people it sought to enslave.

That flaunting of a spirit of hate in the very face of the German people is not calculated to promote real peace. When two great peoples want to have peace with each other they drop the sentiments of hate. So Argentina and Chile did when after their wars they erected by joint action a monument upon the boundary between them. Did they put up any such slab as this, recalling the hate and vindictiveness of the past? No; they erected a bronze statue of the Christ, symbolical of peace on earth and good will toward men. But how can Clemenceau justify the erection of such a slab as that in the very face of the German people at the national boundary line? So I say that if there is a real desire for peace in France and if France wants the United States to assist in maintaining that peace France and Clemenceau will have to explain why these acts are committed which tend to goad people on to continued hate of each other.

In another part of his speech Clemenceau used this language, which sounds very much more like sanity:

Now, I say that after such a war men can not continue to fight each other; they can not fight forever. There are, after all, two Germanys. There is the Germany which is a democratic Germany, which, I think, could, more easily at least, be called to reason.

Now, Mr. President, that is an indication of the statesmanship of to-day. There are two Germanys. There was the old Germany which is dead; at least it has fallen, and it will remain fallen if the German people are permitted to erect their republic on its ruins and to maintain that republic. But how can the German people maintain that republic shackled and crushed as they are by the present attitude of France toward Germany? How can the republic live in the face of its people when it is compelled to submit to insults, when it is compelled to submit to impossible demands, when it is compelled to see 60,000,000 people, prone and helpless, deprived of a chance even to revive their business and put themselves in a possible position to pay the reparations? The attitude of the French Government is such as to destroy all chance of Germany becoming a permanent republic in the world. There are two Germanys, and if the opportunity is given this Germany will be a republic, as much a republic as France, as much a republic as the United States, but it can not remain a republic, it is bound to be driven into bolshevism or militarism by such policies as are maintained at the present day by the French Government.

In another part of his address M. Clemenceau said that he wants America to resume conversations with Great Britain and France. His language was this:

If America could take upon it some way to renew conversations with England and France, not to give a promise of anything that would engage the future that she had not engaged during the war.

Now, that would be a consummation devoutly to be desired.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the United States should enter into some sort of conversation with the powers of Europe and use her moral force to bring about a real peace and a real rehabilitation, founded upon justice and good will, I think it would be a great duty of the United States to do it. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. There again M. Clemenceau is studiously obscure, apparently. What does he want the United States to do? What is it that the United States can do under the present policies of France? Of course, the only inference which can be drawn is that the United States is to go to France to enforce the present policies of France. There is no intimation and no suggestion in the distinguished visitor's speech that France proposes to modify or change her policy. There is no suggestion that there is anything going to be done upon the part of France in regard to this situation. France has her policy and seems to be determined upon it, settled in regard to it, and what we are invited to do is to go there and to enforce that policy.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I agree with what the Senator from Idaho says in that respect, but I think M. Clemenceau, when he invited counter criticism, possibly had in mind the fact that some criticism might be forthcoming as reasons why the present policy of France could not be approved in the United States. I am seeking to afford some of those reasons.

Right on that point let me say that I can not conceive it possible that the United States would be justified in doing the least thing to uphold France in her present policy until she agrees to disarmament. France in that matter has taken a position which has practically stopped any attempt to disarm the nations of the world. She sent her delegates over here to discuss disarmament at the disarmament conference, which was largely a product, I may say here in passing, of the efforts of the Senator from Idaho, but when her delegates came here, while they grudgingly consented to discuss naval disarmament, they absolutely refused to consider military disarmament, and we now learn through the press that France is not going even to ratify that part of the agreement which provides for naval disarmament. Mr. President, the United States can not afford to give any moral support to a country which persists in pursuing a course of militarism and conquest. At the present time France is maintaining an army of 700,000 men, and possibly more—the largest army ever maintained by any nation in time of peace; larger even than the German Army was when Germany was preparing for war. The British Army has been reduced to something like 200,000 troops; our Army in the United States has been reduced to something like 125,000 troops; Germany has been forced to reduce her army to 100,000 troops.

Mr. President, at this point I wish to call attention to the fact, and I wish to call it to the attention of M. Clemenceau himself, that when the treaty of Versailles was adopted there was inserted in Part V of that treaty the following language:

In order to render possible the initiation of a general limitation of the armaments of all nations, Germany undertakes strictly to observe the military, naval, and air clauses which follow.

That is to say, Germany agreed to disarm to the extent of making her forces 100,000 men, and Germany has done it. She was forced to do it, whether she did it willingly or not; but what has France done to carry out that plan? France was morally bound to agree to observe the terms of Part V of the treaty of Versailles. It was for the purpose of enabling her to disarm that Germany was required to disarm. France, however, has not only failed to disarm, but has increased her military establishment above anything ever before known, and has encouraged Poland to maintain an army of several hundred thousand men, Rumania to maintain an army of 160,000 men, Belgium to maintain an army of 113,000 men, and other nations in proportion, while Germany has reduced her army to 100,000 men and is practically helpless to-day. Hungary has reduced her army to 35,000 men; Austria has reduced her army to 21,000 men, and Bulgaria has reduced her army to 23,000 men. So while that part of the treaty of Versailles has been carried out so far as the defeated nations are concerned, France has utterly refused, and not only refused but has defiantly refused, to do her part toward disarmament. I should like to say to M. Clemenceau that I believe there will be no sentiment in the United States in favor of supporting the French policy until some serious effort shall have been made to carry out the clause of the treaty of Versailles which implied disarmament.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator from Nebraska is a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and I wish to ask him a question for information. We adopted what was known as the four-power treaty some time ago, and the principal plea for its adoption was that it would rid us of the menace of the Anglo-Japanese treaty. Is it not a fact that with the expiration of to-day the Anglo-Japanese treaty again goes into effect for another year, inasmuch as France and Japan have failed to ratify the four-power pact?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am unable to answer the Senator's question. I have not had the matter called to my attention and have not examined it; but I think what he has stated is a very interesting contribution, if he is correct.

Mr. GLASS. My information is that with the expiration of to-day the Anglo-Japanese treaty again goes into effect; so the chief reason presented for the adoption of the four-power pact falls to the ground.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, there is another matter which is not of such direct application, perhaps, but yet I think the people of the United States have been a good deal shocked by the disposition of France to back Turkey in the recent wars she has been conducting and which have resulted in the reestablishment of the Turkish Empire in Europe, to continue, as has been continued in times past, that menace to all the neighboring countries. France for some reason saw fit to adopt that policy toward Turkey; and, while that is not involved in the immediate question of her policy toward Germany, I think it is a deplorable fact which the American people, who sympathize with nations which are oppressed by Turkey, resent.

Mr. President, I think I have said about all I care to say in reference to this matter. I do not feel justified in resenting the presence of M. Clemenceau in this country. From his standpoint, no doubt, he comes entirely justified. He feels that he is here on a worthy errand. He is a very old man and a man who has served his country faithfully. He has a right to come here either as a private citizen or an unofficial representative of his country in order to present to the people of the United States the appeal of France for our sympathy and our support; but I think he ought in his addresses in this country to meet the questions which I have to-day presented: Why does his country pursue these policies which are against the peace of Europe, which are obstacles to the peace of Europe, and which in some respects are almost certain to produce further war and further destruction?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in view of the able presentation of the subject I had in mind by the Senator from Nebraska, it is my purpose to discuss it but for a very few minutes. He has correctly stated that our distinguished guest is a very great figure, one of the three or four dominant figures in the world to-day. His age, his distinguished career, and his conceded great ability entitle anything he may say to most courteous and serious consideration.

I have read his address in New York with some degree of care. I must say that it was a little difficult at first reading to gather his views, and it was not much less difficult upon second reading. But some things seem apparent. One gathers from the address as a whole his view that we abandoned Europe before we could honorably do so; secondly, that by reason of such action upon our part we destroyed the economic life or solidarity of Europe; and third, that the present condition of suffering in Europe is due to our failure to discharge our duty toward Europe.

I read a paragraph or two which seem to justify the construction I have placed upon his address. Before leaving Paris in an interview which he gave to the country he said:

I will not touch specific matters, such as interallied debts, but will keep to the main fact, namely, that America has not stood by her allies in peace as she did in war and that she was wrong in quitting.

In his address in New York night before last he said:

You left after the contract was finished and you said "execute it as you may." * * * And you were wrong in that you left without any proposal whatever. * * * You broke all the organs of economic solidarity. * * * You, indeed, showed a touch of economic imperialism when you left us after the war was over directly. You have the best resources in the world.

That is a feature of his address which should not be overlooked.

In New York last night he spoke again before the chamber of commerce, and in that address repeated—

It was the greatest mistake and the source of all the evil that is taking place now.

That is, the mistake was to leave without any proposal of an adjustment of matters. He says:

I want you to interfere in Europe because you left it too soon. I want you to come back.

So it is quite plain that the first message which he brings to us as a people is as to our act of dishonor in abandoning our allies at a time when we could not properly do so. There is an attempt upon his part then to assess all the suffering and misery now prevailing in Europe to that act of dishonor upon the part of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. How does the Senator construe the statement just read from M. Clemenceau? Does the Senator think that he meant that we should go back to France with our Army?

Mr. BORAH. I am coming to that.

Mr. SMOOT. Or that he desires us to furnish them more money, to be expended in any way they may desire, to carry on their commerce or otherwise? Will the Senator cover that point later?

Mr. BORAH. In that respect M. Clemenceau is a little indefinite; but I take it that his mind is the same as it was when they were asking us to go into the league—that they would settle what we would do after we joined.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, so long as France is spending 5,500,000,000 francs a year on her army, when I read the speech I took it that M. Clemenceau desired that we send over 100,000 men to take the place of some of the soldiers who are now being paid by the French Government and relieve France of that expense.

Mr. BORAH. I presume the Senator has the correct construction. It is a pretty serious charge, Mr. President, for a guest—although we are very glad to have him here—to say to the country which he is visiting that the fearful misery and unspeakable conditions which now obtain in Europe are the direct result of the dishonorable policy of our country, because our action could not be honorable upon the basis on which it is presented to us. We did not leave at a time when we were not permitted to leave, with all due respect to the view of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], and I am perfectly satisfied that the present conditions in Europe do not arise by reason of our act. I think the statement made by M. Clemenceau is as unfounded as it is ungrateful.

The United States went to Europe to participate in a war for which in the first instance the United States was in no sense responsible, a war which grew out of the system and policies which had prevailed in Europe particularly for the last 25 years, a direct result of the policies which obtained there. The war came as a result of those policies, and it progressed to such a point that the American people took part in it. It is pretty well conceded that by reason of their participation they assured victory to the Allies. We sacrificed hundreds and thousands of American soldiers. We contributed a vast amount of money. We were certainly a dominating factor in the determination of the war upon the part of the Allies. We came home without asking reparations, damages, territory, compensation, or anything else of that nature or kind. Having won the victory or made victory possible, having expended vast sums of money and sacrificed thousands of lives, and having left all damages and vast territories to our allies, we are now told we abandoned our allies in dishonorable fashion.

The cause of the disastrous conditions in Europe I will discuss a little later.

The fourth proposition which seems to be clear from M. Clemenceau's speech is that we should now guarantee the boundaries of France; that we should undoubtedly go there with our Army, with our men, with our military force; in other words, that we should give a guaranty, which guaranty would necessarily have to be backed up by military force under the present policies of France.

The fifth proposition which M. Clemenceau submitted to us was that the Monroe doctrine is obsolete; that it was a very good doctrine for the country when it was young, but—to use his expression—the doctrine of a child or the policy of a child is not the correct doctrine or policy for a mature man.

We are advised, therefore, that this policy, which is purely an American policy, distinctly an individual policy, so far as the Nation is concerned, and one which has been very highly prized by the people of the United States, and which, in my judgment, is still a cherished policy, is now obsolete—an interesting suggestion.

The sixth proposition which M. Clemenceau seems to make clear is that we should assist in enforcing the German treaty as it now exists. There is no suggestion upon his part that France is to modify or mollify her views with reference to the German treaty, or modify the treaty, or consent to its modification. There is not the slightest suggestion of any change of policy upon the part of France with reference to any of these matters concerning which we would be expected to take part. In other words, we are expected to go there with money and men to enforce the German treaty; and to enforce that treaty, in my humble opinion—and that opinion is buttressed by the opinions of men very much more able than I to pass upon such a question—would be the utter destruction of Europe. It would lead to economic chaos, to the breakdown of the whole social and economic fabric of Europe. It would result ultimately in the governments taking possession not only of Germany and administering a government over her people as a subject people but of Austria, Hungary, and perhaps other European countries. Unless, as was suggested by the Senator from Nebraska, there should be a complete change of policy—which is not suggested—this could be the only result of our going into Europe. We are invited, therefore, to do that which will not bring peace, not help the suffering masses, but to enforce a treaty which means greater suffering, more misery—an intolerable condition of affairs which language is inadequate to portray.

As I intimated a moment ago, it is not averse to me to have M. Clemenceau visit this country. We recognize in him a most distinguished figure in world affairs; but I do submit that if he is bringing to the American people a message calculated to bring about cooperation between the two powers it would be wise if he would suggest some modification of a policy upon the part of France which is bringing Europe to utter ruin.

Then M. Clemenceau advises us that we are on the verge of another war. I think probably we are. The outlook is rather discouraging. We are on the verge of another war by reason of the same policies which brought on the war in 1914. The same militaristic, imperialistic policies of the dominating powers which brought on the war of 1914 are again breeding war in Europe; and unless those policies are radically changed, in my humble opinion, at no distant day the world, or a large portion of it, will be engaged in another great conflict. Indeed, Mr. President, we have never had peace. War has continued practically from the signing of the armistice until now in some parts of Europe, and in a large portion of Europe; and the conflict has been the result of the policies pursued by the dominant powers, and not by reason of any failure of the United States to remain in Europe.

M. Clemenceau complains that the people of the United States look upon France as a militaristic nation. There is a belief of that kind in this country, and it grows day by day. I do not assume that the French people as a people are militaristic. I do not know whether that is true or not. At least, there are not sufficient facts in my possession to justify me in making any such charge as that. The French people as a people may be free from the militaristic spirit; but there can be little doubt in the mind of anyone that the governing power of France, the official power of France, is militaristic. The evidence of that fact is upon every hand.

Some three years ago the ex-President of the United States, Mr. Wilson, wrote a letter to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], which letter was made public, in which he advised us that the military power, the militaristic forces, had taken control of French affairs and of French policies. That called forth at the time some criticism of the author of the letter here in the Senate Chamber; but he was in a position to know. Undoubtedly he would not have stated what he did without ample facts to justify him, and subsequent events quite well justified the statement which he made at that time. Whatever may have been the sentiment of the French people as a people, the letter stating that the militaristic forces had taken control of the policies of France was well justified. Indeed, Mr. President, in that respect France is not different from other countries. I do not know of any country that has not somewhere in it a very strong militaristic force, a people who believe in a strong military policy. We are not an exception to it in this country. It is certainly true with reference to other great countries which I might mention; but the point that now concerns us is that that influence now controls and dominates the policies of France, and there seems to be no reasonable ground upon which to assume that they will within any reasonable time be without control.

We all recall the first meeting of the League of Nations at Geneva. A resolution was offered to the assembly looking to a program of disarmament. In the first instance the resolution was comparatively mild. It really provided for nothing more than formulating a program of disarmament; but it was objected to, and finally it was modified, and modified again, until, as Lord Cecil said, it was nothing more than a pious expression of the hope that at some time the nations would disarm. But even that resolution, simply indorsing the moral proposition of disarmament and expressing the hope that at some time the nations of the earth could come around to an agreement for disarmament, was voted against by France, and she organized against it a force of some five or six votes. It was in effect stated there at the time that France was not in a position to consider the proposition even as a moral proposition, let alone a binding proposition in the immediate future.

We also remember, as has been said by the Senator from Nebraska, the attitude of France at the peace conference in Washington. When I had the honor to introduce that resolution here in the Senate I left France's name out of the resolution. I did so in the belief that France would not be a willing coadjutor in disarmament. It was perfectly apparent to me, as I stated here upon the floor of the Senate, that France was not in favor of disarmament, or even in favor of any steps being taken in that direction; but it was thought wise elsewhere to include France, and France came. She was the discordant note from the beginning to the end of the disarmament program, in some instances putting almost insurmountable obstacles in the way of any practical results whatever. At least it was known, understood by the world, and practically denied nowhere, that France was against any program of disarmament that amounted to anything; and not only disarmament with reference to those things concerning which she might have claimed in view of her relationship to Germany but concerning those matters which were more immediately related to naval disarmament.

Mr. President, the disarmament treaties were made; and where are they? As I understand, they are resting in the pigeonholes, if not some less desirable place, of the Assembly of France. It is almost a year since they were made. They have been ratified in this country. We were informed that speedy ratification was desired to enable the other countries, knowing our attitude, to follow quickly in our wake. But they have been laid aside, and the latest information is that they are not to be ratified at all. The Assembly of France adjourned last summer, with the treaties still in the committee, and we were advised by the Associated Press that they had not even been considered in the committee. So there is some reason for the American people to feel that possibly France is militaristic. We will be glad to have the distinguished visitor state the exact attitude of France with reference to the question of disarmament, with reference to the treaties which are now pending, and with reference to her position upon the subject generally.

Then, Mr. President, we recall that at the Genoa conference Russia suggested that among the other things to be considered the subject of disarmament be at least discussed to see if we could not arrive at some basis upon which the armaments of Europe could at least be lessened. Russia at that time was reported to have nearly a million men under arms, and Russia suggested that the question of disarmament be taken up. It was said that Russia was acting in bad faith. But who knows? Her bad faith did not have time to exhibit itself, because immediately, and with some degree of asperity upon the part of the representative of France, it was said that that subject would not even be considered, and could not be considered at the Genoa conference.

The Senator from Nebraska has also referred to the attitude of France at this time with reference to Turkey. A business man of this country who was over in that part of the world several months before the situation became so acute, and who had been there for several months, advised me as to what was going to happen, that France was shipping arms in secrecy and under cover of label of other goods to Turkey. He declared that inevitably that kind of encouragement and that program would lead to a condition which would, in his opinion, result in war. Just how near we are to a conflict in that region of the world no one knows, but we all know that it is sufficiently menacing to cause consternation throughout the civilized world.

Here let me pause to say that it is almost capable of mathematical or logical demonstration that the situation in the Near East is due to the policies which have been pursued by France and England in that region of the world. Such policies would inevitably lead to conflict.

M. Clemenceau also feels aggrieved that we think that France is imperialistic. Her conduct in Syria can only be justified upon principles of imperialism, and the most obnoxious and indefensible imperialism. If there was one pledge made in the war that was distinct, clear, beyond all doubt, it was the pledge which was made to the Syrian people that they should have their independence, that they should be a self-governing people after the war. They understood it that way. They fought upon that basis. Their soldiers were willing to suffer and die upon that theory. Both France and England entered into that agreement or understanding.

It was by reason of the violation of that plain agreement with reference to Syria, and the violation of a similar understanding with reference to Mesopotamia upon the part of England, and their conduct in Egypt, that the entire spirit of the Islam world was aroused and they lost their faith in the governments of the white people. If that fanaticism, kindled by religious zeal, added to the belief that they are fighting for their independence, once gets into action in that portion of Europe, we will have a conflict which will be equal to the one through which we have just passed. There are millions and millions of those people who are now aroused over what they deem the injustices to them and the breaking of faith with them during the war.

Those nations now are in Mesopotamia, holding it by force of arms, and in Syria, holding it by force of arms. I have upon my table here the last dispatch from Syria, showing that they are manifesting in most earnest fashion their disapproval of the mandate and their contention for their independence. They are not only holding them in subjection by a military force, but they are exploiting their natural resources, which they have no more right to take from those people than I would have to reach into your pocket and take your means from you. Those natural resources belong to those people; they are associated with their future prosperity and their future welfare; yet, under the color of a mandate and under the color of protection, their natural resources are now being taken from them. That is one of the reasons why this deplorable condition exists in the Near East, concerning which M. Clemenceau feels some concern. These are the policies which we are invited to go to Europe and enforce.

Just a word with reference to the Versailles treaty. The conditions in Europe are indeed indescribable. The sufferings upon that continent are undoubtedly greater than have been endured by any people in the history of the world, not only in Russia but in Germany, Austria, Hungary, and throughout that region generally. The whole social and economic fabrics of Europe are imperiled. What the future has in store is a mere matter of speculation. It seems, however, that unless there is a change of policy that speculation will come suddenly to an actuality.

But why does that situation exist? There has been a practically unanimous judgment in regard to it. There is very little difference of opinion in regard to it among economists, publicists, and leaders who have studied the subject. They agree that the terms of the Versailles treaty are impossible, that they are destructive, and that they lead inevitably to the conclusion made by the Senator from Nebraska, and, as stated in practical effect by Mr. Nitti and other writers, that lying back of the question of reparation, and the terms of the policy, is the desire for the dismemberment of Germany. I can appreciate in some sense why that feeling may be entertained upon the part of the French people; but it must be clear that that can not take place, with the ruin which would follow, without dragging into the general ruin not only France but other countries of Europe and imperil the social fabric of the entire continent. Such a policy is so utterly destructive, so utterly impossible, that to even contemplate its enforcement seems to me almost unthinkable. That is the reason for the conditions which now prevail in Europe.

A great many distinguished Americans of all kinds of thought, all classes, you may say, have visited Europe within the last three years and have studied the situation, and while, of course, I can not be entirely accurate about it, I can not recall now anyone who has studied the conditions in Europe, and undertaken to arrive at a conclusion as to the cause of those conditions, who has not attributed them to the impossible terms of the Versailles treaty. There seems to be practically a unanimous agreement.

One of the latest expressions upon the subject was by a very distinguished banker in New York, who gave an interview after his return some time last August, in which he said:

No more shortsighted and destructive settlement was ever inflicted upon the world, from the point of view alike of friend and foe, than the so-called peace treaties with Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Bulgaria.

Again he said:

I have not met a man of liberal thought in Europe who does not denounce the treaties and look upon them as little short of a calamity.

Yet, so far as we can gather from the speech and the discussions of our visitor, what we are expected to do is to insure the enforcement of those destructive treaties.

Mr. President, it seems quite clear that, so long as they obtain, so long as the Versailles treaty is the fundamental law of Europe, just that long there will be misery, unrest, conflict, and bloodshed; and not only would the United States be justified in refusing to have any part in it, but in my humble opinion it is one of those things so far-reaching and so thoroughly involving the welfare of the whole human family that we are perfectly justified in discussing it in the most candid manner. Especially must such be true in view of our invitation to return to Europe.

It has been said by the Senator from Nebraska that M. Clemenceau is mild compared with the present prime minister of France and other leaders in France. That may be true; but the views of either with reference to the Versailles treaty are so destructive that comparisons are wholly unnecessary. It may be that in some respects they disagree, but they agree upon the Versailles treaty as it is. They agree upon its enforcement. They refused to consider any question of modification, and that means destruction. If Poincaré has something else in his mind, it is wholly immaterial, because the policy upon which the two do agree is quite sufficient for the indictment which may justly be brought against the policy of that country at this time.

I take the time here to read a paragraph from Nitti, ex-premier of Italy:

The purport of France's action in the conference was not to insure safe military guaranties against Germany, but to destroy her; at any rate, to cut her up. And, indeed, when France had got all she wanted and Germany was helpless, she continued the same policy, even intensifying it.

Again he says:

* During the conference France put forward some proposals the aim of which was nothing less than to split up Germany.

I now read a paragraph from Mr. Bernard M. Baruch's volume on the making of the treaty. Mr. Baruch was one of the ablest of the advisers at the Peace Conference. He says:

Americans and others had the charity to remember that the horrors of war were still heavy upon the world. Try as men might, and I submit that they did try, the spirit of vengeance or of selfish advantage could not be entirely eradicated from the minds of the framers of the treaty.

Mr. President, I read these paragraphs not to assess personal blame but to reveal the fact which must be apparent to all—that a treaty made in this spirit and with the views then entertained can not be a sound treaty or a treaty under which peoples may again come to a peaceful understanding. Such a treaty was indeed, as M. Clemenceau declares, but a perpetuation of the war, and it has brought with it all the evils, all the bitterness, all the demoralization of war.

Mr. President, to me the most discouraging feature of the able visitor's speech is the fact that here is one of the great and dominant figures of the world—perhaps there are not over three or four men in the whole civilized world now living who would rank with him in career and in fame, not only before his own people but before the people of the world—who comes to us to visit us four years after the signing of the armistice. He carries no message, when we analyze his speech, except that of punishment, of vengeance, of anticipated war. There is not a note of harmony toward the other powers of Europe, not a suggestion of a constructive policy, not a single ray of promise so far as actual peace and the happiness of the world is concerned.

I utterly disbelieve in his whole theory. I can not accept his outlook. I unhesitatingly reject the proposition that there is no means in this world by which to govern men except that of force.

If the great powers of Europe will write a treaty under which Europe can live, if they will do justice to the subject peoples of Europe, if they will abandon the principle of imperialism, if they will announce instead of a policy of force that of justice toward other peoples, if they will adopt the policy which looks to peace and not to war, which looks to reconstruction and not destruction, which looks to upbuilding and not dismemberment, and bring their program to the American people, they will find as sympathetic a chord here as they will find anywhere in the world.

We will not be misled, Mr. President, however, with the talk about peace to overlooking the underlying principles upon which the whole policy of Europe is based. It is precisely the same policy against which the delegates to Paris had to contend at the Peace Conference after the close of the war. There was carried to the Peace Conference an American policy, a policy based something upon justice and equity to the different nations of the world, something of amity, something of reconstruction. Every single principle that was carried to that conference by the American delegates was rejected, so far as the treaty proper is concerned. Not a single one of the policies was incorporated in the treaty. The same policies prevail now. We are invited back, not to a new Europe, not to a Europe looking to reconstruction. We are invited back to the old Europe with its secret treaties, its secret diplomacy, its militarism, its imperialism, and it is that policy which the American people are asked to furnish their money, their means, and their men to enforce. M. Clemenceau could have carried a message to the American people which they would have been delighted to hear, but he has brought the old policy. Humble as I am in these affairs, and as little as I have to say about them, I venture to declare that the American people will reject it. They will separate the policy from the man, and while giving the man a royal welcome they will with magnificent unanimity reject the policy.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, when this discussion was begun by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] I had not expected to say a word upon the subject, but I was led to think, while the discussion was going on, how easy it sometimes is for us to forget and how differently we feel at a distance of 3,000 miles from the cause of any friction between Germany and France than if we lived just across the river from an enemy country.

I very well recall the ardor with which after a long time we engaged in the war for the protection not only of our own rights but for liberty and humanity throughout the whole world. But before we got into the war France had been fighting our battles for us and for the rest of the civilized world as well.

I remember, Mr. President, seeing a cartoon of McCutcheon's in the Chicago Tribune at or about the time of the signing of the armistice. There were two pictures in the one cartoon. One represented what the Belgian soldier was going home to, while the other represented what the German soldier was going home to. The Belgian soldier found his cottage a mass of ruins. There was just one wall and a part of the chimney left standing. He had been looking among the debris, and there he found, as the only sad reminder of his family and his home, a child's doll upon which he seemed to be gazing with a sorrow unutterable. The picture would apply to the French as well as the Belgian soldier. Then there was the other picture of what the German soldier was going home to. It was a picture of a soldier clad in splendid uniform, with knapsack on his back, his rifle on his shoulder, and he was approaching a fine cottage all intact, with trees and flowers and a neat fence around it, and a wife and 3 or 4 apparently happy children rushing out to greet him. That was the picture of the German soldier and his home. I hope in the discussion of this question now or hereafter that we may for a little while anyhow put ourselves in the other fellow's place.

I remember, too, some of the statements of M. Briand at the Conference on the Limitation of Armaments. He contended against a reduction of land armament and forces—and why? He told us why. It was because Germany had not yet morally disarmed and that she had facilities through her military system that had been in vogue for many years prior to the armistice; she had facilities through the general officers of the army; she had the means and facilities through quasi military organizations all through Germany to mobilize a great army in a comparatively short time; and that as long as she was not morally disarmed there was yet danger of a war of aggression against France. For that reason M. Briand protested eloquently against the further reduction of their land military forces, agreeing, as they did at that time, to naval disarmament.

Now, Mr. President, I do not believe the speech of M. Clemenceau bears the interpretation put upon it by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] or the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. I think, in the first instance, M. Clemenceau wanted to know that America, true to her traditions and true to what she had done in the past, was still her friend as she was when France stood as the great bulwark of liberty in Europe. Here is what he said, expressing the same thought that M. Briand did in his memorable speech to the Conference on the Limitation of Armament:

Do you know that they are manufacturing cannon by the hundreds; that they are making machinery everywhere?

Now, just a word here with reference to the present financial or economic condition of Germany—the reference to the making of machinery reminds me of it. Is it as bad, notwithstanding the tremendous depreciation of the German mark, as has been depicted from time to time here in the Senate? I doubt it very much. We read in the papers that Germany is not suffering from the lack of employment of her citizens, but that everybody in Germany is at work, a condition quite different from ours just a few months ago and a condition quite different from that in Great Britain at the present day, where there are thousands, if not millions, of unemployed. If they are at work they must be producing something, and if they are producing something they must be able to find in the markets of the world a market for the surplus products which they do produce.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator upon that point?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator may be able to state how much Germany has made out of Americans on the sale of her marks in this country. The statement has been made that in the sale of her marks in this country she has been paid in gold by Americans more money than the entire amount of her payments or installments on her reparations would come to at this time.

Mr. STERLING. I do not know as to the figures in regard to that, but I am obliged to the Senator for the suggestion.

M. Clemenceau further said:

The German taxpayer pays, I think, $13—

I suppose he means the average per capita—let's say $14, the French $43. There is a line in the treaty that says Germany will have to pay as high as the Allies and all the rest. And what are they preparing?

Further he said:

Now, I say, that after such a war men can not continue to fight each other; they can not fight forever. There are, after all, two Germanys. There is the Germany which is a democratic Germany, which I think could, more easily at least, be called to reason, while the others who love war have learned nothing and are preparing a revolution or civil war against their brothers just to begin the action against the European powers.

So, Senators, it is not against the German people that Clemenceau declaims. His dread is the militaristic forces in Germany that are even to-day seeking control of German affairs for the purpose of overthrowing the Republic and setting up an autocratic rule there. They little care if they bring about a civil war in Germany or precipitate a war in Europe to accomplish their purpose. Clemenceau says they are manufacturing cannon by the hundreds now.

It is rather to disabuse the mind of the idea that France is now seeking that we send an armed force to France to help defend her frontiers against German aggression that I call attention to another statement that Clemenceau makes. I do not think there is anything in the speech of Clemenceau that hints at such a thing.

Mr. BORAH. What does the Senator understand that Clemenceau means by guaranties?

Mr. STERLING. Not by an armed force. He perhaps would like to have a treaty such as was formulated and presented here to the Senate at one time between Great Britain, France, and the United States, in order that we might help guarantee France against aggression by Germany.

Mr. BORAH. That was clearly understood to be a treaty which was backed up by military force.

Mr. STERLING. Oh, in the end, of course it was.

Mr. BORAH. It is the end we are thinking about.

Mr. STERLING. But the Senator from Idaho, I think, as well as the Senator from Nebraska, sought to leave the impression that they wanted an armed force now and that that was the kind of guaranty we ought to give.

Mr. BORAH. What does Clemenceau want? He wants a treaty which is backed up by military force to enforce the German treaty. How are we going to do it?

Mr. STERLING. If necessary, we always back up treaties by military force, and if we should make a guaranty here we would be prepared to back it up by military force.

Mr. BORAH. Then, do I understand the Senator is in favor of a treaty to be backed up by military force?

Mr. STERLING. I am not declaring now that I am in favor of such a treaty.

Mr. BORAH. No; but what is the Senator's view in favor of such a treaty?

Mr. STERLING. I am not saying but that America might be justified in taking the part of France against aggressions by Germany.

Mr. BORAH. Is the Senator in favor of a treaty guaranteeing the territorial integrity of France?

Mr. STERLING. No; I am not in favor of such a treaty at the present time.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like to inquire of the Senator from South Dakota if he accepts the statement of M. Clemenceau to the effect that Germany is manufacturing cannon by the hundreds?

Mr. STERLING. I am not saying that I accept that statement in its completeness, but I say it corroborates the declaration made by M. Briand at the Conference for the Limitation of Armament.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I observe that M. Clemenceau makes the statement; but it will be borne in mind that under the Versailles treaty a commission was appointed by the Allies, which was authorized to have inspectors in Germany, to make reports constantly to their respective governments concerning whether Germany does or does not comply with the treaty.

The last official information we had upon the subject from the War Department, which was submitted here in the Senate about a year ago, was to the effect that Germany was complying with the provisions of the treaty in respect to disarmament and the manufacture of further arms. Has the Senator from South Dakota any information at all to support the statement of M. Clemenceau?

Mr. STERLING. I have not any information on the subject; I have not examined the question. I remember, however, the provisions of the treaty to which the Senator from Montana calls attention. All I wish to say is that M. Clemenceau makes the statement, and I believe that he believed it when he made it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; but has the official inspector of any allied government made such a statement?

Mr. STERLING. Not that I know of, I will say to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. BORAH. In addition to that, Mr. Lloyd-George stated in the House of Commons, after his return from Genoa, that Germany had disarmed in accordance with the treaty.

Mr. STERLING. Further, M. Clemenceau says:

Now we are in the greatest crisis, and nobody knows when it may end. Nobody knows whether European miseries will not have some effect upon American prosperity. You announced to the world that you would set them free. You proclaimed it in the peace treaty. Then I turned to you and I told you this: Why did you make the war? Was it because you thought that you would be threatened? Was it to aid others? Was it for the liberation of suffering countries and make, as President Wilson said, democracy safe, or something like that?

And here is interjected—

[Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BORAH. Why does the Senator from South Dakota suppose that the audience laughed at that question.

Mr. STERLING. I know just as well as the Senator from Idaho knows why they laughed.

Mr. BORAH. They laughed because the gentleman who was speaking there was not in favor of democracy.

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no; I do not have that idea at all. I think they had an idea that the Versailles treaty had been a failure and that the ideals set up by the former President of the United States were not and could not have been realized. That is why they laughed, and not at all because Clemenceau was not in favor of democracy. M. Clemenceau continued:

Tell me which of these points you have gained by this war. You have come to the last point where you are granted by good fortune the time to think. Now, have you made up your minds?

Here is what I wish to call especial attention to. These are the very last words of his speech. M. Clemenceau says:

No sacrifice is demanded or exacted from you except to assert that you want to keep among the people of this world the great place that you have twice taken.

That is all, I do not believe that M. Clemenceau came here with the intention of stirring up a military spirit, Mr. President, but he wishes to be assured of the friendship of America; to be assured that for a like cause as that for which we fought before, or a cause akin to it, we shall be ready to fight again for the protection not only of our own rights but for liberty and humanity throughout the world. Those were the inspiring causes for our zeal and our ardor in taking part in the great World War.

Mr. President, I find here in the very same edition of the New York Times in which I find the speech from which I have quoted, and from which other Senators have quoted, an editorial which I believe gives a better estimate of M. Clemenceau and his relation to France and to this country, and also of the attitude of France toward this country, than has been given by the Senators who have spoken. I conclude by asking that this editorial may be read at the Secretary's desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

[Editorial from the New York Times of Wednesday, November 22, 1922.]

CLEMENCEAU'S PILGRIMAGE.

It was said of Alexander Hamilton by Talleyrand that he had "divined" Europe without seeing it. Georges Clemenceau has both seen America and lived in it; was in touch during the war with the flower of our youth and with our statesmen; so that he ought to be able to know us better than any living Frenchman. And he has already made it clear that in many ways he has accurately divined the United States. He must have foreseen the immense and overflowing personal tribute which would be paid him here. That, however, he puts aside as a mere incident of his visit. He could not have been in doubt that there would be a great emotional response by America to his splendid gesture of friendship. He understood Americans well enough to know that they would rise to greet a pilgrim who in his valiant old age came here to fling himself upon their affection and confidence. In all these respects his brightest anticipations must already have been far outstripped.

The great question was whether M. Clemenceau divined what Americans wanted to hear from him about his beloved France and her relations to this country. Here again his knowledge, his sagacity, his intuitions of the heart have been a sure guide to him. He came in no official character. He brought with him no thought of instructing America in her duty. His sole and sufficient mission was to stand up as a gallant and indomitable figure seeking truly to interpret to America the thoughts and feelings of his own people. If he could but communicate to us the emotions which filled his own breast, he felt sure that appropriate action could be left for Americans to decide upon for themselves.

In his first approaches to his self-appointed task in this country, M. Clemenceau has been most successful. Saying nothing of the overpowering ovation which he has received personally, and which he plainly regards as only secondary to his main object, his utterances have had in them a note of sincerity, of downright conviction, and of touching appeal—all quite irresistible. It is already certain that his visit will be an undoubted triumph. His alert wit, his unquenchable optimism, his confidence in American friendship, his undying devotion to the France for which he has lived and suffered and fought, make up a combination fitted to carry everything before it. At least in the person of Georges Clemenceau America is willing to pledge anew the sacred union of the years of war in and for France.

TRANSPORTATION RATES ON FARM PRODUCTS.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I wish to discuss briefly the question of transportation rates as they affect the producers of the West. I have here a letter from the chairman of the Public Utilities Commission of Kansas, setting forth in an interesting and illuminating manner the rather discouraging situation which now confronts the farmers and stockmen of Kansas, and giving in some detail facts as to transportation rates, showing beyond any question that they are out of line with the prices which the farmers are receiving at this time. I ask consent that the letter referred to, which is a very strong appeal for relief from the present distressing situation, be incorporated in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

STATE OF KANSAS,
PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION,
Topeka, September 9, 1922.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: I know the attention that you have given to and your familiarity with the transportation question and your appreciation of the very great burden that the present level of rates lays upon industry. Beyond its weight upon the general public, the burden bears with peculiar force upon the agricultural industry and upon the people of the agricultural States. The products of the farm are bulky. The granary of the continent lies in the heart of the Nation requiring transportation of its foodstuffs long distances to the consuming markets.

Comment amounting to volumes has been made upon the effect of the present rates upon practically every line of business. These phases have been discussed in the public press, from the platform, in business meetings, before committees of Congress, and before the regulatory commissions to an extent that seems to make it unnecessary to add anything upon that phase of the subject here. It does seem imperative, however, to invite your attention to the general situation and the burden that the present high level of transportation rates has laid upon the country as a whole.

The increases in rates were made in 1918 and in 1920. Some adjustments have been made in the last year, but the general aspect has not changed. A brief statement of the general situation may be illuminative and interesting. All of the figures quoted here, after regarding railroad revenues and expenses, are taken from reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission and from the Bureau of Railway Economics.

The total revenues of the large railroads—that is, those having gross operating revenues amounting to $1,000,000 per annum—beginning in 1913 are as follows:

	1913	1914	1915	1916	1917	1918	1919	1920	1921
	$3,125,135,798	3,047,019,908	2,956,193,202	3,472,641,941	4,050,463,579	4,926,594,000	5,184,230,000	6,225,417,245	5,563,232,215

On the basis of current business, the 1922 revenues will not vary substantially from the figures for 1921.

In the eight years since 1913 the transportation cost to the country of handling freight, passenger, mail, and express has increased over $2,400,000,000. If this reflected a conspicuous increase in the amount of service rendered it would be justified. If, on the other hand, it represents an increase in cost for substantially the same service, then it is, indeed, a condition that calls for the most careful thought of the Nation. That consideration may be given to this phase of the question, there is shown for your information the amount of freight business transacted during these years reduced to terms of tons carried 1 mile. In other words, ton-miles moved. Side by side with the statement of tons carried 1 mile is shown the gross freight revenue.

	Revenue tons carried 1 mile.	Gross freight revenue.
1913	301,398,752,108	$2,198,930,565
1914	288,319,890,210	2,114,697,629
1915	276,830,302,723	2,037,925,560
1916	343,099,937,805	2,469,026,921
1917	394,465,400,493	2,834,119,707
1918	405,379,284,206	3,458,191,000
1919	364,025,244,000	3,556,734,000
1920	409,994,739,000	4,323,650,977
1921	306,755,332,000	3,918,699,970

From the above table it will be seen that where the ton-miles of revenue freight moved increased 1.8 per cent, the cost to the public of moving this volume of business increased 78.5 per cent.

These figures should convey some conception of the tremendous burden which business, and particularly the agricultural industry of the Nation, is carrying. Emphasizing the situation as to the freight business the following figures will illustrate the present burden laid upon the traveling public by the tremendous increase in the unit cost of passenger transportation.

From 1913 to 1921, inclusive, the passenger business of the country, reduced to terms of passengers carried 1 mile and the total amount collected for the service, is expressed below:

	Passengers carried 1 mile.	Gross passenger revenue.
1913	34,575,872,980	$695,987,817
1914	35,258,497,509	700,403,353
1915	32,384,247,563	646,475,045
1916	34,213,596,127	689,626,943
1917	39,476,858,549	827,216,574
1918	42,676,579,199	1,032,671,000
1919	46,192,112,000	1,178,120,000
1920	46,847,534,000	1,287,423,443
1921	37,329,114,000	1,153,752,002

Corresponding to the relation between the increase in freight revenues and freight traffic it will be seen that while the passenger traffic of the country was increasing 8 per cent, the passenger traffic cost to the traveling public increased 65.8 per cent.

One effect of this great increase in railroad transportation costs, both of passenger and freight traffic, has been to drive the short-haul traffic to the highways of the country through the use of motor vehicles. There has been a tendency in recent years to increase railroad freight rates for short hauls even beyond the proportion in which rates have been increased generally. The effect of this is reflected in the extended and expanding use of motor trucks for freight and passenger-carrying purposes. That motor trucks are an important factor to be considered in future transportation is beyond doubt, but it is my belief that excessive railroad rates for short hauls is accelerating the rate at which traffic is moving by that method.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics of the United States Department of Labor showed the value of index commodities for 1921 as follows, 1913 being used as the equivalent of 100 per cent (as I have done in the calculation of transportation costs):

Farm products	120
Food, etc.	143
Cloths and clothing	183
Fuel and lighting	190
Metals and metal products	131
Building materials	196
Chemicals and drugs	168
House furnishings	238
Miscellaneous	158
All commodities	153

It will be seen that with all commodities at 153, and with heavy commodities like farm products, food, metal and metal products, considerably lower than that figure, that the transportation cost increases are entirely out of proportion. It must be further considered that these high transportation costs are a factor in the cost base of these index commodities.

In order to bring this illustration down to date and to give you a complete idea of the situation in which the grain farmers of the Nation, and particularly those of the Central West, find themselves, I am quoting here the average price of the three principal grains on the Kansas City and Chicago markets as of September 2, 1913, 1921, and 1922.

	1913	1921	1922	Per cent 1922 price is of—
				1913	1921
KANSAS CITY.
Wheat:
September.....	81½	116	93½	114.3	83.9
December.....	86	119½	94	109.3	78.8
May.....	91½	123½	98½	108.1	80.1
Corn:
September.....	74½	43½	52½	69.8	108.6
December.....	72	46½	50½	69.8	108.9
May.....	74	51½	54½	73.3	106.1
Oats:
September.....	41½	32	31½	75.8	97.7
December.....	44½	36½	33½	74.7	92.7
CHICAGO.
Wheat:
September.....	86½	126½	99	114.1	78.4
December.....	90½	128½	101½	112.0	78.7
May.....	95½	132½	106½	111.8	80.4
Corn:
September.....	74½	54½	59½	80.6	109.6
December.....	79½	54½	55½	70.0	102.3
May.....	72	58½	59½	82.1	100.4
Oats:
September.....	41½	35½	32½	78.9	92.2
December.....	44½	38½	34	76.2	88.3
May.....	47½	42½	37½	78.1	88.5

Economic conditions are one factor in making freight rates. In other words, the value of the commodity transported is an element in determining the value of the transportation.

From preceding tables it will be observed the prices of wheat at the principal markets of Kansas City and Chicago is much below the price a year ago, although above the price of 1913. On the other hand, while the price of corn has improved slightly as against a year ago when it was abnormally low, it is materially below the price of 1913. The price of oats at both markets is below both the 1913 prices and the prices a year ago.

Industry of every character in which transportation costs are an important factor is staggering under a tremendous load. This applies with particular force in the agricultural industry. It is imperative that relief should be given to farmers from excessive freight costs.

Very truly yours,

C. M. REED.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, week after week during the present autumn the railroads of the United States have done, and still are doing, the greatest business in their history. They are doing it at an increase of 78½ per cent per ton-mile for freight, and of nearly 66 per cent per mile for passengers. During the earlier part of the year, we have it on the word of the Interstate Commerce Commission, that despite the handicap of two great strikes, the railroads have made a better financial showing for the first eight months of 1922 than for the same months of 1921.

For the moment, Mr. President, I ask you to compare these and other reports of business revival with the reported loss this season of more than half this country's fruit crop, because it cost the growers more money to ship their fruit than to let it rot. While thousands of bushels of good peaches were rotting, what housewives call "butter peaches" were selling at $2.65 a bushel in our towns and cities.

Since then it has been the grain belt's turn to suffer, and now both the grain grower and the stockmen are catching it. Much lower prices this crop year, three years of losses, and the higher-than-war rail rates are consuming our farmers.

It is strictly true to say that for the last two years and four months rail rates on farm stuffs have been more than the traffic could bear, or should have borne, and this was never more true than at this moment. Our farmers are actually paying out money for the privilege of growing wheat and that in a time of world need of wheat. For example, when wheat was at the $2 level a rate of 21 cents, say, on a bushel was only 10 per cent. But now with $1 wheat that same rate absorbs 20 per cent of the sale price. This is excessive; far too excessive. Farmers can not market wheat on the margin existing freight rates require.

The grower has no voice in the terminal market for wheat, which is 50 per cent and more below the war level. At the same time the cost of producing wheat is not more than 25 per cent under the war-time figure. In 1912 and 1913, before the war, country elevators averaged 5 cents a bushel margin. That was increased until in 1921 it reached 13 cents a bushel. Add to the high railroad rates high elevator charges and low terminal markets and the burden becomes destructive.

It is a most ruinous and short-sighted policy, for in the end the railroads and the eastern manufacturer and the public are all going to suffer for every dollar of loss inflicted on the farmer. That is the inescapable economic result. I argue not that the railroads can not afford to make substantial reduction in rates but that they can not afford not to make such reductions, and speedily.

Mr. President, throughout the Nation good news is crowding the bad. Despite strikes, despite that farmers are further being crucified between still lower prices for everything they sell—lower in some instances than pre-war prices—and higher prices for everything they must buy; despite the terrible injustice of these adverse and long-continued economic conditions from which our farmers suffer; despite the now unconscionable, indefensible, and exorbitant freight rates; despite all these things we seem to be promised an early period of recuperation, to be followed, if attained, by saner price adjustments, and at last genuine good times.

Will this come to pass? I think anyone may find the true answer, Mr. President, in a brief study of the facts.

Transportation is the barometer of commerce. Although the time for the seasonal decline to set in for railroad traffic is mid-October, more widespread stimulation of business is reported this autumn by the car service division of the American Railway Association than in 1920, the peak year for railway traffic.

During the week ending October 1 the roads loaded 1,003,759 cars with revenue-producing freight, or only 1½ per cent less than the greatest week's business they have ever done.

For the week ending October 28, 1,014,480 cars were loaded with revenue freight, an increase of 10,721 cars over the week of October 21 which preceded it, and the largest number loaded during any one week in the history of American railroads except the week of October 15, 1920, which exceeded this total by only two-fifths of 1 per cent.

A new record, however, was established. In the number of cars loaded with merchandise and miscellaneous freight, including manufactured products, the week ending October 28 of this year surpassed any other week in our railway history. Not simply that; this was the fifth week in almost five successive weeks this year that a new traffic record for this class of commodities was made. We again are witnesses, Mr. President, of the titanic struggle of our domestic commerce to come back and stay on its feet.

The Railway Age says we would break the railroads by reducing rates. It also is said in the same quarter that a reduction in rates would cripple the roads. I do not think so.

For more than a year, Mr. President, the roads have been doing a paying business in the face of two great strikes. Not a few are earning much more than their dividend requirements. According to the Dow Jones financial agency, first-class Wall Street authority, 13 great railway systems will increase their dividend rates during the next few months; one of them, the Chicago & North Western, to 8 per cent.

This year the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway is earning about 25 per cent on its preferred stock and 13 per cent on its common. Its surplus has increased from $35,000,000 to $105,000,000 during the last seven years. Last year, not so good a year for the railroads as this one, the operating expenses of the Santa Fe absorbed $80,000,000 of its earnings, it put $84,000,000 into improvements, and added $20,000,000 to its surplus.

This year the Union Pacific is earning 15 per cent and has a very large surplus, about $200,000,000.

This year the Burlington is paying its stockholders a 20 per cent dividend.

This year the Louisville & Nashville contemplates a 50 per cent stock dividend, and the Reading and the New York, Chicago & St. Louis are likely to declare extra dividends or special distributions.

Still later calculations this year, based on nine months of railroad earnings, and they are highly conservative calculations, indicate that the Great Northern will earn 6 per cent for its stockholders; the Pere Marquette, 8.4 per cent; the Chesapeake & Ohio and Southern Pacific, each, 10 per cent; the Illinois Central, 14 per cent. Stock in Reading has advanced to a new high mark for the year. Central of New Jersey expects to make an extra dividend or distribution. Pennsylvania increases its dividend from 4 to 6 per cent. Norfolk & Western declares an extra dividend at the rate of 4 per cent a year in addition to its regular 7 per cent a year dividend.

The Southern Pacific earned 9 per cent last year and will do still better this year. After paying its usual dividend of 20 per cent, the Lackawanna in 1921 paid a stock dividend of 100 per cent, and is now on a 12 per cent basis. The Lehigh Valley is paying 7 per cent dividends, and earning a good deal more.

The opinion held by the Railway Age is not shared by the stock market nor the "ticker" news. The discussion in regard to lower rail rates has been going on for more than a year, and some reductions have been made; yet in Wall Street railroad stocks have risen something like 50 per cent within 12 months. If you wish to own any Union Pacific stock you must pay a premium of from $40 to $50 a share to get it. In the same way, to own a share of Santa Fe stock will cost you anywhere from par to $106, and it is cheap at that. Shares in many other railroad stocks stand well up in the 90's.

These are signs, I take it, that these roads are not suffering from lack of business nor from lack of profits. We know that the valuation on which transportation charges are based is liberal. The former chief cost accountant of the United States Railroad Administration estimates that the value of all railroad property in the Interstate Commerce Commission's valuation report will not exceed $16,000,000,000. The present rail rates are based on a property investment of $18,900,000,000, or nearly $3,000,000,000 more.

During all this time of railway rehabilitation we have had the prolonged and critical slump in farm prices, while the prices of manufactured goods in a great many instances have remained close to war levels. The great spread between these two classes of products, both absolutely essential to the well-being of the people, is virtually no better adjusted than it was when we set out by the deflation policy to divide everything by 2 and make that division fair and equal.

One great reason why we are not now, two years later, on a more uniformly adjusted basis as to prices and values must be apparent. We can not have a genuine readjustment of prices and values when the cost of transportation and distribution is excessively high and the rating of all other things is at comparatively lower levels.

To paraphrase a historic saying, the way to readjustment is to readjust. The next great step in the process will have to be some substantial reduction of the higher-than-war rail rates.

Preceding and during this year or more of railway prosperity the public for nearly two years and a half has paid and still is paying a bonus of a billion dollars a year to the railroads in increased transportation charges, when for months neither the farmer nor general business in many localities has been making expenses, to say nothing of making profits.

Mr. President, I am the last man to wish to injure the railroads or to lessen their efficiency; but I see, as they do not seem to see, that we can have no economic balance, no actual readjustment, no true settling of business conditions while freight rates remain at the present peak and while farmers, who must pay freight both ways, continue to produce at a loss. Many of our farmers are being bankrupted by having to sell their products at virtually pre-war prices, then having to pay freight on them from 50 to 80 per cent higher than pre-war rates.

In other words, I contend that excessive and prohibitive freight rates will in the end more certainly prove disastrous to the railroads than certain immediate and safe reductions in rates which should be made.

Unless we are to change the whole industrial map of the United States, besides bringing ruin to many persons, my opinion is not that the railroads can not afford to make a reduction in rates but that they can not afford not to make reductions immediately.

It is an appalling but true statement that in an average good crop year, such as this has been, our farmers can not make ends meet; and I think we do not have to be told that a prosperity which does not reach the grass roots can not last. It can only be, and will be, short lived. Unless we can and will do something to put this country's biggest buyer and greatest wealth creator on its feet this new prosperity will prove as false and as delusive as "fox fire."

Except cotton, virtually all the great farm staples are not only still at uninflated prices but are deflated to points below cost of production. Corn is grown on nearly 5,000,000 of our six and one-half million farms. In many districts 80 per cent of the farmers grow wheat. Wheat is exceeded in acreage only by hay and corn. They supply "currency" to farmers. When the farmer takes his corn, wheat, hay, oats, or rye dollar to market he finds it worth about 60 cents, and, worse, competing with the middleman's and the manufacturer's 100 per cent dollar which is trying to be a superdollar. On top of this, the present rail rates on grain, grain products, hay, straw, and live stock are out of all reason.

Farmers who have survived the crushingly calamitous years of 1920 and 1921 are now entering on a third crop year of low prices, lower than the lowest, which, if amelioration is not speedily found, will put a decisive veto to any part of good times.

Wheat has always been considered by economists the regulator of prices. To-day it is probably the cheapest product in the United States—the one great world staple product which is still below the pre-war price. At the present buying power of the dollar, our farmers are only realizing between 55 and 60 cents a bushel actual money for this "price-regulating" food product. Europe will do little wheat buying, as a rule, until it is satisfied that the gamblers in the American wheat pit have "beared" the market down to the last notch.

So our farmers are double-crossed, first, by the lower values for what they have to sell and to ship; second, by the higher prices they must pay for everything they would buy. The farmer, hardest hit by deflation, working for less wages than anyone else, and getting the lowest returns, has steadily gone on producing, although he had far more excuse to strike than anybody ever had.

Secretary Wallace, of the Department of Agriculture, shows that the purchasing power of the farmer's products this year is from 25 to 45 per cent less than in 1913. That is an enormous difference. Add to this freight charges from 50 to 80 per cent higher than pre-war rates on his products, and you will have some conception of the farmer's present plight. It is appalling.

The farmer is about the only man in these United States who can not buy as much or more with his products in 1921 as he could nine years ago.

Although our farmers have had a good average crop year in 1922, they are unable to market their products for enough to maintain themselves. Many tell me of unpaid taxes on farm land. Some must see their farms sold for taxes. Many young farmers are tax-broke, and are being compelled to abandon their farms to seek work in the cities.

According to the census report, farm mortgages increased 132 per cent between 1910 and 1920; but since 1920 farmers' debts have increased tremendously, faster than ever before. The exceptions are those farmers who have abandoned their farms to their creditors to prevent increasing their debts far beyond the deflated value of their holdings.

Mr. President, the American farmer, the gamest fighter we have against adverse conditions, has almost reached his economic last ditch. He has fought a long-continued endurance contest that has been more drastic than any other economic crisis in our history.

This is true, notwithstanding the solid work this Congress has done and that Congress has yet to do to rehabilitate the farming industry; to organize it and put it on a fair basis with all other industries; to give it an entire new suit of credit and marketing clothes that shall be roomy enough and long enough to provide for its growth and to cover its nakedness.

The benefits to come from this legislation lie in the future. What the farmer needs now to help him survive, to help him pull himself out of the hole, is a material present benefit, such as a substantial reduction in freight rates would be. No one else is so terribly hampered by excessive freight charges as he. This is particularly true of the western farmer and stockman, far removed from the big markets. The rates now in force are in many cases almost prohibitive. Every bushel of Kansas wheat, for instance, shipped to Chicago this year is sold at an actual loss to the man who produced it. These high rail rates have hit all these men doubly hard, because the farmer gets the freight added to everything he buys and pays the freight on everything he sells.

Mr. President, better times can be made to reach the farm if only we will promptly extend a little practical, righteous help in season; if we will take the higher-than-war rates off of freight charges and come down to just plain war rates. If we do not do this, let me ask, what eventually will it profit the railways in dividends if we put the farmer completely, or almost completely, out of business?

It is true that in recent weeks the prices of farm products have turned to the upgrade and are more favorable than the figures given by Chairman Reed in this letter; but many of our farmers are still worse off financially than they were at the lowest ebb of the deflation period. The greatest thing that the Senate can do at this critical moment to assist them would be to take a stand for a prompt reduction in our still higher-than-war-time freight rates. For the roads it would be like casting bread upon the waters to share their growing abundance with their hard-driven best customer by lowering freight rates on his products. Throughout the Nation a prosperity based on a just level of transportation rates would be freely, immediately, and continually shared with the railroads.

If we are to save the situation—and this is no special plea; it vitally concerns the general welfare—let me say to you most solemnly and earnestly that the railroads must voluntarily and at once make further rate reductions; or, in default of such action, that the Interstate Commerce Commission must with utmost promptness put such rates into effect.

Mr. President, I hope to see the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate report favorably at an early date on my bill repealing section 15a of the transportation act—the rate-making clause. As it now stands, section 15a is fundamentally uneconomic and unsound. The first point of objection to the law felt by the western public concerns its requirement that the commission be required to make rates by groups which will give satisfactory earnings to all railroads in a given territory, whether these roads are badly located and badly equipped or whether they are properly located and kept in condition.

A second point is that the fair-return principles of the transportation act themselves should be modified to remove the influence on the Interstate Commerce Commission which now is holding back proper rate adjustments.

The clauses of the transportation act which provide for the return to the Government of these surplus earnings is nonenforceable as the law stands.

The passage of the bill now before the Senate committee will give the State railroad commissions more control over intrastate rates, which they should have. It would terminate many of the excessive charges by removing the so-called guaranty section of the Cummins-Esch Act, and so make possible the return of good times and a genuine revival of business in the only way in which they can come to stay. Those who are particularly interested in putting the farmer on his feet should at this session urge the passage of this bill or a similar measure repealing this and other objectionable provisions of the Cummins-Esch Act. Sooner or later, Mr. President, this must be done. Far better do it sooner, and so bring to an end the ruinous endurance contest which has brought our greatest prosperity maker—the farm—to the verge of ruin.

LIBERIAN LOAN.

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 270) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States for the Government of Liberia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I think I ought to say, in regard to the amendment, that it was offered at the last session of Congress, and I suggested to the Senator at the time that he withdraw it, and that it should properly go on an appropriation bill. Afterwards an item similar to the one offered by the Senator was recommended by the Interstate Commerce Commission, approved by the Bureau of the Budget, placed on the last deficiency appropriation bill by the Committee on Appropriations, and voted on by the Senate. When it went to conference, however, the House conferees refused to agree to the amendment, and it was eliminated from the bill. At that time I told the Senator from Mississippi that if the amendment was not agreed to in conference, I, as one Senator, would not oppose it on this measure. I want to state to the Senate now, that so far as I am personally concerned, I shall not oppose the amendment but shall vote for it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Gooding	Nelson	Stanfield
Bayard	Hale	Nicholson	Stanley
Borah	Harris	Norris	Sterling
Calder	Harrison	Overman	Sutherland
Cameron	Heflin	Page	Swanson
Capper	Hitchcock	Pepper	Trammell
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Wadsworth
Cummins	Kellogg	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Keyes	Rawson	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	Ladd	Reed, Pa.	Warren
Edge	La Follette	Sheppard	Weller
Ernst	McCumber	Shortridge	Willis
Fletcher	McKellar	Simmons
George	McKinley	Smoot
Glass	McNary	Spencer

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have no disposition to delay a vote upon the pending joint resolution, although I am very much opposed to the measure; but I think it will be well to place in the RECORD a statement of the essential facts with reference to this proposed loan to the Republic of Liberia. Some of these facts may have been placed in the RECORD in the discussions we had upon the subject during the last session, and it may be repetition to put them in again, but there are certain facts connected with it which I do not think have yet been incorporated in any of the speeches or documents which have found lodgment in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I think there is some vagueness of thought with reference to the proposed loan by the United States, and I think a review of the circumstances connected with the matter will disclose that there is neither a legal obligation on the part of this Government to make this loan by reason of anything which has heretofore transpired, nor any moral obligation. If there is a moral obligation at all, it is very vague and uncertain, and to recognize it, under the circumstances, would set a precedent which would be exceedingly dangerous.

The only authority lodged in the executive branch of the Government with reference to extending credit or making loans to foreign governments, so far as I know, is that contained in the second Liberty loan act, which was approved April 24, 1917. That provision is as follows, and I read it because I want it to go in the RECORD:

That for the purpose of more effectually providing for the national security and defense and prosecuting the war by establishing credits in the United States for foreign governments, the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized, on behalf of the United States, to purchase, at par, from such foreign governments then engaged in war with the enemies of the United States, their obligations hereafter issued, bearing the same rate of interest and containing in their essentials the same terms and conditions as those of the United States issued under authority of this act; to enter into such arrangements as may be necessary or desirable for establishing such credits and for purchasing such obligations of foreign governments and for the subsequent payment thereof before maturity, but such arrangements shall provide that if any of the bonds of the United States issued and used for the purchase of such foreign obligations shall thereafter be converted into other bonds of the United States bearing a higher rate of interest than 3½ per cent per annum under the provisions of section 5 of this act, then and in that event the obligations of such foreign governments held by the United States shall be, by such foreign governments, converted in like manner and extent into obligations bearing the same rate of interest as the bonds of the United States issued under the provisions of section 5 of this act.

I will not read all of it. The part I omit relates only to the amount authorized by the act. Then comes the proviso:

Provided, That the authority granted by this section to the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase bonds from foreign governments, as aforesaid, shall cease upon the termination of the war between the United States and the Imperial German Government.

Mr. President, under authority of that act, in October, 1918, the Secretary of the Treasury did what he designated as establishing a credit in favor of the Government of Liberia upon the books of the Treasury, but with the understanding that that credit should not be available until the Government of Liberia complied with certain specified terms and conditions.

Before that time, on September 24, 1917, Liberia had declared war against Germany, and became by virtue of that act entitled to ask and receive credit from the United States under the authority of the act which I have read. But Liberia never did, up to the time of the actual close of the war, which was in November, 1918, comply with the terms upon which she was to have the loan. Neither did she comply with those terms up to the time when the end of the war was technically declared, which I think was in July, 1921, when the President issued his proclamation, as provided in the act, declaring that the war with Germany was at an end. There is no pretense anywhere, so far as the record discloses, that Liberia in July, 1921, had complied with the terms and conditions upon which the loan was to be made when all pretense of war and war conditions had long since passed.

Subsequently to that time and during the month of October, 1921, Liberia through her representatives entered into an agreement with the Secretary of State providing for the loan. It is presumed that she had complied with all of the conditions and requirements of the original proposition. But, however that may be, Mr. President, the fact is that the new agreement, which the Secretary of State is now asking the Congress to carry out, was a cancellation, if indeed the failure of Liberia to comply before the termination of the war was not a cancellation. In legal effect at least it was a cancellation of the original understanding, and the legislation which we are now asked to enact is legislation based upon the new agreement made between the Republic of Liberia and the executive branch of our Government. There can be, in my opinion, no pretense that the United States was under any moral obligation by virtue of the fact that in 1918 a credit was extended to Liberia upon the books, to be made available upon the performance of certain conditions, which were never performed while the act under which the credit was extended was in operation. The agreement we are now asked to ratify is an agreement made after the authority under the act by which the proposed credit was to be extended had expired by limitation of law.

If the loan is to be made, it must be made and it must stand, not upon the understandings and the conditional agreements which were entered into by Secretary McAdoo at a time when he had the right and authority to make them, and which authority expired in July, 1921. It must rest not upon that act nor anything that transpired in connection with that proposed extension of credit, but must rest upon the agreement made by the Secretary of State and concurred in by the Secretary of the Treasury in October, 1921, after the act giving authority to extend loans to foreign governments had expired and at a time when admittedly there was no authority to extend the loan except with the affirmative approval of Congress.

It is because of those facts that Congress is now asked to pass the joint resolution. It is because it is recognized that there was no authority in law to make the agreement with the Republic of Liberia that we are now asked to enact the legislation.

Again, Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that the power of the Secretary of the Treasury under the second Liberty loan act to make the foreign loans and extend the credit was limited to purposes connected with the prosecution of the war. So that unless the money that is now proposed to be loaned is to be used for the discharge of some of the indebtedness which occurred in the prosecution of the war and in Liberia's participation in the war, there are two reasons why the loan can not rest, either upon legal or moral grounds, upon the agreement made or the understanding had by the Secretary of the Treasury in 1918. First, as I have said, because the power under that act expired before the conditions upon which the credit was to be extended were complied with, and, secondly, because I think it can be shown and appears in the record that the money was not borrowed for any purpose connected with the war.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator stated a moment ago, and correctly, I think, as I understand the situation, that the theory under which the loans were to be made—and it was undoubtedly the thing that Congress had in mind when it passed the act authorizing the making of them—was that the money should be used in carrying on the war against the common enemy. That being true, I wish to ask the Senator—and I am asking for information, because I have not been able to hear the debates which have thus far taken place—if at the time Liberia declared war against Germany there was not an understanding of some kind, either written or unwritten, that the United States would loan her this money if she would declare war against Germany? In other words, did not the Liberian Government have a tacit understanding with the American Government that if Liberia would declare war against Germany we would loan her this money?

Mr. SIMMONS. I answer the Senator unhesitatingly in the negative. There was no such understanding so far as the record discloses. Liberia declared war in September, 1917. The proposed credit extension was in October, 1918, more than a year afterwards.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that it is not disclosed upon the face of the record, but I was wondering why Liberia declared war against Germany unless she did have such an understanding.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think I can enlighten the Senator. I believe it is a fact that the United States, through the President, did suggest to Liberia that it would be in her interest, as well as in the interest of the opponents of the Central Powers, if she would declare war against Germany, and for a reason which addressed itself more particularly to the advantage to be derived by Liberia than to any advantage accruing to the Allies. The Allies were not particularly interested in Liberia declaring war. She is a little Republic. There are few more than 2,000,000 people there, and less than 60,000 of them are civilized. But the Government of the United States has always manifested a sympathetic interest in Liberia. It is a Republic which had its origin in the immigration of American negroes to that country. The United States was interested in that country. Great Britain controlled the seas. Great Britain in 1917 was placing her interdiction upon the commerce of nearly every country in the world. She was interfering with our commerce. She was interfering with Germany's commerce with Liberia, and Liberia's trade relations with Germany at that time were very close. By reason of this action on the part of the British Government Liberia was unable to continue those trade relations with Germany. Having been cut off from her main source of traffic and international trade, Liberia was rapidly getting into a state of great economic disorder and distress, and the United States, for the purpose of advancing her interests, and because of sympathy with that Republic, suggested to her that she declare war against Germany and thereby make it possible for an interrupted intercourse with other countries to continue.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, as I understand, the suggestion really came from former President Wilson, and was made for the purpose of helping Liberia rather than of obtaining any material assistance for the Allies in the World War?

Mr. SIMMONS. It was a great help to Liberia.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. So, in order to get the money—

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me first to finish with the Senator from North Carolina—

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Liberia declared war; and then the United States Government did not give her the money. I suppose, having declared war and gone to the expense that is incident to war and having her army and navy into the war in order to help us win it—

Mr. SIMMONS. Liberia did not have any army.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator think it is quite right now, when Liberia probably needs the money in order to pay pensions to her soldiers and their widows, that we should refuse to carry out an agreement which we ourselves had suggested?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator's humor is delightful. Liberia undoubtedly had a great army and a great navy, and undoubtedly a great many of her soldiers participated in the war in Europe, or, at least, the Senator's argument is based upon that theory. As a matter of fact, Mr. President, Liberia took no part, and was not in a condition to take any part, in the World War. Her declaration of war against Germany merely relieved an embarrassing international situation.

Mr. NORRIS. If it be true that Liberia did not take any part in the war, was it not really a perversion of the act of Congress for a President of the United States to suggest to a country that, for her own benefit, when she, in reality, could not help any in the war, she should declare war and thus get some of our money?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not think there is anything to sustain the idea that we promised to give Liberia money if she would declare war; I have never before heard that suggestion; but after Liberia did declare war, a year after—it is true that Secretary McAdoo did; why he did it I do not know; I am not here for the purpose of arguing that, because I think it is irrelevant to the issue now before us—Secretary McAdoo did agree, under certain conditions, to extend Liberia certain credits. Those conditions were never complied with; the act under which the Secretary made the agreement or contract, if it may be so called, expired, and authority to make the contract fell with it. Then the present Secretary of State took up the matter and entered into a new agreement with Liberia, recognizing that he had no authority to do it, and he is now asking Congress to give him authority to do it.

As I said before, the question, then, is, Shall we give this authority; and if so, why shall we give it? If the obligations to discharge which she desires to use the money were obligations incurred by her during the World War on account of any assistance she rendered or attempted to render to the Allies in the prosecution of the war, there might be some reason why we should take the course which is now recommended by the Secretary of State and help this little Republic to relieve herself of the burdens assumed in the interest of the Allies in that great struggle; but, Mr. President, an examination of the record shows that this money is not to be lent and is not to be used for any such purpose.

I wish to inform the Senate exactly the purpose for which this money is to be used. It is actually proposed to create a commission to be composed of a number of high-salaried officials, with all the retainers, experts, clerks, and accountants, probably, which are incident to such commissions which we put in charge of the financial affairs of weaker governments, as in the case of Haiti, because we do not think they are able to administer them fairly and justly and equitably themselves. Nobody knows what that commission will cost, but this proposed act provides for a commission to supervise the expenditure of this money and to collect the interest upon it, I assume, by controlling the customhouse and probably collecting or supervising the collection of local taxes, as in the case of Haiti. Here are the purposes for which this money is to be expended. The statement which I shall now quote will be found on page 125 of the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee of the other House, and shows how the larger part of the $5,000,000 is to be used:

3. Two hundred and thirty-three thousand dollars, or such less amount as shall be sufficient to enable the Government of Liberia to pay its internal funded debt, and the interest due thereon.

4. Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars, or such less amount as shall be sufficient to enable the Government of Liberia to pay its internal floating debt.

5. One million six hundred and fifty thousand dollars, or such less amount as may be necessary for the purpose of enabling the Government of Liberia to purchase or redeem all of its bonds now issued and outstanding, representing the 5 per cent sinking fund gold loan, due July 1, 1952, under the agreement for refunding loan dated March 7, 1912, between the Republic of Liberia, of the first part, and J. P. Morgan & Co., Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the National City Bank of New York, and First National Bank of New York, acting for themselves and for Robert Fleming & Co., Banque de Paris et des Pays Bas, M. M. Warburg & Co., and such payments of interests, costs of notices, and other payments or deposits, as well as payments which may be due from the Government of Liberia, under the fiscal agency agreement dated March 7, 1912, between the Republic of Liberia, of the first part, and the National City Bank of New York, of the second part, as shall be necessary to terminate all obligations of the Government of Liberia under all of said bonds or under the agreement for refunding loan or the fiscal agency agreement above mentioned, as shall entitle the Government of Liberia, in accordance with the terms of said agreement, to the cancellation and destruction of all said bonds held by the fiscal agents in the sinking fund mentioned in said agreements. Advances for this purpose shall be made at such times and in such amounts as shall be determined by the Secretary of State of the United States. It is understood that the Secretary of State of the United States may determine the best method for acquiring part or all of the aforesaid bonds, but in no event shall more than par and accrued interest be paid therefor.

6. Such amounts as may be necessary to enable the Government of Liberia to make improvements in transportation and communication facilities, sanitation, and other public works, in accordance with plans which shall have received the approval of the financial commission.

Mr. NORRIS. From what is the Senator from North Carolina reading?

Mr. SIMMONS. I am reading excerpts from the report of the hearings of the Ways and Means Committee of the House.

Mr. NORRIS. But the very nature of the testimony which the Senator is reading shows that it is taken from some agreement.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; I am reading excerpts from the agreement of October 28, 1921.

Mr. NORRIS. That is an agreement between our Government and Liberia?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes, sir; that is the agreement I am talking about; the agreement entered into by Secretary Hughes.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the agreement which provides how the money shall be used?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; that is the agreement which Secretary Hughes has made with the Liberian Government, and this loan is to be made, according to this agreement, for the purpose of paying these old debts of Liberia, practically all of them antedating the World War. All of the debts due to big New York bankers and corporations run back as far as 1912.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I was going to state for the record, in answer to the Senator from Nebraska, that the quotation which the Senator from North Carolina has read is from a copy of the "Financial plan and depository agreement signed by the Secretary of State and the Liberian Plenary Commission on October 28, 1921."

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; I stated that. What I read were simply excerpts from that agreement, incorporated in the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. OWEN. Was the agreement made in 1921?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. On October 28, 1921, the agreement was made by the Secretary of State and representatives of the Liberian Government, which agreement was not to become effective until action by Congress by resolution or bill.

Mr. OWEN. So that the agreement was entered into three years after the war.

Mr. SIMMONS. Three years after the war actually closed, and several months after the President of the United States declared by a proclamation that the war with Germany was at an end. So there can not be any contention that this agreement has any authority under the second Liberty loan act or any other war measure.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand the Senator to claim that there was not a moral obligation to advance this money carried over from the former administration, and that Secretary Hughes honored that moral obligation?

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator was not here when I was discussing that phase of the question.

Mr. SMOOT. No. I ask the question because of the question asked by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. The fact of the case is that there was a moral obligation.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have already gone over that, and I dislike very much to have to go over it again, but I will do so if it is desired. There was no moral obligation.

Mr. SMOOT. I will not ask the Senator to do so.

Mr. SIMMONS. I stated that in my judgment there was no moral obligation, as there clearly is no legal obligation, on the part of the United States to lend this money. There was an agreement undoubtedly made during the war by Secretary McAdoo that he would extend—that is as far as it went—to the Republic of Liberia a certain credit whenever that Government complied with certain terms and conditions. That agreement was made in 1918; and in 1921, when the President declared by proclamation that the war was ended, Liberia had not complied with those terms. There was no pretense that she had complied with those terms; and the war which the loan was to be made to aid, as the country understood and as I have no doubt Secretary McAdoo understood, had ended. If Liberia needed it for the purpose of helping in the prosecution of the war—and the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the face of the act conferring authority, had no power to grant credit unless it was for the purpose of helping in the prosecution of the war—what moral claim can she lay to it when she waits to comply with the conditions until after the war has been fought out and won and declared finally at an end?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS. But she was in the war all the time, the Senator must remember, and helped to win it. We probably would not have won it if she had not come in. The Senator ought not to forget that.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, does the Senator from North Carolina yield to me?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to remind the Senator from North Carolina that at that time the then Secretary of the Treasury, now the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], expressly stated to the Department of State that there was no moral obligation. I think that is in the record, and I think the Senator from Virginia stated that on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is right. I was going to read that statement. That statement was made, as I understand, in connection with a letter written to the then Secretary of the Treasury, now the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], by Mr. Lansing. The Senator from Virginia said—and I quote from his speech made in this Chamber discussing this very question—speaking of Secretary Lansing's statement:

Mr. President, it is that statement of the Secretary of State which I desire to repeat I did not accept. I totally dissented from that view.

The Secretary had expressed the opinion that there was a moral obligation.

Not only that, but I thought the $26,000 which had already been advanced to Liberia was the only item in all of the credits established by this Government that could not be justified.

Mr. President, I do not know what information was before Secretary McAdoo when he agreed to extend this credit, but I know this: Secretary McAdoo is a great lawyer. I know that Secretary McAdoo was entirely familiar with the act from which he derived his power, and I know that Secretary McAdoo in all probability would not have agreed to extend that credit to Liberia except upon the understanding that it was to be used by her in connection with the prosecution of the war, because that was the limitation upon his power; and I know the further fact, Mr. President, that notwithstanding this money was there, ready to be lent by the Secretary when Liberia complied with the ordinary conditions which were exacted of her and other foreign Governments seeking loans, she let the matter rest until the war had ended and until another administration had come into power and formal peace had been declared; and then she comes here and asks for the money, not for the purpose of aiding in the prosecution of the war, not for a purpose in which the United States has an interest, but for the purpose of paying her old debts, contracted in 1912, in favor of J. P. Morgan & Co. of New York, Kuhn, Loeb & Co. of New York, M. M. Warburg & Co. of New York, and the National City Bank of New York. This resolution would better be entitled, Mr. President, "a joint resolution to pay a bad debt of an insolvent debtor of J. P. Morgan and Kuhn, Loeb & Co.," rather than to relieve the downtrodden and distressed Republic of Liberia.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the facts would justify an amendment to the Senator's proposed title to this joint resolution, in addition to what he has said, and this is, to create additional jobs for a number of those who want them.

Mr. SIMMONS. Oh, yes; there are jobs aplenty in this proposition. Of course, when we went down here into Haiti—

Mr. McKELLAR. There are more, I think, in this measure than have been provided for in any other measure of like kind in recent years.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, we need the jobs, all right, Mr. President. That ought to be offered as another argument in favor of it. There are lots of fellows who are going to need jobs.

Mr. SIMMONS. I concede that. I concede that Republicans are at all times in need of Federal jobs.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and occasionally a Democrat.

Mr. SIMMONS. But just at this particular time, when the Republican Party has a superabundance of lame ducks on its hands, it is most particularly and especially appropriate to make places for them.

Mr. NORRIS. Is not that a good reason for making places and having some more jobs available?

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is exactly right, as he generally is.

The loan agreement provides that a commission of American citizens at high salaries shall go to Liberia and act as fiscal agents. How many retainers and employees this commission will have to have nobody can tell. During the war Liberia had apparently abandoned all of this scheme. She let it lie dormant while the war was going on, and for three long years did not make a move to get this money, although it was there awaiting her. As long as the old administration remained in power there was not an effort to get this money. Now, however, she comes here and asks for it; and when it becomes necessary for her to lay her cards upon the table and show what she wants with it—the war meantime having expired and Liberia not having pressed her claim for the money while the war was going on—when she is asked to say what she is going to do with the money, she says, "I want it to enable me to pay debts which I owe these New York bankers and which were contracted in 1912."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator has said that this measure will provide a whole lot of jobs for lame ducks, and yet he seems to criticize Liberia for not crowding her claim and getting her money while the Democrats were still in power.

Mr. SIMMONS. We did not have any lame ducks when we were in power.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; you had a whole lot of them just after you went out of power.

Mr. SIMMONS. That was after we went out; not while we were in.

Mr. NORRIS. If you were not shrewd enough to get these jobs for your lame ducks, you ought not to complain now because we are going to get them for our lame ducks.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no doubt that you are going to get them. You have an immense mass of legislation pending here right now to make jobs for your lame ducks.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, we need it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I know you do. I appreciate your situation. I have profound sympathy with you, and I should like to help you all I can; but I do not think you ought to ask a distressed and overtaxed people to furnish the money with which to give employment to your lame ducks.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me the Senator is really feeling badly because it was not gotten in time. He seems to complain that Liberia did not get this money of Democrats, and is now going to get it of Republicans. You missed your opportunity. We picked it up. Your lame ducks had to go without jobs, and we are going to do better with ours.

Mr. SIMMONS. During the Democratic administration the tide of prosperity in this country ran so high that it was difficult to get a man to take a Federal job. The men were making so much money, every man was so busy carrying on his business enterprises, the tide of prosperity was so high, that nobody wanted these offices. Lame ducks could just step right down the street and get employment at a better salary than the Federal Government was paying. The Federal Government was not paying one-fourth as much as some business enterprises in this country were paying for the same talent.

Mr. NORRIS. No. In other words, the country was full of profiteers, and they did not need jobs.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; we had profiteers, as we have profiteers now. Good times will make profiteers. Bad times generally dispense with profiteers to a certain extent, and that is the reason why you passed your tariff bill—in order to give the profiteers another opportunity.

Mr. NORRIS. The profiteers were getting hard up. Since the Democrats went out of power they had lost their occupation, and it took a tariff bill to give it back to them.

Mr. SIMMONS. I give it up, Mr. President.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I think it only fair to state to the Senate—I think the Senator from North Carolina wanted to be fair, but he has forgotten—that it is admitted on all sides, in the departments at least, that Liberia entered the war at the request of the United States, Great Britain, and France. At the time she entered the war 85 per cent of her business was being done by the Germans. They virtually had control of the islands, and they had control of the wireless station. They were controlling some of the exports which the British Government and the other allies needed; and the three powers wanted Liberia to go into the war to help them, or, rather, not to be of any assistance to Germany by reason of the use of the wireless station and the cutting off of Great Britain from the use of some of the products of the country.

Liberia declared war against Germany in August, 1917. In January, 1918, this loan was asked for. In July it was recommended by the Secretary of State and approved by the President, and Liberia was notified that she had been given credit to the extent of $5,000,000. France was notified that the credit had been established. Great Britain was notified that the credit had been established.

It is true that with the proposition notifying the Liberian Government there were submitted certain conditions upon which this loan was to be made. Those conditions were unsatisfactory; but we are told by the department that they continued to ask for changes in those conditions and to ask for the advancement of the money. That is stated in letters from the department.

I am not going all over this matter again, because I covered it fully before; but Secretary Lansing says there is a moral obligation to make the loan. Secretary Hughes, when this matter was presented to the committee of the House, stated that there was a moral obligation to make the loan. The bill has passed the House and is here with a favorable report from the committee, the committee believing that there was a moral obligation on the part of the Government to carry out the agreement made during President Wilson's administration, and it is on that question we are asking for a vote. I am not going to take any further time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am opposed to the pending joint resolution and expect to vote against it. I do not think there is the slightest moral obligation on the part of the United States to make this loan. It is admitted that there is not the slightest legal obligation on the part of the United States to make the loan. Under the terms upon which it is going to be made, if made, it will not do the people of Liberia any good. Why? There has been an agreement made by the State Department with Liberia concerning the disposition of the money. We are to lend them $5,000,000. This agreement will give Liberia little money. I want to read what is to become of two million of it:

(b) A new arrangement for that purpose shall be made between the Government of Liberia and the Government of the United States.

3. Two hundred and thirty-three thousand dollars, or such less amount as shall be sufficient to enable the Government of Liberia to pay its internal funded debt and the interest due thereon.

4. Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars, or such less amount as shall be sufficient to enable the Government of Liberia to pay its internal floating debt.

5. One million six hundred and fifty thousand dollars, or such less amount as may be necessary for the purpose of enabling the Government of Liberia to purchase or redeem all of its bonds now issued and outstanding representing the 5 per cent sinking-fund gold loan, due July 1, 1952, under the agreement for refunding loan dated March 7, 1912, between the Republic of Liberia, of the first part, and J. P. Morgan & Co.; Kuhn, Loeb & Co.; the National City Bank of New York; and First National Bank of New York, acting for themselves and for Robert Fleming & Co., Banque de Paris et des Pays Bas; M. M. Warburg & Co.; and Hope & Co., and for others, of the second part, including such payments of interest, costs of notices, and other payments or deposits, as well as payments which may be due from the Government of Liberia under the fiscal agency agreement dated March 7, 1912, between the Republic of Liberia, of the first part, and the National City Bank of New York, of the second part, as shall be necessary to terminate all obligations of the Government of Liberia under all of said bonds or under the agreements for refunding loan or the fiscal agency agreement above mentioned, as shall entitle the Government of Liberia in accordance with the terms of said agreement to the cancellation and destruction of all said bonds held by the fiscal agents in the sinking fund mentioned in said agreement. Advances for this purpose shall be made at such times and in such amounts as shall be determined by the Secretary of State of the United States. It is understood that the Secretary of State of the United States may determine the best method for acquiring part or all of the aforesaid bonds, but in no event shall more than par and accrued interest be paid therefor.

Evidently nearly $2,000,000 of this money is to be used in taking up bonds and other obligations which apparently, according to this agreement, have been acquired in some way by certain banking firms in New York. In other words, these gentlemen in New York have made an investment in Liberia and the United States is going to make that investment good. That is the real purpose of this bill. It comes here after the war. It is presented here under the excuse that we owe a moral obligation to Liberia for her aid to us in helping win the World War. It is ridiculous to talk about Liberia helping the United States to win the World War, and our having a moral obligation to lend them this money on account thereof. We call it lending, but what is really meant is to give to the people of Liberia, or to the Government of Liberia, this $5,000,000 for such purposes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, neither the Senator from Tennessee nor the Senator from North Carolina has given us any information as to who is the owner of the two first amounts the Senator read. Can the Senator give us any information in regard to that?

Mr. McKELLAR. I can not. I sent to the House for the hearings, and I was informed that they had been destroyed. That was the report I received. I do not understand why these hearings were destroyed. It is possible there may be some of the hearings in the possession of other Senators, but I have been unable to get a copy of the hearings, and I am reading from the hearings as quoted in the Record some time ago.

I do not think it is obligatory upon the United States to make good these loans of these various banking firms in New York City. I do not think we have a right to. There is much talk about moral right. We have no moral right to dispose of the people's money in any such way. I owe debts, and other Senators owe debts, I have no doubt, which we would be very glad indeed to have the United States Government pay for us. Some of us have bad debts due to us, and we would be very glad to have the Government lend our debtors the amounts of money so that they could pay us. But we all know that the people's money should not be used for such a purpose. That is what we are asked to do by this bill. Do not let us fool ourselves for a moment. That is precisely what we are asked to do with $2,000,000 of the people's money. We are to make good to these firms in New York who may have bought these bonds. We do not know what they paid for them. We do not know whether they paid 10 cents on the dollar, or 20 cents on the dollar, or 50 cents on the dollar for them. I can only say that if they paid over 10 cents on the dollar for them they were very poor business men, because the revenues of Liberia do not warrant the paying of any more than that for Liberian bonds.

What becomes of the other three million? I doubt very much whether it goes to the people of Liberia. If the people of Liberia get any money under the so-called moral agreement we will have to appropriate sums in the future for them. It can not come out of this appropriation.

Let us see to whom it is to go.

The Government of Liberia further engages—

That is, engages with our Government under this proposed agreement—

1. That, for the purpose of securing the United States loan, the control during the life of the United States loan of the collection—

During the life of it. I do not recall how long this loan is made for. We will see about that in just a moment. It does not say. There is no time given for paying it back. They do not expect it to be paid back. There is not a man who votes for it who expects this loan will ever be paid back. It is substantially and effectively nothing more than a gift. We all know it is a gift.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the Senator is not warranted in making that statement. I do not think there is a man who is going to vote for the measure who does not believe the money will be paid back. There is no one who does not know that there is sufficient property in Liberia to pay it back. When the Senator says there are no revenues in Liberia to justify this loan he forgets that when the agreement was made the revenues of Liberia amounted to nearly $500,000, and they dropped off during the war period to $200,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. The hearings as quoted here do not bear out the statement of my distinguished friend.

Mr. CURTIS. I have the official figures, if the Senator wants them put in the RECORD.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will put them in the RECORD. I call the attention of the Senator to the joint resolution itself. It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury "is hereby authorized to purchase from that Government its obligations hereafter issued, bearing such rate or rates of interest, maturing at such date or dates, and containing such terms and conditions as the Secretary may from time to time determine."

What are we buying? These bonds can bear 1 per cent or they can bear no interest at all. Any disposition can be made of them, and we all know that it is a gift, absolutely a gift, two million of it going to these bankers in New York, who would no doubt like to have the money on the bonds they have invested in heretofore; the remainder of it not going to the people of Liberia, but I now call attention to those to whom it will go:

That, for the purpose of securing the United States loan, the control during the life of the United States loan—

During the life of the loan; and the loan is virtually made perpetual. We are establishing offices here which will remain long after all of us are dead and gone, and then other generations which have come will go, and these offices and these payments and these officials will still go on. I repeat:

The Government of Liberia further engages:

1. That, for the purpose of securing the United States loan, the control during the life of the United States loan of the collection, application, and administration of all the assigned revenues and receipts in accordance with the present plan shall be vested in the financial commission, the administration of which shall be under the direction and control of the financial commissioner or, during his absence, of the next ranking member of the financial commission. The financial commission shall be composed of a financial commissioner, at a salary of $15,000 per annum; a deputy financial commissioner, at $10,000 per annum; an auditor, at $6,000 per annum; three administrative assistants of class 1, at $6,000 per annum, to be assigned, respectively, as controller general of customs, commissioner general of the interior, and director general of sanitation; 10 administrative assistants of class 2, at $4,000 per annum, to be assigned, respectively, as follows: Three controllers of customs, three district commissioners, two technical advisers (roads and ports), an accountant, and an agricultural adviser; and two administrative assistants of class 3, at $3,000 per annum, to be assigned, respectively, as follows: One postal-revenue officer and one clerk assistant. All members of the financial commission shall be designated by the President of the United States, to serve during his pleasure, and shall be appointed by the President of Liberia. The administrative assistants shall be under the direction and supervision of the financial commission, which shall be organized and function according to methods of procedure to be approved by the Secretary of State of the United States.

The financial commissioner, the deputy financial commissioner, and such other members of the financial commission as may be charged with the collection, application, or administration of moneys under the provisions of the present plan shall give adequate bond. All premiums on bonds executed by the aforesaid officials shall be considered a part of the expenses of the financial commission.

Mr. SIMMONS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does not the Senator believe that an official force of the size indicated by what he has read from the RECORD would cost the Government every year something like a third or a half of the total amount of this loan?

Mr. McKELLAR. With this tremendous corps of assistants and officers, the people of Liberia will never get any advantage out of this loan at all, and I doubt if they will be able to tax themselves enough to pay the deficit in salaries, if they have to pay the deficit, to our own appointees. I do not know what the facts are about that.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, with the Senator's permission, I would like to put the exact figures as to the revenues into the RECORD.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will, because I was just coming to that.

Mr. CURTIS. In 1913 the revenues were $485,639. They dropped in 1917, during the war, to $163,000. They went back in 1920 to $346,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. In 1920 and 1921 they amounted to $163,000. That would not anything like pay the interest. It would not pay the interest on what we turn over to them. That would not pay the interest on the salaries we are going to pay our own officers for looking after it.

If we pass the pending joint resolution we will make ourselves the legislative laughingstock of all the legislative bodies of the world and pay out the money of the already overburdened taxpayers for a purpose for which we have no moral right to appropriate it. It is a measure which should not receive a single vote in this body. There is not the sign of a legal obligation on us to make the loan.

There is not a sign of a moral obligation upon us to make the loan and it is being done only for the powerful interests in New York which are demanding that they be given this opportunity to filch from the Public Treasury the amount that Liberia owes to them, and the purpose also of the resolution is to give jobs to a lot of needy men, no doubt. I have no doubt the men need the jobs, and if we are in the business of creating jobs for the benefit of the favored few, let us go on and pass the measure, but I think we will be called to account by the American people for this great and unauthorized and indefensible waste of the people's money for any such purpose.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. Have we had a very happy experience in collecting what we loaned to other governments? Should our experience in those instances encourage us to lend to the Government of Liberia?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is exactly right. I have heard distinguished Senators on this floor say that they were utterly opposed to the collection even of the interest on the war debts from such nations as Great Britain, France, and Italy. What will those Senators say when it comes to collecting this debt from the poor people of Liberia? By the way, it can not be urged here that the measure is for the benefit of the people of Liberia, because it is not. The people of Liberia are not going to get anything out of it. The only people who will get anything out of the appropriation made under the pending measure are the financial interests in New York, who want to recoup their bad debts by having the United States pay them, and the officeholders whom we are going to appoint under the provisions of the joint resolution. Is there any doubt about it? There is not a Senator on the floor on either side of the Chamber who has any doubt about that fact. We all know it. It is unjustifiable and we ought not for a moment to think of passing the measure, and I hope that it will not pass. I intend to vote against it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, disregarding the statute authorizing foreign loans, I would not feel so certain of the absence of any moral obligation to Liberia. I think, had Liberia contracted debts for the purpose of prosecuting the war after notice had been given that the credit of $5,000,000 had been made, the claim of a moral obligation might be made with more justification. But this Liberia had not done.

Mr. GLASS and Mr. McKELLAR addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I will yield in just a moment. I do not understand that Liberia asks for the money now or expects it to be loaned to meet any debts whatever incurred by Liberia in assisting in the prosecution of the war. I yield now to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. I merely desire to say that I could wish that Senators would speak more accurately about this matter.

When they undertake to state that a credit was established, I contest the statement. A conditional credit was established, and the conditions never have been complied with to this day. There is not an item in the account rendered that relates itself to the prosecution of the war or to the security of this Government in the war. Then how can there be any moral obligation?

If the Senator will pardon me further a moment, the present Secretary of State clearly recognized that fact in his letter to the former chairman of the Finance Committee, Mr. Penrose, when he said:

In view of the time which has elapsed since the establishment of the credit, the question which well might be raised as to the propriety at this time of advancing the money to Liberia as a war measure.

If there is anything in the statute that would authorize the advancement of the money by this Government to Liberia except for war purposes, I would be obliged if some Senator would point it out.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator from Virginia advise us as to the date of the letter of the Secretary of State from which he has just read?

Mr. GLASS. It was written June 22, 1921. The whole basis of the proposed conditional credit must relate itself to the statute authorizing the credit, and the statute authorizes a credit only for war purposes, only for the prosecution of the war. Yet here we have a joint resolution that has nothing on earth to do with the prosecution of the war. It is a measure to refund a credit that was contracted quite 10 years before the United States ever entered into the war. A moral obligation does not necessarily exist because a man may say it exists. He must give some reason for his point of view, and no reason has ever been given.

It has been suggested here that the President of the United States promised Liberia a loan of $5,000,000 if she went into the war. There is not a semblance of truth in that statement. This Government did not have to bribe a little cross-roads nation with $5,000,000 to have it enter with us into the war. There was no such promise made, and the conditional credit was based upon the statute.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield that I may ask the Senator from Virginia a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. I have been trying to get a copy of the hearings, but I have been advised that they are out of print, and for that reason I wish to ask the Senator two questions. He speaks of this as being a conditional credit, but has not stated what the conditions were. Will he state the conditions? Secondly, assuming that there were conditions, what were the reasons why they were not complied with?

Mr. GLASS. The war ended in less than a month after the conditions were presented. I will say to the Senator that the conditional credit was authorized by my predecessor and I do not just now recall the details as to the conditions, but I do very distinctly recall the fact that the conditions not having been complied with, when the mission came to this country from Liberia after I had succeeded to the post of Secretary of the Treasury, I declined to have any official communication with the commission.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. May I ask the Senator a question? Regardless of whether the credit extended was conditional or not, does the Senator agree with me that if Liberia actually did not expend any money for prosecuting the war, the United States is not bound to loan the money?

Mr. GLASS. If Liberia, a poor, weak nation, had expended this amount or any other serious amount in the prosecution of the war, as a matter of equity the United States might reimburse her. But there is not an item in the account rendered that has any relation whatever to the prosecution of the war.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I am quite in accord with the Senator. That is the reason why I am arguing that we are not bound by any obligation. I am arguing that we should not authorize this loan, because actually no contracts were entered into and no expenses incurred by Liberia to prosecute the war, regardless of whether the credit was conditional or absolute. If the war ended without her spending a dollar, we are not bound to loan the money to her, because no officials of our Government could loan or agree to loan any foreign Government for any other purpose.

Mr. GLASS. Liberia entered the war because it was to the interest of Liberia to enter the war. She entered the war to be protected by the Navies of Great Britain and the United States against the ravages of the German nation in proximity to her territory. That is the reason why she entered the war. She was not induced to enter by any promise of a loan, and the only credit ever established or that ever could have been established must have been a credit under the statute relating to the prosecution of the war.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I heartily concur with the Senator from Massachusetts. If the Government of the United States had promised to loan Liberia $5,000,000 to help them in the prosecution of the war and had failed to loan it for any reason whatsoever during the war, and they were to come now to us and say, "Relying upon that promise, we expended this money, we incurred this amount of indebtedness, and we ask that you in good faith keep your promise and loan us the money," I think that would constitute not a legal obligation but a moral obligation which would impel action on our part.

Mr. GLASS. It would be a moral obligation attached to which there could be no sort of question of propriety. The present Secretary of State himself actually said that he realizes that grave questions of propriety might properly intervene as objections to the loan. How could a question of propriety lie against a moral obligation? The two suggestions from the same source are absolutely contradictory. If it is a moral obligation, there could be no question of propriety in meeting the moral obligation.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me for restating my position, the point I was making was, that the war having ended, Liberia does not come to us and say, "We want money to pay obligations which we incurred relying upon your promise," but she comes and says, "We want to borrow from you $5,000,000 to pay some old debts that we owe certain great financial interests in the city of New York contracted some time during the year 1912."

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Am I to understand the Senator from North Carolina to take the position that Liberia is asking for this loan now purely as a loan and without reference to any so-called moral obligation that may have existed before this time?

Mr. SIMMONS. The very agreement entered into between Liberia and Secretary of State Hughes specifies that the money is to be loaned and to be used in the liquidation of old debts due certain individuals and bankers by the Liberian Government some five or six years before the United States entered into the war.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, my purpose in asserting that I did not feel as strongly as some others that there was not a moral obligation was because of my understanding from correspondence that took place it might well be argued, if one disregarded the law authorizing foreign loans, that there was such an obligation, that it might well be interpreted to place a moral obligation upon our country. Personally I do not think there is, because, regardless of whether the credit was absolute or conditional, Liberia did not incur any expense whatever in the prosecution of the war; and did not come to us until after the war, in June, 1920, and then asked us to advance her money on the credit claimed to have been extended to pay bills which she owed long before the war and for the purpose of new developments.

The language used in the note which passed between the President and the Secretary of State in 1918 and the language used in the note of August 27, 1918, from the Treasury Department to the Secretary of State does not appear to make the credit a conditional one. An extract from that note is as follows:

Referring to our previous correspondence in relation to a loan to the Republic of Liberia, the President has approved the establishment of a credit in favor of the Liberian Government in the amount of $5,000,000.

Other references in the correspondence which passed seem to give reason for the belief on the part of foreign countries that the credit was not a conditional one. It is true, however, as the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has said, that Secretary of State Lansing did write a communication to the Liberian Government setting forth certain conditions that would have to be complied with before the loan was consummated, and that those conditions were not complied with.

Mr. GLASS. And that fact was communicated to other Governments.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I did not know that; I do not find that in the correspondence which is in the record. I am glad the Senator adds that, but the letter which Secretary Lansing wrote to the Liberian Government on September 12, 1918, shows that the money was available on certain conditions, which it appears were not met.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has the Senator from Massachusetts before him the proposed agreement made by Mr. Secretary Hughes with the Government of Liberia in reference to this loan?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does it refer in any way at all to the supposed obligation?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I glanced over it hurriedly for the very purpose of ascertaining if it referred to any previous obligation, and I do not find any language in it that couples it with any previous obligation.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand the agreement, an entirely new arrangement which was made or proposed to be made since the war?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I so understand.

Mr. President, I took the floor for two purposes—first, to bring out and to put into the Record the authority given to United States officials to loan money to foreign Governments. That authority seems to be limited to the loaning of money for the purposes of our national security and defense and prosecuting the war. The second purpose for my rising was to put into the Record some of the testimony presented before the Ways and Means Committee of the House at the time the hearings were held on March 22 and March 24, 1922. I should like to have the testimony and cross-examination of Mr. Fred Morris Dearing, acting Assistant Secretary of State, and Mr. Harry A. McBride, American consul, detailed in the Department of State, from page 5 to page 11 inserted in the Record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. FREAR. In order to get at the matter from the beginning: First, Liberia has between 40,000 and 50,000 civilized negroes?

Mr. DEARING. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. And about a million or more uncivilized, and their territory is about 200 miles square in area. In 1871 a loan was made and Liberia said that they were not getting any fair return from that loan. The loan amounted to $440,000. Am I right about that?

Mr. DEARING. I think that is about right.

Mr. FREAR. Then matters went on until this commission went over in 1909 and made their report, and that commission recommended—it ought to be put in the record, I suppose—that commission recommended additional loans be made to Liberia, and that Liberia be financed. Then a loan was made, of which you speak, I assume. There was a loan of $460,000, or something like that, in 1910, I believe.

Now, they did not take up the 1871 loan. That loan of 1871 has never been funded, or refunded, and has not been paid. Is that not true?

Mr. DEARING. I think that I will have to ask Mr. McBride to report on that.

Mr. McBRIDE. No, sir; the 1912 loan, of which the National City Bank of New York was the fiscal agent, covered the refunding of the loan of 1871 and other outstanding indebtedness.

Mr. FREAR. Well, did it include the 1871 loan?

Mr. McBRIDE. Yes, sir; the amount which was loaned to Liberia, namely, the $1,700,000, refunded and repaid all foreign loans, including the loan of 1871.

Mr. FREAR. That does not appear in the record, so far as I can ascertain.

Mr. DEARING. Yes, sir.

Mr. FREAR. Well, then, from that date the National City Bank, and Mr. Morgan, and Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and others you mention here, assumed the indebtedness of $1,600,000 or $1,700,000; that is to say, they loaned money to take up these various Liberian loans.

The next step, as I understand, in June, 1918—

Mr. GARNER (interposing). Mr. Frear, while the gentleman nods, the record does not show what his answer is to your questions.

Mr. FREAR. No; just answer the question so the reporter can get the answer.

Mr. DEARING. Certainly. I beg your pardon.

Mr. FREAR. Then, in 1918, in the month of June or thereabouts, negotiations were started to help the Liberian situation because of desperate straits financially; that is, she made that claim. That was before any question of her action regarding the war was taken.

Mr. DEARING. Liberia declared war in August, 1917.

Mr. FREAR. In September, two months before the signing of the armistice, this Government, or people representing this Government, made strong advances to secure at that time this $5,000,000 proposal; that is, this loan for Liberia?

Mr. DEARING. Yes, sir.

Mr. FREAR. That was, as I say, just prior to the end of the war. Nothing more was done regarding the loan until June, 1920, by Liberia; and the reason advanced, as I get from the record, is that the conditions or terms imposed were not satisfactory, and Liberia refused to take action until 1920, in June. That was over a year and a half after the conclusion of the war.

Mr. DEARING. Yes, sir.

Mr. FREAR. Now, Liberia's action during the war was not to help the United States and the Allies, as I gather; but the United States intervened and suggested that she declare war in order to help her own conditions, her own commerce, and we intervened so that Great Britain would cease interfering with that commerce. Now, is not that right? It was to help Liberia that the United States intervened and persuaded Great Britain at that time to allow Liberia's commerce to continue; is not that right?

Mr. McBRIDE. Well, that is so to this extent: On the west coast of Africa, after the enemy submarine campaign became very effective, there was only one ship every six months, or thereabouts, calling at Monrovia, and the only reason that Great Britain would send a vessel there was for the purpose of leaving food and things of that sort.

Mr. FREAR. Well, of course, Liberia had no vessels, had no army, had no navy, and the effect of this declaration of war was in the interest of Liberia and not to the interest of the Allies, so far as I have been able to discover reasons from the report.

Mr. McBRIDE. I hardly believe that it can be stated to have been in the interest of Liberia, because Liberia in taking this action to enter the war, lost immediately 85 per cent of her trade, and Liberia was bombarded by German submarines.

Mr. FREAR. Now, where was that trade going at that time?

Mr. McBRIDE. There were many German merchants in Liberia. There were about a dozen merchants in Monrovia, and nine of them were German. I think—eight or nine—and practically all of their exports, and all of their produce, that was brought from the interior, was bought by the German merchants, who exported the produce.

Mr. FREAR. On what kind of vessels?

Mr. McBRIDE. German, English, Spanish, and French.

Mr. FREAR. Were the Germans shipping this material during the war on English vessels?

Mr. McBRIDE. No; not during the war.

Mr. FREAR. Well, of course, the declaration of war on the part of the United States occurred on April 6, 1917. It was subsequent to that time before Liberia declared war, and by that time, of course, the commerce had decreased steadily, I gather from this report.

Now, the loan of the National City Bank, and also representing that due the British and other interests, that is all to be taken care of out of this $5,000,000 loan?

Mr. DEARING. Yes, sir.

Mr. FREAR. I want to see whether I am right about this. The agreement provides and Liberia, I think, has agreed to the condition that the United States shall, through our President, appoint a financial commissioner at $15,000 and an assistant at $10,000, an auditor at $6,000, and numerous other officials, who will administer the financial conditions at Liberia.

Mr. DEARING. Yes, sir.

Mr. FREAR. The effect of that is that these debts that now exist, and which are not at par—are the Liberian bonds selling at par to-day, the Liberian securities?

Mr. DEARING. No; they are below par.

Mr. FREAR. Do you know at what figure they are selling?

Mr. DEARING. Can you answer that question, Mr. McBride?

Mr. McBRIDE. About 98 or 99.

Mr. FREAR. At about 98 or 99. What interest do they bear?

Mr. McBRIDE. Five per cent.

Mr. GARNER. When did they sell at that?

Mr. McBRIDE. They have been at that figure since, as a matter of fact, since the $5,000,000 loan was first announced to Liberia. Before that I think they were selling for about 75 to 80, and sometimes going up as high as 85.

Mr. FREAR. They are receiving that quotation now for their securities by reason of the prestige given on account of this $5,000,000 loan?

Mr. McBRIDE. I think so; yes.

Mr. FREAR. One further question I have in mind, and that is under the law to secure this loan Liberia must pay this financial commissioner $15,000, the assistant $10,000, and an auditor $6,000, and that commission, consisting of the commissioner, the assistant, together with a man representing the Liberian treasury, who will determine the value of these securities. That is true, is it not?

Mr. McBRIDE. No, sir.

Mr. DEARING. We do not see how they could determine the value of them.

Mr. FREAR. Well, the settlement is to be had out of the $5,000,000; is that right?

Mr. McBRIDE. I do not understand just what you mean by "determine the value of the securities."

Mr. FREAR. On what basis they shall be taken up.

Mr. McBRIDE. The law and the agreement of 1912 stipulates that they shall be redeemed at 102½ per cent up to July 1, 1922, and thereafter may be redeemed at par.

Mr. FREAR. Now, here is a proviso in this pamphlet, under Article VII, page 75, which provides:

"None of the provisions of the present plan shall be deemed or construed to create any trust or obligation in favor of any holder of any of the outstanding obligations of indebtedness of Liberia or in favor of any owner of the coupons or claim for interest on, or in respect of, any thereof, or in favor of any holder of any claims against Liberia. Any and all claims against the Government of Liberia, which may not be charged under the provisions of clauses 3, 4, and 5 of Article I of the present plan shall be submitted to a claims commission composed of the secretary of the treasury of Liberia, the auditor and financial commissioner. This claims commission shall have power to determine the validity of any and all such claims and its decision shall be binding."

Now, Articles III, IV, and V relate to the specific debts?

Mr. McBRIDE. Yes; those relate to the specific debts of Liberia. The claims commission would, I understand, only deal with indebtedness or claims not provided for in the plan.

Mr. FREAR. In other words, Liberia has one commissioner and the United States has two; Liberia has one vote and the United States has two votes in the allocation of the money. That is true, is it not?

Mr. McBRIDE. Except for the fact that these men are not appointed by the President of the United States. They are designated by the President of the United States and appointed by the President of Liberia.

Mr. FREAR. They are not appointed by the President of the United States?

Mr. McBRIDE. They are designated by the President of the United States, and appointed by the President of Liberia.

Mr. FREAR. Yes; but to get the $5,000,000 they have got to do what we provide. Have they a depository? What is the depository for the Liberian bonds? That is, are they under the control or not of American interests? Is there a bank there or how do they handle their funds.

Mr. McBRIDE. There is only one bank there now, and that is a British bank. I do not know what arrangements will be made, of course, under the new loan. I should think, perhaps, that some other arrangement should be made.

Mr. FREAR. Now, what is to be done with the balance of the money after you take up those claims, and you have paid this $1,700,000 to the National City Bank of New York City; what is to be done with the balance?

Mr. DEARING. The balance of that money we want to use for the general administrative expenses of the country, of course, and also for certain improvements and developments which will enable Liberia to get on her feet and take care of her own finances.

Mr. FREAR. Now, returning to the record—
The CHAIRMAN (Interposing). And included in that is the establishment of a public-school system, which is to be provided for.

Mr. DEARING. There are a number of things provided for.

Mr. FREAR. River and harbor improvements and many things of that kind, and $80,000 is set aside for the traveling expenses of the financial commission and for their salaries while in transit and the commissioner is to receive $15,000 salary. Now, do you think that that is an excessive amount to be paid to an official for this little community of people of 40,000 or 50,000?

Mr. DEARING. That figure was agreed upon when we negotiated with President King, of Liberia, who was over here with the financial commission. We went into the matter very carefully, and we felt, and President King felt, and is satisfied, that a salary of that size ought to be paid in order to get men with sufficient ability and skill to administer the plan so that it would be certain to result to the benefit of Liberia, a country of 45,000 square miles and 2,000,000 people.

Mr. FREAR. Is that the reason why $10,000 was also fixed as the salary of the assistant, in view of the fact that 1,960,000 of those people are uncivilized and the country has less real business than the average city of 50,000 people?

Mr. DEARING. Every one of those salaries was carefully considered by us.

Mr. FREAR. But does not that impress you as being a rather large salary list, $80,000 annually for these few officials who are to administer the affairs of Liberia, which to-day is unable to pay interest on $1,700,000 indebtedness?

Mr. DEARING. We do not think so, especially because of the special conditions, climatic conditions, and the backwardness of the development of the country, and so forth, which makes it necessary to pay a somewhat better salary to get the same grade of skilled men who in another situation would accept less.

Mr. FREAR. Now, one more question. Could you give the committee the several amounts that are to be paid to the various people not mentioned here by the National City Bank, which I believe is set out in the position of trustee, are they not, here?

Mr. DEARING. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. Can you give the names and amounts of different people owning the various amounts of securities?

Mr. DEARING. May I ask Mr. McBride to answer that question?

Mr. FREAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. McBRIDE. The $1,700,000 indebtedness is held by the bondholders of the 1912 loan, not the National City Bank. The National City Bank is the fiscal agent.

Mr. FREAR. Yes; I understand; trustee, as I understand. Who are the bondholders, and how much do they own?

Mr. McBRIDE. I think that the majority are in Great Britain. There is quite a block of stock held in Holland, France, and some in Germany, and some in the United States.

Mr. FREAR. Well, now, what is held in the United States; can you tell us?

Mr. McBRIDE. I do not know, sir.

Mr. FREAR. Have you any way of determining?

The CHAIRMAN. All of that is set out in the pamphlet.

Mr. FREAR. I beg your pardon. I have looked over it very carefully, and I can not find anything.

The CHAIRMAN. The amount is not given?

Mr. FREAR. Let me read on page 66:

"One million six hundred and fifty thousand dollars, or such less amount as may be necessary for the purpose of enabling the Government of Liberia to purchase or redeem all of its bonds now issued and outstanding, representing the 5 per cent sinking fund gold loan, due July 1, 1952, under the agreement for refunding loans dated March 7, 1912, between the Republic of Liberia, of the first part, and J. P. Morgan & Co., Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the National City Bank of New York, and First National Bank of New York, acting for themselves and for Robert Fleming & Co., Banque de Paris et des Pays Bas, M. M. Warburg & Co., and Hope & Co., and for others, of the second part, including such payments of interest, costs of notices and other payments or deposits, as well as payments which may be due from the Government of Liberia under the fiscal-agency agreement dated March 7, 1912, between the Republic of Liberia, of the first part, and the National City Bank of New York, of the second part, as shall be necessary to terminate all obligations of the Government of Liberia under all said bonds or under the agreement for refunding loan or the fiscal-agency agreement above mentioned, as shall entitle the Government of Liberia, in accordance with the terms of said agreement, to the cancellation and destruction of all said bonds held by the fiscal agents in the sinking fund mentioned in said agreements."

Under that is where the National City Bank acts as agent for the other party?

Mr. McBRIDE. They act as the fiscal agents for the Government of Liberia.

Mr. FREAR. Now, can you give the amount due to the various parties in America, due here to-day under that?

Mr. McBRIDE. No, sir; I do not know. I do not know whether there is any way to get that information.

Mr. FREAR. But this Government is paying $5,000,000 in order to take up this indebtedness, and we ought, as a matter of fact, to know what it is to cover, or at least I think we ought to know.

Mr. McBRIDE. We understand that the Liberian bonds held in this country would amount to about $200,000.

Mr. COLLIER. How much?

Mr. McBRIDE. I think about $200,000. I am not sure. We know that a large majority of the Liberian bonds are held in Great Britain to-day.

Mr. FREAR. Those are all owned by private holders, of course?

Mr. McBRIDE. I think so. There may be one or two banks which have been holding some, but not a very large amount.

Mr. FREAR. That is all at present.

Mr. McKELLAR. Before the Senator takes his seat I desire to ask him a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. What constitutional authority have we in times of peace to lend to foreign Governments the people's money which is taken by taxation?

We may talk about "moral obligation," but have we the constitutional right to do it? We surely have not the moral right to lend money to foreign nations in times of peace; at least, it seems to me it is of very doubtful moral propriety even if we have the constitutional right. What does the Senator from Massachusetts have to say, however, about the constitutional right?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Of course we have no right to loan money to any foreign Government without congressional authority; and I do not suppose anyone claims that there is any authority now to loan money to Liberia unless it grows out of a legal obligation or a moral obligation as binding as a legal one as a result of promises made during the time when Liberia and the United States were engaged as allies in prosecuting the war.

Mr. OWEN. Before the Senator from Massachusetts sits down I desire to ask him a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. OWEN. I recall that the Senator made a reference to the President having authorized this loan. Is not that authority of the President necessarily restricted to the statute under which the President was then acting?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. OWEN. And do not the conditions of that law, which require the money to be expended for war purposes, attach directly to the authority granted to the President?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Certainly; and that was the force of my whole argument; that we were not bound to loan Liberia one dollar, because, no matter what promises our officials made, no matter what the credits, conditional or otherwise, were, Liberia did not expend any money and does not ask us now to recoup her for any expense which she made to prosecute the war.

Mr. OWEN. Surely the manner in which this claim is presented here, with the provision for the disposition of money in the payment of the ancient and honorable debts, which I think ought to be paid by Liberia to the people from whom she borrowed the money, makes it appear as if this alleged moral right had no real existence but was a Trojan horse behind which is stalking the claim of New York bankers.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I might add that the testimony which I have put into the Record goes fully into the question of the claims against Liberia that will be paid in case this money is loaned by our Government and contains a résumé of Liberia's financial relations with the United States Government, other countries, and banking institutions.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], who is in charge of the pending joint resolution, a question in reference to the salaries which are therein provided. I wish to ask the Senator if the salaries are to be paid out of the loan. I have not the whole agreement before me and I can not obtain a copy of it.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand that they will be paid out of the revenues of the Liberian Government.

Mr. McKELLAR. That can not be done because the revenues of Liberia, apparently, are not at all sufficient to pay half of the salaries provided for by the joint resolution.

Mr. CURTIS. It will be found that the revenues of the Liberian Government will pay the salaries.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let us suppose for a moment that the Liberian revenues are not sufficient to pay the salaries; will the United States Government then pay the salaries of these individuals?

Mr. CURTIS. I think not, under the agreement.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator thinks not.

Mr. CURTIS. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. If we appoint them, would we not be in honor bound to pay them after having appointed them?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not think so, if they accept the appointments under the known conditions.

Mr. McKELLAR. We have been talking considerably about moral obligations; would there not be a very strong moral obligation on our part, after appointing these men, to pay them the salaries we agreed to pay them if the Liberian revenues were not sufficient for that purpose?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not think there is any danger of such a contingency arising.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator think that any men could be found who would go to Liberia and undertake this work merely upon the assurance of the Liberian Government that their salaries would be paid?

Mr. CURTIS. Really, I do not know as to that.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator having the joint resolution in charge whether he expects to conclude the discussion and take a vote upon the measure to-night. If he does, I wish to proceed with what I have to say, because I think that I can demonstrate beyond question that there is a moral obligation involved.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, if we could do so, I should like to have a vote upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi and then have an executive session. I understand that a number of Senators who have left the Chamber want to be here when the vote is taken.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. It was really at my suggestion, I presume, that the Senator from Kansas consented that the measure go over. I find that several Senators have gone away, not anticipating a vote this afternoon, and I should like for them to be here. I do not think we have anything crowding to-morrow, and we might get through then.

Mr. CURTIS. I am perfectly willing to take a vote on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi and then to hold an executive session and adjourn until 12 o'clock to-morrow, if that is satisfactory.

Mr. SMOOT. In view of the situation as presented by the Senator from Kansas, I do not care about proceeding now; but I will occupy a short time to-morrow.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Utah yields the floor, in order that there may be no misunderstanding, I wish to say that I do not know what the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi is, and I should not want to enter into an agreement to vote on it to-night.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment of the Senator from Mississippi provides a number of additional inspectors of locomotive boilers.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. I merely wish to make an observation for the benefit of the Senator from Nebraska. The object of the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi is to take care of some parties who are out of jobs, such as the Senator from Nebraska spoke of a while ago. The amendment will provide places for some 35 of them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we have heard so much this afternoon about providing jobs for those who are out of employment that I think it will be well for Senators who are everlastingly talking in that vein to understand that we have already reduced the number of Government employees by some forty-odd thousand since the last administration went out of power.

Mr. McKELLAR. How many have been put in their places?

Mr. SMOOT. None, so far as the number is concerned, because there are that many less employees of the Government now than there were then.

Mr. OVERMAN. How many new offices have been created?

Mr. SMOOT. Very few, indeed.

Mr. OVERMAN. There have been a great many.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that despite the offices which have been created there are 40,000 less employees in the Government service now than there were when the present administration came into power.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will yield, how many are employed by the Government now as compared with the year before the war?

Mr. SMOOT. There are more employees of the Government to-day, of course, than there were before the war.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator recall how many more? The number is very much larger, is it not?

Mr. SMOOT. The number is not very large.

Mr. McKELLAR. There are 40,000 more employees on the Government rolls than there were before the war, are there not?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is mistaken as to that.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to have the exact figures put in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought I had them in my desk. I can give the figures for each month since the present administration came into power showing the number of employees separated from the service.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator be kind enough—I am speaking very seriously now—to put into the RECORD at some later day the reductions that have been made in the number of employees since the Republicans came into power, and then put in the figures as to how many employees of the Government there were the year before the war, in 1916, so that we may make the comparison and ascertain the exact facts? I know the Senator has the figures.

Mr. SMOOT. I think I have the figures for 1916 in my office. I have no idea of casting any reflection upon anybody; but we have heard a great deal this afternoon about hunting jobs for lame ducks. I recall that two years ago there were a number of lame ducks on the other side, and I remember that the then Senator from Arizona, the then Senator from Idaho, the then Senator from Oregon were all taken care of and are to-day in good positions.

Mr. OWEN. I suggest that the Senator should not be so cruel as to call the entire roll.

Mr. SMOOT. I can call the roll if the Senator desires.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will not the Senator put the figures in the RECORD so that we may have a résumé of it all?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that motion for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas withhold his motion?

Mr. CURTIS. I withhold it.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the conclusion of the consideration of the pending joint resolution the bill (S. 3254) to encourage the development of the agricultural resources of the United States through Federal and State cooperation, giving preference in the matter of employment and the establishment of rural homes to those who have served with the military and naval forces of the United States, may be taken up and disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that immediately upon the conclusion of the consideration of the pending joint resolution the bill to which he refers may be proceeded with.

Mr. CURTIS. That would require a quorum.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, if it will require a motion I will not make the request; but I did not think it would require a quorum.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, November 24, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate November 23, 1922.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Pierce Butler, of Minnesota, to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, vice William R. Day, resigned.

PROMOTIONS IN THE DIPLOMATIC SERVICE.

SECRETARY OF EMBASSY OR LEGATION OF CLASS 2.

Cornelius Van H. Engert, of California.
Williamson S. Howell, jr., of Texas.

SECRETARY OF EMBASSY OR LEGATION OF CLASS 3.

Frederic D. K. Le Clercq, of South Carolina.
Harold H. Tittmann, jr., of Missouri.

SECRETARY OF EMBASSY OR LEGATION OF CLASS 4.

Miss Lucile Atcherson, of Columbus, Ohio, to be a secretary of embassy or legation of class 4 of the United States of America.

MEMBERS OF THE UNITED STATES COAL COMMISSION.

John Hays Hammond, of the District of Columbia.
Thomas Riley Marshall, of Indiana.
Samuel Alschuler, of Illinois.
Clark Howell, of Georgia.
George Otis Smith, of Maine.
Edward T. Devine, of New York.
Charles P. Neill, of the District of Columbia.

COLLECTORS OF CUSTOMS.

Louis M. Hall, of St. Louis, Mo., to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 45, with headquarters at St. Louis, Mo., in place of Fountain Rothwell, whose term of office expired October 31, 1922. A temporary commission was issued to this officer during the recess of the Senate.

George V. Denny, of Savannah, Ga., to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 17, with headquarters at Savannah, Ga., in place of David C. Barrow, jr., superseded.

COMPTROLLER OF CUSTOMS.

Walter L. Cohen, of New Orleans, La., to be comptroller of customs in customs collection district No. 20, with headquarters at New Orleans, La., in place of Albert W. Newlin, resigned.

UNITED STATES COAST GUARD.

Cadet Engineer Herman H. Curry to be ensign (engineering) in the Coast Guard of the United States, to rank as such from September 30, 1922. This officer is now serving under temporary commission issued during the recess of the Senate.

UNITED STATES COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

Aaron George Katz, of New York, to be hydrographic and geodetic engineer, with relative rank of lieutenant in the Navy. Charles Mitchell Thomas, of Virginia, to be aid, with relative rank of ensign in the Navy.

REGISTER OF THE LAND OFFICE.

Peter Michael Larson, of Minnesota, to be register of the land office at Cass Lake, Minn.

UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

Dr. Octavius M. Spencer to be assistant surgeon in the United States Public Health Service, to rank as such from October 5, 1922.

Asst. Surg. Richard B. Norment to be passed assistant surgeon in the United States Public Health Service, to rank as such from September 23, 1922.

Passed Asst. Surg. Robert L. Allen to be surgeon in the United States Public Health Service, to rank as such from September 22, 1922.

Passed Asst. Surg. Ora H. Cox to be surgeon in the United States Public Health Service, to rank as such from September 21, 1922.

Passed Asst. Surg. Marion S. Lombard to be surgeon in the United States Public Health Service, to rank as such from September 21, 1922.

Passed Asst. Surg. Carl Michel to be surgeon in the United States Public Health Service, to rank as such from September 22, 1922.

Passed Asst. Surg. William F. Tanner to be surgeon in the United States Public Health Service, to rank as such from September 21, 1922.

Passed Asst. Surg. William C. Witte to be surgeon in the United States Public Health Service, to rank as such from September 22, 1922.

Passed Asst. Surg. James F. Worley to be surgeon in the United States Public Health Service, to rank as such from September 25, 1922.

OFFICERS' RESERVE CORPS OF THE ARMY.

BRIGADIER GENERALS.

To be brigadier generals, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Col. Franklin Wilmer Ward, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Col. Albert Lyman Cox, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Col. Charles Irving Martin, adjutant general, Officers' Reserve Corps.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE REGULAR ARMY.

GENERAL OFFICERS.

To be major generals.

Brig. Gen. André Walker Brewster, from December 1, 1922, vice Maj. Gen. George Bell, jr., who is to be retired from active service November 30, 1922.

Brig. Gen. Edward Mann Lewis, from December 2, 1922, vice Maj. Gen. Clarence R. Edwards, who is to be retired from active service December 1, 1922.

Brig. Gen. Edgar Russel, from December 2, 1922, vice Maj. Gen. Charles J. Bailey, who is to be retired from active service December 1, 1922.

Brig. Gen. Frank Long Winn, from December 2, 1922, vice Maj. Gen. Francis J. Kernan, who is to be retired from active service December 1, 1922.

Brig. Gen. George Brand Duncan, vice Maj. Gen. Edgar Russel, who is to be retired from active service.

Brig. Gen. Ernest Hinds, vice Maj. Gen. Frank L. Winn, who is to be retired from active service.

Brig. Gen. Robert Lee Howze, vice Maj. Gen. William M. Wright, who is to be retired from active service.

To be brigadier generals.

Col. Richmond Pearson Davis, Coast Artillery Corps, from December 1, 1922, vice Brig. Gen. Chase W. Kennedy, who is to be retired from active service November 30, 1922.

Col. Charles Henry Barth, Infantry, from December 2, 1922, vice Brig. Gen. Richard E. Blatchford, who is to be retired from active service December 1, 1922.

Col. John McAuley Palmer, Infantry, vice Brig. Gen. André W. Brewster, nominated for appointment as major general.

Col. Briant Harris Wells, Infantry, from December 2, 1922, vice Brig. Gen. Samson L. Faison, who is to be retired from active service December 1, 1922.

Col. Edward Leonard King, Cavalry, vice Brig. Gen. Edward E. Lewis, nominated for appointment as major general.

Col. Harold Benjamin Fiske, Infantry, vice Brig. Gen. Edgar Russel, nominated for appointment as major general.

Col. Frank Ross McCoy, Cavalry, vice Brig. Gen. Frank L. Winn, nominated for appointment as major general.

Col. Halstead Dorey, Infantry, vice Brig. Gen. George B. Duncan, nominated for appointment as major general.

Col. Hugh Aloysius Drum, Infantry, vice Brig. Gen. Ernest Hinds, nominated for appointment as major general.

Col. Stuart Heintzelman, Cavalry, vice Brig. Gen. Robert L. Howze, nominated for appointment as major general.

Col. Willoughby Walke, Coast Artillery Corps, from December 29, 1922, vice Brig. Gen. Charles H. Barth, who is to be retired from active service December 28, 1922.

Col. John Bacon McDonald, Cavalry, from January 29, 1923, vice Brig. Gen. Willoughby Walke, who is to be retired from active service January 28, 1923.

To be second lieutenants.

Under the provisions of the acts of Congress approved June 30 and September 14, 1922, the officers herein named, who are now first lieutenants in the Regular Army, to be second lieutenants in the Regular Army in the branches of service in which they now hold commissions or appointments, to take rank in that grade as prescribed by the act of June 30, 1922:

First Lieut. Fred Glover Sherrill, Finance Department.

First Lieut. Sol Marks Lipman, Cavalry.

First Lieut. Jerome David Cambre, Infantry.

First Lieut. Eustaquio Bacilg y Sabio, Philippine Scouts.

First Lieut. Burrowes Goldwaite Stevens, Infantry.

First Lieut. Alexander Thomas McCone, Infantry.

First Lieut. Thomas Markham Brinkley, Infantry.

First Lieut. John Kennedy Buchanan, Infantry.

First Lieut. Beverley St. George Tucker, Ordnance Dept.

First Lieut. Reginald Worth Hubbell, Infantry.

First Lieut. Lee Earl Gray, Coast Artillery Corps.

First Lieut. Donald William Sawtelle, Cavalry.

First Lieut. Paul Wilkins Kendall, Infantry.

First Lieut. John Franklin Farley, Infantry.

First Lieut. Charles Henry Moore, jr., Infantry.

First Lieut. James Wentworth Freeman, Infantry.

First Lieut. Alexander John Mackenzie, Infantry.

First Lieut. Wiley Vinton Carter, Infantry.

First Lieut. Ira Platt Swift, Cavalry.

First Lieut. Wilbur Eugene Dunkelberg, Infantry.

First Lieut. Arthur Pulsifer, Infantry.

First Lieut. Farrin Allen Hillard, Infantry.

First Lieut. Elliott Watkins, Infantry.

First Lieut. Francis James Gillespie, Infantry.

First Lieut. Jesse Lewis Gibney, Infantry.

First Lieut. Robert Hale Vesey, Infantry.

First Lieut. Clarence Miles Mendenhall, jr., Infantry.

First Lieut. Kester Lovejoy Hastings, Infantry.

First Lieut. George McKnight Williamson, jr., Infantry.

First Lieut. Howard Waite Brimmer, Infantry.

First Lieut. Charles Milner Smith, jr., Infantry.

First Lieut. Walter Joseph Muller, Infantry.

First Lieut. Harry Lovejoy Rogers, jr., Infantry.

First Lieut. George Bryan Conrad, Infantry.

First Lieut. William Stephen Murray, Infantry.

First Lieut. Raymond Wainwright Odor, Infantry.

First Lieut. James Clyde Welch, Infantry.

First Lieut. Miner Welsh Bonwell, Infantry.

First Lieut. John Perry Pence, Infantry.

First Lieut. Joseph Magoffin Glasgow, Cavalry.

First Lieut. Elmer Mike Jenkins, Infantry.

First Lieut. James Lawrence Keasler, Infantry.

First Lieut. Rutherford Dent McGiffert, Infantry.

First Lieut. Richard Bryan Wheeler, Infantry.

First Lieut. Thomas Roswell Aaron, Infantry.

First Lieut. David Albert Newcomer, Corps of Engineers.

First Lieut. Alfred Maximillian Gruenther, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Herbert Bernard Loper, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Ivan Crawford Lawrence, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Williston Birkhimer Palmer, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Robert Gibbins Gard, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Robert Ammons Hill, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. David Horn Whittier, Ordnance Department.
 First Lieut. Herbert Maury Jones, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Fred William Marlow, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Orville Wells Martin, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. William Joseph Regan, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Roy Green, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Forrest Eugene Cookson, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Alexander Sharp Bennet, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. George Sheldon Price, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Carl Spencer Molitor, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Wyburn Dwight Brown, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Robert Miller Montague, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Charles Pollard Jones, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Anthony Clement McAuliffe, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Robert Leonard Johnson, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Lester Francis Rhodes, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Albert Rhett Stuartt Barden, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Romeo Francis Regnier, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Don Gilmore Shingler, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Harlan Nelson Hartness, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Louis Brainard Ely, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Julius Easton Slack, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Bertram Francis Hayford, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Ernest Aron Bixby, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Robert Rossiter Raymond, jr., Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Harris Fulford Scherer, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Thomas Benoit Hedekin, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Joseph Vincil Phelps, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Charles Norton McFarland, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Charles Alvin Pyle, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Alexander Griswold Kirby, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. John Ray Hardin, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. William Wilkeson Barton, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Maurice Place Chadwick, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Foster Joseph Tate, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Carl Robinson, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Richard Tobin Bennison, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Henry John Dick Meyer, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Elton Foster Hammond, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Ernest Marion Brannon, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Francis George McGill, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Luther Lyons Hill, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Oscar Allan Saunders, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. John Wyville Sheehy, Infantry.
 First Lieut. James Battle Rivers, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. John Joseph Burns, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Leslie Edgar Jacoby, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. John Raikes Vance, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Clarence John Kanaga, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Richard Powell Ovenshine, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Edwin Virgil Kerr, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Thomas McGregor, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Harrison Howell Dodge Helberg, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. William Irwin Allen, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. James Edmund Parker, Air Service.
 First Lieut. William Wesson Jervy, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. George Raymond Burgess, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Edward Lynde Strohbehn, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Maurice Keyes Kurtz, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. William Holmes Wenstrom, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Paul Lewis Harter, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Leo Clement Paquet, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Thomas Morris Crawford, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Eugene McGinley, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Hugh Brownrigg Waddell, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Lester Delong Flory, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Isaac Halden Ritchie, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Augustine Francis Shea, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Carlisle Visscher Allan, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Marion Patton Echols, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Francis Otis Wood, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Hobart Hewett, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Waldemar Sven Broberg, Ordnance Department.
 First Lieut. James Holden Phillips, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. John Edwin Leahy, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Frederick Weed Drury, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Leander Dunbar Syme, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Ellis Vern Williamson, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Leroy Clark Wilson, Infantry.

First Lieut. Nathaniel Alanson Burnell, 2d, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. John Bartlett Murphy, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. James Lowe Harbaugh, jr., Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Virgil Farrar Shaw, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Paul Alpheus Noel, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Michael Gibson Smith, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Syril Emerson Faine, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Arthur Maxon Parsons, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Harry Welling Barrick, Infantry.
 First Lieut. William Travis Van de Graaff, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Howard Rand Perry, jr., Infantry.
 First Lieut. Edward Hamilton Young, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Nathan Arthur Smith, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Gerald St. Clare Mickle, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Benjamin Randolph Farrar, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Henry Ellis Sanderson, jr., Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Hugh French Thomason Hoffman, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. David Stanley Holbrook, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Walter Scott Winn, jr., Infantry.
 First Lieut. Willard Gordon Wyman, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. John Leonard Whitelaw, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Edward Henry Bowes, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Edwin Malcolm Sutherland, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Joseph Andrew Holly, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Henry Baldwin Nichols, Infantry.
 First Lieut. William Douglas McNair, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Charles Forrest Wilson, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Robert Francis Carter, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Hugh Garnett Elliott, jr., Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Nathan Farragut Twining, Infantry.)
 First Lieut. William John Crowe, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. George Whitfield MacMillan, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. L. Hoyt Rockafellow, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Percy Emery Hunt, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Roland William McNamee, Infantry.
 First Lieut. John Carpenter Raean, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Winfred George Skelton, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Lambert Benel Cain, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Edmund Bower Sebree, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Ignatius Lawrence Donnelly, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Merritt Brandon Booth, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Raymond Clegg Barlow, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Frank Greene Davis, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Emmett James Bean, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Donald Allen Fay, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Charles Henry Noble, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Walter Towle O'Reilly, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Kenneth Pierce, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Charles Henry Bryan, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. John Endler, Infantry.
 First Lieut. John Howell Collier, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Dean Luce, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Vincent Coyle McAlevy, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. George Gordon Elms, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. John Dimmick Armstrong, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Ralph Francis Stearley, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Donald Handley Nelson, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Edward Ora Hopkins, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. James Verne Cole, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Ralph Bernard Kindley, Infantry.
 First Lieut. John Adams Bruckner, jr., Infantry.
 First Lieut. Clarence Archibald Frank, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Frederick Brodstreet Dodge, jr., Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Clarkson Dewoise McNary, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Bernard Abert Byrne, jr., Infantry.
 First Lieut. Warren Wilson Christian, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Dale Wilford Maher, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Robert Barrett Hutchins, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Joseph William Kullman, Infantry.
 First Lieut. George Dewey Rogers, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Robert Jones Merrick, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. William Henry John Dunham, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Irvin Alexander, Infantry.
 First Lieut. John Harvey Madison, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. George Edward Bruner, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Thomas Llewellyn Waters, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Urban Niblo, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Kenneth Sharp Olson, Infantry.
 First Lieut. William Leighton McNery, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Robert Montgomery Springer, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Russell John Nelson, Infantry.

First Lieut. Charles Maine Wolff, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Simon Foss, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Davis Ward Hale, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Edward Melvin Starr, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Joseph Sladen Bradley, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Arthur Lancelot Moore, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Robert William Crichlow, jr., Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Martin Anthony Fennell, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Ralph Harris Bassett, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Harold Allen Brown, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Albert Sidney Johnston Stovall, jr., Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Donald Carson Hardin, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Wayne Clifton Zimmerman, Infantry.
 First Lieut. John Thomas Keeley, Infantry.
 First Lieut. James Wellington Boyd, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Joseph Conrad Odell, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Josiah Toney Dalbey, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Logan Osborn Shutt, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Stuart Little, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Hilton Edward Heineke, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Galen Magnus Taylor, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. John Francis Lavagnino, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Daniel Philip Buckland, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Phillip McIlvaine Whitney, Infantry.
 First Lieut. John Morris Works, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Christian Hildebrand, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Joseph Holleman Warren, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Edgar Mortimer Gregory, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. John David Frederick, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Richard Ray Coursey, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Dwight Lyman Adams, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Thomas Gordon Cranford, jr., Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Lester George Degnan, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Henry Bennett Sheets, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Archie William Cooley, Infantry.
 First Lieut. William Robert McMaster, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Cornelius Emmett O'Connor, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Joseph Alfred Cranston, jr., Infantry.
 First Lieut. Willard Leslie Isaacs, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Horace Speed, jr., Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Fred William Makinney, jr., Cavalry.
 First Lieut. William Benjamin Kean, jr., Infantry.
 First Lieut. Harold Robert Emery, Infantry.
 First Lieut. David Sanderson McLean, Infantry.
 First Lieut. William Joseph Moroney, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Russell Lowell Williamson, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Howard Dohla Johnston, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Franklin Leroy Rash, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Edgar Harvey Snodgrass, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Claude Birkett Ferenbaugh, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Adna Chaffee Hamilton, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Harold Stuart Ruth, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Sterling Eugene Whitesides, jr., Infantry.
 First Lieut. Lewis Stone Sorley, jr., Infantry.
 First Lieut. Albert Coady Wedemeyer, Infantry.
 First Lieut. David Best Latimer, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Roswell Boyle Hart, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Halvor Hegland Myrah, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Herbert Joseph Riess, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Henry Ignatius Szymanski, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Ulric Lee Pomby, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Frederick Brenton Porter, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Bryan Sewall Halter, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Charles Raymond Gross, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Charles Hardy Hart, jr., Infantry.
 First Lieut. Adolphus Rankin McConnell, Air Service.
 First Lieut. William James Daw, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Louis Bernard Saxe, Quartermaster Corps.
 First Lieut. George De Vere Barnes, Quartermaster Corps.
 First Lieut. Paul Robert Menzies Miller, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Albert Smith Rice, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Charles Linton Williams, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Charles Ream Jackson, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Charles Leslie Keerans, jr., Infantry.
 First Lieut. Fred Cleveland Fishback, Air Service.
 First Lieut. George Oliver Roberson, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Kenneth Newton Walker, Air Service.
 First Lieut. John Lawrence Hanley, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Stanley Hunsicker Hunsicker, Quartermaster Corps.
 First Lieut. Neal Henry McKay, Quartermaster Corps.
 First Lieut. Earl Raymond Adlington, Quartermaster Corps.
 First Lieut. James Wesley Willford, Quartermaster Corps.

First Lieut. Stanleigh Megargee, Quartermaster Corps.
 First Lieut. Oscar Leslie Rogers, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Roger Frederic O'Leary, Quartermaster Corps.
 First Lieut. Joseph Allen Physioc, jr., Air Service.
 First Lieut. Samuel Perham Mills, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Edgar Theodore Selzer, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Albert Joseph Lubbe, Signal Corps.
 First Lieut. George Raymond Ensminger, Ordnance Department.
 First Lieut. John Bicknell Luscombe, Quartermaster Corps.
 First Lieut. Charles Harold Howard, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Edward Alton Hillery, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Hugh Sydney Harpole, Quartermaster Corps.
 First Lieut. Homer William Jones, Quartermaster Corps.
 First Lieut. Everett Sanford Davis, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Frank Egerton Powell, Quartermaster Corps.
 First Lieut. Bradford Nelson Headley, Quartermaster Corps.
 First Lieut. Frederick Irving Patrick, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Donald Reuben Goodrich, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Carl Henry Barrett, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Francis Hill Kuhn, Quartermaster Corps.
 First Lieut. John Harvey Wilson, Air Service.
 First Lieut. John Daniel O'Connell, Quartermaster Corps.
 First Lieut. Harold Brand, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Edward Watson Kelley, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Claud Thomas Gunn, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Edward Freeman, Philippine Scouts.
 First Lieut. Herbert Benjamin Wilcox, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Robert Hilton Eichelsdoerfer, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Otto Max Jank, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. James William Smith, Philippine Scouts.
 First Lieut. Thomas Houston Dameron, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Paul Evert, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Paul Americus Harris, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Jefferson Cleveland Campbell, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Hugh Franklin Conrey, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Edwin Clark Maling, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Richard Head Trippe, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Paul Edward Jackson, Infantry.
 First Lieut. O. D. Wells, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Frank Celestine Meade, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Paul Wallace Cole, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Everett Samuel Prouty, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Charles Speir Lawrence, Infantry.
 First Lieut. John Corwin Shaw, Infantry.
 First Lieut. William Cadwalader Price, jr., Infantry.
 First Lieut. Clarence Matthew Tomlinson, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Eugene Reedy Guild, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Julian Buckner Haddon, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Claude Delorum Collins, Infantry.
 First Lieut. William Hugh Burns, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. William Eldridge Moore, Quartermaster Corps.
 First Lieut. Osborne Cutler Wood, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Clem Oliver Gunn, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Wilber Russell Ellis, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Donald Weldon Brann, Infantry.
 First Lieut. George Bernhard Anderson, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Walter John Wolfe, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Roswell Emory Round, Infantry.
 First Lieut. William J. McChesney, jr., Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Maxwell Michaux Corpening, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Howard Farmer, Quartermaster Corps.
 First Lieut. Clyde Harrison Lamb, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Fred Ross Cowan, Quartermaster Corps.
 First Lieut. Lester Frank Watson, Quartermaster Corps.
 First Lieut. William Edwin Vecqueray, Quartermaster Corps.
 First Lieut. Haynie McCormick, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Arthur Henry Wolf, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Albert Theodore Wilson, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Leonard Vezina, Quartermaster Corps.
 First Lieut. Hartwell Matthew Elder, Quartermaster Corps.
 First Lieut. Housan Wayne Duncan, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Park Holland, Air Service.
 First Lieut. John Gross, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Earle Everette Cox, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Thomas Russell Howard, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Samuel James Adams, Infantry.
 First Lieut. William Henry Webb, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Albert Gillian Kelly, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Wayne McVeigh Pickels, Quartermaster Corps.
 First Lieut. Owen Russell Marriott, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Frank Joseph Vida, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Harold Patrick Henry, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Harry Woldren French, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Dwight Joseph Canfield, Air Service.

First Lieut. Fred Pierce Van Duzee, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Charles Leland Webber, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Arthur Gillette Watson, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Henry Thomson Burtis, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Burns Beall, Infantry.
 First Lieut. John Bartlett Hess, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Allen Francis Haynes, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Harold Gaslin Sydenham, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Hugh Cromer Minter, Air Service.
 First Lieut. George Windle Read, jr., Cavalry.
 First Lieut. James Barlow Cullum, jr., Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Francis Hudson Oxx, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Thomas Henry Stanley, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Donald Greeley White, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Henry George Lambert, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. William Weston Bessell, jr., Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Charles George Holle, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Arthur Martin Andrews, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Edward Crosby Harwood, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. John Wylie Moreland, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Wayne Stewart Moore, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Henry Franklin Hannis, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Arthur Lee McCullough, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Edward Albert Routhenau, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Theodore Temple Knappen, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Godfrey Douglas Adamson, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Wilson Burnett Higgins, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Albert Newell Tanner, jr., Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. William Alter Watson, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Frederic Lord Hayden, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Warren Cressman Rutter, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Harold Frank Handy, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Richard Clare Partridge, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Edward John McGaw, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Harold Thomas Miller, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Volney Archer Poulson, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Tyree Rivers Horn, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. William Chamberlain Coe, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. James Woodrow Clark, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Joseph Leo Langevin, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. William Hardy Hill, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Louis Jacob Claterbos, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Auguste Rhu Taylor, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. James Kenneth Mitchell, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Frank Andrew Henning, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. James Malcolm Lewis, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Bernard Linn Robinson, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. John Robert Culleton, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. James Goodrich Renno, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Charles Steinhart Whitmore, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. James Hobson Stratton, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Lee Armstead Denson, jr., Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Ewart Gladstone Plank, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Lawrence Granger Smith, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Edward Haviland Lastayo, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Alexander Romeyn MacMillan, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Roy Winne Barhydt, Infantry.
 First Lieut. George DeGraaf, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Lathrop Ray Bullene, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. James Alexander Samouce, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. William Wallace Ford, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. George Dewey Vanture, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Pastor Martelino, Philippine Scouts.
 First Lieut. Harry Earl Fisher, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Donald Sylvester Burns, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Donald James Leehey, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Carl Edwin Berg, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Joseph Eugene Harriman, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. George Joseph Loupret, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. William Squires Wood, jr., Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Thomas Arnett Roberts, jr., Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Verne Donald Mudge, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. John Loren Goff, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Francis Henry Morse, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Edward Macon Edmonson, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. William Gordon Holder, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Halstead Clotworthy Fowler, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Lyman Louis Lemnitzer, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Leslie Burgess Downing, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. William Ignatius Brady, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Eugene Martin Link, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Charles Himmier, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. John States Seybold, Corps of Engineers.

First Lieut. Cornelius Garrison, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. William Harry Bartlett, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Donald Breen Herron, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Edward Clinton Gillette, jr., Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Russell Owen Smith, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Freeman Grant Cross, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Rex Van Den Corput, jr., Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Homer Watson Kiefer, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. James Myron McMillin, Chemical Warfare Service.
 First Lieut. Joseph Harris, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. John George Howard, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Ford Trimble, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Robert Hugh Kreuter, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Laurence Wood Bartlett, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Donald Frank Stace, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Reynolds Johnston Burt, jr., Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Edgar Allan Gilbert, jr., Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Leslie Emmett Mabus, Infantry.
 First Lieut. John Dickerson Mitchell, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Clarence Henry Schabacker, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Ewart Jackson Strickland, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Fred Lebbeus Hamilton, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Robert Snyder Trimble, jr., Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. John Francis Cassidy, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. John Foxhall Sturman, jr., Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Joseph Jacob Billo, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Wilbert Engdahl Shallene, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Robert Francis Watt, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Clarence Clemens Clendenen, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. William Carleton McFadden, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Eugene Collum Johnston, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. James Ludwell Lake, jr., Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Hugh Whitaker Winslow, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. James Hess Walker, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Claude Eugene Haswell, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Lyman Lincoln Judge, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Frank Needham Roberts, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Francis Henry Lanahan, jr., Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Lawrence Edward Schick, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Courtney Parker Young, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Henry Chester Hine, jr., Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Charles Frederick Beattie, Infantry.
 First Lieut. John Donald Robertson, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. William Price Withers, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Frederick Robert Pitts, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Sherman Vitus Hasbrouck, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Arthur Kenley Hammond, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Crump Garvin, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Martin Charles Casey, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Hamilton Peyton Ellis, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Thomas Dresser White, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Frederick Mixon Harris, Infantry.
 First Lieut. William Wallace McMillan, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Dwight Acker Rosebaum, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Kenneth Gilpin Hoge, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Donald Robert Van Sickler, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Richard Candler Singer, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. John Henry Hoeffcker Hall, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Aladin James Hart, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Robert Edwards, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Jefferson Denman Box, Infantry.
 First Lieut. William Richter Toney, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Joseph Honore Rousseau, jr., Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Lawrence Joseph Carr, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Maurice Wiley Daniel, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Alexander Hamilton Perwein, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Clovis Ethelbert Byers, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Tracey Enfield Davis, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Oscar Raymond Johnston, Infantry.
 First Lieut. George Andrew Rehm, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Edward Carl Engelhart, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Charles Whitney West, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Park Brown Herrick, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Herbert Carl Reuter, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Helmer William Lystad, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Harold Edward Snyder, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Esber Claflin Burkart, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Thomas Eginton Whitehead, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Alexander George, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Charles Kenon Gailey, jr., Infantry.
 First Lieut. Mortimer Frederick Wakefield, Field Artillery.

First Lieut. Francis William Farrell, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Wilmer Brinton Merritt, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Harry Clark Wisehart, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. John Irvin Gregg, jr., Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Charles Morton Adams, jr., Infantry.
 First Lieut. Frank Hoben Blodgett, Infantry.
 First Lieut. John Ferral McBlain, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Richard Meade Costigan, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Gustave Harold Vogel, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Basil Girard Thayer, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Edward Joseph Sullivan, Chemical Warfare Service.

First Lieut. James Perrine Barney, jr., Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Wilbur Sturtevant Nye, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Charles Harlan Swartz, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Leland Stuart Smith, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Carl Frederick Duffner, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Wilburn Vastine Lunn, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Millard Pierson, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Francis Ward Walker, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Harold Oliver Sand, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Harlan Thurston McCormick, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Henry Peter Burgard, 2d, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Alexander Gilbert Sand, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Ray Olander Welch, Infantry.
 First Lieut. George William Richard Wilson, Infantry.
 First Lieut. John Lamont Davidson, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Julian Erskine Raymond, Infantry.
 First Lieut. George Honnen, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Charles Porter Amazeen, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Edward Thomas Williams, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Frank Thweatt Searcy, Infantry.
 First Lieut. George William Bailey, jr., Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Henry Kirk Williams, jr., Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Alan Lockhart Fulton, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Terrence John Tully, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Paul Clarence Kelly, Infantry.
 First Lieut. James Miller Rudolph, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. William Earl Crist, Infantry.
 First Lieut. William Roe Brewster, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Claude Monroe McQuarrie, Infantry.
 First Lieut. William Lemuel Mitchell, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Harrison Guinther Travis, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Escalus Emmert Elliott, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Milton Cogswell Shattuck, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Joseph Vincent de Paul Dillon, Coast Artillery Corps.

First Lieut. Hayden Adriance Sears, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Newton Navada Jacobs, Infantry.
 First Lieut. John Thomas Lynch, Infantry.
 First Lieut. John Black Reybold, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. John Raul Guiteras, Infantry.
 First Lieut. William Dickey Long, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Henry Irving Hodes, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Paul Earl Tombaugh, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Harvey Kenneth Greenlaw, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. William Joel Tudor Yancey, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Leon Eugene Lichtenwalter, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Sidney Rae Hinds, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Halley Grey Maddox, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Snowden Ager, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. John English Nelson, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Harold Todd Turnbull, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Hugo Peoples Rush, Infantry.
 First Lieut. John William Wofford, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Wray Bertrand Avera, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Charles Fox Ivins, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Walter Daniel Buie, Infantry.
 First Lieut. John Taylor Ward, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. John Elmer Reiersen, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Henry Jackson Hunt, jr., Infantry.
 First Lieut. Mariano S. Sulit, Philippine Scouts.
 First Lieut. George Huston Bare, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Morris Haslett Marcus, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Frank Zea Pirkey, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Karl William Hisgen, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Joseph Patterson Wardlaw, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. James Harry Marsh, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Francis Warren Crary, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. John Baylis Cooley, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Selby Francis Little, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Milo Glen Cary, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Harold Joseph Conway, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Gustin MacAllister Nelson, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Frank Joseph Spettel, Infantry.

First Lieut. Rupert Harris Johnson, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Burwell Baylor Wilkes, jr., Infantry.
 First Lieut. Edward Lowry Traylor, Infantry.
 First Lieut. John Barry Peirce, Infantry.
 First Lieut. James Raymond Goodall, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. John Kenneth Sells, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Douglas Cameron, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Hobert Hayden James, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Eleuterio Susi Yanga, Philippine Scouts.
 First Lieut. Donald Raymond West, Quartermaster Corps.
 First Lieut. Robert Thomas Randel, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Arthur Jennings Grimes, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Walter Duval Webb, jr., Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Ernest Starkey Noon, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Harry Craven Dayton, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Frank Thomas Honsinger, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Edward Charles Engelhardt, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Paul Massillion McConihe, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Chester Arthur Caristen, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Joseph Myles Williams, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Harold Arthur Doherty, Infantry.
 First Lieut. James Thomas Dismuke, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Lewis Eugene Snell, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Stanley Lane Engle, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Arnold Hoyer Rich, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Charles Dawson McAllister, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Vincent Joseph Tanzola, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Edward Albert Banning, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Frederic deLannoy Comfort, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Henry Laurance Ingham, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Thomas Brown Manuel, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Percy Earle LeStourgeon, Infantry.
 First Lieut. George William White, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Russell Harold Swartzwelder, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Caryl Rawson Hazeltine, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Irvin Albert Robinson, Infantry.
 First Lieut. William Hypes Obenour, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Michael Henry Zwicker, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. James Thorburn Cumberpatch, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Ralph Roth Wentz, Ordnance Department.
 First Lieut. Leon Valentine Chaplin, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Daniel Webster Kent, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Harold Goodspeede Laub, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Harry Lynch, Signal Corps.
 First Lieut. George Marion Davis, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Fay Warren Lee, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Keff Dobbs Barnett, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Melecio Manuel Santos, Philippine Scouts.
 First Lieut. Narciso Lopez Manzano, Philippine Scouts.
 First Lieut. Charles Emmett Cheeper, Quartermaster Corps.
 First Lieut. Vesper Anderson Schlenker, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Harry Meyer, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Peter Anthony Feringa, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. John Russell Perkins, jr., Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Edward Barber, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Edward Hall Walter, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. David Albert Morris, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Juan Segundo Moran, Philippine Scouts.
 First Lieut. Paul Cone Parshley, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Lewis Wellington Call, jr., Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Richardson Selee, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Luis Mobo Alba, Philippine Scouts.
 First Lieut. Don Waters Mayhue, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Charles Harold Crim, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. John Harry, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Harold Oakes Bixby, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. John Bruce Medaris, Infantry.
 First Lieut. George Randall Scithers, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. John Henry Featherston, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Charles Andrews Jones, jr., Chemical Warfare Service.

First Lieut. William Conrad Jones, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Hubert Stauffer Miller, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Edward Harold Coe, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Allan Eugene Smith, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Daniel Burnett Knight, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Paul MacKeen Martin, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Creswell Garrettson Blakeney, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Louis Jeter Tatom, Signal Corps.
 First Lieut. George Wythe Bott, jr., Ordnance Department.
 First Lieut. Louis Watkins Prentiss, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. William Edmund Waters, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Joseph Kennard Bush, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Orlando Clarendon Mood, Infantry.
 First Lieut. John Oliver Kelly, Coast Artillery Corps.

First Lieut. Bert Nathan Bryan, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Harvie Rogers Matthews, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Louis Beman Rapp, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Edwards Matthews Quigley, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. James Breckenridge Clearwater, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Joseph Warren Huntress, jr., Quartermaster Corps.

First Lieut. Luther Daniel Wallis, Infantry.
 First Lieut. William Daniel Bradshaw, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Wesley Tate Guest, Signal Corps.
 First Lieut. Duncan Philip Frissell, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Henry Hammond Duval, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Charles Edward Neagle, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. John William Dwyer, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Alfred Vepsala, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Edmund C. Langmead, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Carroll Heiney Deitrick, Ordnance Department.
 First Lieut. Burton Larrabee Pearce, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Alan Dean Whittaker, jr., Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Lee W. Haney, Infantry.
 First Lieut. David William Goodrich, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Franklin Mitchell, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Wallace Ellsworth Niles, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Lewis Edward Weston Lepper, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Edward Harris Barr, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. James Augustus Whelen, jr., Cavalry.
 First Lieut. James Roscoe Hamilton, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Joe Robert Sherr, Signal Corps.
 First Lieut. Henry Chester Jones, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Louis Simelson, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Frank Weddall Simpson, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Louis Leopold Lesser, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Walter Francis Jennings, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Edward Cuyler Applegate, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Henry Louis Love, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Cranford Coleman Bryan Warden, Infantry.
 First Lieut. William Dawes Williams, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. William Thomas Semmes Roberts, Infantry.
 First Lieut. McDonald Donegan Weinert, Infantry.
 First Lieut. John Walker Childs, Signal Corps.
 First Lieut. Carl Emil Hansen, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Charles Donald Clay, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Wilmar Weston Dewitt, Infantry.
 First Lieut. James Milliken Bevans, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Floyd Raymond Brisack, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Clarence Everett Jackson, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Edward Joseph Walsh, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Haydn Purcell Roberts, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Aaron Grayson Dawson, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Alan Sydney Rush, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Clifford Cleophas Duell, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Lauren Blakely Hitchcock, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Thomas Archer Bottomley, Infantry.
 First Lieut. William Orville Collins, Infantry.
 First Lieut. William Larwill Carr, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Russell George Duff, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Ross Clyde Brackney, Infantry.
 First Lieut. John Randolph Reilly, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Roy Prewett Huff, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Herbert John Affleck, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Nicolas Boadilla Dalao, Philippine Scouts.
 First Lieut. Lawrence August Dietz, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Paul Hanes Kemmer, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Elmo Shingle, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Richard Sears, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. John James Baker, Infantry.
 First Lieut. George Louis Boyle, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Robert Brice Johnston, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Paul Ainsworth Berkey, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Robert Clyde Padley, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Dana Gray McBride, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Donald Boyer Phillips, Air Service.
 First Lieut. William Wallace Robertson, Infantry.
 First Lieut. William Peyton Campbell, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Harry Starkey Aldrich, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Hugh Perry Adams, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Cecil Elmore Archer, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Thomas Edward Moore, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Robert Du Val Waring, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Stephen Yates McGiffert, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. John Otis Hyatt, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Louis Meline Merrick, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. LeRoy Ponton de Arce, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Lee Roy Woods, jr., Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Rex Hunter Donaldson, Field Artillery.

First Lieut. Dudley Warren Watkins, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Arthur Nathaniel Willis, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. Lyman Perley Whitten, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Lawrence William Kinney, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Ray Henry Clark, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Homer Wilbur Ferguson, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Earl Albert Hutchings, Infantry.
 First Lieut. James Richmond Simpson, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Philip Schwartz, Ordnance Department.
 First Lieut. Richard Brown Thornton, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Pacifico C. Sevilla, Philippine Scouts.
 First Lieut. Charles Nicholas Senn Ballou, Infantry.
 First Lieut. John Cyril Delaney, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Samuel Rubin, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Donald Wallace Norwood, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Waldon Sharp Lewis, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Andrew Julius Evans, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Paul Corson Howe, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Albert Ruth, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Robert Edward Robillard, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Donald McKechnie Ashton, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Edward Alfred Mueller, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Robert William Calvert Wimsatt, Air Service.
 First Lieut. Amado Martelino, Philippine Scouts.
 First Lieut. Victor Z. Gomez, Philippine Scouts.
 First Lieut. David Theodore Rosenthal, Corps of Engineers.
 First Lieut. Clayton Huddle Studebaker, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Albert James Wick, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Joseph Brenner, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Raymond Taylor Tompkins, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. George Alfred Arnold Jones, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. George Evans Burritt, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. William Madison Mack, Signal Corps.
 First Lieut. Robert Crane Hendley, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Walter J. Klepinger, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Grady David Epps, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Frank Charles McConnell, Coast Artillery Corps.
 First Lieut. Dale Phillip Mason, Signal Corps.
 First Lieut. Donald Fowler Fritch, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Nemeso Catalan, Philippine Scouts.
 First Lieut. James Madison Callcutt, Field Artillery.
 First Lieut. Reginald Pond Lyman, Cavalry.
 First Lieut. James Stuart Wallingford, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Albert Sidney Howell, jr., Infantry.
 First Lieut. John Sharpe Griffith, Infantry.
 First Lieut. Pio Quevedo Caluya, Philippine Scouts.
 First Lieut. George Work Marvin, Infantry.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Capt. Montgomery M. Taylor to be a rear admiral in the Navy from the 1st day of October, 1922.

Capt. Carl T. Vogelgesang to be a rear admiral in the Navy from the 15th day of October, 1922.

The following-named commanders to be captains in the Navy from the 3d day of June, 1922:

Robert L. Berry.
 William R. Sayles, jr.
 Edwin H. Dodd.

Commander Louis Shane, an additional number in grade, to be a captain in the Navy from the 3d day of June, 1922.

Commander John G. Church to be a captain in the Navy from the 1st day of October, 1922.

Commander Herbert C. Cocke to be a captain in the Navy from the 15th day of October, 1922.

Lieut. Commander Leigh M. Stewart to be a commander in the Navy from the 21st day of May, 1922.

The following-named lieutenant commanders to be commanders in the Navy from the 3d day of June, 1922:

Francis M. Robinson.	Damon E. Cummings.
Robert W. Cabaniss.	Warren G. Child.
Weyman P. Beehler.	Bryson Bruce.
Joseph S. Evans.	Vaughn V. Woodward.
Charles A. Dunn.	Robert T. S. Lowell.
Archibald G. Stirling.	Richard S. Edwards.
David A. Scott.	Clyde R. Robinson.
Lemuel M. Stevens.	Irving H. Mayfield.
John W. W. Cumming.	Harvey W. McCormack.
Horace T. Dyer.	Philip H. Hammond.
Russell S. Crenshaw.	John M. Schelling.
Herbert S. Babbitt.	Bert B. Taylor.
Randall Jacobs.

Lieut. Commander William O. Wallace to be a commander in the Navy, from the 7th day of July, 1922.

Lieut. Commander William S. Farber to be a commander in the Navy, from the 15th day of October, 1922.

Lieut. Commander George M. Ravenscroft to be a commander in the Navy, from the 12th day of November, 1922.

Lieut. Ralph E. Sampson to be a lieutenant commander in the Navy, from the 3d day of June, 1921.

Lieut. John R. Peterson, jr., to be a lieutenant commander in the Navy, from the 31st day of December, 1921.

Lieut. Joseph McE. Smith to be a lieutenant commander in the Navy, from the 19th day of April, 1922.

Lieut. George J. McMillin to be a lieutenant commander in the Navy, from the 27th day of April, 1922.

Lieut. William H. O'Brien, jr., to be a lieutenant commander in the Navy, from the 2d day of May, 1922.

Lieut. Howard F. Kingman to be a lieutenant commander in the Navy, from the 17th day of May, 1922.

Lieut. James G. B. Gromer to be a lieutenant commander in the Navy, from the 21st day of May, 1922.

The following named lieutenants to be lieutenant commanders in the Navy, from the 3d day of June, 1922:

William M. Quigley.	Lunsford L. Hunter.
Calvin H. Cobb.	Forrest U. Lake.
Norman Scott.	Elliott Buckmaster.
Richard P. Myers.	Walter S. DeLany.
Howard D. Bode.	Clarence Gulbranson.
Robert M. Doyle, jr.	Donald F. Patterson.
Morton L. Deyo.	Herbert G. Gates, jr.
Robert M. Hinckley.	Louis E. Denfeld.
Charles M. McMorris.	Nathan B. Chase.
John H. Holt, jr.	Alexander W. Loder.
Rivers J. Carstarphen.	Howard H. Good.
Lee C. Carey.	Carleton H. Wright.
Conrad Ridgely.	Herman E. Fischer.
Webb C. Hayes.	James A. Saunders.
Harold E. Snow.	Andrew C. Bennett.
Richard H. Booth.	Oliver W. Bagby.
Harold T. Bartlett.	James C. Clark.
Ralph S. Parr.	Carl G. Gilliland.
Virgil C. Griffin, jr.	Warren A. Shaw.
William A. Corley.	Guy C. Hitchcock.
Benjamin Perlman.	Ralph S. Wentworth.
Ernest G. Small.	Mahlon S. Tisdale.
Robertson J. Weeks.	Davis De Treville.
Harry G. Patrick.	Raymond E. Kerr.
Alfred E. Montgomery.	George H. Fort.
Eugene P. A. Simpson.	Ernest W. Broadbent.
Lawrence P. Bischoff.	Robert R. Thompson.
James C. Monfort.	Nelson W. Hibbs.
Harold Dodd.	Emory P. Eldredge.
Robert A. Hall.	Wentworth H. Osgood.
Anton B. Anderson.	Donald W. Hamilton.
George L. Woodruff.	Heister Hoogewerff.
Fred Welden.	George W. D. Dashiell.
Robert S. Haggart.	George W. La Mountain.
Philip Van Horn Weems.	William S. Hogg, jr.

Lieut. Stephan B. Robinson to be a lieutenant commander in the Navy from the 12th day of July, 1922.

Lieut. William G. Greenman to be a lieutenant commander in the Navy from the 23d day of August, 1922.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Lewis H. McDonald to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 6th day of June, 1920.

The following-named lieutenants (junior grade) to be lieutenants in the Navy from the 1st day of July, 1920:

Marcus C. Miller.
Samuel H. Hurt.

The following-named lieutenants (junior grade) to be lieutenants in the Navy from the 31st day of December, 1921:

William B. Stork.	Dolle Greenwell.
Ralph G. Moody.	Marcus L. Kurtz.
William F. Schlegel.	Homer B. Davis.
Asa Van R. Watson.	John J. Clausey.
Ludwig W. Gumz.	Frederick Petry.
Henry A. Stuart.	Sol Shaw.
Walter B. Buchanan.	Wilmer W. Weber.
Elmer B. Robinson.	Raymond C. McDuffie.
William J. Graham.	Arthur L. Karns.
Clyde Morrison.	John F. W. Gray.
Elijah E. Tompkins.	Edwin Nelson.

The following-named lieutenants (junior grade) to be lieutenants in the Navy from the 1st day of January, 1922:

Percival W. Buzby.
Carl Hupp.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Stephen E. Haddon to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 2d day of January, 1922.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Frank A. Brandecker to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 8th day of January, 1922.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) William E. McClendon to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 1st day of February, 1922.

The following-named lieutenants (junior grade) to be lieutenants in the Navy from the 11th day of February, 1922:

Henry C. Flanagan.
Frank A. Saunders.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Jesse G. McFarland to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 4th day of March, 1922.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) William Wakefield to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 2d day of April, 1922.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Richard C. Bartlett to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 1st day of May, 1922.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) James D. Barner to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 17th day of May, 1922.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Clyde L. Lewis to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 21st day of May, 1922.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Malcolm F. Schoeffel to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 26th day of May, 1922.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Thomas G. W. Settle to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 27th day of May, 1922.

The following-named lieutenants (junior grade) to be lieutenants in the Navy from the 3d day of June, 1922:

Ralph A. Ofstie.	Philip P. Welch.
Herbert M. Scull.	James J. Hughes.
Howard W. Fitch.	John J. Patterson, 3d.
Gordon M. Jackson.	Adrian O. Rule, jr.
William E. Hilbert.	Walther G. Maser.
Albert T. Sprague, 3d.	Walton R. Read.
Thomas P. Jeter.	William E. Tarbutton.
David H. Clark.	Robert M. Smith, jr.
Festus F. Foster.	Paul H. Talbot.
James J. Graham.	Fred W. Beltz.
Valentine H. Schaeffer.	John G. Crawford.
John W. Roper.	James G. Atkins.
Harry B. Slocum.	Cyril K. Wildman.
Harry R. Thurber.	Carleton McGauly.
Lyle N. Morgan.	Giles E. Short.
Cuthbert A. Griffiths.	Harold M. Martin.
Harry M. Jones.	John R. Redman.
Ernest H. von Heimburg.	Arthur P. Thurston.
Douglas A. Powell.	Scott G. Lamb.
Rex L. Hicks.	John H. Cassidy.
Matthias B. Gardner.	Henry R. Herbst.
Creighton C. Carmine.	Henry D. Baggett.
Ernest E. Herrmann.	Ralph W. Hungerford.
Hugh W. Olds.	James D. Lowry, jr.
Hobart A. Sailor.	Eric M. Grimsley.
Adolph O. Gieselmann.	Charles L. Andrews, jr.
Jeffrey C. Metzler.	Alonzo B. Alexander.
Russell M. Ihrlig.	Charles J. Rend.
Ralph H. Roberts.	Henry C. Fengar.
Eugene L. Kell.	Marshall R. Greer.
William C. Vose.	Harry A. Rochester.
Robert P. Briscoe.	Carl K. Fink.
James B. Sykes.	Walter C. Ansel.
Clarence H. Schildhauer.	Miles P. Duval, jr.
Franz O. Willenbacher.	Elmer R. Runquist.
William H. Ferguson.	Daniel M. McGurl.
Morton T. Seligman.	Stephen K. Hall.
John O. Huse.	Robert B. Crichton.
Charles J. Palmer.	James L. Holloway, jr.
Logan C. Ramsey.	John B. McDonald, jr.
William E. Clayton.	Paul D. Dingwell.
Julian B. Noble.	Frank V. Aler, jr.
Elmer R. Hill.	Francis H. Gilmer.
Bayard H. Colyear.	Charles R. Smith.
Charles B. Hunt.	Dixie Kiefer.
Albert P. Burleigh.	John L. Reynolds.
John B. Griggs, jr.	Ross A. Dierdorff.
Eliot H. Bryant.	Herbert S. Woodman.
David S. Crawford.	Desmond J. Sinnott.
Robert L. Boller.	Spencer H. Warner.
Ten Eyck De Witt Veeder, jr.	Robert F. MacNally.
Arthur F. Folz.	Samuel B. Ogden.
Truman E. Ayers.	Charles S. Seely.
Raymond G. Deewall.	William E. Phillips.
Charles M. Johnson.	Earl B. Brix.
Charles F. Waters.	Henry L. Pitts.
Percy A. Decker.	Edward J. Lysaught.
Charles R. Jeffs.	Edward B. Peterson.
DeForest L. Trautman.	Joseph S. Ives.
Walter E. Andrews.	Caleb R. Crandall.
John E. Dingwell.	Raymond E. Farnsworth.
Leslie E. Gehres.	Norman E. Millar.
Leo L. Waite.	Raymond E. Daniels.
George H. Mills.	Lawrence S. Tichenor.
John C. Williams.	Hermann P. Knickerbocker.
Dorrance K. Day.

*Lieut. (Junior Grade) Frederick W. Ickes to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 1st day of July, 1922.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Charles F. Grisham to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 4th day of July, 1922.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Howard R. Shaw to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 16th day of August, 1922.

Ensign Samuel H. Hurt to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy from the 29th day of June, 1920.

Ensign Orrin R. Hewitt to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy from the 31st day of December, 1921.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy from the 31st day of December, 1921:

Thomas Macklin.	James M. MacDonnell.
Robert G. Greenleaf.	Elery A. Zehner.
George D. Samonski.	Elmer J. McCluen.
Ernest W. Dobie.	Francis P. Brewer.
Michael J. Conlon.	Ralph A. Scott.
Frank Schultz.	Emmette F. Gumm.
August Logan.	Frank V. Shepard.
Norman McL. McDonald.	Harry F. Gray.
John P. Millon.	John F. P. Miller.
Alfred Doucet.	Albert R. Colwell.
Everest A. Whited.	Glenn O. Twiss.
George T. Campbell.	William P. Turner.
Warwick M. Tinsley.	Alfred R. Boileau.
John F. Piotrowski.	Thomas Fertner.
William K. Johnstone.	Carter E. Parker.
Clarence H. Fogg.	Joe S. Wier.
Abram L. Broughton.	Carl I. Ostrom.
William Klaus.	Brady J. Dayton.
Harold F. MacHugh.	Arthur D. Murray.
Loar Mansbach.	Joseph A. Clark.
William J. Russell.	Thom H. Williamson.
Clarence A. Hawkins.	George H. Toepfer.
William J. Poland.	Harry A. Wentworth.
Emil H. Petri.	Edward Danielson.
Harold Bye.	Ira W. Truitt.
George H. Turner.	Arthur Brown.
Percy S. Hogarth.	Philip L. Emerson.
John L. Graham.	Lawrence K. Beaver.
Ralph M. Gerth.	Charlie S. East.
Stockard R. Hickey.	John E. Canoose.
Benjamin J. Shinn.	William M. McDade.
Howard E. Haynes.	John C. Redman.
Frederick J. Silvernail.	John B. McGovern.
Andrew Simmons.	Philip H. Taft.
Charles W. Van Horn.	Thomas J. Eggleston.
William D. Dadd.	Rudolph Oeser.
David F. Mead.	Robert H. Barnes.
George W. Waldo.	Ewell K. Jett.
William T. Shaw.	Rudolph P. Bielka.
James D. Brown.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy from the 1st day of January, 1922:

William R. Dolan.
Maxemillian B. De Leshe.
Thomas O. Brandon.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy from the 31st day of January, 1922:

Roger K. Hodsdon.	William N. Thornton.
Terence W. Greene.	Burton E. Rokes.
Ernest V. Abrams.	Donald R. Comstock.
Lloyd K. Cleveland.	Edgar V. Carrithers.
Rodney H. Dobson.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy from the 1st day of February, 1922:

Dennis B. Boykin.
Martin Nyburg.
William F. Skyles.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy from the 1st day of March, 1922:

Ashton B. Smith.
George Walker.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy from the 22d day of April, 1922:

George L. Bright.	John D. Murphy.
William G. Dow.	Robert E. Permut.
Harold B. Herty.	Harold B. Corwin.
Samuel S. Fried.	John A. Pierson.
Charles R. Price.	Charles H. Ross.
Thomas J. Bay.	George K. G. Reilly.
Edgar L. Adams.	Paul G. Wrenn.
Paul L. Mather.	James S. Warner.
Floyd J. Nuber.	William M. M. Lobrano.
Edwin C. Millhouse.	Alan F. Winslow.

Charles R. Will.
Robert K. Madsen, jr.
Harold W. Alden.
Arthur W. Peterson.
George E. Twining.
Charles C. Ferrenz.
James B. Bliss.
Robert W. Boughter.
George E. Kenyon.
Benton B. Baker.
Clifford B. Schiano.
Albert R. Buehler.
Thomas F. Hayes.
Herbert Loewy.
Robert F. Stockin.
Florentin P. Wencker.
Charles D. Hickox.
Malcolm D. MacGregor.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy from the 2d day of May, 1922:

Laurence Bennett.
Albert M. Van Eaton.
Harold J. Bellingham.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy from the 10th day of May, 1922:

Sumner C. Cheever.
Albert E. Conlon.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy from the 7th day of June, 1922:

Emmet P. Forrestel.
George M. Dusenberre.
William Sinton.
Abel C. J. Sabalot.
Virgil E. Korns.
William E. A. Mullan.
Frank Rorschach, jr.
George H. Dana.
Kendall S. Reed.
Donald T. Whitmer.
Ernest W. Litch.
Burton L. Hunter, jr.
Sam L. LaHache.
John W. Marts, jr.
Benton W. Decker.
John P. Curtis.
Warner W. Angerer.
Richard S. Morse.
Charles S. Beightler.
William W. Fife.
Herbert Finebaum.
Mead S. Pearson.
Harold R. Parker.
Clarence F. Swanson.
Lewis Corman.
Edwin F. Conway.
Horace Burrough, 3d.
Kenneth E. Brimmer.
Roscoe H. Hillenkoetter.
Clarence J. Ballreich.
George F. Prestwich.
Mark H. Harrington.
Asel B. Kerr.
William I. Leahy.
Allen P. Mullinnix.
William B. Goggins.
Charles B. Momsen.
Roger Brooks.
Morton B. Sterling.
William G. Tomlinson.
John P. Graff.
Richard C. Wiestling.
Harvey Wilson.
Robert C. Warrack.
Douglass P. Johnson.
William H. Wallace.
Charles B. Gary.
Carroll L. Tyler.
Samuel W. Canan.
John P. Vetter.
Harold C. Fitz.
Fridthjof W. Londahl.
Henry N. Mergen.
Olin R. Miner.
Lyman S. Perry.
Frank C. L. Dettmann.

Russell D. Bell.
Henry L. Naff.
Clyde A. Coggins.
Otto F. Johanns.
John F. Wegforth.
Frederick L. Farrell.
John A. Paulson.
William B. Coleman.
Elder P. Johnson.
Benjamin C. Purrington.
Harold J. Walker.
Arthur H. Small.
Ralph W. Bowers.
Anton L. Mare.
Le Roy A. Nelson.
Louis C. De Rochemont.
Edward R. J. Griffin.
Emanuel Taylor.

John E. Gabrielson.
George C. Weldin.

Marion E. Crist.
Alva J. Spriggs.
Donald R. Osborn, jr.
Morris B. Myers.
LaRue C. Lawbaugh.
Edward E. Pare.
William A. P. Martin, jr.
Richard Highleyman.
Walter H. Roberts.
John Perry.
Oberlin C. Laird.
Thomas S. Combs.
Frederick V. Barker.
George P. Kraker.
Robert E. Melling.
Michael D. Dearth.
George E. Rosenberry.
Herbert G. Hopwood.
Henry G. Chalkley, jr.
James B. Donnelly.
Robert H. Smith.
John F. Gillon.
Rockwell J. Townsend.
Russell Keith.
Charles C. Hartman.
Alf O. R. Bergesen.
Barnett T. Talbot.
Robert P. Erdman.
Charles R. Skinner.
George F. Burdick.
Ellsworth D. McEathron.
Allen Hobbs.
John C. Webb.
John E. Shoemaker.
Earl R. DeLong.
Theodore G. Haff.
William J. Strother, jr.
Francis B. Stodert.
John W. Higley.
Neill D. Brantly.
Horton I. Booker.
George B. Cunningham.
Edwin C. Bain.
Norman S. Ives.
Chester A. Swafford.
Clayton S. Isgrig.
Harold Coldwell.
James H. McKay.
Frank H. Conant, 2d.
Frederick R. Buse.
Hugh P. Kirby.
Jewett P. Moncure.
Amariah B. Cartwright.
Thomas T. Craven.
Orin S. Haskell.
Maurice E. Hatch.

Carleton C. Champion, jr.
Merrill F. Sproul.
Drayton Harrison.
Maurice E. Curts.
William H. Buracker.
Eugene F. Burkett.
Charles T. Wooten.
Clyde W. Smith.
Dixwell Ketcham.
Cato D. Glover, jr.
Charles M. Huntington.
Oliver W. Gaines.
Harry H. Hill.
Edwin L. Brashears.
James M. Plaskitt.
Paul W. Steinhagen.
Vilas R. Knope.
Francis P. Old.
Norman B. Hopkins.
Melvin H. Bassett.
William B. Broadhurst.
Benjamin P. Ward.
Milton D. Goldsmith.
Robert P. Cunningham.
William A. P. Thompson.
Jesse B. Goode.
Clarence McM. Head.
John M. Thornton.
William D. Fletcher.
Howard C. Rule, jr.
Thomas S. Thorne.
George H. Gregory.
Maurice Montgomery.
John B. Lyon.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy from the 15th day of June, 1922:

Jesse G. Johnson.
Joseph J. Rochefort.
William J. Medusky.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy from the 1st day of August, 1922:

Cecil E. Godkin.
Herbert C. Behner.
Roland E. Krause.

Ensign John H. Hykes to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy from the 1st day of September, 1922.

The following-named midshipmen to be ensigns in the Navy from the 3d day of June, 1922:

William F. Jennings.
Corydon H. Kimball.

Surg. Richard A. Warner to be a medical inspector in the Navy with the rank of commander from the 28th day of August, 1922.

The following-named passed assistant surgeons to be surgeons in the Navy with the rank of lieutenant commander from the 3d day of June, 1922:

Ruskin M. Lhamon.
Carleton I. Wood.
William H. Michael.

Clarence W. Ross.
Roscoe M. Waterhouse.
Talmadge Wilson.

The following-named assistant surgeons to be passed assistant surgeons in the Navy with the rank of lieutenant from the 6th day of December, 1920:

Francis C. Hertzog.
Deane H. Vance.

Asst. Surg. Hillard L. Weer to be a passed assistant surgeon in the Navy with the rank of lieutenant from the 1st day of July, 1920.

Asst. Surg. Jerome Braun to be a passed assistant surgeon in the Navy with the rank of lieutenant from the 8th day of July, 1922.

Asst. Surg. David B. Peters to be a passed assistant surgeon in the Navy with the rank of lieutenant from the 16th day of August, 1922.

Passed Asst. Surg. Nathaniel C. Rubinsky, of the United States Naval Reserve Force, to be an assistant surgeon in the Navy with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) from the 14th day of September, 1922.

Acting Asst. Surg. Earl B. Erskine to be an assistant surgeon in the Navy with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) from the 19th day of September, 1922.

James F. Finnegan, a citizen of California, to be an assistant surgeon in the Navy with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) from the 3d day of November, 1922.

Edmond P. Speight.
Raleigh B. Miller.
Charles C. Anderson.
Ericson Lewis.
James L. Wyatt.
Frederick W. Roberts.
Harry D. Power.
Gordon A. Patterson.
Austin K. Doyle.
Ralph Humphreys.
Thomas C. Scaffa.
Harold R. Brookman.
James H. Doyle.
Charles D. Murphey.
Sumner T. Scott.
Solomon S. Isquith.
Armon D. A. Crawford.
Bailey Connelly.
Gyle D. Conrad.
John A. McDonnell.
Benjamin N. Ward.
Ferguson B. Bryan.
William G. Livingstone.
Harley F. Cope.
James D. Haselden, jr.
Wade DeWeese.
Allan D. Blackledge.
Charles A. Collins.
Khem W. Palmer.
Elmer Kiehl.
Justin D. Hartford.
Hilyer F. Gearing.
Francis W. Beard.

Asst. Dental Surg. Joseph W. Baker, jr., to be a passed assistant dental surgeon in the Navy with the rank of lieutenant from the 11th day of October, 1922.

Pay Inspector David V. Chadwick to be a pay director in the Navy with the rank of captain from the 26th day of August, 1922.

Pay Inspector David M. Addison to be a pay director in the Navy with the rank of captain from the 2d day of November, 1922.

Pay Inspector Victor S. Jackson to be a pay director in the Navy with the rank of captain from the 12th day of November, 1922.

Paymaster William N. Hughes to be a pay inspector in the Navy with the rank of Commander from the 26th day of August, 1922.

Paymaster Harold W. Browning to be a pay inspector in the Navy with the rank of commander from the 2d day of November, 1922.

Paymaster Emory D. Stanley to be a pay inspector in the Navy with the rank of commander from the 12th day of November, 1922.

Asst. Paymaster Dillon F. Zimmerman to be a passed assistant paymaster in the navy with the rank of lieutenant from the 31st day of December, 1921.

The following-named assistant paymasters to be passed assistant paymasters in the Navy with the rank of lieutenant from the 3d day of June, 1922:

Alexander Riggan.
Frederick Schwab.
Robert J. Monteith.
Harold R. Lehmann.
Myron W. Willard.
John H. Gallion.
Hugh A. Phares.
James E. Brennen.
Mason E. Mitchell.
George E. Duffy.
Robert G. Robeson.
Raphael Gering.
Fillmore S. C. Layman.
Leon I. Smith.
Archie A. Antrim.
Harold E. Humphreys.
Percy W. McCord.
Tipton F. Woodward.
George P. Smallman.
Chris J. Norstad.
Charles A. Cook.
Samuel L. Bates.

Gordon S. Bower.
Harry G. Kinnard.
William E. McCain.
Theodore M. Stock.
Stanford G. Chapman.
Alexander W. Urquhart.
Howard N. Hill.
Cornelius A. Brinkmann.
Jacob H. Kyger.
Marvin McCray.
George L. Thomas.
John C. Poshepny.
Harry F. Hake.
Percival F. Patten.
Grandison J. Tyler.
Chester B. Peake.
Hugh J. McManus.
John J. Carroll.
Leo V. Flavell.
Albert W. Eldred.
Joseph T. Lareau.
Roy L. Koester.

The following-named assistant paymasters to be passed assistant paymasters in the Navy, with the rank of lieutenant, from the 1st day of July, 1922:

Clarence E. Kastenbein.
George Scratchley.
Charles B. Forrest.
Orville F. Byrd.
Daniel L. McCarthy.
Harry A. Miller.
Harvey R. Dye.

James H. Stevens.
Ellsworth F. Sparks.
John P. Killeen.
Charles H. Gillilan.
Leon Dancer.
Joseph W. Cavanaugh.
Verny Carroll.

The following-named assistant paymasters to be passed assistant paymasters in the Navy, with the rank of lieutenant, from the 8th day of July, 1922:

Ervine R. Brown.
Ray E. Snedaker.
William W. Wise.
Don M. Robinson.
Robert H. Lenson.
Edward F. Ney.

Charles Schaaf.
George W. Davis.
Guild Bruda.
Alvin S. Reid.
Robert R. Blaisdell.

Assistant Paymaster Walter Guerry to be a passed assistant paymaster in the Navy, with the rank of lieutenant, from the 16th day of August, 1922.

Chaplain Edmund A. Brodmann to be a chaplain in the Navy, with the rank of captain, from the 6th day of November, 1920.

Chaplain Le Roy N. Taylor to be a chaplain in the Navy, with the rank of captain, from the 22d day of November, 1921.

Chaplain Thomas B. Thompson to be a chaplain in the Navy, with the rank of commander, from the 28th day of July, 1921.

Chaplain John J. Brady to be a chaplain in the Navy, with the rank of commander, from the 23d day of November, 1921.

The following-named boatswains to be chief boatswains in the Navy, to rank with but after ensign, from the 6th day of February, 1921:

William E. Benson.
Fred C. A. Plagemann.

Boatswain Wildon A. Ott to be a chief boatswain in the Navy, to rank with but after ensign, from the 16th day of December, 1921.

Machinist John A. Silva to be a chief machinist in the Navy, to rank with but after ensign, from the 28th day of December, 1920.

Pay Clerk Merle W. Shumate to be a chief pay clerk in the Navy, to rank with but after ensign, from the 6th day of July, 1922.

Lieut. Allen H. Guthrie to be a lieutenant commander in the Navy, from the 3d day of June, 1922.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy, from the 1st day of June, 1922:

Joseph E. Jackson.	Forrest A. Rhoads.
William W. Behrens.	Raymond A. McClellan.
Nullet F. Schneider.	Gordon T. House.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

Warren L. Hollingsworth to be postmaster at Lincoln, Ala. Office became presidential October 1, 1919.

Eva M. Ellison to be postmaster at Empire, Ala. Office became presidential April 1, 1922.

Fred D. Perkins to be postmaster at Wetumpka, Ala., in place of M. E. Cain, resigned.

Albert N. Holland to be postmaster at Scottsboro, Ala., in place of J. B. Tally, jr. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Ed P. Johnson to be postmaster at Samson, Ala., in place of J. T. Farmer. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Tyler M. Swann to be postmaster at Roanoke, Ala., in place of L. M. Stevenson. Incumbent's commission expired February 19, 1922.

Walter T. Cowan to be postmaster at Orrville, Ala., in place of W. T. Cowan. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Lee M. Otts to be postmaster at Greensboro, Ala., in place of L. M. Otts. Incumbent's commission expired August 29, 1922.

John M. Stapleton to be postmaster at Foley, Ala., in place of L. E. Wolbrink. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Mary D. Bass to be postmaster at Butler, Ala., in place of T. W. Bass, deceased.

Fred M. Fitts to be postmaster at Alabama City, Ala., in place of Y. E. Adams. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

ARIZONA.

Winchester Dickerson to be postmaster at Ashfork, Ariz., in place of Winchester Dickerson. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

ARKANSAS.

Alexander R. Mullins to be postmaster at Emerson, Ark. Office became presidential April 1, 1922.

James S. Burnett to be postmaster at Clinton, Ark. Office became presidential October 1, 1922.

James F. Hudson to be postmaster at Lake Village, Ark., in place of Hermion Carlton, resigned.

Cooper Hudspeth to be postmaster at Nashville, Ark., in place of W. P. Williams. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

James G. Brown to be postmaster at Magnolia, Ark., in place of O. D. Boreing. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

George H. Rule, jr., to be postmaster at Lonoke, Ark., in place of G. H. Rule, jr. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

William B. Pape to be postmaster at Fort Smith, Ark., in place of A. L. Peachier, resigned.

John C. Wish to be postmaster at Cabot, Ark., in place of L. M. Burge. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

CALIFORNIA.

Paul Huneke to be postmaster at Lemoncove, Calif. Office became presidential October 1, 1922.

Edna J. McGowan to be postmaster at Belmont, Calif. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Bernice C. Downing to be postmaster at Santa Clara, Calif., in place of C. D. South. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Bert C. McMurray to be postmaster at Lancaster, Calif., in place of W. M. Redman. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Ida P. Durkee to be postmaster at Newport Beach, Calif., in place of L. S. Wilkinson, resigned.

Kathleen M. Fleming to be postmaster at Lincoln, Calif., in place of K. M. Fleming. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Hazel M. McFarland to be postmaster at Folsom City, Calif., in place of W. H. Comstock. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Fred W. Busey to be postmaster at Balboa, Calif., in place of P. J. Wilson, resigned.

John W. Drane to be postmaster at Alturas, Calif., in place of G. M. Kemble. Incumbent's commission expired May 20, 1922.

COLORADO.

John H. O'Connell to be postmaster at Sugar City, Colo., in place of H. E. Farr. Incumbent's commission expired August 25, 1920.

William H. Cochran, jr., to be postmaster at Del Norte, Colo., in place of R. W. Tandy, resigned.

CONNECTICUT.

Michael J. Kenney to be postmaster at Mechanicsville, Conn. Office became presidential July 1, 1922.

W. Kenneth Avery to be postmaster at Granby, Conn. Office became presidential October 1, 1922.

Alfred A. Barrett to be postmaster at Berlin, Conn. Office became presidential October 1, 1922.

W. Frank Smith to be postmaster at Wallingford, Conn., in place of E. C. Cox. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

W. Gardiner Davis to be postmaster at Pomfret Center, Conn., in place of F. O. Davis. Incumbent's commission expired January 2, 1921.

Irving S. Cook to be postmaster at Higganum, Conn., in place of H. F. Spencer. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

DELAWARE.

Stanley S. Stevens to be postmaster at Delaware City, Del., in place of A. L. Swan. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

FLORIDA.

Grady W. Bailey to be postmaster at Florence Villa, Fla. Office became presidential April 1, 1922.

Maxfield Sellers to be postmaster at White Springs, Fla., in place of O. K. Paxton, jr. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Thomas W. Lundy to be postmaster at Perry, Fla., in place of L. M. Caswell. Incumbent's commission expired January 31, 1922.

Albert L. Lucas to be postmaster at Ocala, Fla., in place of R. F. Rogers. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Jesse D. Knight to be postmaster at Lake Butler, Fla., in place of S. E. Driggers. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Charles R. Lee to be postmaster at Clearwater, Fla., in place of W. A. Davis. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Clarence J. Carlton to be postmaster at Arcadia, Fla., in place of W. M. Platt. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

GEORGIA.

Kelly W. Liles, jr., to be postmaster at White Oak, Ga. Office became presidential April 1, 1922.

Thomas H. Anthony to be postmaster at Shellman, Ga., in place of H. O. Crittendon. Incumbent's commission expired February 18, 1922.

Frederick Bonner to be postmaster at Perry, Ga., in place of J. H. Hodges. Incumbent's commission expired September 28, 1922.

Olin Robinson to be postmaster at Milledgeville, Ga., in place of J. D. Howard. Incumbent's commission expired October 3, 1921.

Susie D. Sims to be postmaster at Lawrenceville, Ga., in place of H. R. Chesnutt, removed.

Augustus R. Williamson to be postmaster at Jefferson, Ga., in place of R. D. Moore. Incumbent's commission expired September 28, 1922.

John C. Massey to be postmaster at Hartwell, Ga., in place of J. L. Teasley. Incumbent's commission expired September 26, 1922.

Albert M. Seifert to be postmaster at Fort Valley, Ga., in place of F. S. Murray. Incumbent's commission expired September 26, 1922.

George W. Pease to be postmaster at Demorest, Ga., in place of W. H. McMillion. Incumbent's commission expired September 28, 1922.

Charles E. Walton to be postmaster at Columbus, Ga., in place of J. P. Turner. Incumbent's commission expired September 28, 1922.

Annie K. Bunn to be postmaster at Cedartown, Ga., in place of A. K. Bunn. Incumbent's commission expired September 28, 1922.

Will E. Davis to be postmaster at Boston, Ga., in place of J. B. Rountree. Incumbent's commission expired September 26, 1922.

William F. Boone to be postmaster at Baxley, Ga., in place of W. F. Boone. Incumbent's commission expired September 26, 1922.

HAWAII.

Edward D. Quinn to be postmaster at Kohala, Hawaii, in place of C. R. Jardin, resigned.

IDAHO.

Charles B. Billups to be postmaster at Nezperce, Idaho, in place of J. W. Anderson. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

ILLINOIS.

Harry R. Smith to be postmaster at Manlius, Ill. Office became presidential April 1, 1922.

Edwin G. Meyer to be postmaster at Valmeyer, Ill. Office became presidential January 1, 1922.

Peter J. McKinney to be postmaster at Ogden, Ill. Office became presidential October 1, 1922.

Walter J. Holt to be postmaster at Hanna City, Ill. Office became presidential April 1, 1922.

Frank W. A. Noll to be postmaster at Franklin Park, Ill. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

C. Ray Chrisman to be postmaster at Ewing, Ill. Office became presidential October 1, 1922.

Orlando H. Akin to be postmaster at Kirkwood, Ill., in place of M. S. McClymonds, resigned.

Burton A. Blake to be postmaster at Tiskilwa, Ill., in place of P. H. Fitzgerald. Incumbent's commission expired March 4, 1922.

Jennie McNulty to be postmaster at South Wilmington, Ill., in place of Jennie McNulty. Incumbent's commission expired October 24, 1922.

Franklin S. Lyman to be postmaster at Oak Forest, Ill., in place of F. S. Lyman. Incumbent's commission expired October 24, 1922.

Milton G. Hartenbower to be postmaster at Lostant, Ill., in place of J. E. Conlin, removed.

INDIANA.

Joseph E. Lewis to be postmaster at Williamsport, Ind., in place of L. J. Etnire. Incumbent's commission expired May 25, 1922.

Charles A. Thompson to be postmaster at Rockville, Ind., in place of L. B. Humphries. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Jacob Ochs, jr., to be postmaster at Remington, Ind., in place of Dennis O'Riley. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Ben Price, jr., to be postmaster at Monticello, Ind., in place of J. P. Simons, deceased.

James C. Brown to be postmaster at Salem, Ind., in place of C. R. Morris. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Floyd E. Leonard to be postmaster at Mulberry, Ind., in place of R. C. Pickle. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Charles A. McClintock to be postmaster at Lynn, Ind., in place of C. T. Hoover. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Ben Havens to be postmaster at Kokomo, Ind., in place of C. H. Havens. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Edward A. Spray to be postmaster at Frankfort, Ind., in place of H. A. Flora. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Robert E. Black to be postmaster at Corydon, Ind., in place of F. E. Watson, resigned.

Fred Irvin to be postmaster at Cannelton, Ind., in place of C. F. Gerber, jr. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Benjamin F. Pitman to be postmaster at Bedford, Ind., in place of C. A. Durrenberger. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

IOWA.

Frank D. Thomsen to be postmaster at Kimballton, Iowa. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Anna M. Beck to be postmaster at Solon, Iowa, in place of A. M. Beck. Incumbent's commission expired November 21, 1922.

Harry Carver to be postmaster at Fontanelle, Iowa, in place of Jay Sullivan. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Arden W. Keeney to be postmaster at Carlisle, Iowa, in place of J. S. Webster. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Hazel N. Chapman to be postmaster at Bagley, Iowa, in place of C. A. Hidlebaugh. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Ava Rigdon to be postmaster at Menlo, Iowa, in place of L. M. Bond. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Laura H. Figert to be postmaster at Marathon, Iowa, in place of L. H. Figert. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Kate C. Warner to be postmaster at Dayton, Iowa, in place of K. C. Warner. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

KANSAS.

Belford A. Likes to be postmaster at Pomona, Kans., in place of J. H. Parkinson. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

Lee Mobley to be postmaster at Weir, Kans., in place of Celia Hughes. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

William A. Walt to be postmaster at Thayer, Kans., in place of Fred Powell. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

James M. Kersey to be postmaster at Parsons, Kans., in place of L. A. Walker. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1922.

John Malone to be postmaster at National Military Home, Kans., in place of J. T. Brothers. Incumbent's commission expired January 12, 1919.

KENTUCKY.

Eugene E. Johnson to be postmaster at White Plains, Ky. Office became presidential July 1, 1921.

Zelmer R. Hill to be postmaster at Jamestown, Ky. Office became presidential April 1, 1922.

Zorayda Cochran to be postmaster at Maysville, Ky., in place of M. F. Kehoe. Incumbent's commission expired October 3, 1922.

John B. Searcy to be postmaster at Lawrenceburg, Ky., in place of J. R. Paxton. Incumbent's commission expired October 24, 1922.

LOUISIANA.

Owen N. Jones to be postmaster at Good Pine, La. Office became presidential January 1, 1922.

Walter L. Huckabay to be postmaster at Bienville, La. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Robert D. Crowell to be postmaster at Meridian, La., in place of Wilson Ardoin, not commissioned.

Lillian D. Gayle to be postmaster at Independence, La., in place of L. D. Gayle. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

MAINE.

Ray Winchenpaw to be postmaster at Friendship, Me. Office became presidential October 1, 1922.

Jesse B. Crosby to be postmaster at Dennysville, Me. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

William C. Flint to be postmaster at Waldoboro, Me., in place of P. E. Storer. Incumbent's commission expired September 28, 1922.

Harold N. Libby to be postmaster at Richmond, Me., in place of Morrill McKenney. Incumbent's commission expired September 28, 1922.

Philip F. Stone to be postmaster at Norway, Me., in place of F. E. DeCoster. Incumbent's commission expired September 28, 1922.

Ellsworth W. Sawyer to be postmaster at Kezar Falls, Me., in place of E. W. Sawyer. Incumbent's commission expired September 28, 1922.

Reuel Robinson to be postmaster at Camden, Me., in place of J. H. Hobbs. Incumbent's commission expired September 28, 1922.

Ferdinand E. Stevens to be postmaster at Auburn, Me., in place of A. T. Hicks. Incumbent's commission expired September 28, 1922.

Charles C. Hoyt to be postmaster at South Brewer, Me., in place of O. C. Verow. Incumbent's commission expired September 28, 1922.

Edward I. Waddell to be postmaster at Presque Isle, Me., in place of V. E. Howe. Incumbent's commission expired September 28, 1922.

Leonard O. Meader to be postmaster at North Berwick, Me., in place of W. I. Johnson. Incumbent's commission expired September 28, 1922.

Maud E. Pierce to be postmaster at Mars Hill, Me., in place of B. F. Pierce. Incumbent's commission expired September 28, 1922.

Albert A. Weatherbee to be postmaster at Lincoln, Me., in place of H. L. Pinkham, resigned.

Dana C. Skillin to be postmaster at Hallowell, Me., in place of J. E. Murphy. Incumbent's commission expired September 28, 1922.

Zaidee P. Campbell to be postmaster at Jackman, Me., in place of T. M. Nichols, resigned.

Preston N. Burleigh to be postmaster at Houlton, Me., in place of Dennis Sheehan. Incumbent's commission expired September 28, 1922.

Omar J. Lombard to be postmaster at Guilford, Me., in place of J. S. Williams. Incumbent's commission expired September 28, 1922.

John A. Babb to be postmaster at Dixfield, Me., in place of M. M. Holland. Incumbent's commission expired September 28, 1922.

Almon R. Page to be postmaster at Dexter, Me., in place of F. J. Carsley. Incumbent's commission expired September 28, 1922.

Chandler M. Wilson to be postmaster at Bucksport, Me., in place of R. P. Freeman. Incumbent's commission expired September 28, 1922.

Henry A. Saunders to be postmaster at Blue Hill, Me., in place of Harry Hinckley. Incumbent's commission expired September 28, 1922.

Bert H. Young to be postmaster at Bar Harbor, Me., in place of O. H. Jellison, resigned.

MARYLAND.

Nettie Fowler to be postmaster at Bowie, Md. Office became presidential July 1, 1922.

Victor F. Cullen to be postmaster at State Sanatorium, Md., in place of V. F. Cullen. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Leslie W. Gaver to be postmaster at Middletown, Md., in place of G. W. Kefauver. Incumbent's commission expired September 25, 1922.

Robert H. Phillips to be postmaster at Salisbury, Md., in place of S. K. White. Incumbent's commission expired February 28, 1920.

John W. Payne to be postmaster at Preston, Md., in place of J. F. Lednum. Incumbent's commission expired January 30, 1921.

Everett M. Layton to be postmaster at Berlin, Md., in place of T. Y. Franklin. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Walter C. Wright to be postmaster at Graniteville, Mass. Office became presidential October 1, 1922.

August J. Formhals to be postmaster at Erving, Mass. Office became presidential July 1, 1922.

Clarence E. Arnold to be postmaster at Hopedale, Mass., in place of G. P. Sheldon, deceased.

MICHIGAN.

James R. Taylor to be postmaster at Romulus, Mich. Office became presidential October 1, 1922.

Arthur Locke to be postmaster at Middleton, Mich. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Milan A. Smith to be postmaster at Morenci, Mich., in place of I. G. Metcalf. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

Edward F. Blake to be postmaster at Middleville, Mich., in place of C. F. Parker. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

Roland M. Krise to be postmaster at Marcellus, Mich., in place of W. M. Beadle. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

Henry E. Cowdin to be postmaster at Carson City, Mich., in place of A. B. Goodwin. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

William R. Bryce to be postmaster at Yale, Mich., in place of E. W. Farley, resigned.

James V. Baker to be postmaster at South Lyon, Mich., in place of H. C. Stevenson. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

Thomas S. Scupholm to be postmaster at Port Huron, Mich., in place of J. S. Wittliff. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

Floyd B. Babcock to be postmaster at Pontiac, Mich., in place of E. E. Hymers. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

George H. Steadman to be postmaster at Lyons, Mich., in place of C. O. Miller, resigned.

Walter G. Rogers to be postmaster at Lansing, Mich., in place of P. F. Gray. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

Henry F. Voelker to be postmaster at Ionia, Mich., in place of H. E. Kidder. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

Irvin B. Dayharsh to be postmaster at Hart, Mich., in place of F. P. Hilbourn. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

Ernest E. Yerdon to be postmaster at Fenton, Mich., in place of F. A. Chapin. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

Louis Gee to be postmaster at Farwell, Mich., in place of E. W. Brown, resigned.

Asa B. Freeman to be postmaster at Durand, Mich., in place of F. H. Healy. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

Jesse A. Richardson to be postmaster at Corunna, Mich., in place of F. H. Pettibone. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

Charles H. Haley to be postmaster at Coleman, Mich., in place of W. W. Simons. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

Clarence D. Kent to be postmaster at Buchanan, Mich., in place of J. C. Rough, resigned.

Duncan A. McKeith to be postmaster at Brown City, Mich., in place of W. H. Cronin. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

Charles F. Waldie to be postmaster at Bancroft, Mich., in place of G. M. Harrington. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

MINNESOTA.

Herman J. Ricker to be postmaster at Freeport, Minn. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

Almer B. Nelson to be postmaster at Warren, Minn., in place of C. A. Tullar. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

MISSISSIPPI.

Anne D. Powers to be postmaster at Cary, Miss. Office became presidential April 1, 1922.

Melzar J. Nye to be postmaster at Carrollton, Miss., in place of Henrietta Welch. Incumbent's commission expired July 21, 1921.

MISSOURI.

James E. Roark to be postmaster at Anderson, Mo., in place of J. F. Kincannon. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Loyd R. Kirtley to be postmaster at Madison, Mo., in place of C. G. Eubank, resigned.

John A. Griesel to be postmaster at Golden City, Mo., in place of J. K. Scott. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

NEBRASKA.

Mary E. Rushart to be postmaster at Fort Crook, Nebr., in place of M. E. Rushart. Incumbent's commission expired October 3, 1922.

NEVADA.

Austin Jackson to be postmaster at Reno, Nev., in place of F. L. White. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Frank E. West to be postmaster at Lyme, N. H. Office became presidential October 1, 1922.

Nellie L. Mason to be postmaster at Greenfield, N. H. Office became presidential October 1, 1922.

Orriman Whipple to be postmaster at Sugar Hill, N. H. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

NEW JERSEY.

Charles Place to be postmaster at Rosemont, N. J. Office became presidential October 1, 1922.

James T. Chapman to be postmaster at Sea Isle City, N. J., in place of T. E. Ludlam, resigned.

Alfred W. Marshall to be postmaster at Glassboro, N. J., in place of G. M. Keebler. Incumbent's commission expired January 8, 1921.

NEW MEXICO.

Augustin F. Sisneros to be postmaster at Espanola, N. Mex., in place of F. R. Frankenburger. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

NEW YORK.

John A. Goetzmann to be postmaster at West Webster, N. Y. Office became presidential July 1, 1922.

Gertrude S. Ryder to be postmaster at Blue Point, N. Y. Office became presidential October 1, 1922.

William Sanford to be postmaster at Savona, N. Y., in place of W. M. Wagner. Incumbent's commission expired June 27, 1920.

Charles W. Fletcher to be postmaster at Montour Falls, N. Y., in place of C. L. Doolittle. Incumbent's commission expired September 19, 1922.

Gottlieb H. Morris to be postmaster at Lynbrook, N. Y., in place of W. C. Box. Incumbent's commission expired October 24, 1922.

William D. Walling to be postmaster at Hudson Falls, N. Y., in place of John Toole. Incumbent's commission expired January 6, 1920.

Edward J. Woods to be postmaster at Bayport, N. Y., in place of E. J. Woods. Incumbent's commission expired October 24, 1922.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Joseph P. Hinson to be postmaster at Pineville, N. C. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Otis P. Brower to be postmaster at Liberty, N. C., in place of W. M. Hanner, removed.

NORTH DAKOTA.

John P. Breslin to be postmaster at Sanish, N. Dak., in place of W. F. Thompson. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

OHIO.

Oscar C. Wheland to be postmaster at Gnadenhutten, Ohio. Office became presidential April 1, 1922.

Fred G. Bates to be postmaster at Madison, Ohio, in place of F. H. Davet. Incumbent's commission expired September 19, 1922.

Mary E. Lee to be postmaster at Westerville, Ohio, in place of Frank Bookman. Incumbent's commission expired September 19, 1922.

Josiah T. Gibson to be postmaster at Waverly, Ohio, in place of C. P. Gabelman. Incumbent's commission expired September 19, 1922.

Frank B. Malaney to be postmaster at Wadsworth, Ohio, in place of W. A. Ault, resigned.

Dwight D. Fierbaugh to be postmaster at South Euclid, Ohio, in place of B. O. Brott, resigned.

Garrett A. Circle to be postmaster at Racine, Ohio, in place of G. C. Wolfe. Incumbent's commission expired September 19, 1922.

Frank P. Johnson to be postmaster at Pataskala, Ohio, in place of R. D. Brown. Incumbent's commission expired September 19, 1922.

William F. Lyons to be postmaster at Mentor, Ohio, in place of T. H. Code. Incumbent's commission expired September 19, 1922.

Linden C. Welmer to be postmaster at Dayton, Ohio, in place of F. L. May. Incumbent's commission expired July 21, 1921.

John W. McCoy to be postmaster at Barberton, Ohio, in place of J. M. McNamara. Incumbent's commission expired September 19, 1922.

OKLAHOMA.

Floyd A. Rice to be postmaster at Strong City, Okla. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

Mable C. Heidenreich to be postmaster at Duke, Okla. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

Thomas B. Fessenger to be postmaster at Wynne Wood, Okla., in place of G. P. Rollow. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

Emil G. Etzold to be postmaster at Temple, Okla., in place of H. A. Crawford. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

Elinore Jett to be postmaster at Nash, Okla., in place of W. T. Childs. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

Lewis G. Rinnert to be postmaster at Checotah, Okla., in place of W. B. Hensley, resigned.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Arthur N. Rose to be postmaster at Rouseville, Pa., in place of A. N. Rose. Incumbent's commission expired September 26, 1922.

Thomas J. Morgan to be postmaster at Nanticoke, Pa., in place of Stanley Dropski. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

James I. Decker to be postmaster at New Freedom, Pa., in place of P. W. Miller. Incumbent's commission expired September 26, 1922.

Jennie C. Sample to be postmaster at Crum Lynne, Pa., in place of J. J. McCoy. Incumbent's commission expired January 2, 1921.

Harry F. Deibert to be postmaster at Cressona, Pa., in place of W. L. McLaren. Incumbent's commission expired September 26, 1922.

PORTO RICO.

John L. Gay to be postmaster at San Juan, Porto Rico, in place of R. A. Rivera, removed.

Reinaldo Paniagua, jr., to be postmaster at Lares, Porto Rico, in place of Paul Vilella, jr. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

RHODE ISLAND.

Bertha M. Brayton to be postmaster at Hope, R. I. Office became presidential October 1, 1922.

May B. Lamb to be postmaster at Greenville, R. I. Office became presidential October 1, 1922.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Robert L. Henderson to be postmaster at North Charleston, S. C. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

James M. Graham to be postmaster at Alcolu, S. C., in place of L. M. Jones. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Albert P. Monell to be postmaster at Stickney, S. Dak., in place of A. P. Monell. Incumbent's commission expired September 11, 1922.

Louis E. Castle to be postmaster at Britton, S. Dak., in place of G. L. Baker. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

TENNESSEE.

Byrd S. Bussell to be postmaster at Greenbrier, Tenn. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Burgess W. Witt to be postmaster at Jefferson City, Tenn., in place of L. C. Peak. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1922.

Kester L. Pearson to be postmaster at White Pine, Tenn., in place of F. B. Cowan. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1922.

Anderson W. Warren to be postmaster at Waverly, Tenn., in place of J. E. Pullen. Incumbent's commission expired May 10, 1922.

Claris E. Akin to be postmaster at Rutherford, Tenn., in place of L. W. Davidson. Incumbent's commission expired August 26, 1920.

John M. Eakin to be postmaster at Fayetteville, Tenn., in place of J. J. Jones. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

TEXAS.

Belle H. Stewart to be postmaster at Valentine, Tex. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

James W. Travers to be postmaster at South Bend, Tex. Office became presidential October 1, 1921.

Joseph M. Reising to be postmaster at Rochester, Tex. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

William A. Gatlin to be postmaster at Lakeview, Tex. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

Thomas E. Cavender to be postmaster at Dilley, Tex. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

George E. Thomas to be postmaster at Center Point, Tex. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

George E. Longacre to be postmaster at Tyler, Tex., in place of S. S. McLendon. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

Fannie Stieber to be postmaster at Rocksprings, Tex., in place of Fannie Stieber. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

William R. Wagle to be postmaster at Lampasas, Tex., in place of G. D. Zivley, resigned.

William E. Singleton to be postmaster at Jefferson, Tex., in place of William Clark. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Sallie E. Saint Jacque to be postmaster at Higgins, Tex., in place of F. K. Winsett. Incumbent's commission expired March 8, 1922.

James A. Aldridge to be postmaster at Devine, Tex., in place of J. A. Aldridge. Incumbent's commission expired April 6, 1922.

Robert L. Jones to be postmaster at Celeste, Tex., in place of W. E. Thompson, resigned.

UTAH.

Mary W. Hall to be postmaster at Hurricane, Utah. Office became presidential April 1, 1922.

Glen A. Jensen to be postmaster at Manti, Utah, in place of N. H. Felt. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

VERMONT.

William T. Mead to be postmaster at Underhill, Vt. Office became presidential October 1, 1922.

William J. Wright to be postmaster at Montgomery Center, Vt. Office became presidential October 1, 1922.

Alvi T. Davis to be postmaster at Marshfield, Vt. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

VIRGINIA.

Charles G. Rowell to be postmaster at Surry, Va. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Charles V. Tucker to be postmaster at Phenix, Va. Office became presidential July 1, 1921.

Augustus R. Morris to be postmaster at Jetersville, Va. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

Charlie R. Fisher to be postmaster at Wytheville, Va., in place of C. N. Otey. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

Jacob H. Furr to be postmaster at Waynesboro, Va., in place of J. T. Cooke. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

Joseph W. Stewart to be postmaster at Richmond, Va., in place of H. T. Thornton. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

Patrick J. Riley to be postmaster at Portsmouth, Va., in place of S. T. Montague. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

Philip L. Harrington to be postmaster at Independence, Va., in place of C. W. Rudolph, resigned.

Walter C. Franklin to be postmaster at Pamplin, Va., in place of L. N. Ligon, resigned.

Manley W. Carter to be postmaster at Orange, Va., in place of H. G. Shackelford. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

Ira D. Baker to be postmaster at Lovettsville, Va., in place of C. F. Shumaker. Incumbent's commission expired July 21, 1921.

Georgie H. Osborne to be postmaster at Keysville, Va., in place of W. E. Hailey. Incumbent's commission expired July 21, 1921.

Ollie M. Colbert to be postmaster at Gretna, Va., in place of W. E. Ramsey. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

Gatewood L. Schumaker to be postmaster at Covington, Va., in place of F. H. Rinehart. Incumbent's commission expired September 13, 1922.

William H. Haney to be postmaster at Claremont, Va., in place of J. C. Hudgins. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

Ferdinand C. Knight to be postmaster at Alexandria, Va., in place of W. M. Smith. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

WASHINGTON.

Edward Van Dyke to be postmaster at Lake Stevens, Wash. Office became presidential April 1, 1922.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Charles B. Crawford to be postmaster at Cabin Creek, W. Va. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Oscar G. Casto to be postmaster at Adrian, W. Va. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

WISCONSIN.

Clarence W. Hebard to be postmaster at Sheldon, Wis. Office became presidential July 1, 1922.

Marinus Jensen to be postmaster at Mountain, Wis. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Clara M. Johnson to be postmaster at Ettrick, Wis. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

Richard J. Hansen to be postmaster at Elcho, Wis. Office became presidential April 1, 1920.

Robert C. Bulkley to be postmaster at Whitewater, Wis., in place of W. C. Kiernan. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

Fred J. Hurless to be postmaster at Viola, Wis., in place of L. L. Henthorn. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

C. Amelia Knudson to be postmaster at Scandinavia, Wis., in place of A. L. Olson, resigned.

John D. Laughlin to be postmaster at Marion, Wis., in place of J. D. Laughlin. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

William Martin to be postmaster at Campbellsport, Wis., in place of A. F. Fleischmann, declined.

Clarence B. Jensen to be postmaster at Cambridge, Wis., in place of W. B. Telyea, resigned.

Robert Luchsinger to be postmaster at Belleville, Wis., in place of M. M. Wilson. Incumbent's commission expired April 30, 1922.

WYOMING.

Hubert S. Ladd to be postmaster at Hudson, Wyo. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, November 23, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, Thou art all in all; to Thy power there is no limitation, and Thy mercy endureth forever. We are unworthy of Thy ministry, but have mercy upon us and magnify Thy strength according to our weakness. Forgive us our sins, and remember us at our best. Dwell with us; be Thou our guide, our guest, and continue to be our constant benefactor. Enable us always to keep in mind that goodness and personal integrity can never fail. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RETURN OF BILL TO THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following message from the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 3855) to ascertain and settle land claims of persons not Indian within pueblo Indian land, land grants, and reservations in the State of New Mexico.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Committee on Indian Affairs will be discharged from the consideration of the bill, and the request of the Senate will be granted. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 12859) to provide for certain expenses incident to the third session of the Sixty-seventh Congress, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12817.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12817, with Mr. TRISON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12817, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE]. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, this bill (H. R. 12817) is offered in fulfillment of reiterated solemn platform pledges of the Republican Party to help and upbuild the American merchant marine.

But it is offered in no partisan spirit, because the Democratic Party also has repeatedly pledged itself in its national platforms to restore the American flag to the high seas. All of us Americans—North, South, East, and West—in the years before the World War regarded with dismay the weakness of our ocean carrying trade and the fact that more than nine-tenths of the trade that should have been our own was monopolized by foreigners.

The bill is the result of months of careful study by officials of the Shipping Board, followed by protracted hearings held jointly by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House and the Committee on Commerce of the other Chamber. Those hearings were continued day after day and week after week, from April 4 to May 19, and ended only when there were no more persons to be heard. The record of these hearings exceeds in its printed pages even the exhaustive report of the Gallinger Merchant Marine Commission of 1904-5. It can fairly be said that never before have an administration and a Congress given such full study to the merchant shipping question as that of the present investigation, the results of which are now before you.

Not only shipowners and shipbuilders, but merchants, manufacturers, bankers, farmers, and representatives of American sea labor have been faithfully heard. The immense preponderance of the testimony was in favor of this proposed legislation, coming from North, South, East, and West alike. The pending bill has received the formal approval of the National Chamber of Commerce of the United States, representing the commercial and industrial interests of all the States, the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Association of Manufacturers, the Bankers' Association for Foreign Trade, the Mississippi Valley Association, and the boards of trade and chambers of commerce of all of the principal cities between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts on the one hand and the Canadian border and the Gulf of Mexico on the other. It has the approval of the business men of Chicago, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Des Moines, Dubuque, Sioux City, St. Louis, Kansas City, Louisville, Detroit, St. Paul, Duluth, Omaha, Memphis, and Milwaukee, as well as the business men of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Mobile, New Orleans, and Galveston. Especially significant is the support given by the American Farm Bureau Federation. Taught by the lessons of the Great War, the farmers of the inland States realize now that the merchant marine means as much and even more to them than to the producers and traders of the seaboard.

This proposed bill is popularly described as the "ship subsidy bill," but it may fairly be argued that the actual subsidy feature is of less magnitude than the various indirect aids which it bestows. These indirect aids by themselves would not suffice. The so-called subsidies are essential to the success of the policy embodied in the bill. Without them the Shipping Board can not sell its ships, nor can we realize a full-balanced merchant marine. However, the indirect aids, involving no direct payments to shipowners, make up the greater bulk and importance of this proposal. This is a fact that can not be too earnestly emphasized. The bill is a subsidy measure in its lesser and not in its greater part.

First of all as a help to the maintenance of regular overseas lines of cargo steamers carrying also mails and passengers is the provision to be found in Title III under the head of "Transportation of immigrants by water." This requires that "as nearly as practicable one-half of the total number of immigrants admitted to the United States in any fiscal year shall be transported in vessels registered or enrolled and licensed under the laws of the United States." This section, however, is not to take effect until treaties with foreign nations are properly examined and readjusted.

The fairness of a provision that one-half of the immigrants entering this country shall come in American ships and one-half in foreign ships can not be questioned by any open-minded man. It is, in fact, a measure of maritime reciprocity. Before the World War foreign steamship companies, monopolizing virtually all our immigrants, by special annual arrangement divided up among themselves this valuable traffic, allotting a certain per cent to British lines, a certain per cent to German lines, a certain per cent to Italian lines, and so on.

This arrangement worked in practice. The United States Government did not object to it, though it virtually left American steamers out in the cold. No treaties were invoked against it. No protests were filed. This proposed arrangement is far more fair and just. It will help powerfully to guarantee to our country an equitable proportion of the great cargo-passenger steamers, not only so essential for the carrying of our farm and other products but vital to the naval reserve and the national defense in war. Working up of the details of this policy is intrusted to the Commissioner General of Immigration, under the Secretary of Labor, with necessary regulations, subject to the approval of the Secretary of State.

There is no subsidy in this immigration provision. It does not cost the United States a cent. It will undoubtedly insure more humane care of immigrants on American vessels subject to our laws than would be possible on foreign vessels. It can not and will not be objected to by those who come here from deliberate choice to become citizens of this Republic. They will rejoice to sail from their foreign homes to our ports under the flag that is to be their flag and the flag of their children, just as it is yours and mine.

Two years ago the merchant marine act of 1920, reported to the Senate and House as a nonpartisan measure and upheld and enacted by our two great political parties working together, provided in one of the sections for a revolving loan construction fund for the encouragement of the building of new ships in the United States, particularly by new companies that might most need the assistance of the Government. This revolving construction loan fund was more specifically established in the present bill, and the sum of $125,000,000, set aside from receipts of the Shipping Board, is made available for loaning to responsible persons "for the construction by them in private shipyards of the United States of vessels of the best and most efficient type, equipped with the most efficient and the most economical machinery and commercial appliances, or in the equipping by them of vessels already built with such machinery and commercial appliances."

This money, loaned out at interest, will come back into the Treasury again. Loans can constitute not more than two-thirds of the value of the vessels built or to be built, the owners furnishing the rest of the capital required. The Government is protected by a first lien on the ships. This will particularly help new investors and will powerfully encourage the ports of the South, the Gulf, and the Pacific to enter on shipowning on their own account. It is stipulated that the interest charge shall be "at a rate not less than 2 per cent per annum." It does not necessarily have to be 2 per cent. This rate, which may be criticized as unduly low, compares with the 2½ per cent rate at which about $12,000,000 was loaned by the British Government to the Cunard Co. for the building of the Mauretania and Lusitania.

Our shipowners, particularly our new shipowners, must secure their capital on even terms with their foreign competitors if they are to live. They are justly entitled to this consideration, and those who may criticize a rate of 2 per cent do so in ignorance of world conditions in the shipping trade. The United States, which for 60 years has done practically nothing to help and strengthen its ocean shipbuilding and navigation, can afford to make loans as cheaply as its rivals can, and must do so to hold its place on the seas. Opposition to this provision simply means that those who advance it are not willing that their own flag, their own people, should have a fair, equal chance with foreigners, whose competition they must meet on every ocean route and in every port.

Another form of indirect aid provided in the bill is a requirement that wherever facilities are available the present Army and Navy transport services shall be transferred to the merchant marine under 10-year contracts for the satisfactory performance of these services. This is simply following the example of successful maritime nations of the world, which do not maintain costly transport services at government expense but make arrangements on a business basis with their own shipowners for the transportation of military and naval forces and supplies wherever needed. This, again, is simply a long-neglected measure of fair play to the American ocean shipping industry, putting it on the same basis with its long-favored foreign competitors.

The bill also requires that Government materials and supplies must be transported under the American flag wherever possible, and that Government officials traveling by sea shall sail in American ships wherever possible. Is there any Member of the House who would object to this and deny this decent preference to the flag of our own country, which the laws and practices of all other nations give to their flags?

Because the ocean shipping industry can not be aided and encouraged as are all other internationally competitive industries by the tariff laws, special consideration must equitably be given to this industry by the provisions in the present bill directing that a deduction of 5 per cent be made in the amount of Federal income taxes paid by shippers of goods either inward or outward in American vessels. This will directly benefit the manufacturers, farmers, and other producers of exported merchandise, as well as the merchants handling exports or imports, and will powerfully contribute to the increase of our foreign trade. It will indirectly benefit American shipping by encouraging American shippers to send their goods under our own flag. This is a powerful aid of the very first importance. Provisions in the present bill making proper allowance for actual depreciation of vessel property, which has had an extraordinary fall in value all over the world as a result of reaction from the war, and exemptions from Federal taxation on the net earnings of American ships in the foreign trade, on strict condition that the amount of the exemption, with an added amount of private capital, be devoted to the building of new ships in the United States, are simply the amplifying and perfecting of features of the merchant marine act of 1920, already approved by the Congress. The most rigorous precautions are provided for proper enforcement of these provisions to make certain that the United States reaps the maximum of benefit.

It may be urged that these deductions and exemptions from taxation tend to make a specially favored interest out of the shippers and owners of American ships. In fact, these provisions are merely a compensation for the inability to protect American shipping as other industries are protected by our tariff laws and regulations. These deductions and exemptions do not mean any special favor, but merely fair play to the shipping industry, to give it an equal chance with other American industries and with foreign competitors, all of whom are favored or aided in some way by their respective governments. If shipping could be shielded as manufacturing and agriculture are, these deductions and exemptions would not be asked. They are simply in part the equivalents of tariff protection, and they can decently be objected to by no public men who are asking or receiving such protection for their own constituents.

It is because American shipping in the foreign trade alone of all our industries has not been aided or protected by the Government that in the past it has faltered and gone down.

Now, in this bill we are seeking to remedy long years of discrimination and injustice. These, as thus summarized, are the indirect aids to the American merchant marine which this bill is providing. I come now to the direct subsidy, or what the President aptly calls "compensation." This is to be found in Title IV. First, a merchant-marine fund is established, made up of all proceeds from tonnage duties and dues which will amount to about $4,000,000 a year, and of 10 per cent of the amount of customs duties which will yield about $30,000,000 a year additional. Into this merchant-marine fund also go all excess earnings of shipping receiving compensation. In this connection, gentlemen, I feel that there are some among you to-day who honestly believe that this merchant-marine fund would necessarily be paid out to the very last penny. This viewpoint, however, would simply give rise to the theory that a bank depositor, for instance, would, as a general principle, seek to draw upon every dollar of his account merely because of its availability. In other words, the individual and corporate tendency of maintaining a surplus or reserve fund would be utterly disregarded. Unquestionably every unexpended dollar of this merchant-marine fund would find its way back into the coffers of the National Treasury, and I venture to say that the turnover would be material to say the least.

Under strict contracts with the Government, compensation is authorized for periods not exceeding 10 years to cargo ships pure and simple and to cargo, passenger, and mail ships, so that this direct encouragement may be realized equitably by all American ships engaged in foreign commerce and meeting foreign competition. This will assist both "tramps" and liners, and is a just, straightforward fashion of dealing with the problem of the merchant marine, ten-elevenths of whose tonnage is now made up of cargo ships. Amounts of compensation to be paid to average cargo vessels under this bill, as has been proved before the committee, will not fully meet the difference in wages and subsistence as between American and British ships, to say nothing of our even more cheaply run competitors of other nationalities.

The bill, therefore, requires that American shipowners shall show more enterprise, efficiency, and economy than their rivals of foreign lands. Our shipowners and operators are put to their mettle to win out—and they will not shrink from the responsibilities. It is precisely estimated on the basis of actual shipping available that the bill will not call for a greater amount for subsidy or compensation than $12,000,000 to $15,000,000 for the first year, and that an eventual expenditure of about $30,000,000 annually will create and maintain a total American shipping in the foreign trade of 7,500,000 tons gross register and capable of carrying from 50 to 60 per cent, or "the greater portion," of the export and import trade of the United States.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I will.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Does the gentleman mean that the gross amount paid out under this subsidy will amount to approximately $15,000,000?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Twelve to fifteen million dollars the first year.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That is the gross?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Not only is the compensation carefully restricted to the amount of the merchant-marine fund but it is not gratuitously given to any shipowners. They must comply first with certain rigid requirements calculated to safeguard the interests of the United States. They must, subject to certain slight temporary restrictions, have all their ships built in the United States by American workmen.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I will.

Mr. SNYDER. My mind goes back to where the gentleman read the organizations of this country which had indorsed this bill. I did not notice in anything the gentleman read that the American Federation of Labor indorsed the bill.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. The American Federation of Labor did not indorse the bill, and one of the witnesses who came before us at the hearings on the bill, and the only one who appeared representing the American Federation of Labor, said he preferred to have goods carried across the ocean in British bottoms and not in American bottoms.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is that statement in the hearings?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. It is in the hearings.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is very important.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I will.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What witness said that?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Wallace, representing the American Federation of Labor. It is in the hearings.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I will.

Mr. KNUTSON. Did Mr. Wallace state why he preferred to have American goods hauled in British bottoms?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Because he said it could be done cheaper than by American vessels, and he preferred to have it done by the British Government because they understood all about the shipping business.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I will yield.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Do I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts to say he made that statement at the hearing?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. He made that statement at the hearing?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I do not recall—

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Because the gentleman was not there. If he will examine the hearings he will find it.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. He said he was against it because he was opposed to a subsidy.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. He said he was opposed to subsidies, but did not have any principle about it.

These ships receiving compensation must all be classified in our great national agency, the American Bureau of Shipping, in the highest classification possible, thus serving the valuable purpose of making the United States independent for all time from discriminations by the British Lloyd's or other foreign agency. These compensated ships must carry crews of which at least one-half at first, and after three years two-thirds, exclusive of licensed officers, must be American citizens—the remainder of the crews to be of individuals eligible for American citizenship. This is demanded of the deck and engine departments of all American ships receiving compensation, but as Americans do not serve afloat or ashore as servants, an exception is made in favor of the stewards' departments on passenger ships.

This requirement of American citizen crews is a most wise and valuable proposition, for it insures the existence of an American seagoing personnel of economic value to the country in time of peace and of immeasurable defensive importance in time of war. Under this provision the alien seamen, who have been too numerous on our ships and have failed us in emergencies, will hereafter be excluded from the merchant service of the United States. The bill makes elaborate requirement that ships receiving compensation shall be dominantly owned and controlled by American citizens whose first thought is the upbuilding of American interests.

Under special circumstances the Government can increase the rates of compensation provided, and can also decrease them when this is justified. All ships receiving compensation are subject to be taken at any time by the Government for the national defense or for any national emergency at a fair actual value, but it is carefully provided that in no case "shall such fair actual value be enhanced by the causes necessitating the taking." These compensated ships, moreover, must make all their repairs, renewals, or reconditioning in American shipyards. A specially significant provision is that by which excessive profits are prevented.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I will.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Before the gentleman leaves that subject, that is what the gentleman said about compensation at a fair market value of the ships at the time they are taken over by the Government. As I understand the hearings, the British ships Mauretania and Lusitania, I think they were, had a contract with the British Government by which they had to be taken over in time of war at their value at the time they were built. I notice the gentleman did not follow that plan in this bill. Why did you not?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. We did what we thought was best.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The gentleman thinks it is better to fix the market value at the time they are taken over rather than what they cost the Government?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I think it is more fair to do that on our ships.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Well, I noticed that difference.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. We tried to draw this bill fairly and honorably, and if a man had a ship needed in case of war that it would not be proper to take it away from him except at a fair market value at the time it was taken.

If in any one year net profits of any given ships exceed 10 per cent, the balance is to be repaid to the Government until the full amount of compensation is returned. Under this restriction there can be absolutely no profiteering at the Government expense; but it should be emphasized that no net profit of 10 per cent, or any other rate, is guaranteed to any compensated or "subsidized" shipowner. He must take his chance and win his profit by his own economy and enterprise. All that the Government does for him is to place him, through this bill, on approximately even terms of competition with the shipowners of foreign nations.

Thus I have outlined the main constructive features of the proposed bill, a full analysis of which has already been given in the majority report of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. This measure embodies the best thought of which your committee is capable. It is favorably reported to the House by the unanimous action of the Republican majority, with which, I believe I am able to state, at least two of the minority members of the committee are in substantial agreement. We have not sought to bring out this bill as in any sense a partisan measure. As to those minority members who have signed a dissenting report, they must assume their own responsibility for partisan action on a national issue on which there should be no division along partisan lines. The merchant marine is essentially as national and nonpartisan a question as the Navy—a question on which all Americans, regardless of party or of section, ought to be agreed.

Some of those who do not like this bill have described it as a very powerful measure. It is a powerful measure—it needs to be—far more powerful than the merchant marine act of 1920, which was confessedly not complete. We need to give very strong aid to a merchant marine, because for many years our ships have been almost driven off the seas, and their foreign competitors, with the backing of their governments behind them, have had almost absolute command of the situation. In this position they have discriminated against our ships and our flag in every possible way.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I will.

Mr. CRISP. I note during the gentleman's long and honorable career here he has given great thought to the American merchant marine. I would like to know what effect the La Follette Act has on American shipping, in the gentleman's opinion. I have heard it contended it is one of the great handicaps to American shipping, and I have heard it denied. I would like to have the gentleman's views in regard to that question.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. The La Follette Act was the act of both parties. It is in effect the law. It does make the cost of running a vessel higher than those of foreign governments that are not under the act.

Mr. CRISP. To what extent, what per cent?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I can not tell the gentleman the percentage. I did not figure it out on a percentage basis, because there was no contest over the La Follette Act.

Mr. SYDER. I think in the President's statement he said it was about double. In the gentleman's judgment, he having made a very careful investigation of this question, covering many months, does he not think a pretty fair subsidy would be to repeal the La Follette Act entirely?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. If you can get both sides of the House to do it, I would like to see it done.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Would it not be possible to secure the information that has been asked for by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Crisp] concerning the increased cost due to the La Follette Act and have it expressed in the Record?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I think it would be.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I think we ought to have the data on that question.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If the gentleman will yield, there are in the hearings several tables giving the comparative cost under American law and under the foreign laws, and as I looked them over and checked them off I noticed that the cost of running an American ship was just about double what it was under the foreign laws. You will find very extensive tables covering that matter in the hearings.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman will realize that that is all on account of the La Follette Act?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. EDMONDS. I may state that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHANDLER] has prepared a complete statement of the comparative costs in American and foreign vessels. When he takes the floor this afternoon he will give that data.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. It was stated yesterday by one of the speakers for the measure under the rule that the extra cost placed upon shipping by the La Follette Act would be an amount greater than the entire subsidy of this bill. Is the gentleman in accord with that statement?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I would not like to make that statement without a thorough investigation of it, but I should think likely it might be.

Mr. BLANTON. It will probably be admitted by everyone that there are some admirable provisions in the La Follette bill. Leaving them, would the gentleman's party be willing to amend that act and repeal the specially onerous provisions that ought to be repealed?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Well, the gentleman speaks for his own party. What will they do?

Mr. BLANTON. Well, speaking as one member of it, the present gentleman would be willing to do it.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. All right. I am not discussing that question now.

I need only to remind the House of the recent episode of the Egyptian cotton trade at Alexandria. When American shipowners sought to obtain even a small share of the carrying of the long-fiber Egyptian cotton to the mills of New England, these American shipowners were told that this trade had long been a British monopoly and that not a pound of the Egyptian cotton which American merchants and manufacturers were purchasing could be brought to an American port under the American flag.

Is there any Member of this House whose face does not flush with shame and resentment at a situation where such a thing can be said—not a pound of cotton, American property, to be carried in an American ship? Yet British arrogance and greed had reached this point at Alexandria. There could be no pretense that it was intended as retaliation against American legislation, for this British monopoly of the Alexandria cotton trade had been many years established.

Not until our Government grasped this Alexandria situation could the British monopoly be broken or even shaken. Not until our Government acted, by sending representatives to Great Britain and plainly intimating that there would be reprisals unless there were a change, did the Liverpool liners' conference concede even the carrying of a part of Egyptian cotton to American ships.

What happened at Alexandria may happen at any port of the world where our American ships meet British competition. Therefore an American shipping law must be a powerful law or it will not succeed. All the provisions of this proposed bill together are demanded by the methods of our adversaries, long entrenched in their position and monopolizing nine-tenths of the carrying trade of the United States. It is because this bill is powerful that foreign interests dread it as they have dreaded no American shipping legislation ever before proposed.

I regret to state that the so-called minority report against this proposed bill, while it bitterly assails the bill, offers no substitute whatsoever. The President of the United States in his memorable address on the merchant marine on February 28 last at the joint session of the Senate and the House of Representatives well declared that "with direct and indirect aid I bring to you a definite program. Those who oppose it ought in all fairness to propose an acceptable alternative. There can be no dispute about the end at which we are aiming."

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Are you willing to give your views on the subject of discriminatory duties as a substitute?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I do not think it is advisable to adopt anything of that kind. I think we have made a very great improvement over any such proposition.

In spite of this weighty admonition of the Chief Executive, those who oppose this bill, as I have said, offer nothing else. They content themselves with criticism and attack. They have nothing better to say. They present not a line or sentence of constructive thought. They fail to meet the challenge of the President and acknowledge that they can not meet it.

On this critical issue of the life of the American merchant marine they have nothing to give this House but pleas long since exploded, empty epithets, and profitless vituperation. They have nothing to suggest but a weak, fatuous continuance of the do-nothing policy that has wrecked our merchant marine in the past and would ruin it for the future. I do not accuse those who signed the hostile report of any deliberate purpose to strike down their country on the seas, but I do declare that the direct, sole beneficiaries of the course they would have the Congress follow would be the shipowners and governments of foreign nations, our rivals in trade and possible enemies in war.

What Europe on the east and Japan on the west dread, as their public men and journals have been openly admitting, is the adoption by our national lawmakers of the forward-looking, constructive recommendations of President Harding. What these foreign interests desire is the defeat of those recommendations and the continuance of that same do-nothing policy which in the past has given foreign interests a monopoly of nine-tenths of our overseas carrying trade and would most certainly give them a like monopoly again.

The issue presented in this bill is, therefore, squarely one between America and foreign nations. There is no middle ground, no possible compromise. Those who blindly oppose this bill show no way out. They have confessedly no policy of their own but one of do-nothing and drifting, which, as the experience of 60 years has shown, is nothing but a policy of defeat and surrender. What that means in a great national crisis was shown in a way that will never be forgotten in 1914 at the outbreak of the great World War, when those nations which we had allowed to dominate our ocean carrying withdrew many or most of their ships from our ports for their own purposes and left our surplus agricultural products to rot in the fields or in the blocked-up railroad trains, and the trade and industry of America were paralyzed in consequence.

That blow fell most heavily on the very sections that foreign shipowners and their governments now look to most confidently to oppose and defeat this legislation; that is, to the great producing sections of the West and South. It was the people of these sections, the farmers and the ranchmen and the planters, who were the greatest sufferers from our lack of appreciation of the merchant marine; and in a similar crisis, which may come in any year out of the disturbed conditions now prevailing in this world, it is these farmers, ranchmen, and planters who would again be the heaviest sufferers.

The only possible protection of the producers of this country—and not of the farms only but of the mines, factories, and mills—is the creation and maintenance of a great American merchant fleet that in an emergency can suffice to carry the bulk of our commerce and that can be controlled by our Government to serve America first. The proposed bill will most certainly accomplish this. Instead of the skeleton, ineffective shipping of 1914, the bill will give us a mighty tonnage, whose competition, under the safeguards of this bill, will assure just freight rates and adequate facilities for our export trade in peace or war.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman's statement now causes me to refer to Title III of this bill, sections 301 and 304, regarding the transportation of immigrants by water. Is it the gentleman's opinion as chairman of the committee that that provision of the bill contravenes commercial treaties that we have with foreign nations at the present time?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I am not disturbed by foreign treaties. If there are any treaties that interfere with this bill, we will try to deal with the nations that are affected diplomatically through the State Department.

Mr. RAKER. I know; but I want the gentleman to be frank in answering the question.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I am frank, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not the gentleman's opinion that the provision referred to contravenes 32 treaties now in existence?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. The provision referred to is not to take effect until treaties with foreign nations are properly reexamined and readjusted.

Mr. RAKER. If it is true that the bill does contravene treaties with foreign countries, some 32, why does not the gentleman say in the bill that half of the property that comes into the United States should come in American vessels?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Does not the gentleman make a distinction between persons and property?

Gentlemen, as a final word let me urge the total dissipation from your minds of the bugaboo which the word "subsidy" unfortunately suggests to some. What are the irrigation dams and the watersheds set up by the Federal Government in cooperation with certain States if not a form of subsidy to landowners, stock raisers, and agriculturists? What are the land grants and franchises given to railroads? Subsidy. What are the advances made for highways? Subsidy. What are the farm-mortgage banks for if not to provide to those concerned at least an indirect subsidy? These are the beneficent applications of a principle with which the public is thoroughly familiar. Why deny its potential beneficence in another quarter because it happens to come forward under a different designation?

The placing of an adequate merchant marine on the high seas, gentlemen, means among other things the promotion of foreign trade and incidentally our fair share of Latin American trade, the retention of about $300,000,000 a year in freight money in this country, employment of thousands of men in shipping and allied trades, and the creation of a naval reserve, making it certain that never again will it be necessary to create a fleet at a cost of $3,000,000,000 in an emergency such as we were obliged to meet less than six years ago.

Those who are against this measure and have no substitute or alternative of their own are against the dearest interests of all America. [Applause.]

How much time have I consumed, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 47 minutes.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I will ask the gentlemen on the other side to use some of their time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield 40 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. J. M. NELSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 40 minutes.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, President Harding having called us together in extra session, as he said he would, made a very eloquent address to the Congress, appealing for the passage of this measure. I think by common consent we will agree that his was perhaps the best presentation of that side of the subject that any of us has ever heard. Other champions of the ship-subsidy idea on the floor of the House or of the Senate may equal the President in his moving appeal, but I doubt that they will surpass him.

Fortunately or unfortunately for me, although I recognize the potency of the President's appeal, although I know, too, that he has consulted the Shipping Board and had all the arguments and data that they could furnish, and they are insistent upon this legislation, and although this distinguished Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries has reported the bill favorably, I can not give it my support. I recognize the plausibility of the inducement, but I can not support the bill, for sufficient reasons. It is not good to go against one's conscience; that spells moral suicide. Nor do I think it wise or safe to go against one's constituents, for that is political suicide.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate very much the partisan situation; but let me call your attention to the fact that my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE], the distinguished chairman of this committee, surely did not mean to say that our party has declared for this bill. If he meant to convey that idea it was a distortion of the language of the plank in our platform. The platform speaks of indorsing "the sound legislation recently enacted." That was the present Jones law, and the shipping was then under Government ownership. I will not take time to read the plank at length, but I challenge any Republican here to say that the Republican Party has ever declared for a ship subsidy. It indorsed a merchant marine, but that can be done without indorsing a monstrous artificial inflation of unjustifiable special privilege. It did not say, "We are for putting our merchant marine in the hands of a few shipowners and subsidizing them." Gentlemen, let us not distort the facts in order to pass the bill. Let us be frank and open. Not that my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] would deliberately distort the truth; but if he inadvertently conveyed to you the impression that there has been any such indorsement it is not substantiated by the facts.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman, but I wish to make my own statement, and I have only 40 minutes.

Mr. YATES. Will the gentleman be kind enough to state again just what our platform says?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I will hand the gentleman our platform and let him read the plank. I can not turn to it this moment.

My friends, I am a Republican, and I have seen all I wish to see of a Democratic administration. I should like to see the good old ship of state steered by Republicans. But when as now my party leaders—and I believe many of them against their own best judgment—steer the ship of state in a wrongful course, when my heart and convictions and conscience rebel against some such legislative measure as this subsidy bill before us now, then, as frequently in the past, I can not go with them. I must resort for a time to a lifeboat or a plank. Self-preservation is the first law of life. You watch Republicans jump for the planks. You watch the Republican whip jump.

Mr. KNUTSON. I will speak for myself. I hope the gentleman will not undertake to speak for me.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. The newspapers quoted the gentleman—

Mr. KNUTSON. The newspapers, as usual, were wrong.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. You watch the chairman of the conference jump. You watch many a Republican save himself before we get through with this bill. I have had to go through this experience very often. I happen to be one of the older Members of this House. I remember when these subsidy bills were up before, when Hanna and Gallinger had started them, and when "Uncle Joe," in his prime and vigor, backed by leaders like Payne and Dalzell, together with my distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE], were pushing this subsidy privilege. As a new Member, I had to face the music. They were as adroit and eloquent then as they are now. I voted "no" on this subsidy issue two or three times. I was reelected for it by my constituents. The last time it was a dramatic event. It was on the final passage of the bill. The House was all excitement, much more so than now, because everybody knows this bill is doomed. There is no great excitement now, but then it was a live issue. We beat subsidy by 172 to 175. I remember this event distinctly, because before I voted a messenger came to me with the message that Mr. Hitchcock, the new Postmaster General, wished to see me in the Speaker's room. He was also chairman of the National Republican Committee.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield for just a moment?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I desire to make my speech.

Mr. SNYDER. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to an error in his quotation of the Republican platform on this subject.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Well, I will put it in the RECORD:

MERCHANT MARINE.

The national defense and our foreign commerce require a merchant marine of the best type of modern ship flying the American flag, manned by American seamen, owned by private capital, and operated by private energy.

We indorse the sound legislation recently enacted by the Republican Congress that will insure the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine.

We favor the application of the workmen's compensation acts to the merchant marine.

We recommend that all ships engaged in coastwise trade and all vessels of the American merchant marine shall pass through the Panama Canal without payment of tolls.

I do not want this interruption taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Mr. Hitchcock said to me, "The President has directed me to ask you as a personal favor to support this bill." This was on the 2d of March, and President Taft was about to be inaugurated with all the prestige of his great victory.

I had done all I could to elect him. That message conveyed by Postmaster General Hitchcock was the most suggestive personal presidential address to which I have ever listened. I thought it over for a moment and then said, "I am sorry, but I can not do it," and so I voted against it. My people were watching that vote. Two years afterwards I was reelected, and four years afterwards I was reelected, but President Taft was overwhelmingly defeated in the country, in my State, and in my district.

Let me say to my good Republican associates here who would vote right, the rank and file of the Republicans are out on the farms and in the factories. They are not these leaders nor these shipowners. If we are going to hold our party, we have got to go to the masses and not look to the ship profiteers. Every man knows it. If you will look out and see the angry waves of discontent, you know that I am speaking the truth.

Now, my friends, so much for the partisan aspect of this legislation. I wish to run through this bill hurriedly to point out a few of the many objections, a few of the great dangers I find connected with this subsidy proposition. The people will understand this measure. We are not doing something in the dark. Everybody is watching this extra session after this surprising election.

First, I recognize the power of the President's argument, namely, that we are already in a bad boat. We have a huge deficit; but there are many things about that aspect of the situation I am not going to take time to discuss. How did the deficit swell up so quickly? Was it deliberate? Was it accidental? Was it necessary? Without making any reflections upon the Shipping Board, I agree with the Nation when it says this of Chairman Lasker:

Indeed, one of the worst features of the subsidy movement is the way in which an administrative body like the Shipping Board has been distorted into a publicity agency and is spending taxpayers' money to further the fortunes of its personnel. Mr. Lasker said before a congressional committee last summer, "I am not an expert in shipping, but I take a little pride in being an expert in publicity." He has proved both contentions.

I do not believe that Mr. Lasker has shed any tears because this deficit was growing so lustily. That made the opportunity for his skill as an advertiser of private ownership and subsidy.

Lest the Nation be charged with being pro-British, I will quote the Bankers' Magazine. It ought to be sufficiently conservative for anybody. Editorially it tells us that this subsidy proposal looks like "pouring money into a sieve." The drift of its opinion may be discerned from the following additional views:

It is not calculated to enhance the popularity of any publication by taking a stand in opposition to the extension of our merchant marine. * * * Whether we shall profit as much as is hoped for by extending the operations of our merchant fleet is a debatable question. It resolves itself into the matter of ability to handle this type of business with economy and efficiency. That is a wise man who does not himself attempt to do what others could be employed to do more advantageously. The same principle applies to the shipping bill. We must not lose sight of the fact that this country has prospered enormously in the last generation with almost no merchant fleet of our own. We were busy in other ways and were making more money by our employing our own capital and large amounts of borrowed funds in building railways and in developing our varied domestic industries.

Granting, however, that the development of a vast merchant marine would be not alone gratifying to American pride but would benefit our industries and commerce, the question remains, Are we ready to pay the price? And this does not mean merely that we shall grant the ship subsidy which the President favors, but that we shall take all the other steps by means of which an American merchant marine can be established and profitably maintained. Unless we take these other steps the payment of $30,000,000 a year to subsidize American shipping looks like an indefensible waste of public funds. We have not so much money that we can afford to throw $30,000,000 a year into the sea.

That the President's view is not shared even by Current Opinion is apparent from its article entitled "The ugly duckling—ship subsidy." Of the business wisdom of the proposal it says:

After all, President Harding and Chairman Lasker have not played quite fair with us on this matter. The country has a right to decide the ship-subsidy question as a separate issue and not as a means of disposing of a white elephant left over from the war. The Yankee has a thrifty horror of waste; he is appalled by the news that $3,400,000,000 was wasted on ships and that they are now eating their heads off at the rate of $1,000,000 a week. But these facts do not justify us in rushing, before we are sure that it is right and wise, into a policy which will cost another half a billion. If the subsidy is not needed in normal times, it should not be adopted in an abnormal situation, no matter how expensive, temporarily, that abnormal situation may be.

Evidently the New Republic looks at this enterprise from the same angle. It deprecates the fact that the question of subsidizing should be bound up with the disposal of this enormous fleet acquired during the war. It believes that these two questions should be considered separately.

Instead of this—

It says—

the enormous cost of maintenance of the Shipping Board's boats is used as a feverish argument in favor of the policy of subsidizing which would have little chance of adoption if considered on its merits.

It would be hard to select a worse moment to embark upon a policy of Government charity to shipowners than the present. As a result of a world-wide severe industrial depression, shipping is idle in every port. The leading maritime powers have hundreds of vessels laid up, and you can buy ships anywhere at less than the present reproduction cost, though that is lower than at any time since the war began to raise wages. American shipyards are operating at about 5 per cent of capacity, and are building none but special types. Shipyards abroad are in a similar condition.

Finally, I find myself in accord with the Traffic World, in its failure to understand the business acumen embodied in this bill. It says:

Now, subsidy is advocated and it is proposed that Congress appropriate $50,000,000 or more annually for 10 years to keep the flag flying on these ships. In 10 years the Treasury would, under that plan, hand over to the United States ship operators $500,000,000 as help in operating a fleet that the chairman of the Shipping Board says will not bring $200,000,000 on the market. Whatever else may be said for it, that looks like rather poor finance, does it not?

Nothing seems clearer business reasoning than that if we only get $200,000,000 for our ships, and then fire Lasker and the Shipping Board, we shall have saved at least $300,000,000 in 10 years.

Gentlemen challenge us to show a better solution to the difficulty that is before us. It may, indeed, be difficult to suggest a better, but much more difficult to suggest a worse solution of our present shipping conditions.

At the outset, Mr. Chairman, there is an aspect of this business deal, the sale of our ships, that I do not relish.

The shipping interests will buy only a few of the ships, the cream of them, says Mr. Lasker. He does not expect to get over $200,000,000 for all he can sell. So you give them the ships at that price and then give them the subsidy, and the $20 per ton will double and treble and quadruple in their hands, because it is backed by a subsidy. The Wall Street Journal says that shippers estimate that a subsidy and favorable regulations will make these ships worth a billion dollars in their hands. Can we vote for such a thing and defend it in good conscience on the stump?

But there is another thing, my friends. When you study this bill you will find that it is so drawn that it provides an assured return of 12½ per cent annually and over that to these shipowners. Why, you know what the people think of the Esch-Cummins law, with its 5½ or 6 per cent guaranty, and that was only for a time. This is for 10 years, an assured return of 12½ per cent.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I will.

Mr. EDMONDS. What section of the bill assures a profit of 12½ per cent?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I thought the gentleman would want that. I will give him the proof. I am convinced, because I have carefully gone over this subject. The Library of Congress has much ship-subsidy information. This bill has been before the people and it has been analyzed by many.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I will yield if you will give me more time. Can the gentleman from Alabama give me more time?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I can not give the gentleman any assurance that he can have more time.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I would like to yield, but I have many objections that I wish to present. Here is my authority. Now, will the gentleman listen? In the English Parliament, on May 22, 1922, a member rose in his seat and asked the under-secretary of foreign affairs this question:

What is the estimate of the advantage to the United States shipping which will be derived from the system of subsidy proposed by President Harding in his message of the 28th of February?

The Undersecretary for Foreign Affairs, Mr. Harmsworth, said:

According to the best available estimate, the aid, direct and indirect, which the United States shipowner would receive under President Harding's proposal would amount each year to rather more than 12½ per cent of the capital value of the vessel.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I decline to yield unless you can give me more time. If you will, I will yield. Now, then, it may be said, "Ah, that is British; he said that to deceive public sentiment over here; that is British propaganda." Do you tell me that the Undersecretary for Foreign Affairs would lie to the British Parliament in order to influence public sentiment here? I can not believe so. No honorable gentleman, no high official, in our country would tell us a lie, would endeavor to deceive us so as to influence British action. Do not tell me that he did not know what he was talking about. It is his business to know about British affairs in shipping.

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I can not yield unless you will give me some time.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman knows that I control no time.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. The gentlemen on this side have control of the time and have not given the gentleman from Wisconsin a minute.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. He has not asked for any.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman give him some time?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. The Undersecretary for Foreign Affairs has the special data; he made the most reliable estimate that was possible. If it is not accurate, let some American official high in authority give us his estimate, give us the figures, so that we may have the truth. In the meantime let us accept this estimate. Are you going to give these shipowners an assured income every year of over 12½ per cent? Can you justify it? Government is based on justice, which has two forms, retributive and distributive. Applying the first, I ask what have the shipowners done to merit this subsidy? Before the war they made lots of money. During the war they were among the big profiteers. Are you going to subsidize them for 10 years with an assured income of over 12½ per cent, according to the best estimate of one of the best-informed authorities?

Mr. YATES. The gentleman has made a very important statement. Where does he get it from?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I have just read the gentleman the authority, the English Undersecretary for Foreign Affairs, Mr. Harmsworth.

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts yields five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin, and does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman from Wisconsin has stated that this guarantees a profit of 12½ per cent for 10 years.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. The gentleman is mistaken; I did not. I will again give him the language.

Mr. MILLS. I know what that language is.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I did not say guarantee, but it gives them an assured income.

Mr. MILLS. I understood the gentleman to say, and if he has not said it I will be glad to have him withdraw it, that this will assure a profit of 12½ per cent for 10 years.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I mean to say what this says here, that according to the best estimate, direct and indirect, they would receive an amount each year rather more than 12½ per cent.

Mr. MILLS. But that does not mean profit, that 12½ per cent may be wiped out by operating costs. Does the gentleman mean to say to this House that this bill assures a profit of 12½ per cent?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. The bill assures a return of more than 12½ per cent on the invested capital of the ship.

Mr. MILLS. I say that the statement of the British authority makes no such statement.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Oh, what is the use of arguing about that?

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. I want to ask the gentleman who the gentleman from New York is speaking for at this time.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I will come to that, if I have the time.

Mr. FREAR. Or was the gentleman speaking for the people who want the ship subsidy largely located in New York?

Mr. MILLS. I was speaking for the sake of truth when the gentleman misquoted an authority. [Applause.]

Mr. FREAR. And the gentleman from New York has been on the opposite side of practically every proposition that the last Congress passed, and he is wrong.

Mr. MILLS. I have been in opposition consistently to measures which I thought were not for the benefit of the Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. J. M. NELSON] has the floor.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Gentlemen, construe it as you like. You are capable of understanding what the Undersecretary for Foreign Affairs meant. You will make your own construction. I wish now to bring another point to your attention. Who is going to pay for this?

Your constituents and mine. By this bill they are to be the burden bearers. How much are they to pay? The estimate of the subsidy in this bill, direct and indirect, is how much? Fifty million dollars said Mr. Lasker, and these gentlemen here can not deny it; but the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] tells us and gives us the figures that it will aggregate $75,000,000 or more. Senator FLETCHER gives us figures showing it will aggregate $100,000,000. The Journal of Commerce supports the figures of Senator FLETCHER. When they set all of these milking machines a going it will be remarkable if they could not squeeze $100,000,000 out of the United States Treasury. How are we going to defend that in conscience before our constituents? Our opponents will take the largest. One hundred million dollars; that is one-quarter of a million dollars to each congressional district. They will take a total for 10 years of $500,000,000, $750,000,000, or $1,000,000,000. The last figure, divided up throughout the districts, amounts to a quarter million dollars per year for 10 years—$2,000,000 at least. Are you going to vote this burden upon your constituents to make this assured subsidy of 12½ per cent? We will not call it a guaranty. It means a return of 12½ per cent and more of subsidy on invested capital. Ah, you can defend that, but I am not going to try to do it. Does that constitute equal rights for all? Is that special privilege for none?

But let me go on. There is another subject right there, and that is the contract authorized by this bill—a contract! That is a joker! A contract? It is put in contract form, but that contract means that you are going to lose the right to vote on this subsidy proposition again. By Shipping Board contracts we shall be bound for 10 years to furnish this assured return of subsidy of 12½ per cent to the shipping interests out of the taxes paid by our constituents. That is what it means. Where is the consideration for this contract?

The nominal consideration is rhetoric—the flag! and an imaginary merchant marine! But what is the real consideration? There is no consideration at all. History and human nature have shown that a merchant marine can not be established by pumping millions into it for a term of years. It will be artificial. A merchant marine, so the experts say, must be established according to the principles of human nature, through business ability, prudence, wisdom, and in accordance with economic and geographical principles and conditions. Subsidies, except in the case of Japan, have never produced a merchant marine. Again, what consideration is left? None at all. Will you have any guaranty of reasonable rates? What will you have? What is the consideration? Nothing but language, rhetoric. That is all. The contract is there in the bill, and it is there for a purpose. It is a joker. With contracts authorized by law the shipowners can snap their fingers at the public for 10 years.

Let us now get to another thing that is very interesting. The distinguished chairman of this committee, Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, said that the great business interests are for this bill. Certainly. But we do not want classes or costs in our country; we do not want a house divided against itself. Let me tell you something. This bill is loaded full to the brim with special-interest legislation. I took the pains to look up the formative stages of this subsidy bill. The National Manufacturers' Association met in New York at their last convention, and their merchant marine committee came out for ship subsidy. We thought that we had buried this subsidy seed, alien to American soil, but we find that it is like that of wild oats and stinkweed. It must be kept under all the time or it will grow. We thought that we had buried it forever, but they brought it to the surface and watered it.

The shipowners saw their opportunity. They had a committee appointed of shipowners, ship operators, and shipbuilders to prepare their demands. These were submitted to the Shipping Board. You can find all this in the Wall Street Journal and the Journal of Commerce. These publications kept close tab on this thing and reported developments right along. The propaganda was soon on to line up big business for this legislation, containing all the demands of the joint shipping interests.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. J. M. NELSON. Not now. Let me get on. I get diverted. Then there began a widespread propaganda. The Merchant Marine Association became active, and especially Mr. Marvin, vice president and manager of great steamship lines, together with the Shipping Board, lined up the interests solidly. The propagandists got busy before this committee and in the press, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] has told you. They did get 165 chambers of commerce to indorse his bill. Of course, it is only a perfunctory indorsement. They got the packers, the millers, and the National Manufacturers' Association. Five per cent—5 per cent tax exemption to them in this bill. They have organized the special interests—railroads, trusts, and all.

But on the other hand, where are the masses of the American people? Think about them. Think of labor. Labor, so far as it can speak, has spoken. It has made its voice articulate. The sailors' union was before this committee to protest. Some labor representative, a Mr. Wallace, the chairman says, testified that he would like to see our trade carried in British bottoms. Let me tell you the truth about that. I presume the argument of this witness was something like this: That rather than try to build up an artificial thing, England being naturally a shipping nation, we might well use her large shipping facilities rather than throw our money away.

The Nation describes this bill as "shoveling money into the sea." The Bankers' Magazine thinks it is much like "pouring money into a sieve." So, rather than do that, why not get it done more cheaply, even if it be necessary to send it in British bottoms? But it is dreadful, they say, to say such an unpatriotic thing. Listen to this, gentlemen. Here is some more of that kind of language:

England performs her function as a public carrier so satisfactorily that it has not been, and it is not now, worth the while of any other nation to compete with her.

Who said that? Theodore Roosevelt. Among the clippings on a table in the Library of Congress I found this citation. It is common sense. Roosevelt said it, and other people are saying it. Are people who say this pro-British? Bosh! I am not pro-British. The subsidists said years ago when we defeated them that we were pro-German; now we are pro-British. I am an American. I am neither pro-German nor pro-British. I am pleading against a foreign policy.

Labor has denounced this bill. The Federation of Labor has denounced it. The organized railway brotherhoods are against it, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] knows. They do not like the Esch-Cummins Act and its guaranty. They do not like this any better.

How about the farmer? Oh, the farmer has made himself very clear on this question. Have you read the election returns? Did you see the men elected who ran on antiship subsidy platforms? I ran on one. It was a platform denouncing this bill, and I won overwhelmingly. Those who did favor it went down to defeat. Have you noticed the fatalities? Thirty-five per cent of the vacancies on the Republican side of this Merchant Marine Committee! They prepared this bill; I presume they told their constituents all about their arduous labors for a subsidized merchant marine. Five out of fourteen defeated.

Ah, friends, the farmers of the West and the East, the North and the South have heard of this bill. The chairman mentioned Mr. Howard, of the Farm Bureau Federation. Look up the record. He said his bureau was against subsidy on principle. His approval was most perfunctory; his organization in Iowa voted 37 to 1 against subsidy. All the other farm organizations are against it. The National Grange, very conservative, is unanimous; always has been against subsidy. The Farmers' National Council has come out against this bill. Pressure was brought on the Board of Farm Organizations to get them the other way. The National Council denounced it in vigorous terms. Every farm paper except one in Oregon—

Mr. KEARNS. The gentleman says "farm bureau." What does he mean?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Mr. Howard is reported—

Mr. KEARNS. But the gentleman does not say that Mr. Howard is the farm bureau.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. He is at the head of it.

Mr. KEARNS. There are millions of men and women who belong to it.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. The gentleman is right. Every farm paper save one in Oregon—and, mind you, a paper owned and published by the Secretary of Agriculture, who is not himself responsible now for its editorials—has denounced this proposition through the pen of the Secretary's son. So far as the farmers can make themselves felt they are against this thing unanimously.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. There is an exception of one farmer.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I say here is the line-up. We vote either with the big interests or with the masses of the people. We choose to-day with whom we will go, and they will hold us to account. Whose will we do their servants we are.

Now, then, I come to another point. Gentlemen, look at the matter of competition. What is the purpose of this bill? It is to eliminate competition. How? Directly by getting the United States out of competition with the shipowners. That is the specific thing in the bill. Australia found it necessary to buy State ships to protect herself recently.

Say we eliminate competition. What happens? The nearer we establish monopoly on the sea. Gentlemen, these shipowners are organized now. They appeared before the committee as associations. They presented demands through shipping men who say they speak "for the entire merchant marine." They not only have their organizations but they do not trespass on each other's territory. It is easy to have institutes and all that. It means the elimination of competition—

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. If the gentleman will pardon me, I decline to yield.

Mr. SNYDER. I would like to know what—

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Oh, ship-subsidy champions boast they want control of the seas so far as American shipping is concerned. They paint a glorious picture of the American flag waving over a merchant marine that has eliminated foreign competition. Are you going to vote a subsidy to give our shipping interests a world monopoly?

If so, I come to another thing, freight rates and passenger fares. They are very reasonable now; they have come down. There is no reason why we can not ship now if we only had the goods to ship and Europe the money with which to buy. The rates, as I say, are down. But when we eliminate competition, what must happen? The rates will go up for American wheat and other products of the farm shipped abroad and the people pay the freight bills in the end. First a tax for subsidy and then a raise in rates. That may be in accordance with your opinion of what is right, but not mine. I think it is suicide to go home and defend that. Rates and passenger fares, as I said, are low now. Can you defend laying a tax upon your constituents to increase sea freight rates and passenger fares to shipowners after this bill has become a law? What will prevent it?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I will.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. This is in good faith. If we are in competition with other maritime nations and their fleets, how can our rates rise above the rates of the other nations which are on the high seas?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Our rates have gone down by the competition of the Government. When you take the Government out they will go up.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If medium profitable rates are charged by other maritime nations on their ships, how can we raise the rates above that?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That has bothered me a great deal.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. The gentleman is a fair-minded man; look it up.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. But will not competition keep it down?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. But we are going to eliminate competition.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. We are meeting the rates of the foreign ships.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. The plan is to put the foreigners out of business by special favors and privileges to our shipowners and harsh requirements placed upon foreign competitors.

Again, my friends, tax exemption. Ah, gentlemen of the committee, it is a bonanza! This is from the committee's own report:

Foreign-flag ships are, of course, most anxious to carry our goods to market in ordinary times, and to collect and retain and carry abroad the fabulous amount involved in international carrying trade.

Senator RANDELL, the chairman of the Merchant Marine Association, says in a speech I have here that carrying our trade with Europe by sea amounts to "more than a billion dollars." This is the Senator's language:

Occasionally, too, there is a real American with a real dread of retaliation, but he has seen only one side of the picture, and that is the side painted for his benefit by foreign interests and foreign connections. To such I say, remember that an increased share of our own trade for our own ships means for foreigners a decreased share of the more than a billion dollars spent annually for the sea carriage of American exports and imports.

Taxable income from exports and imports, a billion dollars a year! All earnings exempt from taxes. No tax on this billion-dollar trade! And not only that, but the shippers, the members of the Manufacturers' Association, and the big combinations are to have a 5 per cent share in this exemption privilege! Oh, it is beautifully arranged for shipowners and shippers, but when we go home to our constituents, how will we defend this tax-exemption feature of this subsidy bill? A total exemption of $1,000,000,000 on shipowners' income in the foreign trade and 5 per cent for shippers!

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I regret I can not yield. Will the gentleman yield me time?

Mr. EDMONDS. I have not heretofore used any of the time I have yielded to you.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. The gentleman will get all the time he needs and no doubt make a very interesting speech very soon. Let me go on.

What are gentlemen saying about this tax-exemption business in their speeches? That it is an evil, that it is wrong to exempt any class or person. Constitutional amendments are offered to end this evil. Even the Secretary of the Treasury declares against it. And here comes a bill exempting a possible billion dollars to shipowners; and these 6,000 manufacturers have fixed up a nice scheme so some of them will also save $10,000,000 or more in taxes. We are to defend this thing before the bar of conscience and to our constituents. I think not.

Oh, not only that, gentlemen, but they have gotten up another dainty special privilege for these gentlemen. They are to have credit. Credit is a mighty important thing out West. They have a beautiful provision in this bill—$125,000,000 revolving fund to furnish credit for these shipowners at 2 per cent, to allow them to borrow up to two-thirds of the value of a ship and 15 years' time; a revolving fund for these gentlemen. Is it necessary? No. Who said so? Thomas W. Lamont, of J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. In the Bankers' Magazine recently I read an article of his respecting foreign loans. He says among other things:

American investors are to-day making loans on a considerable scale to European and other foreign railroads, industrial corporations, and governments.

In reply to the idea that credit is thereby withdrawn from commercial channels in America, he says: "Possibly there might be some ground for such a theory if we were in a period of tight money. But we are not. Owing to the let-up in business and, therefore, in the demand for temporary or seasonal borrowing, our surplus reserves are very great. This country holds to-day 60 per cent of the entire world supply of gold. Based on this holding our Federal reserve banks could to-day extend fresh credits to the amount of $3,750,000,000 without falling below an average reserve ratio of 40 per cent. In other words, there is ample credit in our money markets to-day for every commercial enterprise that is legitimately entitled to it."

The logic is self-evident. If these shipping interests come under the head of a legitimate commercial enterprise, there is ample credit in our money markets to-day, but if they are not a legitimate commercial enterprise, why should Uncle Sam subsidize them with a special $125,000,000 revolving loan fund at 2 per cent? You may be able to defend that in your districts, but I could not before my constituents.

Appropriations! Of course this is some mutton patch. So a part of this Garden of Eden is a provision for permanent appropriations for 10 years. Uncle Joe, you, of all here, know the un wisdom of making permanent appropriations. I have heard members like yourself, long chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, say it is a dangerous practice. But we are to make this legislative departure from prudent and patriotic practice now.

The special rule that was adopted for this purpose made it in order to vote permanent appropriations for 10 years. But why permanent appropriations? Otherwise it would have gone out on a point of order, because shipowners know the people will never stand for this subsidy legislation. They know that as soon as the people get a whack at this thing they will smash it. To safeguard the subsidy against the people they provide a permanent appropriation for 10 years. The people's Representatives, who are on guard to protect the people's purse, trustees of an express trust, are no longer to pass annually upon appropriations for subsidy. It is all carefully put out of our power to change these contracts—contracts and permanent appropriations for 10 years. It is a beautiful bill!

Now, gentlemen, another feature of this measure: Do you believe in building up an autocratic bureaucracy? Show me another branch of the Government with such autocratic power. And what is there about these gentlemen that they should be trusted above the President and the Supreme Court? They can do about as they please in the sale of ships. They can do as they please about the $125,000,000 revolving fund. They can change the subsidy. They can allow 100 per cent. In the last revision of this bill, after severe criticism, the Shipping Board is required to make a report. But this is the most autocratic bureau I have ever seen created by law, and we are now to put into their hands the largest subsidy ever granted to shipping interests in this country or in the world. The subsidy provision of this bill aggregates more than all the subsidies in the world before the war, and likely 50 to 100 per cent above that sum. A member of the Shipping Board gives the world total before the war as only $35,535,199. This is a tremendous trust when you look into it. Who are the Shipping Board?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. May I have 10 minutes more to finish?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 10 additional minutes.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Gentlemen, you give the president of this board and its members very great powers—greater than should be given to any one in time of peace, not even to the President himself. This is, or should be, a government of laws, not persons; of regulations and not whims. Let me point out one man on this Shipping Board, you can look up his name for yourselves, who has been very active for this subsidy propaganda. I found his articles in the magazines and I found his speeches in the newspapers. So I looked him up. The Wall Street Journal tells of his obtaining legislation for an Atlantic line years ago. I looked him up in Who's Who. There he says himself that he acted as attorney for certain associated shipping interests 21 years. This lobbyist and attorney of the ship-owners is one of the members of this board. How can he divest himself of his atmosphere, environment, viewpoint, so as to act impartially with all these powers and special privileges in his hand?

Gentlemen, are you going to vote for such a bureaucracy to dispense such immense sums? Has this board and its predecessors by its extravagance, waste, and bad management given you such confidence in its judgment and ability? How can you defend such autocratic powers before your constituents? I am not going to attempt it before mine.

Now, just one or two more points of interest. Clemenceau is here. He is appealing to us for France. We have heard the wail from all Europe, the cry, "We are staggering, we are bankrupt, we are going down. You are rich. Help us." It is the Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us." The big bankers have said to us, "Oh, cancel the debt; cancel the debt." We say, and I think correctly, "We can not cancel the debt. We can not give up the $11,000,000,000 that you owe us. Look at this shipping wreck. Look at the sacrifices we have made. Look at these other things the war left us—pensions, and doubtless a bonus. We have our own debt of $26,000,000,000. We are ground down with taxes. You must pay. We will give you time, but you must pay."

Then they say, "You have the gold." Yes; we have the gold. "Then, let us send the goods." "No; we will not have your goods." So we put up a high-tariff wall. Then they say, "In heaven's name, let us carry a part of your sea traffic! Give us a chance to do something to enable us to pay you." We say, "No; we are going to carry the traffic ourselves," and we strike them a solar plexus blow by creating a subsidized merchant marine, the largest the world has ever seen. We put them off the ocean. Ah, gentlemen, there is such a thing as American pride and patriotism, but let it not be expressive of cold-blooded greed and heartless inhumanity.

Gentlemen, there is such a thing as retaliation. They are already saying, "You are playing with loaded dice. The world has now free ports and equal shipping rights, but you Americans are about to substitute discrimination and favoritism. You are doing it deliberately, because you have the power. You avow your purpose to drive us out of your ports. We are weak now. We are bending under war burdens. But if we must resort to the lex talionis, an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, we can and will strike back."

Shall this be our answer to Europe's appeal to us in her great distress? Shall we strike her shipping a body blow? How are they to pay their debts to us? In God's name, how are they to pay?

Mr. Chairman, there was a time years ago when the flag of our country was beloved of all the world, when it was the beautiful emblem of liberty and love. Shall we make it a thing for nations to hiss their hatred at all over the world? Oh, let us still play the part of the big brother, not the big bully, of the world. [Applause.] Fellow Republicans, the leaders would destroy our good old party. I beg you, take to the lifeboats. Take to the planks! [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin yields back three minutes.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS]. [Applause.]

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, before going into a description of the bill and what it is proposed by the committee to do to take care of our ships, I would like to state that the committee have never felt that the authorities used by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. J. M. NELSON], the Wall Street Journal, or the Nation, that he so freely quotes, were any friends to the American merchant marine, but we know that always in every way they have represented the view of the people and the shippers on the other side of the water. [Applause.] I do not believe a member of the British Parliament could have come before the House of Representatives and made a better argument for the destruction of the American merchant marine than has been made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. J. M. NELSON].

With these few remarks, I want to take up in a sensible manner what it is proposed to do in this bill. There may be sections that are not satisfactory to the House. You have your opportunity next week to take them out or change them when the bill is considered for amendment. We, in our judgment, have tried to produce for the House a rounded bill that we knew, if put into effect, would restore the American merchant marine to the seas, so that our merchants who do business in foreign countries would not be ashamed of their home country or have to utilize the ships of foreign nations to carry their goods back and forth.

Gentlemen, I was in Yokohama when the Mongolia left there, and with the resident Americans stood on the wharf and cried. It was then said that the Pacific Mail was going out of business; that it was the last trip of the Mongolia. Our compatriots, the men who are building up the business of this country in foreign ports, stood on the pier and cried as that ship left the harbor, and I did too. Is it the intention of the House of Representatives to take into consideration any other thing than to build up the American merchant marine? We have only two things before us. Are you in favor of Government ownership and operation such as you have had, and such as you will have in the future if you have Government ownership and operation, or are you willing to consider some method of placing these ships into private hands and operating them?

The shipping business is not the same as any other business. The other ship has the trade, and until you get the trade you have idle ships the same as England did when it took the trade from Spain, and the same as any other nation that takes the trade away from any other nation has had to do. Now, with these few words I will describe the bill. If gentlemen have the bill I will ask them to follow me, and I am ready to answer any questions that may be asked. The first section of the bill amends section 5 of the merchant marine act of 1920. The principal change is in connection with the matter of the sale of vessels and the interest to be paid on the unpaid purchase money. The interest rate was not fixed in the original shipping bill and we have set it at 4 per cent. The interest rate is on the unpaid balance. If a man buys a ship and pays 20 or 40 per cent, he pays interest at the rate of 4 per cent on the balance.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman state why you fix the interest rate at less than the Government can borrow money for?

Mr. EDMONDS. If gentlemen want to, they can change it, but it was the judgment of the committee that that was the right rate. We have made the bill perfectly open, freely open to amendment, so that you gentlemen can register your decision on the subject.

We have done one thing more in this section. We have arranged that the competitive bids may be set aside by the Shipping Board, but only on an agreement of five out of the seven members. The reason that was done was this: Frequently a man will come in and want a ship immediately. He will buy the ship, and the board says under the act we have to advertise, and we have lost a number of sales of that kind. If the prevailing market rate is received for the ship, I can see no objection to dropping the bids and letting them have the ship at the market rate.

Section 2 amends section 7 of the merchant marine act of 1920. It appears that a number of the different cities, particularly those along the Gulf coast, have been establishing lines, endeavoring to build up these lines on a profitable basis, and they think the experiment has not had a sufficient length of time to be proven. They have asked us to extend the time. At first they wanted five years. We felt that we wanted to get rid of the fleet before the end of five years, and at last they agreed to extend it for two years. That gives the Shipping Board the privilege of continuing the service for two years, and I have no doubt that if Congress wants to change it two years from now they can do it.

There have been a number of rumors at the time we were drawing the bill that there would be established two big corporations, one on the Atlantic coast and one on the Pacific coast. There are now 72 different corporations in the ocean carrying trade of this country. These two big corporations were to handle all the business. So we have put in a section, as follows:

It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to discourage monopoly in the American merchant marine, and, in pursuance of this policy, the board is directed, in the development of its sales policy, to continue as far as possible and practicable, subject to the provisions of this section, all existing steamship routes and regular services, and to endeavor in every way to bring about the permanent establishment of such routes and services, and their retention, as far as possible, in the hands of persons having the support, financial and otherwise, of the domestic communities primarily interested in such routes and services. In carrying out the provisions of this section the board is directed to investigate fully all matters in connection therewith, and to conduct hearings at which the persons interested in such communities may have the opportunity to express their views as to the course to be pursued by the board and the methods to be adopted in carrying out the policy herein prescribed.

Not that we have had any absolute information as to the formation of these big corporations talked about in the newspapers and around the House.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. I will.

Mr. LONDON. What is the proportion of privately owned tonnage to the amount of tonnage operated by the Government?

Mr. EDMONDS. I have not the figures, but I will get them and put them in the Record. I think that the Government owns about 75 per cent and private owners 25 per cent.

Section 3 of the act makes the insurance sections of the Jones Act of 1920 operative. It appears that in drawing the act of 1920 there was a question raised as to the Government taking care of the equities in the marine insurance fund. They have been carrying on that business, but they would like to have it changed so as to make it authorized by Congress. Now, the new section of the bill, section 10, provides that wherever they find that the foreign insurance rate is more than the rate in this country they can also insure the balance of the equity in that ship. We found that in order to break down the American syndicate that had been formed under the Jones Act the year before last the foreign insurance folks were making special rates in order to attract insurance to the other side. They were taking it so far below that insurers complained. Now we cut out all commissions and bother of that kind, and when a ship is insured, if the man finds that he can get cheaper insurance on the other side, we keep the insurance in this country—not in the broad spirit spoken of by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Section 5 of the new bill provides for the payment of the $125,000,000 fund. The Shipping Board has to-day the authority to set aside out of the sales $25,000,000 a year, and that authority is given them for five years. That is $125,000,000. But owing to the fact that we thought that a great many people after the bill was passed would come in and ask us for certain types of ships that we had not, we expected a greater rush at the beginning of the operation of this bill than we did at some other time during its operation.

We have set aside $125,000,000, but, mark you, not out of the Treasury of the United States, not out of the profits of the operations of the Shipping Board, not out of the appropriations you will make annually, but they have to sell ships or other property for $125,000,000 to get that money before they can loan it. What do we do with that money? We say to them, "You can loan two-thirds the value of a ship at 2 per cent." Why? Because in Italy they are giving a shipbuilding subsidy to the shipyards, to the constructing yards, and in Japan they are giving construction subsidies, and in France they are following the old policy of construction subsidies. We thought that in all probability if we could reduce the overhead in the ship to a little over 3 per cent by giving these men on two-thirds of its value money at 2 per cent and letting them pay 6 per cent on the balance we would make it attractive for them to build these types of ships that are at present very much needed to round out this fleet.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The gentleman speaks of what they are doing in Japan and England on construction subsidies. Does he know of any cases where the nations are paying construction subsidies and also operating subsidies?

Mr. EDMONDS. Oh, yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Is that where there is a mail subvention? Do you know of any such case?

Mr. EDMONDS. Oh, yes. Japan pays a navigation bounty and a mail subvention, both.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That is, a construction bounty and a subvention for carrying the mails?

Mr. EDMONDS. It gives a construction, a navigation, and a mail bounty—all three.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Is it not true that we have now something like 1,500 ships of our own?

Mr. EDMONDS. About 1,400 and some odd.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Then why create a revolving fund to build more ships?

Mr. EDMONDS. Because we need certain types of ships to round out a fleet.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Have not we about three or four hundred now that are available?

Mr. EDMONDS. Let me explain that to the gentleman, because we might as well know all about it now as at any time. We have a large number of cargo boats, a very few passenger boats, and we have a certain tonnage of oil tankers, but no refrigerator boats that I know of. If we have, they are very few. We should have refrigerator boats. We will take the position of a shipper. Suppose a man forms a shipping company and he comes down to the Shipping Board and says to them that he is going to haul meat from Argentina or to carry meat products out of this country, and that he needs refrigerator boats and also needs a certain number of tankers to carry oil, because he will use oil-burning boats, and that he wants so many cargo boats and so many passenger boats, or so many part passenger and part cargo boats. Now, if the Shipping Board has not them to give to this man he can only purchase a part of his fleet from the Shipping Board and he has to go somewhere else for the balance of the fleet which he contemplates using in the trade he is going to enter.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. This bill, as I understand it, is built on two theories—to get rid of the ships on the one hand and to build up a permanent foreign trade on the other. The primary thing, however, is to get rid of these ships and of the deficit. Are we not building up a revolving fund with which to construct more ships in competition with our present ships? How are we going to sell them?

Mr. EDMONDS. No. None of these ships will be built by the Shipping Board to compete with their own ships. These ships will be built by private parties and we will take a mortgage on the ships for two-thirds of their value.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. EVANS], I thought, asked a pertinent question. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says that we are to create this $125,000,000 revolving fund and loan it at 2 per cent. The gentleman knows that the Government now faces a deficit of $700,000,000, and if we were to place the $125,000,000 back into the Treasury, we would have to borrow just that much less, and the amount we are borrowing we are paying about 4½ per cent and more for. Is not that an extra subsidy?

Mr. EDMONDS. I think the last loan was at 4 per cent or 4½ per cent.

Mr. BLANTON. It runs up to 4½ per cent. Does not the gentleman think that that is an extra subsidy that we are offering the shipping interests of the country?

Mr. EDMONDS. This is not a subsidy at all, it is simply a construction fund.

Mr. BLANTON. It is just a gift, as the gentleman says.

Mr. EDMONDS. Oh, no; it is not even a gift, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS], who is prompting the gentleman, knows that it is not.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I know that it is, and so does the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EDMONDS. The difference in the rate of interest is a gift; yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. EDMONDS. I thought the gentleman meant that the fund was a gift.

Mr. BLANTON. I am talking about the difference in the rate of interest.

Mr. EDMONDS. Did I not say it would make his interest rate a little over 3 per cent and cut down his overhead by that?

Mr. BLANTON. That is an extra subsidy.

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes. I say frankly that we have left it open for you to decide whether you want to leave it at 2 per cent or not. We think that is good judgment. We do not pretend to be infallible.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman is speaking of having these boats constructed and loaning money to construct them in order that they may go into competition in the world markets. Is there anything in the bill which will change the provision in the tariff act which provides that where a ship-builder constructs a ship with imported materials and sells it to a foreigner he can get a rebate of all the tariff he paid on the materials, whereas if he sells it to one of our own people, who is going to operate it under the flag of the United States, he does not get the rebate? Is there anything to correct that in this instance?

Mr. EDMONDS. No.

Mr. STEVENSON. In other words, are we going to still prefer the foreign purchaser to the extent of the tariff on materials or, when we begin to loan money to build ships for America, are we going to give the American an even deal with the other fellow?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not think there is anything in this bill that covers that subject.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The gentleman says that this is not a subsidy except so far as the difference in the rate of interest is concerned. It authorizes a loan of two-thirds of the cost of the ship which is constructed?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does not the gentleman think that our experience shows that a ship is not good security for two-thirds of its cost?

Mr. EDMONDS. Oh, the gentleman knows that it is not fair to take the cost of the ships during the war and compare it with what it costs to-day. To-day we are building ships within 25 per cent of what they are costing abroad.

Mr. JONES of Texas. We are not able to sell them for anything like two-thirds of the cost that it would take to replace them.

Mr. EDMONDS. I heard a quotation made on a cargo ship of $65 a ton, and the man said he would not make any money on it, but he would take it in order to keep his organization together.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does the gentleman think that a ship is good security?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not think there is any question that in normal times a ship is good security.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I notice in connection with that provision the gentleman does not make the stipulation that any of the proceeds of the cargo of shipment shall be applied to the payment of their loan; so even if the ship was security at the time it was in operation, still it might not be security. There is no provision for cutting down the time of payment, or—

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman will notice that arrangements were made that the payments should be reduced gradually.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I did not catch that.

Mr. EDMONDS. The payments are to be made gradually.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. On the loan fund?

Mr. EDMONDS. I think so.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I should like to see it. The gentleman is speaking of the sales provision.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman is right.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Then there is no provision—

Mr. EDMONDS. But good business and good judgment would require a payment equal to 5 or 7 per cent a year.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Is there anything in the bill requiring the board to do it?

Mr. EDMONDS. No. But they are expected to get ample security.

Mr. JONES of Texas. So far as limitations in the bill are concerned, they could grant credit for a period of years, and then two-thirds of the value—

Mr. EDMONDS. Fifteen years is the limit.

Mr. JONES of Texas. And by that time the ship may be worn out.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. I will.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Is it not regarded by shipping experts that the average life of a ship is 20 years?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. And that Homer Ferguson, a man very well qualified in shipping circles, says from 10 to 14 years was the useful life of a ship.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Ferguson made that statement, I think, in connection with the ships built during the war.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. No; he was speaking generally.

Mr. EDMONDS. I am frank to say that Mr. Bernard Baker told me personally—he is the man who helped to write the original ship legislation—he told me it was fair to contemplate that at the end of 20 years the expense of repairs on a ship were too great for the value of the ship at that time. Now, he says that ships may have lasted 30 years or may last 40 years or 50 years, and I saw an iron ship, not a steel ship, that lasted over 40 years. We have one running on the Pacific to-day 42 years old, an iron ship. He said in England they made it a custom of considering 20 years as the life of a ship.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I was talking about the average life of a ship.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. I will.

Mr. FREAR. What are we going to do with the 1,400 ships and how long a time will it take to dispose of them under this bill? What is the gentleman's estimate?

Mr. EDMONDS. I can not make any estimate.

Mr. FREAR. Has any estimate appeared in the hearings?

Mr. EDMONDS. It is expected in two or three years four or five hundred ships will be taken of the 1,400. There are about 7,500,000 tons of shipping considered as A No. 1. The rest are considered as second grade and will be sold to people who want to use them in the local coastwise business. I have a man in the coastwise business dickering for 10 to-day. They are not useful in the foreign trade but are useful in the coastwise trade, and they will be gradually disposed of.

Mr. FREAR. What will they do with those?

Mr. EDMONDS. If the ship is absolutely no good, there is no use in doing anything but scrapping it. I remember during the war the Northern Pines was sent to Europe. It was brought down to the Lakes and cut in half, enlarged, and rebuilt, and used in the European trade. The ship was so poor and the running expenses were so great that it was not considered worth while to bother with it any more, and it was, the last I heard, tied up in Danzig.

Mr. FREAR. That is part of the $3,000,000,000 which the President mentioned in his address as lost to us.

Mr. EDMONDS. The loss is going to be enormous. Let me say something about that. The gentleman from Wisconsin spoke about the Gallinger-Hanna bill—if in 1906 they had passed a bill like this and they had spent $50,000,000 a year in building up a merchant marine, you would not have lost two or three billions in 1917, when we went to war.

Mr. ROSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. I will.

Mr. ROSE. The gentleman from Wisconsin asked the gentleman a question about the revolving fund of $125,000,000 for the purpose of constructing new ships. We have approximately 1,500 ships now lying at different docks. I thought it might be a good place to let the people know we are bound to lose a great deal of money because of the number of ships that under the law are at the docks now in the American merchant marine.

Mr. EDMONDS. And every day becoming worth less, because the ship is like an automobile—you put it in storage and when you bring it down you have to spend a great deal of money on it.

Mr. ROSE. I thought it well to let the people know that we are bound to face a great loss, whether this bill passes or not.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. I will.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Would the gentleman be in a position to state what is the actual estimate of value of the fleet to-day at present prices?

Mr. EDMONDS. This is my own estimate, understand, from watching the sales of shipping. I have been watching the sales for the last year. I should say that the 7,500,000 tons of ships, including our fine passenger ships, of which you see representations displayed out here in the hall, are worth $200,000,000.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. As against $3,000,000,000 as the total cost in all?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes. But what is the use in going back to make trouble? If I had wanted heretofore to make trouble in this House for the Shipping Boards of the past and their satellites, I could have done it, but I have always considered the fact that the shipping business was a business and not a political football. I have tried to be fair. The gentleman from Alabama knows that I have had information in my desk that I could have brought out at any time, but, considering the war troubles and everything else, I said to myself, "No; we are bound to make these losses." Every day rumors were going about while we were building the fleet, but I thought we should not go out and discourage the people by saying anything about it. I have information that I think is good, although it may not be true, and Mr. Hurley knew I had it, and Mr. Payne knew I had it; but I did not divulge it, and we did the best we could to correct the condition. We found only the other day that a shipping firm had made a claim against the Shipping Board of $8,000,000, but I understand they gave them a hotel in the neighborhood and settled with them for $560,000, or something like that.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Not to provoke acrimonious discussion, but I think it is fair for the people of the country to know that while we are not criticizing the building of these ships under the stress of circumstances we have actually a fleet now that is not worth anything near $500,000,000.

Mr. EDMONDS. I have figured that perhaps we might get from $350,000,000 to $400,000,000 out of the wreck.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Is that by the sale of the ships?

Mr. EDMONDS. Oh, no. If you put them up at cash sale you could not get anything. You could not get a bid on them. When we put up the wooden ships one man bid a dollar for the lot. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Suppose as a business matter that we can not operate these ships ourselves without a subsidy and can not sell them. It is an old maxim of Rothschild's that the first loss is the best. Is it not best to make the loss at first rather than at the end of a series of years? As a business proposition is not the first loss the best?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes. I am very glad the President made the statement that he made, that you can be either obstructive, destructive, or constructive. You have to do one of those three things.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. When you make that estimate do you calculate the value of the ships now, before the subsidy is provided, or after the subsidy has started?

Mr. EDMONDS. I have not attempted to think of any figures after the subsidy has started.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. EDMONDS. Can the gentleman from Massachusetts give me another half hour?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes. I yield to the gentleman 30 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 30 minutes more.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. Probably within two or three years the Government will sell two or three hundred of the ships. It is officially stated that the 338 ships now under the control of the Government are operated at an expense of $50,000,000 a year. Should these same ships be transferred to private ownership, it will cost the Government less than they now cost, when they are operated by the Government?

Mr. EDMONDS. It is admitted that the operation of 7,500,000 tons of ships will cost us about $15,000,000 a year under the subsidy. We are operating to-day between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000 tons of ships at a loss of from $40,000,000 to $50,000,000 a year.

Mr. WATSON. Then we will save the difference between $15,000,000 and $50,000,000 from the operations of the ships as now?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; but wait. I do not want to deceive the House and I do not want to tell Members of the House anything that is not so.

Mr. WATSON. I followed the figures as stated by Mr. Lasker.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. In a moment. No; I am wrong. It will cost the present ships we are operating about $15,000,000 a year in the way of subsidies, but if we put $30,000,000 into subsidy we will be able to operate about 7,500,000 tons.

Mr. WATSON. How many ships would that represent?

Mr. EDMONDS. I should imagine about 750.

Mr. WATSON. Then we can operate about 750 at the same amount of loss that we are now making by Government operation?

Mr. EDMONDS. We would operate about twice as many ships under the subsidy act as we are operating to-day under the profit-and-loss plan.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. You have just stated that for the operation of the tonnage that we are now operating we would be required to pay under this bill about $15,000,000 in subsidies. What amount do you estimate is the annual loss of the operation under the present tonnage, under the present system?

Mr. EDMONDS. As near as I can estimate, the total operating loss to-day—and I have no figures excepting those that have been given to you—is in the neighborhood of $3,000,000 a month.

Mr. OLIVER. In other words, to operate the tonnage now built and which are being operated costs us annually $36,000,000, and $14,000,000, the difference between $36,000,000 and $50,000,000, represents alone the expense incident to the expense and upkeep of the ships that are laid up and not operated. I want you to segregate the cost.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] can best answer that.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the appropriation for the current fiscal year over average loss is $5,497,000, and it has been running this year as a whole on about that basis. But the last month that it was reported there was no voyage loss at all. The balance of the $50,000,000 appropriation is carried in administrative and other expenses.

Mr. EDMONDS. Of course, something has got to be charged to administrative expenses.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. They have over 8,000 employees.

Mr. EDMONDS. Something has got to be charged to administrative and overhead expenses. The gentleman knows that as well as I do.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. There is a great deal too much being spent there.

Mr. EDMONDS. That is possibly so. I think the President's statement that there is probably $30,000,000 loss is probably a fair statement.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Will the gentleman venture an opinion on the question as to whether this subsidy would have to be perpetual? Would there come a time in the history of commerce and the development of this merchant marine when it would be self-sustaining?

Mr. EDMONDS. In the history of all nations giving a subsidy to start their shipping off it has gradually become reduced to an almost negligible point. The history of England in this matter was first virtually a subsidy. To-day it is a mail subvention.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. We know that the British can build ships more cheaply than we can. They have cheaper labor and cheaper material, and we pay our seamen higher wages than they pay theirs. Is there any possibility that in the next 50 years there will be such a change in that situation that we can compete with Great Britain? Is not this a perpetual subsidy that we have got to put up?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not think so. I think you will find that Japan, after 20 years of high subsidy, is reducing her subsidies, and is able to retain her ships on the sea while doing so.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Is there any chance of our running the other commercial nations off the sea with our merchant marine? If so, I favor it.

Mr. EDMONDS. Answering the gentleman, I will say that I would be very proud if none but American ships flying the American flag were on the sea.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. EDMONDS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. COUGHLIN. On page 7, in section 5, in providing for the construction of new ships, there is a provision that the Government may loan two-thirds of the cost of construction. On page 2 there is a provision for the sale of the ships now owned by the Government, and there the provision is that the payment to be made shall equal the depreciation per year. Why is that provision omitted on page 7, in section 5, while it is included on page 2?

Mr. EDMONDS. I will say to the gentleman frankly that I do not really know, excepting this, that there is the possibility that a man who was starting out a new line of ships might want two or three years in which he did not have to repay the loan, in order to get himself established. I think it is just as well to leave that to the discretion of the board as it is to put in some kind of a cast-iron provision for repayment on the mortgage. Certainly the men who go on the board are going to be responsible enough to see that they are not going to get into any difficulty by handing over to anybody a sum of money equal to two-thirds of the value of a ship.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Then, why is it provided on page 2 that in the case of the sale of ships payment will be made annually equal to the amount of depreciation?

Mr. EDMONDS. Because you are selling an older ship. You are not building a new ship, but you are selling an older ship, and the depreciation is greater every year than in the case of a new ship.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Would not the same principle apply, that the depreciation might be so great that the security for the loan would be less at the end of 15 years in either case?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not think so.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. EDMONDS. I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. BURTNESS. I wish to ask in regard to the difference in the rate of interest charged on the ships that are sold and on the money loaned for the building of new ships, why is it 4 per cent in one case and 2 per cent in the other case? This thought occurred to me. We are very much interested in getting rid of the present ships that we have, and if we are to make it easy on anything, it ought to be on the sale of the ships that we own and that we want to get rid of. Why should not the rate of interest on the fund for the building of new ships be at least as high as it is upon the amount that is carried on the sale of the old ships?

Mr. EDMONDS. It was our judgment that this was the right way, and as I said before, if you want to change it, you can.

Mr. BURTNESS. What, in the gentleman's judgment, was the reason for that difference?

Mr. EDMONDS. I have tried to explain it in this way, that when we sell a man one of these ships that we have to-day, and he puts it into operation immediately, he probably has no overhead charge against it excepting his line charge. He can afford to pay 4 per cent; but when a man has to build a new ship, to make a new venture, and to invest perhaps $30,000,000 or $40,000,000 of his own money in building ships, he has got to have some little time to gather himself together, if he is going to compete with foreign ships. If a man's overhead is less, of course he is in a better position to compete.

Mr. BURTNESS. He must pay one-third of the cost in either case.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. If a man bought a ship in operation, he would get a lot of business that went with the ship at the present time, would he not?

Mr. EDMONDS. Probably so. He might buy an established line.

Mr. SNELL. He would get the business going with the sale, the same as in any other established business.

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. And he would have that advantage over a man who started a new enterprise.

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I am afraid the gentleman is not going to reach it within his limited time, and that is why I am asking the question. I noticed some tables in the hearings giving the aggregate paid in the way of subventions to the other maritime nations in 1909.

Mr. EDMONDS. I saw that table.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I notice that it is about $46,000,000. I can not find anything anywhere in the hearing to show what the subsidies of the other maritime nations were last year.

Mr. EDMONDS. We are trying to get that. It is almost impossible to get it. I will say this, that the Italian subsidy is greater now than it was in 1909.

The French subsidies were more than $15,000,000. We could not get at the aggregate English subsidy because there are so many different subventions, as you call them. They have a general payment to the Cunard Line, and the Cunard Line gets something from somewhere else. The White Star Line runs to Montreal, and they get a subsidy or subvention from Canada. Canada has subventions as well as England. The Australian lines are running at a loss, and that is nothing but a subvention.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Does the gentleman have any idea that before we get to the amending stage we will have that information?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. If the gentleman will permit me, a member of the Shipping Board states and you will find it in a clipping in the reference library which says that before the war the amount was $35,000,000.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. When, before the war?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. In 1912; and that is of all the ships of all the subsidies of the world.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If the other maritime nations pay $45,000,000 annually in subventions, why does it seem to be necessary for us to pay in one year, we will say, to run our ships approximately that same amount? Why should we fix a rate that will aggregate all the other subsidies of the world?

Mr. EDMONDS. Because the shipping of this country has been cursed by legislation, bothered by the senior Senator from Wisconsin and also by navigation laws made up by patchwork in Congress.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Is that going to cost us $40,000,000 a year?

Mr. EDMONDS. It will cost us $600 or $800 a month on every ship, if not $1,000.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes. I will yield to the gentleman and then I must decline to yield further.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. In reference to navigation laws, can the gentleman inform the House as to what, if anything, has been done toward extending the coastwise laws to include the Philippine Islands?

Mr. EDMONDS. No; I can not. The gentleman knows as much as I do about it. He probably has seen in the newspapers that the President is going to extend the coastwise laws, but I do not think he has done it yet.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. The question I want to ask is this: If the coastwise laws are extended or if the Shipping Board, in conformity with section 21 of the act of 1920, should provide shipping for the Philippine Islands, how much tonnage of the seven and a half millions can be used in that trade?

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman means in the Philippine Islands? That would be impossible to answer. Some years they have good crops and a good market, and some years it fails.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Has the committee investigated that question as to what tonnage would be used in the Philippine trade if section 21 of the act of 1920 was in force?

Mr. EDMONDS. The probability is we would not have to use any more ships. The Philippines have their vessels.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Why should not the proclamation be made? Why should not section 21 of the act of 1920 be put in force?

Mr. EDMONDS. Do not ask me; I do not know why it is not.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I am asking the gentleman about the proclamation in compliance with the act.

Mr. EDMONDS. The President has not put it into effect. Now, gentlemen, section 20, in a few words, is the same as the section in the merchant marine act of 1920 put into workable shape.

The act of 1920 provided that a certain amount of the income tax could be set aside, providing it was used to build ships. The Treasury Department could not interpret the act, and they came and asked us to put the sections in here, if we could arrange it, carrying out what we had already agreed upon in the merchant marine act of 1920. But there has been added something to this which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. J. M. NELSON] spoke about. We agreed to give the shipper 5 per cent deduction in the income tax on the freight of any shipment that he makes directly himself.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. No; I can not yield at the present time. I have been very liberal yielding and I have only a short time remaining.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I recognize that the gentleman has been very liberal.

Mr. EDMONDS. I want to call attention to the fact that this payment of the 5 per cent is made to the shipper. If a farmer is the shipper, he gets it. If a broker comes in, he can not get it. It is intended to place this deduction in the hands of the shipper, and it is put in to take the place of the discriminatory duty that we tried to put through in section 34 in the Jones Act. Now, I am trying to tell you the truth about this bill. I am not trying to camouflage anything. I am telling you what is here and you are to have your opportunity to vote or correct it. We thought in committee it was the right way to do it, and we are putting it up to you.

Title 3, sections 301, 302, 303, and 304, arranges that 50 per cent of the immigration to this country must come in American ships. Why? Because Italy says no man shall leave Italy unless he sails in an Italian ship, and Spain says that no man shall leave Spain unless he sails in a Spanish ship. Are you going to let them put it over on you? Are you not going to see that you protect yourselves? Immigration sometimes is the profit of the ship. We are asking all these nations to let us carry 50 per cent of the immigration to this country.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. I yield because the gentleman is on the committee.

Mr. RAKER. The idea was in the committee that this provision violated about 32 treaties.

Mr. EDMONDS. I think that is right.

Mr. RAKER. It violates 32 treaties of foreign countries. Will the gentleman tell the House, that being true, why you did not put in that all the personal property that comes to this country should come in American ships instead of referring it only to the immigration question?

Mr. EDMONDS. Because there is no reason to do that. We do not need to retaliate because of freight, for they do not require that half or all of their freight shall be carried in Italian or Spanish ships, while they do require that all of the immigrants shall be.

Mr. RAKER. Does not the proposition work out like this—while this is not a retaliation against Italy or Spain, yet it is an entering wedge for the great ships to make a national issue and to bring more immigrants to this country, and therefore break down the immigration laws that we have at the present time?

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman may see it in that way. I can not see it in that way, although I have not studied the immigration question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The Congress of the United States still reserves to itself the right to restrict immigration as it sees best?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that this bill when it becomes operative takes from the control of Congress the question of legislation on immigration, and puts it all in the hands of the President for the purpose of determining that question with these 32 nations, and all the rest of them, by virtue of treaties?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think not.

Mr. RAKER. There is no doubt on earth when you read the provision and look into it that that is the purpose of this legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I shall try to explain that later, without now taking up any more of the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. I can not yield at this time. I am coming now to the question of compensation and the limit placed upon it. I wrote this limitation, and therefore I know what is intended by it. If, according to the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. J. M. NELSON], these ships will, according to the Secretary of the Interior or some one else in Great Britain, whatever his office is, earn 12½ per cent, I say, thank God for it, because we will get back 50 per cent of everything that they earn over 10 per cent.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Have you provided that they shall not increase their salaries so high so that you will never get any of that money?

Mr. EDMONDS. Oh, yes; that is well taken care of, notwithstanding the statements in the newspapers and from other sources. We have so arranged it that they will have to take into consideration the profits and the capital and the wages and the salaries that are paid, and that will be done through the Internal Revenue Bureau and certified by the Shipping Board.

I want to return now for a minute to the 5 per cent tax deduction. I want you to notice in that section that wherever a man owns his own ships and carries his own products—and this is another statement that has been made in the newspapers quite generally—he can not get a deduction in his taxation. If the Standard Oil Co. carries its oil, it can not get a deduction. If the United States Steel Corporation carries its steel products, it can not get a deduction. That is very carefully guarded in that section. Wherever a man carries his own products he can not get a 5 per cent deduction. That takes in the large corporations.

Mr. BANKHEAD rose.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, would he get a subsidy if he carried his own products?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the question that I was about to ask.

Mr. EDMONDS. I will answer it, and nobody knows it better than does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. Yes; he will. We are taking this measure up, not only because of the merchant marine, but we are taking it up as a war measure. The very vessels that you want under your flag in time of war are these oil tankers, and you can not let them be distributed out under the flags of other nations, so that you can not control them in time of war and leave your ships and yourselves entirely helpless.

Mr. YOUNG. Has the gentleman made any estimate of the amount of these deductions from income tax, in so far as the total is concerned?

Mr. EDMONDS. I believe it is figured at about $7,000,000, but I would not want to say.

Mr. YOUNG. Who made that estimate?

Mr. EDMONDS. I believe that was given to us by the Shipping Board, or stated by them.

Mr. YOUNG. There is nothing from the Treasury Department?

Mr. EDMONDS. I would not be surprised if they got the figures from the Treasury Department. I have no doubt that they have some basis for their estimates. The compensation feature of this bill stands in this way. You pay all of these people a subsidy. They have to be men of ability. Of course, you are not going to pick out Tom Jones and Bill Brown away out here in Arizona, where there are no ships, and pay them a subsidy, but you are going to pick up men with at least some capital and some ability. When a man earns 10 per cent, limited as carefully as this is—and we spent days over that section putting it into the law so that there would be no question raised in the future and no chance of any manipulation by the board—when a man earns 10 per cent in accordance with the rules and regulations of the income tax bureau of the internal revenue department, of anything over that he returns one-half until he returns the subsidy. If you are going to pay a subsidy, it is the absolutely fair way to do it.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield before he comes to that topic?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. J. M. NELSON] stated on the floor of the House this morning that the Government guaranteed a profit or return of 12½ per cent, and would pay a sufficient subsidy to guarantee a return of 12½ per cent. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania believe that that is a statement which will be sustained by the fact?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not think the gentleman from Wisconsin meant to say that.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. No.

Mr. EDMONDS. I think the gentleman from Wisconsin intended to say this: That there would be an earning from this bill of 12½ per cent on the value of the ships, without considering depreciation or overhead, or anything like that. That is possibly true.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Here is the language—

Mr. EDMONDS. That is possibly true. But I would be only too glad if his statement were correct. If all of our ships would earn 12½ per cent we would at least know that we were going to get some of these subsidies back, and it would not be very long before they would be earning 15 or 20 per cent and giving it all back to us.

Now, the question I want to bring up—

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. EDMONDS. I am sorry, but I can not. It is to the doubling of the amount of the compensation where it is found necessary by the Shipping Board, of course, always within the limit of their appropriation of money. They can not go to work and spend more than they get. There are lines to-day that need a certain amount of aid more than that proposed in the bill. Now, the British Board of Trade, if they were handling the subject, would have no difficulty with reference to it at all. As a matter of fact, the British Board of Trade has authority to suspend the navigation laws when they do not like them in reference to British ships. They have such complete authority and such an elastic authority they can almost do anything, notwithstanding their acts of Parliament.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Will the gentleman allow me to correct that statement?

Mr. EDMONDS. I can not; I have not the time. I want to say that I do not find so much fault in giving a board in a commercial business of this kind a little elasticity. I think if you gentlemen drop politics and talk business you would say so, too. Now, in this section we describe what is foreign trade.

We go very thoroughly into that. I am trying to call to the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin, the gentleman from Michigan, and gentlemen from the great West that even here in this bill this committee is recognizing the fact that possibly you will have a St. Lawrence canal, and the day after this bill is passed that a boat can leave Duluth, Chicago, or Cleveland, go down through the present canals and deliver a cargo at Liverpool, and get a subsidy for the entire voyage; can take up a cargo on that side and deliver it and get a subsidy for the entire voyage.

Of course, we do not subsidize boats on the Lakes; it would be foolish to do it. They are protected now. But any ship on the Lakes that wants to go into the foreign trade can to-day, if it can pass through the canals, go into the foreign trade and get exactly the same treatment as a ship from New York or a ship from Philadelphia or a ship from Charleston. The committee realized that possibly it might be hard to pass a bill of this kind at a later day, and possibly there might be some enlargement of the canals that would allow larger ocean steamers to go into the different ports on the Lakes, and they have arranged that they shall have exactly the same treatment up in the Great Lakes districts as the port of New York or any other port.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman spoke of the indirect benefits that is aside from the subsidy. What does the gentleman estimate they will amount to, or has there been any estimate?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not know how to estimate, there are so many different items.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Lasker said the indirect benefits would amount to more than the direct benefit from the subsidy.

Mr. EDMONDS. I think Mr. Lasker's statement was intended this way: That one of the benefits of the indirect aids would be that you would not have to pass such a large subsidy. You can not measure the indirect aid in dollars and cents. It will render the payment of a subsidy, probably the stoppage of the payment of a subsidy, not so far in the future.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Will the gentleman yield for a short question on the point of the indirect benefits?

Mr. EDMONDS. I will.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Has the gentleman any data on this point; that certain of our commercial rivals at the time when they had control of the carrying trade have refused to carry our products? Is it not possible that in a case such as that one of the indirect benefits is to secure us against a possible rejection of the carrying of our trade by competing nations?

Mr. EDMONDS. I will call attention to something that happened in July—I have a number of instances here, but I will not take the time to cite them—in July we found we were short of coal and a great many manufacturing establishments along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts wanted to buy coal, not so much the Gulf because they have nonunion mines, and they do not have so much trouble as our people in the North, and we have had a great deal of trouble. We started to bring coal from England. I remember I was sitting in my office one day and a friend of mine called upon me to place a couple of cargoes of English coal. I called up a friend of mine with reference to the coal and got a price, and the next morning the man I offered the coal to called me up, and he said there had been an advance in English coal of 75 cents, some shillings, I do not remember exactly. He said he would have to put that on the—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I yield the gentleman 30 additional minutes.

Mr. EDMONDS. I shall have to refuse to answer any more questions. I called him up and said the coal was sold because I could not get the additional price. What happened? The Shipping Board immediately turned loose 20 or 30 ships here and there abroad, and the price returned to normal within two weeks. That is the benefit of a merchant marine.

Now, as regards the increase in compensation. It requires a vote of five members for an increase or decrease of compensation. It requires a vote of five members of the board to do it.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. EDMONDS. I will.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman made a statement justifying the increase and diminishing of the individual compensation. What is the justification for the section providing that there shall be no review of the amount paid by the General Accounting Office?

Mr. EDMONDS. I will talk of that when I come to the section further on.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Well, will the gentleman, before he leaves that illustration, allow me to ask him this question? Suppose these ships had been in the hands of private individuals and not in the hands of the Government. Do you suppose that they would have been turned loose the same way, and that it would have had the same effect?

Mr. EDMONDS. Oh, yes. That is a very simple question, and it can be very simply answered. If I had 30 or 40 ships tied up and had an opportunity to make money with them I would do so.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes; you could make money, but if you knew that the moment you turned them out on the seas the other fellow would lower his rates, would you turn them out?

Mr. EDMONDS. Oh, no. The Shipping Board only turned them out when they secured the charters.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I was wondering if the same result would have happened if they had been owned by private persons.

Mr. EDMONDS. Oh, no. Ordinary business is pursued in the shipping business in just the same manner as in other business, but not in time of war.

Now, in section 412 we make an arrangement by which these ships that are subsidized are all at the beck and call of the Government in case of a national emergency. The Government gets the vessel at a fair actual price, the price prevailing at the time of the taking, but in no event shall the fair actual price be enhanced by the causes necessitating the taking. Let us see what that means. It means if I have a ship—I may have bought it for $300,000, and it may be worth $600,000, but the war comes on and it may then be worth $1,000,000. I can not ask a million dollars for it, but I have to turn that over to the Government when the time comes at a fair actual price, and arrangements are made to arbitrate in case a dispute should arise.

Section 413 requires that all repairs to these subsidized vessels shall be made in this country as far as possible.

Section 416 carries the rules for compensation when the ship makes over 10 per cent profit. Title V makes provision respecting Army and Navy transports by substituting merchant ships in place of transports owned by the Army or Navy. Title VI has to do with provisions relating to rail and water transportation. Provision is made for taking up such matters as those on which there are or might be conflicting jurisdiction. It seemed that the Interstate Commerce Commission did not know how to work with the Shipping Board when joint rates were to be made, and the Shipping Board did not know how to work with the Interstate Commerce Commission. Bills of lading and all questions likely to arise over joint shipment rates are provided for. It ought to provide a good medium for uniting the work of the Shipping Board and the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. There has been some statement made in regard to the transport service of the Army and Navy, that it should be carried on by the Shipping Board and the Shipping Board vessels used. Is it contemplated that the vessels owned by the Army or Navy shall be taken over and operated by the Shipping Board?

Mr. EDMONDS. No. It is contemplated here that the service, wherever possible, shall be done by the Shipping Board, by ships under private contract, instead of by ships operated by the Army and Navy.

Mr. HICKS. All transports, then, will remain in the Army and Navy?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not know what they will do with them if they have no work for them.

Mr. HICKS. If they have no work for them, they will transfer them to the Shipping Board.

Mr. EDMONDS. Here is the difference—the difference between carrying the Army on a transport to the Philippines and carrying it on a private-owned ship. If we are going to give these people money to see that they get a fair return on their investment and give us money back again, we ought to concentrate this service, as has been done by Great Britain and other governments. All the South African transport was done by a South African line. They carried their officers down there and did it by contract. When the Boer War came on they had a contract for the use of the vessels. But the use of contract service for the building up of a merchant marine is common among nations. Japan carries her officers on freight ships. She has a carrying contract. She does not attempt to run transports.

Mr. HICKS. I suppose the gentleman would say that it is good national policy to ship in a Government vessel all the things that we have to ship to the Philippines?

Mr. EDMONDS. It has to be shipped in an American vessel under this bill.

Mr. HICKS. By one of the vessels under the control of the American Government?

Mr. EDMONDS. If the Government sells all the vessels, of course not, but we have the power to take them over in case of war.

Mr. HICKS. We are shipping now by means of vessels not under the American flag?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; but we are trying to stop that.

Mr. HICKS. The gentleman disapproves of that?

Mr. EDMONDS. Oh, yes. I do not approve of that at all.

Section 607, which is the most important section, is written in order to make section 28 of the merchant marine act workable, it having been claimed by the department that they were unable to put it in operation. So we clarify that situation. Section 28, as you will remember, is the preferential rail rate section. You see, we have what is known on our railroads as an export rate on goods for export. That applies to both American and foreign ships. A foreign ship can get just as good an export rate from a railroad as an American ship can. Section 28 prevented the foreign ship from getting that preferential rate and made them pay the regular rate, and only allowed a preferential rate to be applied to American ships. Now the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Shipping Board could not get the thing to working, so we tried to have it put in workable shape, and we hope they will not ask any more questions, but that this will be put into operation and give our ships at least that preference.

Let me now refer to section 703. Our friends on the other side called attention to the fact that we had forgotten, as they said, to make an accounting section in the bill. We had thought that the original Shipping Board act of 1916 carried in it all the accounting sections that were necessary, but we found that, unfortunately, it said "in this bill." It did not even say "or amendments thereto," so we thought that we would have to put in a new accounting section. Because it had been said all over the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific that we were going to try to loot the Treasury, without requiring any accounting whatever of the Shipping Board, and thought we would put it plainly, so that the people would know that we were not going to loot the Treasury and that we would give them an accounting.

Mr. BLANTON. On that one feature of accounting will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman will remember the speech made by the very distinguished former chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. Good, on the floor here, wherein he stated that because it was impossible to get a true and correct accounting of the business of the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation he, as chairman of that committee, was going to see that they should not get a single other dollar of appropriation from this Government.

Mr. EDMONDS. Oh, yes; and if Mr. Good were here now he would change his mind.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman remembers that speech?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; very well. He talked to me about it before he made it.

Mr. BLANTON. Is that policy to be wiped away?

Mr. EDMONDS. If the Members of this Congress desire it, the Shipping Board will turn in a monthly report of their operations. The Shipping Board to-day is being run on a businesslike basis, which it never was before.

Mr. BLANTON. With a loss of $50,000,000 a year?

Mr. EDMONDS. Have you ever figured how much money was made on these ships during the war, when one voyage would almost pay for a ship? Have you ever received any accounting from the Shipping Board of what became of all that money? You know we appropriated three billion and some odd dollars. What became of the profits? All gone; all wiped out. No accounting made for all that. There never was a report made by the Shipping Board that the Comptroller did not say he would not guarantee it and did not believe it himself. When we had the report before our committee in 1918 or 1919, we asked him the question, "Is this report you are going to make correct?" He said, "No; and it never can be."

Did you ever think of the possibilities, that you perhaps made a billion dollars off these ships in freights, notwithstanding the way they were handled; that you made a billion dollars and that there has never been an accounting made of it? And your loss may possibly be $5,000,000,000 or $6,000,000,000 instead of $3,000,000,000?

Mr. BLANTON. Is that an excuse for the continuance of such unbusinesslike operations?

Mr. EDMONDS. No; and I am saying to you that now you can get a monthly report of the operations of the Shipping Board if desired. I heard some gentleman talking about the losses of the Shipping Board. Nobody knows the amount. You will never get an account of what the old Shipping Boards did. Last July the new Shipping Board just opened a new set of books, and to-day they will give you a monthly report. I have no brief to speak for the Shipping Board and I am not going to, but I am going to say this, that they have put the operations of the Shipping Board in businesslike shape at last.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the gentleman certainly by inquiring over the phone could find out and put into the Record a statement of what is the loss from operation at the present time.

Mr. EDMONDS. I will try and get it. I am not sure of it.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman has been very courteous in permitting questions. He spoke of the elasticity that he wanted to remain in the bill. It has been suggested that the gentleman should have made it Laskerticity.

Mr. EDMONDS. Perhaps if it were not for the lascars on the British steamers we would not have so much trouble about the difference in wages between British ships and American ships, so you can take it as you please.

When we come to section 704 of the bill I am going to move to strike it out. I want to say in regard to this section that the reason it was put in was because it appears that the business rivalry in the intercoastal trade between the Atlantic and the Pacific got so strong that a number of the companies were approaching financial distress. The unfortunate part of it is that the amendment is so written that it not only protects that trade, but does protect some other trades that do not need the protection. We have had a request from the Pacific coast for hearings on this subject, and so I think it would be as well to take this section out of the bill and have hearings and see just exactly what is wanted. This section was sent up to me by the Shipping Board with an argument in regard to the necessity for protecting these people, and we put it in the bill last Monday. Mr. DAVIS or Mr. BANKHEAD thought we ought to have some hearings on it, and I think that is true, so I think we will take it out of the bill and have a hearing and see what is necessary to protect these people from loss. The competition is making this loss. There is no question about that, but the question of allowing the business to be monopolized by one or two concerns is a very serious one.

Section 705 describes the home port. Ever since we have had shipping we have had all kinds of trouble about this question of home ports. The navigation law says that the home port is the place where a man principally resides. The result was that if a man in Denver bought a ship, that was his home port. If a man in Arizona bought a ship, that was his home port. Anywhere that he happened to want to call his home port, that place would be his home port under the law. Now the home port is the place where all the documents are kept and where they lie against the ship. If a man has a mortgage on his ship, he registers it at his home port. If he has any other trouble, like libels or anything of that sort against the ship, they are sent to the home port. If there are any other documents or securities issued against the ship, they are registered at the home port. So we thought we had better designate exactly what is meant by the home port, and we did so. Section 42 requires approval of the board to transfer any vessel from under the documentation of the laws of the United States to any other documentation, and the board's approval is required. We simply want the Shipping Board to retain the authority to give approval to the change from one flag to another. I think we all agree that that is a good section and there is no necessity for talking about it.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. It has been reported that the large shipping interests are against the bill because it does not give a large enough subsidy to warrant the maintenance of a merchant marine. What does the gentleman say in regard to that?

Mr. EDMONDS. I want to say that during the drafting of this bill there were very few suggestions coming from the large shipping interests. I do not know why. In December there were quite a few men came down and testified in the hearings, but they seem to have disappeared about that time and did not seem to care much about it. I am very frank in saying that I believe that most of the shipping men want this bill, although the interest they have displayed has been very slight. They have not attempted in any way to guide the committee in its conclusions.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman think that this slight interest on their part was on account of the fact that the subsidy was not large enough so that it would warrant the maintenance of a merchant marine?

Mr. EDMONDS. That has been stated. I want to say that I heard that they thought the subsidy was not large enough. As a matter of fact several men in the shipping business have said that the subsidy ought to be larger.

Mr. SNELL. I suppose from the information the committee and the Shipping Board has they think that the subsidy allowed in this bill is enough to make up the difference in cost of operating under the American flag?

Mr. EDMONDS. We are satisfied that it will make up the difference in cost.

Mr. SNELL. And that it will guarantee a sufficient merchant marine under our flag?

Mr. EDMONDS. I would be willing to take the bill as it stands and say that it will guarantee a sufficient merchant marine.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. With the permission of the gentleman I want to say that there is one item in the bill that the gentleman has forgotten and to which I call his attention. That is section 418, the General Accounting Office.

Mr. EDMONDS. I did forget that. I have not looked at my references, but I presume the proposition is this. The General Accounting Office has always controlled the authority to approve or disapprove appropriations and the use of the money. But there are so many provisions in connection with the payment of a subsidy, so many different technical terms in the handling of the subject, that if it was left to the General Accounting Office there probably would not be sufficient and proper knowledge for the paying of it out.

Mr. FESS. I have heard it said that the bill was not very acceptable to the shipowners or to the men who were likely to be engaged in operating a merchant marine. Suppose we can not sell the ships, suppose the bill is not sufficiently inviting so that we could dispose of the vessels, is there any alternative?

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman means if we do not sell the ships?

Mr. FESS. Yes; do we have to sell the ships at any price, under this bill?

Mr. EDMONDS. No. Answering the question in regard to the shipowner I should like to say this: There are a number of large established shipowners in this country, possibly 10. The interest they have betrayed in the legislation is not so great. They like it, they will speak for it, but they are not running around about it, and the reason for that is that in this bill we provide for competitors of theirs. In other words, you and I, if we had the proper ability, knowledge, and capital, could start a line and buy ships and get the subsidy. In other words, all subsidies in the past have been made to individuals, to individual corporations, naming the party in the act. In this everybody can get a subsidy, provided he has the knowledge and the capital.

Mr. FESS. Then this fear expressed by some Members that the bill will not give us the means of disposing of the ships except at an unnecessary loss is not well founded?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not think it is.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Until such time as we have disposed of the ships we will have to bear the loss incident to their being tied up?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. So we may be in a position where we will have, say, 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 tons sold, and plus the loss due to maintenance of the ships still left on our hands. Has there been any estimate in regard to that?

Mr. EDMONDS. I have said, and my opinion is, that three or four hundred—and perhaps five hundred—ships would be sold in two years. There are thirteen hundred and some odd ships. There will be possibly 500 sold in two years. But in selling these ships there is a certain amount of impetus given to business. We may use the small ships we have here, which are the most annoying. They have the right to sell the lake type abroad if we can not sell in this country. Mr. Lasker says he hopes to clean it up in four or five years. You have the right to sell the lake type abroad and the right to use them in the coastwise trade, and some of them might be used in the rivers of China. A man was over here a short time ago talking about buying some of the ships to use in China.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. If that should happen, that would be covered into the Treasury and no additional appropriation would be made for launching.

Mr. EDMONDS. That is correct; but do not forget that the $125,000,000 fund which the gentleman is talking about comes out of the sale of ships. That is the only place it can come out of, unless there may be some other property.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Does the gentleman think that the sale of ships will be rapid enough so that it will take care of the money to be loaned, plus the cost of maintenance of those vessels still in the hands of the Government?

Mr. EDMONDS. Oh, yes. Our maintenance in taking care of the ships to-day tied up is not large. When I say that, I mean relatively, because handling a ship is a little different from handling a small car or something like that. Relatively there has never been a group of ships handled as cheaply as these ships are being handled to-day.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. How many of the lake type of ships do we have?

Mr. EDMONDS. I will give the gentleman that figure a little later. I have it, but I can not put my hands on it now.

Mr. SNELL. How small an initial payment does the gentleman understand they are willing to accept and sell a ship for—10 per cent of its value, or any certain sum?

Mr. EDMONDS. No. That has been done, but the Shipping Board's attitude to-day is this: They consider that the price of the ship is so low that a man has no right to ask for much credit. They have sold this lake type of boat running from 2,800 to 3,500 tons for $76,000 each.

Mr. SNELL. I have in mind the other and better type of boat for ocean trade.

Mr. EDMONDS. I imagine they would want about one-third down.

Mr. SNELL. And there will be nothing else given with them except the initial payment to guarantee this operation. If a man bought a boat and paid one-third, and at the end of the year found that he was not successful in its operation, he could turn that back to the Government?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; but he would have to take his loss.

Mr. SNELL. He would lose simply his initial payment?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes. They would foreclose the mortgage and take the ship, just as is done with any other property.

The Assistant Secretary of Agriculture under President Wilson, Carl Vrooman, in an address before the Southern Commercial Congress in Chicago on Tuesday evening of this week, said:

America's most pressing need is to get rid of her surpluses. Our surpluses can and should be dumped abroad at once.

The late David Lubin said in 1914:

The few holders of advance information regarding freight rates are not alone enabled to operate in one market center, but such information will enable them to manipulate, directly or indirectly, the principal market centers of the world, whether in exporting or non-exporting countries, and to continue this kind of a loaded-dice game the year around, all at the expense of the producers and the consumers everywhere.

Again, Carl Vrooman, in 1916, when the war in Europe produced a shortage of shipping, in an article published as a Senate document, stated, speaking of the original bill creating the Shipping Board:

It would pay the farmers of America, and pay them big, to chip in and build a merchant marine for themselves. Our farmers could readily afford to spend not merely the $500,000,000 called for by the pending shipping bill but $100,000,000, or even $200,000,000, in such an enterprise.

These gentlemen both recognized the value of shipping control in the world's competition for the control of the world's markets. Experience has proven if you do not control the final carriage of your products, you must perforce pay tribute to your commercial enemies.

Looking backward, how easy it is to perceive that if some act had been placed upon the statute books after the shipping investigation of 1906 that would have upbuilt our merchant marine, even if only to the extent of carrying 50 per cent of our imports and exports, and had it cost us $50,000,000 per year, at the outbreak of our war with Germany we would have expended $500,000,000, but, having the facilities in hand, we would have been able not only to save the taxpayers between two and three billions of dollars, but we would have been delivering all through the period between 1914 and 1917 our surpluses to countries needing them, greatly to our own profit, and giving the distressed countries of Europe much relief. No man within the hearing of my voice but will remember the terrific loss to the farmer occasioned by the throwing of the surplus crops upon the market. Cotton was driven from a reasonable price to below the cost of production, and all other commodities followed the same course. The freight on American shipments rose rapidly to rates far in advance of the rates paid by our competitors who owned or controlled their own shipping, and it was only by governmental action that ruin was averted.

To-day when we have 600 or 700 fine cargo ships fairly up to date and of first classification and several hundred ships not as good or economical, but still equal to many ships to-day in service under foreign flags and good for service in certain trades, it should not be difficult for Congress to determine what would be the best plan for their utilization. We have but three ways to consider.

First. The proposed bill which looks to the disposal of the fleet to private parties, and plans by a comprehensive method to aid, by both direct and indirect methods, in equalizing the differences in costs until such a time as they can sustain themselves without the direct aid.

Second. Continued Government ownership and operation, which, after the experience of the past few years, surely can result only in its gradual elimination.

Third. Destruction of the ships or disposal of them wherever a purchaser may be found.

Whether it is called a subsidy or compensation, the practice of governmental aid to merchant shipping is, and long has been, the established practice of all the maritime nations of the world. This may take the form of postal pay and naval retainers to certain regular lines, as in the case of Great Britain, by whose Government the subsidy policy as now known was initiated almost a hundred years ago. It may be postal subsidy and naval retainer to regular lines and mileage subsidy to all shipping, with direct bounties for shipbuilding, as in the case of France, Italy, and other countries, including at one time Japan.

Nations subsidize their maritime industries according to their needs or resources precisely as nations, with now not one important exception, to some degree or another shape their customs tariffs so that they will not only yield revenue but favor their native manufactures or their native agriculturists. The motive of maritime subsidy is exactly the motive of the protective tariff, to give national preference for national prudential purposes to national interests against their competitors of other lands.

Every commercial people with seacoasts and ports and sea-borne trade recognizes as by a strong instinct of self-preservation that it must not depend for the delivery of its exports and the bringing of its imports solely upon the ships and seamen of other governments, its rivals in trade and possible enemies in war. Every people with a foothold upon the ocean recognizes that its merchant marine, by which is meant not only the ships themselves but their officers and men, the yards which launched the ships, the mechanics who put them together, and the separate manufacturing plants and men that produced the equipment of the ships, constitutes altogether a peculiarly important key industry for either peace or war.

The very first law of the first Federal Congress of the United States, passed on July 4, 1789, a law one of whose purposes was explicitly stated to be "the encouragement and protection of manufactures," also encouraged and protected navigation and shipbuilding by a provision allowing a preferential rate of 10 per cent of the customs duties of this same law on all goods imported into this country in ships built and owned by American citizens.

This policy of encouragement to American shipping by preferential customs duties and tonnage taxes, while gradually reduced as it may have seemed no longer necessary, did actually remain in force as to an important part of our commerce until 1850, when the United States was vigorously applying mail subsidies with great success for the encouragement of ocean steamship lines.

Commercial treaties, negotiated with the nations of Europe and with Japan, prevent a reapplication of the former system of preferential customs duties and tonnage taxes. If the proposed amendment of these treaties is not to be undertaken because of grave difficulties therein involved, the inevitable alternative for encouragement to our shipping is a resort to the policy of subsidy, which the treaties do not forbid, and which, in fact, all competing maritime nations grant without objection from America and with large advantage to themselves.

Opposition to subsidy to shipping in America has been due chiefly to the same kind of unconsidering prejudice which long blocked the formal adoption of the gold standard of value—a prejudice against the word itself. A subsidy, like so many other things, is just or unjust according to its essential character. It has been historically applied with many shades of meaning. As a mere gift or reward by a medieval monarch to some favorite politician of his court it is one thing, and as applied by deliberate legislation for the public purpose of developing a strong merchant marine and for the promotion of commerce and the national defense it is quite another. Intelligent opinion everywhere recognizes this difference.

For more than 70 years the United States Government gave without question a subsidy in the form of a direct bounty to the vessels and men engaged in the deep-sea fisheries. For a different reason, to encourage a very different industry, the American Congress in 1890 granted a direct bounty to the farmers and planters who grew sugar within the United States. This was regarded rightly then as an effective substitute for a protective tariff rate. Not only the National Government but State and city governments in the United States have assisted by public funds, to the amount of a great many hundreds of millions of dollars, the creation and maintenance of local and long-distance lines of land transportation.

Subsidy has also been given by Congress, though fitfully and inadequately, to the encouragement of transportation on the sea. After the British Government, in 1839 by a mail subsidy of $425,000 a year to the Cunard Line, called the first regular trans-Atlantic steamship service into being, the United States in 1845 and 1847, on the initiative of President Polk and with a loyal heartiness then upheld by all parties and sections, granted mail subsidies for the encouragement of American steamship services across the Atlantic and to the West Indies and the Isthmus of Panama. Under this subsidy policy our ocean steam shipping from 1847 to 1855 increased more rapidly than Britain's and demonstrated such seagoing qualities that the American flag, as in the packet and clipper ships, commanded in steam the best trade of the Atlantic. It is of this era that Dr. David A. Wells, the economist, wrote in his history of the merchant marine that—

The prospect, therefore, at one time was that the United States, although late in the start of this new department of foreign shipping, would soon equal, if not overtake, her great commercial competitor.

It was the action of Congress that struck down the American steamship service on the North Atlantic by the reduction and then the withdrawal of the postal subsidies. In 1856 the principal subsidy, that to the Collins Line, was cut to $385,000 a year; it had been as high as $858,000. In 1858 there was another reduction of the Collins mail pay to $346,000 a year, while other lines were restricted to the sea and inland postage. This action of Congress threw the Atlantic steamship trade into the hands of European companies.

At that time the Cunard Line was receiving a subsidy of nearly $900,000 a year, and the British Government was expending in all for subsidies to British lines from $3,700,000 to $4,500,000. France granted her line on the trans-Atlantic route $620,000 a year when the American service was abandoned. Commodore Vanderbilt, the ablest steamship manager of his time, made a resolute effort to keep American steamers in operation on the basis of the sea and inland postage alone, but could not succeed against the subsidies of Europe.

Since 1858 no real sustained trial of an adequate subsidy policy has been attempted by the United States, unless the subsidy paid the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. for 10 years from 1867 to 1878 can be called a policy of the Government. During the period of subsidy payment the total payments to the company totaled about $4,500,000, but the payment did lead to the establishment of a line in the Pacific sustaining itself without subventions, excepting mail payments to the present day, though the subsidy plan has been steadily pursued, in one way or another, by all of our competitors. In 1891, after much urging by maritime and commercial interests, the United States Senate did pass a strong shipping subsidy bill applicable to both mail and cargo steamers. But all aid to the cargo ships was refused by the House of Representatives through the opposition of a group of Republican Representatives of the Mid-Northwest. These men also insisted on the cutting down of the subsidies to regular mail lines, which the Senate had set at a fair but not extravagant level.

The result was a crippling of the entire measure, viewed as a general policy of aid to the American merchant marine, though the new law did create or sustain two or three valuable postal services to the West Indies, to Mexico, to near-by South America, and to Australasia, and assisted in the development of an American line of four 20-knot ships from New York to Europe, the only complete, regular trans-Atlantic service flying the Stars and Stripes at the outbreak of the World War. In fact, almost all of the few American steamships afloat in overseas service in 1914 owed their existence to the little subsidy experiment of the ocean mail act of 1891, under which the United States was paying in aid to the merchant marine about one-half of what was being contributed in postal subsidies to the aid of British shipping by the Government of Canada alone.

All through the period from 1891 to 1914, merchants, manufacturers, exporters, and bankers of the country were earnestly petitioning for adequate encouragement to American ocean shipbuilding and navigation. They were asking for protection for the one American industry left almost wholly unprotected and neglected—and this the most intensely competitive industry of all. Regularly the party platforms promised aid to American shipping. Following the Spanish War of 1898, a general subsidy bill, championed by Senators Frye and Hanna, passed the Senate, but could win no favorable action in the House of Representatives because of midwestern Republican opposition. In 1904, President Roosevelt secured the appointment of a Merchant Marine Commission of Senators and Representatives, under the chairmanship of the late Senator Gallinger of New Hampshire, to study the shipping question and present a report. Another subsidy bill granting aid to both mail lines and cargo vessels was recommended by the Republican majority of this commission, and was passed by the Senate on February 14, 1906, by a vote of 38 to 27. In the House, as before in 1891, the subsidy to cargo vessels was eliminated from the bill and mail subsidy was restricted to certain lines to South America. In this crippled form the bill was passed by the House on March 1, 1907, but concurrence of the Senate was prevented by a filibuster in the last hours of the expiring Congress.

Senator Gallinger brought forward the bill in postal form, and it was passed by the Senate on March 20, 1908, without a division. This bill, as an amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill, was brought up in the House on May 23, 1908, and defeated 145 to 153. On March 2, 1909, on a roll call in the House, the ocean mail bill was again rejected, but by a much narrower division of 172 to 175.

This brings the record down to the creation of the Shipping Board by the shipping act of 1916, and the passage of the Jones law, or merchant marine act of 1920. Throughout the years the policies chiefly advocated for the restoration of American ocean shipping and shipbuilding have been (1) subsidies, (2) a revival of preferential duties, and (3) "free ships"—that is, the free registry in the United States of foreign-built ships for overseas commerce. A "free-ship" provision was contained in the Panama Canal act of 1912, so far as concerned ships less than 5 years old. The provision in time of peace produced no result whatever. Not one foreign-built steamer was presented for American registry until the World War broke out and a new value was suddenly attached to the American flag as that of the most powerful of neutral carriers.

The "free-ship" privilege was broadened in the emergency act of August 18, 1914, but experience has proved that "free ships" alone are not an important factor in the upbuilding of the merchant marine. Far more valuable is some effective method of compensating shipowners for the higher wages and cost of maintenance of all American ships, of either native or foreign construction. Ships will neither be built in this country nor brought into registry from abroad so long as foreign vessels have a markedly lower wage and maintenance cost than American vessels, and often the additional advantage of subsidy or some other form of national assistance.

Our actual trial of "free ships" for overseas trade and the fact that preferential customs duties and tonnage taxes can not be applied unless commercial treaties are first amended make a general subsidy system inevitable if any complete aid is to be extended to the American merchant marine. It is the one policy left for consideration and adoption. As has been said, subsidy is the policy to which in some form or degree all of our maritime competitors have long been resorting. It is barred by no treaties and is least liable to provoke retaliation in kind. It is not well for the world that any one nation or group of nations should dominate the trade of ocean carrying. That never has been just or prudent, and it is far less just or prudent or possible now than ever before, because, as Secretary Hughes so significantly declared at the opening of the disarmament conference, "The importance of the merchant marine is in inverse ratio to the size of naval armaments."

Only about one-sixth of the products of American industries are exported overseas, but that one-sixth is greater in volume and sometimes greater in value than the exports of any other nation in the world. Rightfully, therefore, the United States is entitled to possess one of the greatest, perhaps considering its vast water-borne domestic commerce, the very greatest of all the merchant navies of the world. Rightfully, also, the United States is entitled to carry in its own ships the same proportion of its sea-borne trade as any of its competitors, which in the case of its chief competitor, Great Britain, is now about 70 per cent. As a matter of fact, American ships are now conveying only about one-third in value of the exports and imports of our country. A year and more ago American ships were carrying about one-half of our imports and exports. What these figures clearly signify is that American ships are slowly but steadily being driven out of even our own overseas commerce, through cheaper wages or in some cases subsidies, or both combined, by ships that fly the flags of other governments.

That is to say, there is now going on the unmistakable displacement of what was once a great and prosperous American industry—which can again be made great and prosperous—by foreign industries, all of which have lower wage scales and cost of maintenance, and possess besides in some way or other national aid and encouragement of their own. This displacement of American ships by ships of other flags and allegiance right in our own commerce carries with it the displacement of American officers and seamen and the lessening of our means of national self-defense.

The situation is one which imperatively calls for national protection to the one great industry long left almost absolutely unprotected. The factory, the farm, have been, are now or will soon be, adequately protected against alien competition. If the factory, the farm, why not the ship and the shipyard?

Let it be remembered that American ships in the overseas trade compete directly and keenly with foreign ships of all the nations in the world in our own ports, along every mile of ocean to foreign ports, and in those foreign ports for every export and import cargo of American commerce, and that American ships do this against all the wage handicaps which our farmers can possibly meet, plus often the added handicap of foreign subsidy or other national assistance rigidly denied thus far to American shipowners and seamen. Under these conditions it is surprising that in 1915 there were so few American ships left in overseas trade that foreign shipowners were able to compel American farmers to pay more money for carrying a bushel of grain abroad than the farmers received for all the labor and expense of its production?

Any aid or subsidy now given to American shipping must include the cargo ships, the "tramp" steamers, of which the American people through the Shipping Board own hundreds—the ships needed and fit to carry American grain and provisions and cotton to markets in foreign lands. That these are the farmers' kind of ships must not be forgotten by the national lawmakers. Agriculture still supplies the bulk of our export commerce, and it is entitled to full consideration in the shaping of a national policy for the encouragement of our merchant marine.

Granting that it is desirable and necessary to aid not only the regular mail line ships, which are relatively few, but the slower cargo ships, which are many, in any serious effort to encourage American maritime industry, the effort is wholly practicable. There are precedents for it. American national maritime policy, as framed by Washington, Jefferson, and Madison, protected all American ships engaged in commerce—not merely the postal or passenger packets of that day. Several nations of Europe, and Japan for a considerable time, have aided by direct subsidy their cargo carriers.

Great Britain has not practiced this expedient, but the mail subsidies of the British Government in the crucial period from 1840 to 1860 applied to all or most of the ocean steam tonnage of the United Kingdom. Moreover, the British subsidies, creating regular steam lines, developed also a growing traffic a large part of which could not profitably be conveyed in liners, but demanded the use of the cheaper "tramps." Finally, the potential, protective power of Lloyd's classification and insurance agencies, and the complete cooperative organization of British merchants, exporters and importers and brokers all over the world have given British "tramp" shipping through the years an advantage perhaps as valuable as direct aid could extend.

For all this indirect assistance there is no equivalent yet available to the cargo ships of the American merchant marine. Direct aid is absolutely necessary in our own export and import commerce. This aid by subsidy can be made applicable to all our ships regularly engaged in the foreign trade of the United States. It can be given to vessels only while actively employed in loading, steaming, discharging, or undergoing voyage repairs, and it can be based on the actual difference in wages and maintenance between the American ships and their immediate competitors. All this is entirely feasible, for the movements of merchant ships and the pay rolls of all nationalities are matters of record available at any time.

Just as in the case of regular mail liners, subsidy to cargo ships can be made conditional upon the performance of substantial service to the Government. These ships can be required to carry the mails in case of need where no liners are available. They can be held subject under contract to be turned over to the national authorities at a fair price or rate of hire in an emergency.

As to the exact amount of the subsidy that must be given to equalize competitive conditions and thus assure fair play to the new American merchant marine, whether Government owned or privately owned, this is much more readily ascertainable than the commercial data for establishing protection by tariff law to manufacturing and to agriculture. Foreign merchant vessels competing with our own ships enter our ports and make themselves subject to taxation and inquiry here in the same way in which American ships have been subject to just such taxation and inquiry in foreign waters. Wage scales of foreign shipping, as of American shipping, are the subject of constant investigation and report by the Department of Commerce and the Shipping Board. If once the principle of protection to the American ocean merchant fleet is established, the manner of applying the principle can promptly be determined.

In the main, however, it is not statute law or regulation but natural standards of wages and of living in the United States that are responsible for the higher cost of manning and maintaining the American merchant marine. Sea wages and living standards for every maritime country are established by the wages and standards of living that obtain on the land in that country. This is the reason chiefly why the pay roll of British ships is somewhat higher than the pay roll of Scandinavian ships and why the pay roll of Scandinavian ships is somewhat higher than the pay roll of Italian or Greek ships, for example, and the pay roll of Italian or Greek ships is again higher than the rate prevailing in the merchant service of Japan. Abnormal exchange, which now makes the German sea wage even lower than the Japanese, is a special factor counting heavily against American ocean shipping. It is, in fact, temporarily equivalent to a subsidy to most foreign ships against America. This abnormal exchange must be fairly reckoned with for the time being in the adjustment of an adequate subsidy for vessels of the United States.

Our leading competitors in shipping to-day are Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan. All of these countries pursue a policy of subvention, subsidy, or other favoritism toward their shipping interests, in many cases helping shipbuilding.

It is Great Britain which first began the policy of subsidizing steamships and has been most persistent and therefore most successful in the application of that policy to her great national steamship services plying to all important markets in the world.

The Cunard Co., the first regular trans-Atlantic steamship service, was created in 1839 by the grant of a postal subsidy of $425,000 a year by the British Government. This $425,000 a year represented more than the total first cost of a steamship of that day, or about 25 per cent per annum on the entire first cost of the whole fleet of Cunard steamers.

In 1841 the British Government gave a subsidy of $1,200,000 a year to the Royal Mail Steam Packet Co. to create a line to the West Indies and to the Isthmus of Panama. This subsidy was soon increased to $1,350,000 a year for an additional British service to Brazil and Argentina. At the same time a subsidy of $225,000 a year was given to the Pacific Steam Navigation Co. for a line on the west coast of South America, which touched at no British port.

These payments were not for postal service only, but were intended as encouragement to British shipbuilding and navigation, and it can be demonstrated beyond the shadow of a doubt by the statements of British officials themselves.

In the first place these payments in all the British discussions of the day were plainly described as "subsidies." No other word was used.

The parliamentary committee on contract steam packets, made up of the British public men who had voted the subsidies and best understood their purpose and character, declared in 1853 in the report to Parliament:

The objects which appear to have led to the formation of these contracts and to the larger expenditures involved were to afford us rapid, frequent, and punctual communication with distant ports which feed the main arteries of British commerce and with the most important of our foreign possessions, to foster maritime enterprise, and to encourage the production of a superior class of vessels, which would promote the convenience and wealth of the country in time of peace and assist in defending its shores against hostile aggression.

This statement is a description of the steamship subsidy exactly as it is understood in the United States. It is quoted from the most competent authority in the British Government at the very time when these subsidies were being established.

In 1845 and 1847, on the recommendation of a Democratic President, Polk, and by vote of a Democratic Congress the United States initiated a policy of subsidies to steamship lines exactly like the subsidies of Great Britain. The British Government incidentally increased its subsidy to the Cunard Line from $425,000 to $725,000 a year to put out the new American competition. That such was the purpose of the increased subsidy was declared by Mr. Cunard, the head of the Cunard Co., testifying in 1849 before the parliamentary committee on steam packets.

He said:

If I had got this contract three months sooner there would have been no American line.

The American line to which he referred was the famous Collins Line of American-built trans-Atlantic steamships from New York to Liverpool. Its ships were larger, swifter, and generally more efficient than the Cunard steamers, and these American ships quickly took the ascendancy on the North Atlantic. Officers of the British Navy who examined the American steamers reported to their Government that Great Britain "had no steamships comparable with them"; that they were better sea boats and that their propulsive equipment was superior. These American ships held all the trans-Atlantic records, carried two-thirds of the best passenger business, and cut Cunard freight rates in half during the period of their operation.

Even then the British Government, in the vain effort to kill the American line, gave Cunard a further increased subsidy of $900,000 a year, but the American ships retained their pre-eminence. Two of them were lost at sea, and several of the British ships had meanwhile been lost. But the Collins Line lived until 1858, when its subsidy of $858,000 was first reduced and then most of it withdrawn by Congress in the time of the political slavery quarrel between the South and the North.

Again, to quote a British, not an American, authority. Richard Cobden, testifying before the parliamentary committee on packet and telegraph contracts, declared shortly after that the American steamship service "ceased because the American Government withdrew the subsidy."

Another British witness, Mr. Wilson, stated before the same committee:

In the face of these increasing British subsidies the American Government has altogether relinquished the practice of subsidizing their vessels, and their vessels, of course, have been driven off the passage.

At this time the Cunard Steamship Co. was receiving a subsidy of almost $900,000 a year, which was greatly reduced as soon as it had achieved its purpose of killing American competition.

To quote still another British, not an American, authority. Henniker Heaton, a member of Parliament and formerly British postmaster general, declared in the North American Review of October, 1894:

As American ships were not subsidized, their owners could not compete with the Cunard and other companies, the art of shipbuilding languished, and the American carrying trade was transposed to foreign bottoms. In 1891 only 13 per cent of the exports from the United States were carried in American ships, which at one time had engrossed 90 per cent. As a consequence of refusing $5,000,000 a year in subsidies during 30 years to native shipowners, or $150,000,000, the United States had to pay in the same period not less than $3,000,000,000 for freights, while their mercantile marine dwindled into insignificance.

Rear Admiral Bedford Pim, another celebrated British maritime authority, thus described the subsidy policy of the British Government:

It has been the policy of the British Government to establish or, rather, to encourage the establishment of British steamship lines by the annual payment of a postal subsidy, and this with the most gratifying result as regards the expansion of British commerce. I know of no instance of a British postal line of steamers originally established without a subsidy for carrying the mails.

Incidentally, a distinguished American statesman, Senator James Ashton Bayard, of Delaware, father of Thomas Francis Bayard and a forebear of a Democratic Senator elect of the same name, said in a debate in Congress on the Collins subsidy in the year 1852:

I am willing to trust American skill and industry in competition with any people on the globe, when they stand nation to nation, without government interference. But if the treasury of a foreign nation is poured into the lap of individuals for the purpose of destroying the interests of my country or for building up a commercial marine at the expense of the commerce and prosperity of the United States, I for one will count no cost in counteracting such Government action on the part of Great Britain or any foreign power.

Not only in earlier but in later and present times it has been the fixed policy of the British Government, while bestowing subsidies on its own principal steamship lines, to give no postal pay to American and other foreign ships as far as possible. When a French line of steamers, Messageries Impériales, offered to convey the British mails to the Far East for a fraction of the subsidy of $1,300,000 a year which the British Peninsular & Oriental Co. was receiving, it threw the House of Commons into a fit of indignation and protest. As one of the members, Mr. Crawford, said:

Now, what I desire to do on this occasion is to protest, in the name of what I consider to be the interests of the country and the interest of commerce, and in justice to our own companies, against the ships of the Messageries Impériales or of any other foreign company being employed in the conveyance of our eastern mails. [Loud cheers from all parts of the house.] You may carry the principle of economy too far. [Hear, hear!] Such a course of proceedings would be free trade gone mad. * * * I think it is rather too much to expect that the interests of this country, commercial, social, and political, should be made to depend upon the good will of any foreign nation whatever. [Renewed cheers.]

When a few years later, in 1887, it was stated before the House of Commons that French and German steamers of superior speed were willing to convey the Asiatic mails for "from one-fourth to one-half less postage" than the British steamers were receiving, the proposition was vehemently rejected by Parliament, Mr. Goschen, Chancellor of the Exchequer, declaring that the services for which the Peninsular & Oriental Co. was subsidized were services which are postal in one sense, but which are undertaken partly for political, commercial, and other objects.

Postmaster General Raikes at the same time declared:

I think that if the honorable member only took the pains to study the course of public opinion he would find that a contract with the North German Line or the Messageries Maritimes would have a very slight chance of being adopted by the House of Commons.

The British Government boycotted not only French and German ships but the American steamers of the Inman Line, St. Louis, St. Paul, New York, and Philadelphia, of 20 knots, which in their prime performed the swiftest and most regular steamship service across the western ocean. There were at that time only two steamers in the whole British mercantile marine that were as fast as these steamers, but the British Government would send no letters except those specially addressed by these American steamers, paying them a rate only one-third or one-fourth of that given to British vessels of inferior speed. In 1905 the British Government paid only $10,511 in mail pay to the four fast American liners, though our Government in that year paid $212,000 to the steamers of the British White Star Line, $101,000 to the British Cunard Line, $168,000 to the North German Lloyd, $64,000 to the Hamburg-American Line, and $60,000 to the French company.

Between 1839 and the present time Great Britain has expended about $400,000,000 in direct subsidies to her principal steamship services, but in exchange for it the British Government has secured a fleet of swift naval-reserve steamers four times the size of the similar fleet possessed by the United States. In this matter it is Great Britain that has been the protectionist and the United States relatively the free trader.

The British subsidies have not been confined to Atlantic ports. The Canadian Pacific Line from Vancouver to Japan and China has been subsidized by both the British and the Canadian Governments—"a notable illustration of the generosity and courage with which England pushes her shipping interests," declared the late Hon. William C. Whitney in his annual report as Secretary of the Navy during the administration of President Cleveland.

Thus not only British authorities, but eminent American Democratic authorities, challenge and destroy the assertion of the opposition to this proposed marine bill that "Great Britain, chief maritime country in the world, has never given any subsidies to steamships."

Another assertion almost equally misleading is sometimes heard that the British Government "has never subsidized tramp steamers, and these make up the bulk of the British merchant marine."

This is not a total falsehood—it is only a half truth. Originally all ocean steamships were liners, and then all British steamships were subsidized, and that was shown in the advancement of steamship building and navigation. In the years between 1840 and 1860, it is a historic fact, never disputed, that at that time the British subsidies to regular line ocean steamers created British shipyards and engine and boiler works which could not have come into existence without such Government encouragement. These British yards and engine and boiler works that built the first subsidized British vessels later turned their attention to building slower freight steamers, so that indirectly the British tramp fleet is a product of the British subsidy system.

Furthermore, it has been realized that the subsidies given to the contract lines of British steamers have powerfully operated to create new commerce in which the slower tramp steamers have found a place as the carriers of the cheaper and bulkier commodities. All of the subsidized British steamship companies have long owned large fleets of the slower cargo ships which have been indirectly the beneficiaries of the national subsidy system.

However, the most direct protection and encouragement which the British freight steamers have received has been given by the close working cooperation of British merchants, underwriters, agents, and brokers all over the world. These interests have invariably worked together to give preference to British cargo ships and to discriminate against all non-British competitors.

What may well be described, in the words of Secretary William C. Whitney, as another "notable illustration of the generosity and courage with which England pushes her shipping interests," has lately come to light in the port of Alexandria, Egypt, where for nearly two years a close-working combination between the Liverpool Conference, in which the Cunard and Prince companies are included, and the Alexandria Produce Association, also dominated by British interests, prevented American steamers from carrying a single pound of Egyptian cotton to the American mills for which this cotton had been purchased. This powerful, exclusive, discriminatory protection of British cargo steamers in the Alexandria-New England cotton trade could not be broken up and any cargo secured for American ships until the British combine had been thoroughly frightened by threats of reprisal by the American Government.

Between direct subsidies to regular steamship lines and combinations and discriminations like those just described at Alexandria, the British merchant shipping for the last 80 years may well be described as the most effectively State aided and protected industry in the world.

James G. Blaine was not mistaken when, in his celebrated letter of 1890 to Mr. Gladstone, he declared:

It will not escape Mr. Gladstone's keen observation that British interests in navigation flourished with less rivalry and have increased in greater proportion than any other of the great interests of the United Kingdom. I ask his candid admission that it is the one interest which England has protected steadily and determinedly, regardless of consistency and regardless of expense. Nor will Mr. Gladstone fail to note that navigation is the weakest of the great interests of the United States, because it is the one which the National Government has consistently refused to protect.

To this statement Mr. Gladstone never replied, for the sufficient reason that it was absolutely true and unanswerable that in ocean shipping it is Great Britain that has been the protectionist and the United States the free trader.

Mr. Blaine in his very last speech in the United States Senate, on January 27, 1891, thus strikingly summed up what had been to that date—and indeed, has virtually remained to the present day—the do-nothing, pliant, and destructive policy of the American Congress:

It is a fact equally remarkable that for the last 25 years, or make it only for the last 20 years, from the beginning of the war to this hour, the Congress of the United States has not done one solitary thing to uphold the navigation interests of the United States. Decay has been observed going on steadily from year to year. The great march forward of our commercial rival of old has been witnessed and everywhere recognized, and the Representatives of the people of the United States have sat in their two Houses of legislation as dumb as though they could not speak, and have not offered a single remedy or a single aid. * * *

During these years in which Congress has not stepped forward to do one thing for the foreign commerce of this country, for all that vast external transportation whose importance the Senator from Kentucky has not exaggerated, but has strongly depicted, the same Congress has passed 92 acts in aid of internal transportation by rail; has given 200,000,000 acres of the public lands, worth to-day a thousand million dollars in money, and has added $70,000,000 in cash, and yet, I repeat, it has extended the aid of scarcely a single dollar to build up our foreign commerce.

Outside of Great Britain the policy of subvention or subsidy in aid to the British marine has been used by every colony of Great Britain, so it is almost impossible to compute the exact amount paid to the various lines from various sources. The cross Atlantic mail—carried by the two companies, the Cunard and White Star—payments amount to between $600,000 and $700,000, besides some special payment made on account of the construction of the Lusitania and Mauretania, a portion of the construction money being loaned by the British Government at 2½ per cent. The Peninsular & Oriental Steamship Co. receives for special services from the British Government about $1,200,000. Reference to Commerce Report of July 31 will fully describe the British payments, but you will note it says that it is impossible at this time to compile the payments made by the colonies.

Perhaps the most striking modern example of the upbuilding of a merchant marine is that of Japan, which country, by both shipbuilding subsidy and subsidy to shipping, has succeeded in securing for herself the position of third power in importance in the overseas trade in the short period of 20 years. The budget for 1922-23 provides for a postal subvention of about $5,000,000. Besides this the average navigation bounty for the past seven years has been about $4,000,000 annually, shipbuilding bounties of about $1,250,000 per annum.

France and Italy pay both a shipbuilding bounty and a subsidy, the recent contracts of France for subsidized services being in the nature of limited compensation proposed in our present bill. Italy spends about $6,000,000 annually in shipping subsidies, and our latest reports from France would indicate the Government is preparing to pay the largest subsidies ever under consideration in that country.

A comparison of the world's tonnage for showing the increases or decreases of the past 30 years is as follows:

	WORLD'S SHIPPING.	Tonnage.
1890	-----	22,151,000
1914	-----	49,089,000
1921	-----	61,974,000
	UNITED KINGDOM.
1890	-----	10,241,000
1914	-----	19,956,000
1921	-----	19,571,000
	FRANCE.
1890	-----	1,045,000
1914	-----	2,319,000
1921	-----	3,652,000
	GERMANY.
1890	-----	1,569,000
1914	-----	5,459,000
1921	-----	717,000
	JAPAN.
1890	-----	171,000
1914	-----	1,708,000
1921	-----	3,354,000
	NORWAY.
1890	-----	1,705,000
1914	-----	2,425,000
1921	-----	2,114,000
	ITALY.
1890	-----	820,000
1914	-----	1,549,000
1921	-----	2,406,000
	UNITED STATES.
	(Registered for foreign trade.)
1860	-----	2,546,000
1865	-----	1,602,000
1880	-----	1,352,000
1890	-----	946,000
1914	-----	1,076,000
1921	-----	11,081,000

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it would be impossible for any one member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries or any member of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to undertake within any reasonable limitation of time to discuss and analyze all of the various provisions of this bill and apply to that discussion at the same time the testimony that has been submitted in these very voluminous and extensive hearings. It shall be my purpose in opposing the bill to undertake to give a candid and frank analysis of its provisions, to show what unusual and extraordinary powers are granted to the Shipping Board, and to undertake to show not by imagination or by conjecture but by the actual record of the evidence disclosed by the witnesses that the aid and subsidies invoked in the bill are not absolutely essential to the maintenance and operation of a successful American merchant marine. I shall not undertake to discuss it from a partisan standpoint, although I am glad to say that the party to which I owe allegiance is unqualifiedly opposed to the fundamental provisions of this bill.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at this time?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I desire not to be interrupted until I can make a coherent statement, and I ask the gentleman's indulgence in that respect. The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE], the chairman of this committee, in opening his remarks on this bill said that it was in answer to the promises of the Republican Party as declared in its last national platform on the merchant-marine proposition. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. J. M. NELSON] undertook to quote from that plank of the last Republican platform but did not do so in full.

There was some little controversy between the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. J. M. NELSON] as to what a correct interpretation of the Republican attitude on this question is as declared in its platform. For the benefit of the record and in order that the members of the majority party may have their recollections refreshed as to their party's declaration on this question, I propose to read it.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Inasmuch as I have referred to the gentleman from Massachusetts, I feel inclined to yield to him.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I will read exactly what I have said:

It is offered in fulfillment of reiterated solemn pledges of the Republican Party to help and upbuild the merchant marine.

That is what I said in my opening remarks.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I accept that, and I am glad the gentleman has incorporated just ahead of its platform what he did assert.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I said exactly what I meant.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I shall now read the platform.

MERCHANT MARINE.

The national defense and our foreign commerce require a merchant marine of the best type of modern ships flying the American flag, manned by American seamen, owned by private capital, and operated by private energy.

We indorse the sound legislation recently enacted by the Republican Congress that will insure the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine.

We recommend that all ships engaged in coastwise trade and all vessels of the American merchant marine shall pass through the Panama Canal without payment of tolls.

There is your full party declaration on this question. I call the attention of those members of the majority party who may still be in some doubt as to the propriety of an affirmative vote for this measure to the specific language of this declaration:

Owned by private capital and operated by private energy.

Is there any man on this side of the House who, by any stretch of interpretation, can say that that is a declaration in favor of a Government subsidy for the operation of our merchant marine? On the contrary, the positive declaration appears to be opposed to that principle because it asserts that it should be operated by private energy. What does that mean in its fair and correct analysis? It means that the owners of these ships shall undertake to exercise their ingenuity and their own capital and their own energies in order to build up the merchant marine, and it says nothing about expecting them to reach their hands into the Public Treasury of the United States and to extract therefrom annually for a minimum period of 10 years the enormous sum of at least $52,000,000, and very probably much more—cash moneys that are paid into the Treasury of the United States out of the toil and sweat and the labor and private energies of the other producers of America—that they shall be selected and picked out and set apart as one particular favored industry in this country to be handed this magnificent gratuity out of the Treasury of the United States.

They indorsed in that Republican platform the following:

We indorse the sound legislation recently enacted by the Republican Congress that will insure the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine.

They were referring to the provisions of the so-called Jones Shipping Act, the merchant marine act of 1920. I heard these same gentlemen, who are now the active and partisan sponsors of this monstrosity now presented, urge upon the consideration of the Congress and the country a little over two years ago that if this Congress would but enact the Jones bill it would do what your party boasted in this platform it had done—insure, promote, and maintain the American merchant marine. And what have you done with that so-called bill that would do that thing? In so short a period as two years you come before this Congress and before the country and confess that that bill, which you then guaranteed and assured us would promote a permanent and successful American merchant marine, is an absolute failure, and you are now abandoning it out of the whole cloth. [Applause.]

Is not that a fair statement of the situation? If you failed in that, why not in this? What did you rely upon as the main support of the proposition announced in your boastful national platform? You relied upon sections 28 and 34 of the Jones Act, one in reference to preferential freight charges for foreign shipments and the other providing that goods imported into this country in American bottoms should be brought in at reduced rates of tariff at the customhouse. And now you have absolutely abandoned that then pronounced program and both of those two provisions that you then stated were proper safeguards for the building up of an American merchant marine. President Wilson refused to execute the provisions of section 34, and I well remember that such distinguished Republicans as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] and others were very severe in their strictures upon that action of the President of the United States, and gave out interviews publicly announcing that so grave was the dereliction of the then President in failing to observe the mandate of Congress upon this great question that they thought he ought to be then and there impeached and removed from office. The gentleman from Pennsylvania does not deny that. He can not successfully deny it. And yet, in the course of politics, two years afterwards his own party came into power and his own President took the reins of office, and he was presented with the necessity of passing upon this same question. President Harding followed the decision of President Wilson upon that question and refused to put it into operation. And yet I have not heard the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania or any other man prominent in authority on that side threaten to impeach President Harding for his failure to do that thing.

And so stands feeble and impotent the legislation upon which they assured the people of America that they would be able successfully to promote and maintain in perpetuity a merchant marine without a cash subsidy. And then the other provision in reference to the preferential freight rates, when interrogating the prominent members of the Shipping Board as to why they had not taken any steps to put that into effect—

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to make a coherent statement, if the gentleman will kindly excuse me.

Mr. EDMONDS. I wanted to correct the gentleman. Of course, he remembers his President signed this act, agreed it was a good thing, but refused to put it into operation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; and your party passed that act, and you now confess it was a fraud upon the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And his President voted for it in the United States Senate. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Exactly. So, gentlemen, I say as I proceed in this argument it is well for us to preserve the record.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Briefly.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. In response to what was said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the present bill contains one provision, the tax-exemption provision, which both Chairman Lasker and Mr. Morgan said was far more valuable than section 34, and that is inserted as a subsidy, but instead of stopping with that they have innumerable other costly provisions and subsidies in the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I heartily agree in the statement of my colleague. Now, gentlemen, let us undertake to disarticulate this skeleton and see what it discloses. It is a matter of very grave public concern. It is a matter that involves the taxpayers of America for at least the next 10 years in the event this Congress by great unwisdom should enact it. It is a proposition that entails the payment out of the Treasury of the United States of an amount in the minimum of at least $52,000,000 a year, and in all human probability much more. And I shall proceed to give my authority for the statement I make as to the probable cost to the taxpayers of this country—this gratuity to be bestowed upon these favored gentlemen on the Atlantic seaboard. I quote from the testimony of the high apostle of a subsidy, Chairman Lasker, of the Shipping Board. On page 273 of the hearings, in reply to an inquiry by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS], this answer was given by Mr. Lasker. I will quote the question and then the answer:

Mr. DAVIS. No; I beg your pardon. As I understand it, this revised report was revised after the bill was introduced.

Mr. LASKER. Let me see, now. I think we can get a quick meeting of the minds.

Here are the figures on cross-examination. I presume Mr. Lasker has all the frailties that are inherent in men, and as a proponent of this proposition wanted to make it as little objectionable to the American people as possible. Here are the items he gives. I quote:

The total cost to the Treasury if the bill ever becomes highly successful in operating, so that we have an adequate merchant marine for peace and war, will be: Customs, $30,000,000; tonnage, $4,000,000; income tax, $10,000,000; construction, $3,000,000; and postage, $5,000,000.

Mr. DAVIS. How much does that add up: $52,000,000?

Mr. LASKER. That will add up $52,000,000.

Now there, gentlemen of the committee, is your primary cost under the operation of this bill.

Mr. FREE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I regret I can not yield.

Mr. FREE. Some of that is already paid, and that is not an additional amount.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am quoting from the record of the proceedings.

I want to call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS], if he is present, to this fact: He made an inquiry of the ranking Republican member of this committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS], with reference to the effect of the change of this provision regarding transports. I thought my friend from Pennsylvania was rather evasive on that proposition, because there is no ground for any subterfuge or evasion on any provision of this bill. It is plainly written in the bill itself that if it is passed there is proposed to be a substitution for the transport service in the carrying of these supplies and troops, and so forth, by private owners, and the bill authorizes the Shipping Board to make contracts for that purpose. Of course, it is the purpose of the bill to add an additional subsidy for the benefit of the private owners and to abolish the well-established transport service now in existence.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I will yield to the distinguished leader of the majority for an inquiry.

Mr. MONDELL. Assuming that Mr. Lasker is correct in his estimate—

Mr. BANKHEAD. Usually that is a violent assumption, but in this case I will concede it.

Mr. MONDELL. Assuming that Mr. Lasker is correct in his estimate of cost, based upon the full utilization of the fleet, the estimate he made upon the full utilization of the fleet is about what it is costing now to operate a quarter of the fleet, so that it is no additional burden at any rate, assuming that Mr. Lasker is correct, and it presumes three or four times as large a fleet upon the seas as we now have without an additional charge upon the Treasury.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, I expect to get to that phase of the situation a little later. I expect to show, and I think other colleagues of mine on this committee will be able to show—

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Let me finish this sentence—that this alleged loss of $50,000,000 by the Government is totally and absolutely unnecessary, and it could be, if we had to resort to the contingency of further temporary Government operation, very, very greatly reduced. Now, what is the gentleman's observation?

Mr. EDMONDS. I simply wanted to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the loss on Army transports, referring to the proposition for the employment of other ships for that service, is about $5,000,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Now, gentlemen, I want to proceed to another phase of this proposition.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Before the gentleman proceeds, in answer to what the gentleman from Pennsylvania says, I read a statement in the hearings by Secretary Weeks stating that the cost of the Government transport service is less than it would be under the Shipping Board.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Is the gentleman from Pennsylvania right about this, or is Secretary Weeks right?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not regard either of them as of very high authority on this bill, but I believe that a Cabinet officer outranks somewhat a Member of Congress in authority, but not necessarily in accuracy. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDMONDS. Of course, the gentleman realizes that he is not an authority on authorities. [Laughter.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will let the gentleman's colleague from Illinois answer that question.

Now, gentlemen, I think you will recognize that this is a fair proposition. We recognize that this ship subsidy bill is a very extraordinary remedy for what is called a bad situation, because there is no doubt on earth but that it lodges very unusual and extraordinary powers in a small executive branch of the Government, to wit, the Shipping Board. There is no doubt on earth that it involves the enactment of a policy that has heretofore been stubbornly combatted in the Congress of the United States and always defeated uniformly—the bestowal of a direct cash subsidy from the Treasury of the United States upon a private enterprise. It is certainly a question of such momentous concern—

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Let the gentleman contain his anxiety until I have finished this sentence. It is of such immense importance that the great papers throughout the country are discussing it daily in their columns. It is a policy which for possibilities of danger involved is, in the opinion of the members of my party, the greatest since my service in Congress here began; and I therefore say that on account of the issues in-involved, on account of the tremendous sums of money involved, the duty is certainly imposed upon the proponents of the proposition to show by facts—not by assertion but by facts and the record—that there is absolutely no other remedy, and that all of the provisions that they are asking for combined are required to build up and maintain a successful American merchant marine.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Now that the gentleman has finished his sentence will he yield for a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman think he can improve on that sentence? [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. I want to ask the gentleman a question that the gentleman can answer.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. The gentleman stated that the attitude of the Democratic Party was antagonistic to this measure.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have stated that.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. I want to lay a foundation or predicate to the question I want to ask, not to make a speech. As to that celebrated sentence which the gentleman has just closed, that this measure has been combatted by his party—

Mr. BANKHEAD. And by some very respectable people of your party.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Does he not know the fact, as stated by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], now a Senator, in the debate on the Panama Canal tolls, that the Democratic Party had repeatedly been committed to a subsidy, and does he not know that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] mentioned the historical fact that the Democratic Party had gone on record in favor of a subsidy? Is not that a fact?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman is undertaking to draw a conclusion by reason of two isolated expressions of opinion by two individual Democrats, both of whom I admire highly, that because they felt so-and-so upon some particular question, therefore they expressed the attitude of the Democratic Party on this question.

I want to assert—and I think I am reasonably familiar with the position of the Democratic Party upon this question—that from the time my party was formed, and from the time when Thomas Jefferson gave expression to that sound fundamental doctrine, we have stood and we still stand on the proposition that we believe in equal rights to all and special privileges to none. [Applause.] Now, that is not elocution. That is just a statement of our historic attitude upon this question, and presents our attitude at the present time. I recognize that there are some gentlemen who hold allegiance to my party who, on account of some peculiar local conditions of one sort or another, may vote for this bill. There are not many such. Speaking of the question of party principle, I want to ask the gentleman if he is willing to assert, as a responsible representative of the Republican Party upon this floor, that his party stands in principle for a subsidy for ships or any other special interest?

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Does the gentleman ask me that question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I ask you that question.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Yes; I think the Republican Party is committed historically to the principle of protection to American industries on land, and that the protection of ships on the sea is only another form of that protection. [Applause.] Since the 7th of November I do not claim to be a responsible authority of the Republican Party. [Laughter.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am inclined to concede that. [Laughter.] Unfortunately a good many of the gentleman's colleagues in this Congress occupy the same unhappy situation. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER (on the Republican side). But that condition is not chronic.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. There is still a majority of Republicans in the House.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman from New York has made his declaration, which was applauded very liberally upon his side of the House, and I am very glad to have his statement that we have a very definite line of cleavage on this question between his party and mine. I do not think there will be any misunderstanding about that. I am willing to join issue before the American people on the principle involved.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. I do not wish to annoy the gentleman by breaking into his remarks, but I want to make one observation. I suppose every Member of this House received the typewritten statement of the distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], and I suppose it was an authoritative statement, giving the ascertained facts and data showing that in the many years past of the Democratic Party it has for decades been committed to the principle of a subsidy for ships; and I believe the Senator from Louisiana rather than the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. If the gentleman from Alabama will permit me, I will say that I read that statement and the facts therein recited do not substantiate the gentleman's assertion. As a matter of fact, I have read carefully all the platform pronouncements of both parties upon this subject, and the Democratic Party has never at any time, directly or indirectly, declared in favor of ship subsidies, but has repeatedly and emphatically declared against them in Democratic national platforms; and I wish to say, furthermore, that the Republican national platform has never at any time declared in favor of ship subsidies, not even at the times when such bills were pending in Congress and they were vital issues, and at the times when the Democratic national platforms were declaring against them. And during the recent campaign, while you have had no national convention, I know that a great many Republican State conventions have refused to declare in favor of this pending bill, including the Ohio Republican State convention after they were requested by President Harding to do so. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. After which the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANDLER] saith not.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Absolutely.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Now, gentlemen of the committee, I was diverted from the line of my argument that I was intending to make when I laid down the proposition that this was an important public question and that the burden certainly was upon the proponents of it to establish its necessity. Now, let us see from the record again what are the differentials against the American merchant marine under existing law and practices and customs which require the enactment of this ship subsidy bill. Let us see from the record what the chief sponsor for this proposition asserts are the things now in existence which make impossible the successful operation of an American merchant marine privately owned without this subsidy. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], the ranking Democratic member upon our committee, on page 24 of the hearings, asked Mr. Lasker this question:

Mr. HARDY. What do you consider are the elements of disadvantage that the American shipowner labors under to-day as compared with the British shipowner?

I think it is proper for me to state in conjunction with that question of Judge HARDY that Mr. Lasker and the other members of the Shipping Board laid down the proposition that what they were essentially seeking under the provisions of this bill was to be able to compete successfully with British shipping upon the high seas. That was the mark that they set.

Mr. Lasker's answer was:

I am not proposing myself to go into details in answering those questions, because those who are experts and who are my advisers will answer; but in a general way I will say that the differences are original capital cost, interest, insurance, labor, and subsistence.

Now, gentlemen, that is a fair statement of the elements that compose the obstacles, from the standpoint of the sponsors of this bill, to the successful operation of an American merchant marine. If it can be successfully established that all of those differentials are not as they are submitted by Mr. Lasker and his assistants, if it can be established by argument and by the record that we are in a position under economical and efficient private ownership to meet these alleged differentials without the imposition of these subsidies, then I submit that the case for this bill absolutely falls to the ground, for it is based and bottomed and predicated upon these five propositions. Mr. Lasker and the proponents of this bill say we can not successfully compete with Great Britain because of higher original capital cost, higher interest rates, higher insurance rates, higher labor, and higher subsistence.

Now, let us take the first proposition of original cost and analyze it for a moment and see if their assertion is sustained by the record. Understand, gentlemen, that from the statement made on the majority side here the great, pressing problem that we have to deal with in this legislation is to do something with this tremendous tonnage, this great fleet that the Government now owns. Of course, there are involved in it elements of future construction in the years to come, but that is the pressing and paramount question at the present time, the disposition upon favorable terms of the fleet of some 10,000,000 or 11,000,000 dead-weight tons of vessels that the Government now owns, and all the provisions of this bill are predicated upon that necessity.

Here is an outlay on the taxpayers of America during the days of the war, construction and outlay, of some three billions of dollars. It does not do any good now to go back into the history of that transaction. For the purposes of this debate

I am perfectly willing to admit that there were many great mistakes in policy, possibly, and that there was great extravagance and great waste in the disposition of the public funds; but I think a fair statement of that situation would require it to be observed that it was inevitable and to a large extent would have been the same had even the Republican Party been in control of affairs of the Government at that time. The American people were confronted with the desperate necessity of the construction of a great fleet as quickly as it could be done by human genius and human energy to win the war. We built up a complete fleet and spent three billions on it, and now we own it. This bill says that we want the fleet back again into private ownership. Mr. Lasker says that if you give us this bill he thinks he can sell to private owners within 30 months all the ships that are possible to be sold. It must be assumed that Mr. Lasker and other responsible attachés of the Shipping Board have made up their minds that we may be able to salvage the sum of $200,000,000 for the fleet that cost us $3,000,000,000. I am not complaining about that if we sell instantly, because any just man familiar with the maritime and shipping conditions must know the world over is under great depression in marine and international trade, and that the price of vessels is depressed to an extent never known before in the history of the world. As a matter of fact, I think the record shows that the current market quotations will show that good steel tonnage at the present time can be bought not only from the Shipping Board but from other sellers from one-third to one-half of what it would actually cost at the present time to reproduce them.

But a great many of us fully realized all the time that this great investment in these ships or a large proportion of it, and the expenditure incurred under extraordinary, unusual conditions was inevitable and has to be taken as a part of the loss of the war like many other war materials, and I for one have very grave doubts whether we would be able to salvage any material as a part of the $3,000,000,000 so far as the Government control is concerned.

We should fairly recognize that as the present situation, but is that situation to endure permanently? Why should we take such a pessimistic attitude upon the recovery of the world and the rehabilitation of national trade and credit? Why should we not hope for a revival and an approach to normal conditions in the next few years? I admit that the situation temporarily seems very desperate, but I hope and believe that there will be ultimately and necessarily a revival of the trade conditions. If we can secure proper legislation, this can be effected so far as our participation in it is concerned. So the Shipping Board hopes to get $200,000,000 for these ships, and from the standpoint of initial cost that is one of the things asserted in the evidence by the proponents of the bill; in fact it was stated that that was the primary differential that operated against the American competition. That was what they said operated against successful competition—the initial cost. They stated that Great Britain could manufacture steel vessels cheaper than America and therefore they would cost a private operator 25 per cent more if bought in this country than if he had the privilege of buying abroad. But, gentlemen, certainly for a long period of time the life of a well-constructed steel cargo ship or a passenger ship has a minimum life of some 20 years. Here the private ship operators, who expect to invest in a Government vessel, will have a period of at least 15 or 20 years, have the privilege of operating the ship for from 10 to 20 and in some cases 30 years.

They will have the privilege of operating these ships at that extraordinarily low initial cost for a long period of time. So that in the average length of the life of a steel vessel well constructed the operators will not have the overhead burden of a high initial cost. They will have conferred upon them even though this bill should not pass, which I hope it will not and which I believe it will not after it has received the full and fair consideration of the American Congress; even if this bill was not passed, from the standpoint of initial cost under the authority which the Shipping Board now enjoys, under the provisions of that same Jones bill I have referred to, it has the plenary power at the present time, regardless of the subsidy bill, without restriction, without limitation, to sell this splendid property of ours to these proposed private American ship operators at such cost as they may see fit in their discretion to sell it, and far below the cost of production. So that this bugaboo of high initial cost—certainly for a long period the high initial cost as an obstacle has been dissipated. I think that is a fair statement on that differential.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand from the statements made here, the ships we have now at present are not of sufficient variety, so that it will be necessary to construct other ships. Those new ships will have to come into the increased cost, and how would you take care of that even if you did sell the ones that are already constructed?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say that under the existing law the Shipping Board has a fund of $25,000,000 a year for a period of five years in order to meet that difficulty. You might amend the Jones law and increase the amount of that building fund and give it to these gentlemen who propose to build these new ships.

Mr. SNELL. Would the gentleman advise building them at a cost of $150 to $200 a ton and selling them at $30 a ton right off rather than to give any subsidy or other aid?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman means new construction?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I certainly would not.

Mr. SNELL. That would be what it would amount to, would it not? I am asking for information, because I am interested in this.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know what view the private operator of ships might take of it, but there is no use in the gentleman talking about any construction at the present time costing $150 or $200 a ton, because the world market construction price at this present time for the very best type of vessels is from $50 to $65 per ton.

Mr. SNELL. Can they be produced in this country for that figure at the present time?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think so. There is no reason why they should not be. Mr. Chairman, the second element mentioned by Mr. Lasker in his summary of the obstacles is the question of interest. Under the terms of this bill as imposed now there is no limitation, no maximum limitation, as to what rate of interest the Shipping Board shall exact from those who purchase the present Shipping Board fleet. As long as the present personnel of the Shipping Board is in charge of the sales division and operation, taking the view they evidently do of this question of interest, they are proposing to sell these ships for a period of 15 years' credit, and they have the discretion to fix the interest charge at such sum as they please under existing law.

The gentleman well knows that this present Shipping Board is not going to exact any rate of interest that would be a disadvantage to the American operator over the British operator of ships. Not only that, from this standpoint of interest charge, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. J. M. NELSON] in his argument, but they are proposing here to amend the Jones law, which had only $25,000,000 in its construction fund, and increase it to $125,000,000, and they are to have the discretion to lend that money for a 15-year period at as low a rate as 2 per cent interest. Does the gentleman believe that this Shipping Board would charge more than 2 per cent when they are authorized to make the loan as low as that? Certainly not, because they are seeking to offer every possible financial inducement to the successful operation of an American merchant marine, and this revolving fund, this building and loan fund, is to go on in perpetuity; and so these aspiring gentlemen to whom the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] refers may say, year after year, "We want to build up a palatial passenger vessel or a fine cargo vessel, and we have not the money, and we want to borrow it from the Government," and the United States Shipping Board would say, "All right, we believe in that, here is your money," and they will be able to get it at a rate of 2 per cent interest. Does the gentleman believe that our chief maritime competitor—Great Britain—or her financial and banking interests for the next two years will be in a position to offer money to the British shipper at that rate of interest? Certainly not.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I notice in the report of the joint committee of shipowners, ship operators, and shipbuilders, where they originally made their demand upon the Shipping Board for this subsidy, that they asked for only $100,000,000. Why the extra $25,000,000? Does the gentleman know?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, well, out of an abundance of caution Mr. Lasker and his associates want to have a safe surplus, I presume. I was not familiar with the statement referred to by the gentleman, but that is what the bill proposes.

I have discussed the question of capital costs and the question of interest. I hope I have done it fairly. I do not want to present any unfair argument on this proposition.

The next element mentioned is that of insurance, but I am afraid that I am going to have to call my friend Mr. EDMONDS, of Pennsylvania, to the witness stand for a moment, if he is here. You remember that last February—at least, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] will, if he is present—there was introduced from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries a bill, known as the marine insurance act, upon which our committee had held very elaborate hearings, a bill which the Democrats in its final form advocated; and what did Mr. LEHLBACH and Mr. EDMONDS and the other sponsors of that piece of remedial and progressive legislation tell us would be its benefit? They told us that for a long period of time under existing law Lloyd's and other foreign marine-insurance companies have practically had a monopoly upon the insurance of American hulls, and they assured us when we brought in that American insurance act—which was passed by the Congress and is now a law—if we would pass it that under its operation that situation would be remedied and that there would be built up in the United States of America, under the generous and elastic provisions of that law, an insurance situation that would enable the American insurance companies to write practically all of our marine insurance on American vessels upon terms of absolute competition with all foreign companies. Is there anybody on the Republican side who will deny that statement?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman deny it?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman think it fair to say that after six months' operation of that law it should have produced insurance institutions in this country to take the place of the British insurance companies which have operated and have gotten the business for over 100 years?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman assert that if it is given a fair opportunity over a period of 30 months, or of 3 years, that it will produce the results that he and his colleagues claimed for it?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I assert that if we give it a fair and reasonable time, it will accomplish a great deal of what was expected of it, but I assert that it is not fair to make the charge now, after six months, that it has proven a failure.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I did not say that I was limiting the benefit to a period of six months. I asserted that the gentleman's party—and my party voted with him on it, because we believed the assertions made by the witnesses in behalf of that bill—asserted that it would afford a vehicle through which American insurance written by American companies on American vessels could be procured on terms of competition equal to Lloyd's or anybody else, and I believe it now. Does not the gentleman?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes; certainly; but give it time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then, that effectually disposes then of this proposition that there is competition in that line. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield? Does the gentleman mean to be understood as saying that after six months that law should have produced the result he anticipates?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Have I asserted that?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Why does the gentleman mention that law as an argument against the proposition that at the present time insurance costs more in the United States than in England?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I was mentioning that law because Mr. Lasker, of the Shipping Board, said that not only for the present but for the future one of the elements operating against the American shipowner was that of insurance and insurance charges, and I assert that the gentleman's party brought in a bill here under the operation of which, when given a fair trial, there will be afforded adequate relief to the American insurer, and thereby effectively disposing of any disadvantage to the insurer of American ships and cargoes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Why, yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. How long do you want?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I certainly want more than six months.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We will give you three years; will that satisfy the gentleman?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No; I am not sure that it will. [Laughter.] That is quite typical, derisive laughter when anybody asserts that an enormous business like the marine insurance business of America can be established in three years' time. You folks may think that that can be done, but it shows what business judgment there is on that side of the House.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does it indicate any lunacy, I will ask the gentleman?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It indicates a lack of comprehension of the necessity of a growing business for anybody to assert that a bill that has been in operation only six months is to be derided because it does not produce a large insurance business.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I never made any such assertion.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Why, the gentleman is speaking about the law; what has that to do with the present situation?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I believe the gentleman has more than ordinary comprehension, and I was discussing it because it was mentioned by Mr. Lasker as one of the preferentials, and that not only now but for the future would prevent the successful operation of an American merchant marine.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman now assert that the passage of that law six months ago militates against Mr. Lasker's position?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Then what is the—

Mr. BANKHEAD. On the contrary, I am seeking in one instance to sustain the claim of the majority side that the marine insurance act will abolish the alleged unfavorable differential.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will yield.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I want to call attention to the fact that Mr. Lessner, a member of the Shipping Board, chairman of the subcommittee studying the marine-insurance problem, stated that while formerly there was a disadvantage on insurance against American owners such no longer existed by reason of the operation of the American bureau and other things which he mentioned, and there was no longer any disadvantage in that respect.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very briefly.

Mr. EDMONDS. I want to make a statement. The gentleman well remembers in our committee when we were arranging in reference to an American insurance syndicate to take insurance little hull insurance was taken in. To-day that insurance syndicate takes practically 50 per cent of hull insurance at equal rates to that taken on the other side. I am not talking about cargo rates but hull-insurance rates.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman still thinks his bill will do what he promised to do?

Mr. EDMONDS. I am satisfied that the marine-insurance companies of this country are going to improve every year.

Mr. BANKHEAD. How long?

Mr. EDMONDS. About 10 years.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Therefore at the end of 10 years we hope there will be no differential. Take the next element—labor and subsistence. I want to say to you gentlemen, one of the conspicuous arguments heretofore—at least before these hearings began and the consideration of this bill commenced—one of the conspicuous arguments urged against the successful operation of an American merchant marine was the American seamen's act; that it was impossible on account of the labor differential, caused by that act, successfully to compete with foreign ships. We had a great deal of propaganda here that came to us through the mails on that line. In fact that was the chief argument. It was made down in my section of the country, and I have no doubt through all parts of the country. Those who were seeking to destroy the effectual provisions of the seamen's act were using it as an argument that it would make absolutely impossible the operation of an American merchant marine. That is the truth about it—and I am going to quote to you here, so there may be no confusion in the record, the statement of Mr. Albert Lasker, the chief proponent of this proposition on that question.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I interrupt the gentleman just half a minute at that point?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Did the gentleman understand the other day the President himself dwelt upon that as a very important argument?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand so. In fact—

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The President dwelt upon that as a very important argument, as I heard him, and in fact stated that is the element of disadvantage that makes a subsidy necessary.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is what the President suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed one hour.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I shall take a little additional time. Now, let us see what the truth is about this thing. Let us clear the atmosphere, gentlemen, of all misunderstanding that may tend to becloud the real, legitimate issues involved in this matter, because I know that all gentlemen here are seeking a just and honest conclusion as to the merits of this proposition. Now, I asked Mr. Lasker, after testifying in chief upon this bill, this question.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman refer to the page?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Page 43, volume 1, of the hearings. I read:

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand from the President's address to Congress, and also from the statement that you have made, that you do not undertake to recommend or urge any material change in the seamen's act that now exists?

Mr. LASKER. You are right. I want to take occasion to say here that I think the seamen's act has been one of the most misrepresented acts of which I have ever heard. I came down to Washington believing, as most people in my part of the country do, if you repeal the seamen's act you would have a merchant marine. That is pure bunk.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the reason I asked the question, because for a long time those who were undertaking to give reasons why we could not operate successfully with our foreign competitors based their assertions exclusively on the discrimination caused by the seamen's act.

Mr. LASKER. I think they have gotten worn out on those representations.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am glad to hear that.

That is what Mr. Lasker says. Does that satisfy you, gentlemen? Can you appeal to any higher authority on this question of the differential imposed by the provision of the seamen's act than Mr. Lasker, the chairman of the Shipping Board? If so, to what authority will you appeal? He tells you that, although, no doubt on account of false propaganda up in his section of the country, as he says, they have been led to believe that if you would but repeal the provisions of the seamen's act you would have a merchant marine; yet after full and careful and painstaking investigation—that is the inference that is to be drawn from his statement—he now asserts that it is "pure bunk."

That is a colloquial expression, but, reduced to its correct interpretation, it means that there is absolutely nothing in that contention and that he himself now believes that it is threadbare and discredited and worn out as an argument. And so certain are Mr. Lasker and the other members of the Shipping Board that there was no prejudice against the successful operation of the American merchant marine because of the seamen's act that they did not offer one single suggestion of an amendment to any of its provisions, but very gladly and cheerfully conceded that it was, under present conditions, a negligible factor in the entire maritime situation.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will be glad to yield for a brief question.

Mr. SNELL. Do I understand that your contention is that the cost of labor under the terms of the La Follette seamen's law is no higher than that of our competitors?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is my contention. I have not time to read it, but I will insert it in the extension of my remarks for the benefit of my friend from New York. And I imagine that my friend from New York is one of those who, along with a great many others in this country, on account of the reiteration and repetition of this formula about the seamen's act, has actually come to the conclusion that on account of the operation of the seamen's act itself there is an extreme and certainly substantial differential in cost on account of the act.

Mr. SNELL. I had no special reference to the provisions of the seamen's act, but I was under the impression that various other conditions made the cost of labor under the American flag much more than the cost under our competitors' flags.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What other labor?

Mr. SNELL. The total average cost of labor. Is not that so?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would state to the gentleman from New York that the average cost of labor, for instance, in an American shipyard is somewhat higher, man for man, possibly 20 or 25 per cent higher, than what it is in a British yard; but the evidence before our committee, evidence given by experts who know something about labor conditions, men like Edgar Wallace, Patrick O'Brien, and Andrew Furuseth, who have studied these questions both here and abroad, shows that while that is true, yet it has been clearly established that on account of American superiority in organization and efficiency, although the labor cost differential is in favor of the Britisher, the output is equalized on account of American conditions and efficiency and energy. [Applause.]

And with the gentleman's permission I want to say that I propose to incorporate in the RECORD as a part of my remarks some reliable tables, as I think, that were submitted during the hearings on this bill, to show the comparative current labor charges in the actual operation of the crews of ships of America as compared with those of some of our chief competitors.

Mr. SNELL. That is what I was interested in, the comparative cost of operation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will insert that information, which shows beyond peradventure, as Mr. Lasker has shown here by his own testimony, that there is substantially no differentiation at the present time in the labor charges on American ships and on the ships of our competitors.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will yield for a question.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I have observed some tables in the hearings that showed the comparative cost of operation on American ships and foreign ships in which the cost of labor on account of some additional members of the crew that were required and higher salaries aggregated about twice as much as on the foreign ships. My understanding was that that was the situation. I find that in the hearings offered, I think in the latter part of that second volume, by the proponents of the measure. Is that correct?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know what is involved in all the tables offered by the proponents of the proposition, but I propose to insert in the RECORD some recent and current tables which I think are absolutely accurate and reliable which show that there is absolutely no substantial differential at the present time.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Are they in the hearings?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; they are in the hearings, of course. All of the tables are in the hearings.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I mean those that you propose to insert.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes. On the question of subsistence, which Mr. Lasker gives as his last element of unfavorable differential, as to the subsistence of the crew of an American ship and that of our competitors, in the first place some of the gentlemen may not know it, but it is a fact that the subsistence schedule upon an American vessel and upon a British vessel, the fare that they give to the men, the amount and volume and quality and quantity of food that is allowed, are not regulated by the whim or caprice of the operator of that ship but they are regulated by statute law. The law of the Congress of the United States fixes the subsistence scale of an American seaman. The British law fixes the subsistence scale of a British seaman.

I make the same observation with reference to the subsistence schedule that I made with reference to labor, that at the present time there is no differential substantially in the subsistence schedule between the American and the British ship.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I shall be glad to.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Are these tables inserted by operators themselves as to the cost of operating their ships?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The tables which I will insert in the RECORD are copies of the British and American statutes fixing the amount of food, in volume and variety.

Mr. McDUFFIE. That is as to subsistence?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. But as to other conditions, labor, for instance, I have asked several ship operators, who tell me that it is absolutely impossible to compete with foreign ship operators because of our having to comply with these laws which act to prohibit them from operating on the same cost basis. They say our cost of operation is higher than any other ship operation in the maritime world. What do they mean by saying that? Are they telling the truth, or are they trying to prejudice somebody against the seamen's act?

Mr. BANKHEAD. When they assert that there is any substantial differential, I do not believe that they are accurate in their statement. I do not assert that they are undertaking deliberately to deceive anybody. They may be doing it because of lack of information. It will be borne in mind in this connection that wage and subsistence combined constitute only 12 per cent of the total operating expenses of a ship.

Now, gentlemen, this disposes of all of these elements of opposition as far as the differential is concerned. I may possibly in the extension of my remarks elaborate them just a little.

I was very much astounded at a statement made by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, Doctor Fess, when he was discussing the rule on this bill yesterday. He advanced an absolutely new and unique theory with reference to this proposed ship subsidy. He said in effect that if anybody was to be subsidized under the terms and provisions of this bill it would be American labor.

The inference that Doctor Fess no doubt sought to leave by that statement was that if anybody benefited by the terms of these subsidies that are to be taken out of the Treasury of the United States, it would be American labor. I presume he meant either those who work in American shipyards or those who operate as crews of American ships. Does any man in this audience, however credulous he may be, for one moment honestly believe that after the operators of these ships have gotten through with their profits and with their bookkeeping manipulation and with their tax returns and all that, they are going to say, "All we want out of this proposition is to make ourselves whole on the initial cost of the operation, and if there is any profit left over at all we are going to pass it on to the man in overalls who is in our employment and let him receive the benefit of it"? Gentlemen, although that proposition comes from a pretty high and respectable authority, it certainly taxes the credulity of any man who wants to give fair consideration to the effect of this bill. If there are any dividends they will not be distributed through the pay window but from the directors' room. Gentlemen, I assert that there has never been proposed in the American Congress a single piece of legislation that bestowed upon the officials of this Government, just a handful of them, just a little group of executive appointees, such unusual, such extraordinary, and such shocking responsibilities and unlimited discretion as is bestowed by the provisions of this bill.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will be glad to.

Mr. CRISP. I should just like to ask if the seamen will get the benefit of this in the same way that the pottery workers at East Liverpool, Ohio, who are now on strike, are getting the benefits of the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill? Under that bill the rates on pottery were increased from about 30 per cent to 60 per cent. Yet the workers in the potteries in East Liverpool are now on strike.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I imagine just about the same benefits will be bestowed. Do not let the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] deceive himself about labor in this country. The gentleman from Ohio knows that labor in America is intelligent. He knows that not only in their individual capacity but through their leaders they have men of capacity and of experience and of observation, who are studying these great questions of political economy as reflecting their interests. They are not fools. Does the gentleman from Ohio—who will soon be elevated to a still higher and more eminent position in the Government—believe that the laboring men of America are going to swallow his doctrine that they are the beneficiaries of this unconscionable substitute? If he does, I ask him why it is—

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield? I want to ask him a question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In just a moment I will yield. If the gentleman thinks that, why is it that the American Federation of Labor, through frequent resolutions of their national body, as well as the committee of the Seamen's Union, who have given more thorough and accurate study to this question than any other labor organization in the country—why is it that all labor organizations in this country—that is, the real labor organizations—are opposed to the substantial provisions and principles of this bill? There is the answer to the gentleman's assertion. Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FESS. The American Federation of Labor thinks very much as the gentleman does, namely, that it wants Government operation and ownership, just as the gentleman wants it. I disagree with both the gentleman and the American Federation of Labor on that. In other words, there is a difference between giving the opportunity for employment and elevating the scale of wages by the possibility of employment rather than by dictation either through Congress or by resolution in the federation. Now, if the gentleman will yield further, the gentleman stated a while ago that there is not the differentiation between the cost of labor in our country and in Great Britain.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I did not say that. I said there was a differential.

Mr. FESS. I hold in my hand here—

Mr. BANKHEAD. I can not yield to the gentleman any further. The gentleman can get his own time. I do not want the gentleman to take my time to read a statement, and I hardly think that is fair. I yielded to the gentleman because I had referred to him, but not for the purpose of going into an elaboration of his argument, and for that reason I decline to yield further.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman asked me a question and I want an opportunity to answer it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I decline to yield further. Not that I fear the substance of the gentleman's statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GARNER. Let me ask the gentleman from Alabama if he heard the statement of the gentleman from Ohio that the gentleman from Alabama favored Government ownership?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Did the gentleman from Ohio assert that I favored Government ownership?

Mr. GARNER. He did.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman from Ohio in that certainly made a most unwarranted statement, and he does not reflect my attitude at all on that question. I am absolutely opposed to any form of permanent Government operation of anything that can be operated by private ownership.

Mr. GARNER. That is just as nearly correct as the gentleman from Ohio gets most of his statements.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes, but there might be occasions, and this is one of them, where a little temporary Government operation might be a more valuable expedient than the raid on the Treasury of the United States proposed by the gentleman from Ohio for the special benefit of a few ship operators on the American seaboard. [Laughter and applause.]

I said something about the extraordinary powers. It is an axiom that the power to tax is the power to destroy. Here they propose to take $52,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States. That is only partly true, because there are at least $30,000,000 and probably $45,000,000 provided you have $450,000,000 import tariff duties paid at the customhouse—10 per cent of every dollar of the customs does not go into the Treasury of the United States but is turned over to the Shipping Board to pay this subsidy. But from the standpoint of a direct subsidy you know this bill not only provides for the payment of that but also authorizes the Shipping Board in its discretion, without any review in conscience or by any court or any board of appeals—gives to this small group of men in the Government service, in their cloistered quarters on the Potomac Park, the privilege and opportunity not only to pay the ship operators at least $30,000,000 as a direct subsidy, but if in their judgment they see fit to do so, these seven men can double the amount and make it $60,000,000. Why, gentlemen, are you on this side, however anxious you are to do a reasonable thing for the promotion of American merchant marine, going to give to that board the strange plenary power to impose that additional burden on the taxpayers of America? I do not say that the Shipping Board is corrupt, I do not charge them here to be men of bad character. I know that they are men whose judgment is fallible on facts and they may honestly be convinced themselves and so assert that this extraordinary extension of power is justified and that they should have the power under this bill of handing over $30,000,000 in additional benefits to private interests.

Under this bill the Standard Oil Co. will operate their own tankers from the oil wells in Mexico and bring their products into the States. They will operate these tankers carrying their own goods for their own benefit, and under the terms of the bill the Standard Oil Co. will be handed out of the Treasury of the United States every year for 10 years at least the sum of between four and five million dollars, just for the privilege of hauling their own stuff in their own tanks.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Originally it was required that there should be one-third for the public service. Why was that cut out?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Because I asked the vice president of the oil company if he did not recognize that that was a pure subterfuge and if they had better not eliminate that from the bill and say that they were giving a pure subsidy. He said he thought so, and so we eliminated that subterfuge and piece of hypocrisy from the bill, and it now stands in the record and in the bill as a naked raid on the Treasury of the United States, to be handed over to the Standard Oil Co. for the purpose of carrying its own products and increasing its already enormously swollen profits.

The Steel Trust is in the same situation. The United Fruit Co., with its great line of steamers, sailing from the Tropics of South America, bringing fruit to sell to American consumers, at the end of the year will come up to the Treasury and say, "We have had so many tons and run so many miles, and now hand us as an additional Christmas present this sum of money out of the Treasury of the United States." [Laughter and applause.]

Gentlemen, you can not deny these figures. The gentleman from Pennsylvania made a statement with reference to it, and that is the reason I asked the question. I wanted to rivet it in the RECORD for the observation of the American people that that is one of the innumerable and unjustifiable propositions in this piece of legislation. Who is to foot the bill in the long run? It comes from the common, plain people of this country. If there is one cry that comes from those plain people to the Congress of the United States, it is to give them some relief from the exorbitant taxation.

Oh, yes; you exempt the laboring man, if he is married, to the extent of $2,000 in the income tax and of a small pittance in addition if he has children. What do you do for this favored small group of American citizens? You say we will go down to Alabama or up to Michigan, go into the forge and the blacksmith shop, and where the man is earning a little above the exemption make him put it in the Treasury of the United States, and say to these big fellows, "You don't have to pay any income tax at all on your earnings provided you fly the American flag." You give them the ships in the first instance, or you sell to them for less than 10 per cent of what they cost, bestow this splendid governmental property on them, hand it over to them for a negligible price, practically nothing, a little of what they cost the American taxpayer, and say to them, "If you have not got the money to pay it, we will extend credit for 15 years, let you wear the ship out in your trade, and keep that as the only security, and if you want to let the ship go on the rocks or turn it back, all right, you have had 15 years' operation." That is one of the unrestricted powers given to the Shipping Board—exemptions, special privileges, possibilities of favoritism—and the bill contains throughout innumerable instances of that kind.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] to say in his opening argument this morning that the Federation of Farm Bureau Organizations had favored this bill. Did the gentleman notice a resolution inserted in the RECORD yesterday by Senator FLETCHER, from the National Board of Farm Organizations, unalterably condemning this measure?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I did. My attention was called to that. The resolution is dated Washington, D. C., October 19, 1922, and is passed by the National Board of Farm Organizations on that date. It has this assertion:

SHIP SUBSIDY OPPOSED BY NATIONAL BOARD OF FARM ORGANIZATIONS.

Ship subsidy in general and ship subsidy in particular as embodied in the Jones-Greene bill H. R. 12021 are emphatically opposed by the National Board of Farm Organizations.

Clear-cut opposition to the ship subsidy bill is expressed in the resolution adopted by the semiannual conference of the National Board of Farm Organizations, held at its headquarters, 1731 I Street NW., Washington, D. C., October 11-13. The resolution reads as follows:

"Whereas it is apparent that the question of granting subsidies to our merchant shipping will soon be brought to a vote in Congress; and

"Whereas the farmers of the United States have been traditionally opposed to the granting of such subsidies; and

"Whereas the plan embodied in the Jones-Greene bill, which is now under consideration, contains many provisions that are extremely objectionable and would, in our opinion, be detrimental to the best interest of the country as a whole, if enacted; Therefore be it

"Resolved, That this body record an emphatic protest against the passage of this proposed legislation."

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman does not want to mislead anyone. That is the farm organization and not Mr. Howard's bureau.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; this is the farm organization.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Mr. GREENE merely stated that Mr. Howard, of the Federal Farm Bureau, appeared before the committee.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Howard, of the Federal Farm Bureau, testified before the committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I know that Mr. Howard, the president of the Federal Farm Bureau, appeared before the committee, and in a very thoughtless moment undertook to advocate this bill, and I say this with all justice to Mr. Howard, because I admire his ability. However, I call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts and of this body to the fact that frequently during the course of his cross-examination before that committee Mr. Howard asserted that the organization which he represented was fundamentally and absolutely opposed to any direct subsidy of ships or anything else, and he went further and said that in principle his organization was absolutely opposed to the granting of any exemptions from the payment of taxes. In other words, he said that his organization on principle was opposed to a subsidy of any sort, and I have no doubt, as the gentleman from Wisconsin well said this morning, that 99 per cent of the real active farmers of America, who have given any consideration to this proposition, if they were here would register their eternal protests against the provisions of this bill.

I wish I had the opportunity at this time to suggest an alternative proposition to this measure. I may have time under the 5-minute debate, and if I get 10 minutes I shall try to suggest something as a substitute for this proposition. This bill as now presented to the Congress of the United States is fundamentally wrong in principle. I am unwilling to have the party to which I belong placed in the false attitude that because we oppose this particular bill we are, therefore, opposed to the establishment and maintenance of a successful merchant marine. The State from which I come has a great port on the Gulf and great resources of raw material and manufactured products contributory to that port. The people of the great Mississippi Valley are interested in a merchant marine.

The members of my party have always stood for the development of the American merchant marine, and the truth of the business is that the greatest merchant marine America ever had, the most successful, was built up under Democratic administrations. We are not opposed to rendering reasonable assistance, but we are—I am at least—unalterably opposed to the principle of "robbing Peter to pay Paul," and that is what is involved in this proposition.

I am opposed to the proposition of saying to every taxpayer in America, except these few, that out of their labor and energy and toil there shall be taken anywhere from fifty to one hundred million dollars a year, to be handed over to some 50 or 60 private operators and corporations in this country. I believe that that principle is violative of sound ethics. I believe it to be absolutely immoral from the standpoint of political philosophy, and I trust that upon calm reflection the Congress of the United States may not by specious appeal be led into the blunder of enacting this intolerable piece of legislation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The tables with reference to the various wage scales referred to follow. This report was published at the time for the use of the Senate Committee on Commerce. It is recited in this article that the investigation and inspection service of the Department of Labor conducted an extensive investigation to ascertain the relative wages paid to seamen on American vessels and on foreign vessels trading in American ports. They examined the ship's articles of the various ships so that their information is absolutely reliable. I quote from the article as follows:

The investigation shows that a decided increase took place in seamen's wages everywhere after the enforcement of the seamen's act.

On March 4, 1915, Congress passed the seamen's act, the main purposes of which were to equalize wages on all ships entering or leaving American ports and to make conditions aboard ship such that Americans would again take to the sea in great numbers.

About the time of the passage of the seamen's act, seamen's wages in New York differed from those in foreign ports as follows: Seamen's wages in New York were about 20 per cent higher than wages paid in Liverpool; about 22.5 per cent higher than in the North Sea or the Atlantic ports on the Continent of Europe; about 30 per cent higher than wages paid in the Inner Mediterranean or Baltic.

Everybody agreed that wages had to be equalized, but in what direction? Should Congress follow the old idea of lowering wages to the lower foreign standard? This had caused and would continue to cause our men to abandon the sea. Or should Congress adopt measures to raise the wages of all maritime nations to the higher American standard? The latter course was wisely adopted and soon proved the contentions of its champions.

MONTHLY WAGES OF SEAMEN AND FIREMEN ON AMERICAN AND FOREIGN VESSELS.

Beginning July, 1916, the seamen's act became operative on all foreign vessels. In the second half of 1915, the year in which the act was passed, wages paid seamen and firemen on ships clearing from New York had been, as far as available, as follows:

Wages paid seamen and firemen on vessels clearing from New York in 1915.

Nationality.	Date.	Seamen.	Firemen.
	1915.
American.....	June 30.....	<sup>1</sup> $29.70	<sup>2</sup> $39.34
British.....	July.....	<sup>3</sup> 30.00	<sup>4</sup> 40.00
Dutch.....	November.....	30.00	35.00
Danish.....	December.....	28.20	32.99
Swedish.....	November.....	30.00	35.00
		20.25	<sup>4</sup> 22.95

<sup>1</sup> 93 ships.
<sup>2</sup> 90 ships.

<sup>3</sup> Union scale.
<sup>4</sup> $6.75 bonus on round trip.

In 1916, the year in which the act became operative on all foreign ships, the tendency to pay the American wage immediately became apparent, as the following table illustrates:

Wages paid seamen and firemen on American and foreign vessels in 1916.

Nationality.	Date.	Seamen.	Firemen.
	1916.
American.....	June 30.....	<sup>1</sup> $45.00	<sup>1</sup> $50.00
	.....do.....	<sup>2</sup> 43.88	<sup>3</sup> 48.95
British.....	March.....	30.00	35.00
	July.....	45.00	50.00
Dutch.....	.....do.....	45.00	50.00
Danish.....	June.....	45.00	45.00
	July.....	45.00	50.00
Swedish.....	.....do.....	20.25	<sup>4</sup> 22.95
French.....	November.....	19.30	<sup>5</sup> 25.09

<sup>1</sup> Union scale.
<sup>2</sup> 93 ships.
<sup>3</sup> 92 ships.

<sup>4</sup> Plus bonus of $9.45.
<sup>5</sup> Plus bonus of $3.86.

The high cost of living and the increased perils of submarine warfare brought about substantial increases in the year 1917 for both seamen and firemen and resulted in their wages being equalized, first on American vessels and later, especially in 1918, on practically all foreign ships as well. In addition to the regular increase in wages American shipowners paid bonuses ranging from 25 per cent to more than 100 per cent. Thus the American rate again led, but foreign rates soon adjusted themselves, so that at the end of 1918 the rates were practically equalized, with the exception of the French. This exception is due to the fact that the French merchant marine is controlled by the French Government and manned through the "inscription maritime." The following table shows the continued process of equalization in 1917 and 1918:

Wages paid seamen and firemen on American and foreign vessels in 1917 and 1918.

Nationality.	Date.	Seamen.	Firemen.
1917.
American.....	June 30.....	$57.58	$60.55
.....do.....	.....	$60.00	$60.00
.....	Aug. 1.....	$60.00	$60.00
English.....	April.....	45.00	50.00
Dutch.....	October.....	55.92	58.40
.....	March.....	65.00	70.00
Danish.....	.....do.....	45.00	$50.00
.....	May.....	56.00-60.00	$60.00
Swedish.....	November.....	20.25	$22.95
French.....	August.....	21.23	$27.02
1918.
American.....	May.....	75.00	$75.00
British.....	October.....	55.92	$58.40
.....	February.....	60.00	60.00
Dutch.....	November.....	70.00	70.00-75.00
Danish.....	October.....	75.00	75.00
.....	March.....	20.25	$22.95
Swedish.....	December.....	75.00	75.00
.....do.....	.....	75.00	75.00
Norwegian.....	.....	27.98	$33.75
French.....	May.....	27.98	$33.75

<sup>1</sup> 93 ships.

<sup>2</sup> 92 ships.

<sup>3</sup> Union scale.

<sup>4</sup> Shipping Board scale.

<sup>5</sup> Plus 50 per cent bonus.

<sup>6</sup> Plus $27 bonus.

<sup>7</sup> Plus $3.86 bonus.

<sup>8</sup> Plus 50 per cent bonus in war zone.

<sup>9</sup> Plus $14.60 bonus in war zone

<sup>10</sup> Plus $2.90 bonus.

The signing of the armistice brought about more definiteness and regularity in the wage rates. Bonuses had varied from month to month and even from ship to ship, depending upon the nature of the cargo and the length of the voyage, as well as the destination. In order to ascertain whether the equalization was artificial or only temporary, a survey was made between January 15 and February 15 of wages paid on foreign vessels leaving New York within that time, the result of which was that the American rate seems to have become the standard rate.

The following ships paid the American rate of wages—that is, $75—for both seamen and firemen: American, Canadian, Danish, Dutch, Norwegian, Russian, Swedish. Belgian ships paid $70.56 for seamen and $73 for firemen. One Greek ship paid the flat rate of $70, while a Spanish ship paid $40. The French rate had not advanced beyond the rate fixed in May, 1918, namely, $30.88 for seamen and $36.68 for firemen. Lowest of all were the rates paid on Japanese ships. Although almost twice as high as those paid on the Pacific, the Atlantic rates were only 40 yen (about $20) for both seamen and firemen. A tabulation of these figures brings out the results more clearly.

Wages paid seamen and firemen on American and foreign vessels in spring of 1919.

Nationality.	Seamen.	Firemen.	Nationality.	Seamen.	Firemen.
American.....	$75.00	$75.00	Greek.....	$70.00	$70.00
Belgian.....	70.56	73.00	Japanese.....	20.00	20.00
British.....	70.00	73.00	Norwegian.....	75.00	75.00
Canadian.....	75.00	75.00	Russian.....	75.00	75.00
Danish.....	75.00	75.00	Swedish.....	75.00	75.00
Dutch.....	75.00	75.00	Spanish.....	40.00	40.00
French.....	30.88	36.88

<sup>1</sup> This rate has since been advanced. See pp. 133 and 134 of this issue of the Review.

<sup>2</sup> Including bonus.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. also table on p. 146 of this issue of the Review.

A number of Scandinavian ships were paying their seamen and firemen 75 krona ($20.10) per month. A Norwegian captain who was interrogated explained that this was the rate paid by the Scandinavian ships in Scandinavian ports, but that bonuses had to be added to this, bringing the total pay up to 300 krona, or $80.40 in American money. Instead of paying the high bonuses they preferred paying the American flat rate of $75.

WAGES AND MANNING OF AMERICAN SHIPS IN COMPETITION WITH FOREIGN VESSELS.

(By Andrew Furuseth.)

Comparative study of wages and manning on American ships and foreign ships of the same tonnage and class reveals the following facts:

1. American seamen's wages have been deflated more violently than those of any other nation.

While American seamen have had their wages reduced by amounts ranging from $20 to $40 per month (27 to 53 per cent), the wages of Japanese seamen have been increased 45 per cent, the wages of Australian seamen increased by 9 per cent, and the wages of Chinese increased by an amount not yet accurately reported.

2. As a result of these reductions the wages of American seamen are now much lower than the wages of Canadian and Australian seamen; are practically on a level with British wages; and are substantially higher than the wages only of Japanese among the principal maritime nations.

3. The size of American crews has been reduced by the order of the Shipping Board, effective December 10, 1921, to such an extent that American crews on vessels of the same class and tonnage are now 23 per cent smaller than British crews and 70 per cent smaller than Japanese crews.

4. The reduction of the size of American crews under the Shipping Board's order has been particularly drastic as regards the number of able and ordinary seamen who are essential to the safe and efficient operation of the vessels.

5. As a result of this drastic reduction in the number of seamen the actual monthly wage cost of seamen upon a British ship is now 54 per cent higher than upon an American Shipping Board vessel of the same class and tonnage.

6. The only real advantage in wages or salaries which the British shipowner now enjoys as compared with the American is in the lower salaries paid deck and engineer officers.

Taking an American and British vessel of the same class and tonnage, the monthly salaries of officers (exclusive of master) on the British vessel will be $801.90, as compared with $1,080 on the United States Shipping Board scale. The monthly wages of the balance of the crew are as follows: British, $1,568.61; American, $1,342.

Thus, while the total monthly salary cost of officers (exclusive of master) on the British vessel is $278.10 lower than on the American vessel manned according to the Shipping Board scale, the monthly wage cost of the crew is $226.61 higher on the British vessel.

If the crew on the American vessel is paid the lower scale of the American Steamship Owners' Association, the difference becomes more marked. The salaries of officers (exclusive of master) on the British ship are then $228.10 lower than on the American privately owned vessel, but the wages of the British crew are $403.61 higher.

7. The present policies of the United States Shipping Board and American private owners as regards manning and wages are dangerous to safety of life and vessels, inimical to operating efficiency, and destructive of the American merchant marine.

Evidence in support of above conclusions: The data upon which the following study of wages and manning on American ships, as compared with foreign vessels, is based are derived from authentic sources. The statements with regard to American wages are based upon the wage scales authorized and put into effect by the United States Shipping Board, the American Steamship Owners' Association, and the Steamship Owners' Association of the Pacific coast. The statements regarding seamen actually employed at wages below the above-mentioned scales are based upon affidavits of men so employed and first-hand statements of men who investigated the particular cases cited. The statements with regard to British wages are taken from the agreement entered into between the British Shipping Federation and the British maritime unions, due allowance being made in each case for the reductions of 30s., effective March 1, 1922. The statements with regard to Japanese wages are based upon the statement of the manager of one of the largest Japanese steamship companies. The statements regarding manning are derived from official orders promulgated by the United States Shipping Board, from the original articles of ships sailing in the British and American trade, and from an article published in the Pacific Marine Review (a shipowners' journal).

American seamen's wages have been deflated more violently than those of any other nation; American shipowners, including both the United States Shipping Board and the private owners, have led the world in forcing drastic reductions of seamen's wages. This is true, not only as regards the amount of the reductions, but also the time at which reductions took place.

After the passage of the American seamen's act and throughout the entire period of the war the wages of American seamen rose steadily, and the wages of other nations followed until they were practically equalized during the war period. The following extracts from an official report of the investigation and inspection service of the United States Department of Labor gives a brief and authentic report of the course of wages during this period:

"The high cost of living and the increased perils of submarine warfare brought about substantial increases in the year 1917 for both seamen and firemen and resulted in their wages being equalized, first on American vessels and later, especially in 1918, on practically all foreign ships as well. * * * The American rate led the pace, and foreign rates soon adjusted themselves so that at the end of 1918 the rates were practically equalized with the exception of the French. This exception is due to the fact that the French merchant marine was controlled by the French Government and manned through the 'inscription maritime.' * * * The signing of the armistice brought about more definiteness and regularity in the wage rates. * * * The following ships paid the American rate of wages—that is, $75, for both seamen and firemen (January, 1919): American, Canadian, Danish, Dutch, Norwegian, Russian, Swedish; Belgium and British paid the British rate of $70.56 for seamen and $73 for firemen."

In the spring of 1919 the American rate of wages was made $85 for sailors and firemen on the Atlantic and $90 on the Pacific. This was renewed in 1920. The seamen did not ask for more wages, but for regulation of working hours and recognition. After a lockout lasting about 20 days the shipowners refused recognition but gave the advance in wages.

In the spring of 1921 the United States Shipping Board and the private owners of the United States initiated reductions in the wages and working conditions of American seamen. They not only abolished payment for overtime, but reduced the wages of all classes of employees upon American ships. The British shipowners at about the same time attempted to reduce the wages of British seamen, but their efforts were resisted by the British maritime organizations. The shipowners demanded a reduction of £4 10s. ($21.87), but agreed to a reduction of only £2 10s. ($12.15), and did not abolish the payment for overtime. On March 1, 1922, after the American wage cuts were made, the British put into effect a further uniform reduction of 30s. ($7.30) in the wages of all classes of men employed on their ships.

In the meantime, however, the American private owners and the United States Shipping Board had made a further reduction in the wages of American seamen, effective at different dates in January and February, 1922. The Shipping Board had also greatly increased the amount of work imposed upon the men who man its vessels by reducing the size of the standard crew in December, 1921, a matter to which reference will be made hereafter. Furthermore, a large number of American vessels, including both privately owned ships and vessels of the United States Shipping Board, are not paying even the greatly reduced wages provided in these scales, but are hiring seamen at the lowest rate at which men driven by hunger and unemployment will agree to ship. Able seamen are now being hired for service in the Atlantic trade at rates ranging as low as $25 per month.

They are not doing it. When I speak of the Shipping Board not paying it, I mean particularly the vessels belonging to the Shipping Board that are chartered on bare-boat basis; in other words, what is called bare-boat charter.

While the British and American owners were thus reducing wages of seamen, the wages of Japanese and Australian seamen were increased. The increase in Australian wages was made by the Federal Arbitration Board on December 22, 1921, after extensive hearings, and the Commonwealth Steamship Owners' Federation agreed to put the award into operation automatically. This award provided "for increases of 26s. 8d. ($6.42) per month for all ratings." The increase in Japanese wages has taken place as a result of the organization of the Japanese seamen. The last increase secured by the Japanese amounted to 27 per cent. The total increase since 1919 in Japanese wages amounts to approximately 45 per cent. The wages of Chinese seamen have also been increased as a result of a great strike, which has just been settled, but the newspaper dispatches of March 24, 1922, while stating that the strike was settled by increases granted by an arbitration board, do not mention the amount of the increase. They do show, however, that the Chinese seamen's union was accorded recognition, which American shipowners now refuse to grant to the American seamen's union.

The total effects of these reductions in wages which have taken place since 1920 are summarized in the following table:

Comparison of reductions since 1920 of seamen's wages.

	1920 rates.	Present rates.	Amount of reduction.
American:
Shipping Board scale.....	$85.00	$55.00	$30.00
Atlantic coast owners' scale.....	85.00	47.50	37.50
Pacific coast owners' scale.....	90.00	65.00	25.00
Actually paid—Atlantic.....	85.00	35.00	50.00
British agreement.....	70.56	51.09	19.47
Japanese.....	20.00	29.00	9.00

<sup>1</sup> Decrease.

<sup>2</sup> Increase.

The wages of American seamen are now much lower than the wages of Canadian and Australian seamen; are practically on a level with British wages; and are substantially higher than the wages only of Japanese among the principal maritime nations. The wages paid able seamen and firemen on American, British, and Japanese ships at the present time (March, 1922) are set forth in the following table:

Able seamen and firemen, comparison of present wages.

	Able seamen.	Firemen.
American:
Nominal scale—
U. S. Shipping Board.....	$55.00	$57.50
American Steamship Owners' Association.....	47.50	50.00
Pacific Coast Owners' Association.....	65.00	65.00
Actual wages paid on Atlantic coast.....	30.00-40.00	35.00-45.00
British <sup>1</sup> .....	51.09	53.57
Japanese.....	28.50-29.00	28.50-29.50

<sup>1</sup> Scale fixed by agreement between British Shipping Federation and unions.

It will be noted that in the above table reference is made to the "nominal scales" paid by the United States Shipping Board and the shipowners' associations. This arises out of the fact that none of these scales are actually binding upon the shipowners, inasmuch as they are not made by agreement with the seamen's union, but are merely published by the board and by the associations. There is no power to enforce them.

As a matter of fact, the ships, particularly in the Atlantic trade, are paying wages far less than the scale. For example, on February 18 the steamship Castleton (3,328 tons), owned by the United States Shipping Board and operated by the Munson Line, shipped six able seamen from Norfolk for Cuba at $40 per month, or $15 less than the Shipping Board scale. The steamship Osage (7,800 tons), owned by Moore & McCormick, shipped able seamen from New Orleans for the Pacific coast at wages of $30 per month. The steamship Rajah (2,300 tons), operated by W. H. Cowley, of New Orleans, trading between Mexico and New Orleans, shipped able seamen at a rate of $35 per month. The steamship Mariana, of the Porto Rican Line, sailed from Norfolk to the West Indies February 22, 1922, with able seamen hired at a rate of $30 per month. Additional statements with regard to a large number of vessels are available showing the employment of able seamen at rates ranging from $25 to $45 per month.

It should be noted that both Canadian and Australian wages are higher than any of the scales specified above for American seamen. The wages of Canadian seamen were reduced on February 1, 1922, $10 a month, but still remain higher than the wages of American seamen. There are three classes of Canadian seamen. The first class now receive $75 per month, the second class $70 per month, and the third class $65 per month. The wages of Australian seamen are now the highest paid anywhere in the world as a result of the award of the Federal Arbitration Board of December 22, 1921, which was accepted by the Australian shipowners. Able seamen on Australian ships now receive $77.11 per month, and firemen receive $86.85.

The compensation received by British seamen is actually larger than the amounts shown in the table, inasmuch as they are entitled to benefits for unemployment, sickness, and accident, which American seamen do not enjoy, and which add materially to the compensation of British sailors. Even more important is the fact that British seamen, as well as Canadian and Australian, are given extra compensation for overtime, which has been abolished on every American ship.

Information regarding the present wages of Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish sailors is not included above, inasmuch as the rates paid on vessels of these nations are now in process of readjustment, and accurate information is not available. According to the latest accurate reports, however, covering the last half of the year 1921, the wages of seamen in these countries were higher than American wages.

The situation as regards American seamen's wages is conservatively stated in an article entitled "Equalizing seamen's wages," published in the Annalist, a New York financial journal, March 6, 1922, from which the following is quoted:

"Wages paid American seamen have been cited for years as the final proof that it costs more to operate a ship under the American flag than under a foreign flag. Probably no more misleading fact could be presented for proof of the case, as wages are not the final arbiter of American ship costs. In the first place, wages represent probably not more than 7 per cent of the total cost of operating ships (probably 15 per cent of the total cost in the case of luxurious passenger lines, where the number of servants supplied is considerably augmented). Secondly, American crews are no larger than the crews of many foreign ships, and, finally, the wage to-day paid a licensed American seaman is practically on a par with the British wage."

American crews on vessels of the same class and tonnage are now 23 per cent smaller than British crews and 70 per cent smaller than Japanese crews.

The United States Shipping Board has taken the initiative in reducing the size of the crews carried by American vessels, and as a result American ships to-day are greatly undermanned as compared with the vessels of all other nations.

The following table shows in detail the difference in number of unlicensed members of the crew required to man 8,800 dead-weight ton coal-burning cargo ships under various flags. The crew specified for the American ship is taken from the order of the United States Shipping Board on "normal manning requirement," effective December 10, 1921. The figures for the other nations are taken from an article published in the Pacific Marine Review (a shipowners' journal) for January, 1921, page 38. A study of the crews actually carried by British and Japanese ships indicates that the crews specified in this article are actually much smaller than the number normally carried.

American:
Deck department—
Carpenter-boatwain.....	1
Able seamen.....	6
Ordinary seamen.....	2
Total.....	9

Engine department—
Oilers.....	3
Firemen.....	9
Coal passers.....	3
Total.....	15

Steward department—
Chief steward.....	1
Chief cook.....	1
Second cook.....	1
Messboys.....	3
Total.....	6

Total of unlicensed crew of American..... 30

British:
Deck department—
Carpenter.....	1
Boatswain.....	1
Able seamen.....	10
Ordinary seamen.....	2
Total.....	14

Engine department—
Deck engineer.....	1
Storekeeper.....	1
Oilers.....	3
Firemen.....	8
Coal passers.....	4
Total.....	17

Steward department—
Chief steward.....	1
Chief cook.....	1
Second cook.....	1
Utility man.....	1
Messenger.....	1
Messboy.....	1
Total.....	6

Total of unlicensed crew of British..... 37

Japanese:
Deck department—
Quartermaster.....	3
Carpenter.....	1
Boatswain.....	1
Able seamen.....	6
Ordinary seamen.....	6
Total.....	17

Engine department—
Deck engineer.....	1
Storekeeper.....	1
Oilers.....	6
Firemen.....	12
Coal passers.....	8
Total.....	28

Steward department—
Chief steward.....	1
Chief cook.....	1
Second cook.....	1
Messengers.....	3
Total.....	6

Total of unlicensed crew of Japanese..... 51

For a vessel of the same size, therefore, the British ship will carry in its unlicensed crew seven men more than the American ship. This is an increase of 23 per cent. The Japanese ship will carry 21 men more, or an increase of 70 per cent.

As a matter of fact, the difference in the size of the total crew will actually be still larger, inasmuch as the British ship will carry at least one more deck officer than the American ship.

The reduction of the size of American crews under the Shipping Board's order has been particularly drastic as regards the number of able and ordinary seamen, who are essential to the safe and efficient operation of the vessels.

The reductions which have been made by order of the United States Shipping Board in the size of American crews have been directed primarily at the deck and engine departments, which are obviously the two departments most essential to the safety and efficiency of the vessel. In order to show this clearly, the following brief table has been prepared:

Comparison of unlicensed crew required to man an 8,800 dead-weight-ton coal-burning cargo ship under various flags.

[American figures official from regulations of United States Shipping Board December 10, 1921; other countries from Pacific Marine Review, January, 1921.]

	Total unlicensed crew.	Deck department.	Engine department.	Steward department.
American.....	30	9	15	6
British.....	37	14	17	6
Japanese.....	51	17	28	6

It will be seen that the deck department of the British ship contains 55 per cent more unlicensed men than the American ship, while the Japanese ship contains 89 per cent more. The British engine-room crew, it is true, is only a little larger than the American, but the Japanese engine-room crew is nearly twice as large. The steward department, which has nothing directly to do with the efficiency of the vessel, is of the same size under all three flags.

The actual monthly wage cost of seamen upon a British ship is now 54 per cent higher than upon an American Shipping Board vessel of the same class and tonnage. This, of course, takes into consideration the difference in the manning of the vessels and the wage cost is calculated according to that.

The seamen are the real source of sea power and maritime supremacy. Every great maritime nation knows this. It is the seamen who are responsible for the efficient navigation and safe conduct of the vessel. They are also the basis of naval power, since every navy must, in the last analysis, be recruited from its merchant marine.

It is for this reason that the British, who have had centuries of experience upon the sea, and who are long-headed enough to know how to maintain maritime supremacy, have refused to cut the number of able seamen who man their vessels, in spite of the great temptation of greater immediate profits through undermanning.

The following table compares the cost of the seamen actually carried by the British steamship Carrigan Head and the manning for the same vessel prescribed by the United States Shipping Board:

	British.			American.
	Number carried.	Monthly wages.	Total cost.	Number carried.	Monthly wages.	Total cost.
A. B. and lamps.....	1	$53.46	$53.46	.....	.....	.....
A. B. seamen.....	7	51.03	357.21	4	$55.00	$220
Ordinary seamen.....	2	27.95	55.92	2	40.00	80
Total.....	10	.....	466.59	6	.....	302

Mr. HARDY. That is the deck crew?

Mr. FURUSETH. That is the deck crew, sir.

Although the British scale for individual seamen is a little lower than the Shipping Board scale, the cost of seamen under British manning is actually $164.59 per month (54 per cent) higher than the American cost.

There is no doubt whatever that the apparent saving for American shipowners through this arbitrary reduction in the number of seamen carried is more than compensated for by inefficient operation and by constant repairs, due to the inability of so small a crew to maintain the upkeep of the vessel while it is at sea.

The only real advantage in wages or salaries which the British shipowner now enjoys as compared with the American is in the lower salaries paid deck and engineer officers. In order to make possible an exact comparison of the manning and wages of British and American vessels under present conditions, a transcript of the articles of the British steamship Carrigan Head was secured, showing the number of men carried and the wages paid to each man.

The following table compares the manning and wage cost of this vessel under British and American conditions:

	British.		American.
	Number carried.	Total monthly wages.	Number carried.	At scale of American Steamship Owners' Association.	At scale of American Steamship Owners' Association.
Master.....	1	.....	1	.....	.....
First mate.....	1	$109.35	1	$160	$155
Second mate.....	1	94.77	1	140	130
Third mate.....	1	77.76	1	125	115

	British.		American.
	Number carried.	Total monthly wages.	Number carried.	Total monthly wages.
Fourth mate.....	1	$72.90	0	.....
Carpenter.....	1	63.18	1	$70
Boatswain.....	1	58.32	1	$70
Able-bodied and lamps.....	1	53.46	0	.....
Able-bodied seamen.....	7	357.21	4	222
Ordinary seamen.....	2	55.92	2	80
Chief engineer.....	1	160.38	1	230
First engineer.....	1	116.64	1	160
Second engineer.....	1	92.34	1	140
Third engineer.....	1	77.76	1	125
Storekeeper.....	1	58.32	0	.....
Donkeyman.....	1	58.32	0	.....
Greaser.....	1	55.89	0	.....
Oilier.....	0	.....	3	195
Firemen.....	9	481.14	6	345
Coal passers.....	0	.....	3	150
Chief steward.....	1	72.90	0	.....
Second steward.....	1	47.40	0	.....
Messroom steward.....	1	46.17	0	.....
Assistant steward.....	1	43.74	0	.....
Ship's cook.....	1	68.04	0	.....
Cook and steward.....	0	.....	1	105
Second cook.....	1	48.60	1	70
Mess boys.....	0	.....	3	105
Total.....	39	2,370.51	32	2,422

<sup>1</sup> Not provided for in American Steamship Owners' Association scale, but given top rate paid by Shipping Board.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all those who have spoken or who will speak on this measure be granted leave to extend and revise their remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have to make that request in the House.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WATSON].

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, no act since the armistice that has been placed upon the statute books in favor of constructive legislation will strengthen the power and wealth of the Republic and add to its influence over the nations of the world as the enactment of the present bill. America has the favored location on the globe. Its climatic and scenic conditions give an impulse to inspire its people for personal independence and political power. After the World War we suddenly became the foremost of all nations. America is the hope of the world for future peace. England, the greatest nation of modern times, has through its policies accomplished more than any other country in civilizing the world. It did it by a merchant marine. Balfour, one of the most devoted Englishmen, and who loves his country, upon leaving the shores of America for home after the peace conference, said: "Up to this time we called ourselves equal, but no longer, America leads the world."

The shore line of the United States, not including outlying territories, is 21,862 miles, with harbors and ports unexcelled. These natural advantages are open to all maritime countries, and thus we allow the most important factor tending to strengthen the power of our country to lie idle, and to permit that energy to benefit foreign countries, enlarging their wealth and influence in opposition to that of America. I can not conceive an American, wherever he may live or whatever his political mind, opposing the building of a merchant marine which must inure to the prosperity of his country.

The Congress deemed it wise to pass a bill known as "the seamen's act," which should be commended as humane legislation. This law, however, combined with the pay given to the American seamen, prevents the maintenance and expansion of foreign trade of the United States by the ownership and operation of privately owned vessels except through financial assistance by the Government. Shall we command in part the ocean transportation? We can not under the present laws; we can not without Government aid; we can not unless Congress passes such laws as will enable American citizens to operate vessels at least at a reasonable profit. We have a Navy to protect our coasts. It would be greatly weakened in time of war without merchant ships as auxiliaries. In the early history of railroads the Government rendered aid to railroad companies to enable them to build extensions in the far West that had not been developed and where the country was almost uninhabited. This policy has put millions upon millions in the United States Treasury. Federal financial support has not been unknown in the history of our Republic. Excessive sums were paid to vessels for transporting the United States mails, which in fact was a subsidy, and under this plan a large American fleet was established. We need American vessels to carry American commodities to every port of the world. It cost the taxpayers $3,000,000,000 to build vessels under the power given to the United States Emergency Fleet Corporation. This one item represents nearly three times as much as was expended in operating the Government the year previous to the war.

We have about 338 steel vessels in service, 40 in temporary service, and 997 tied to the docks. It cost the Government $50,000,000 yearly to operate them, and over $11,000,000 have been paid for repairs, and those at anchor are fast depreciating. If we fail to pass this bill the American fleet will be almost a total loss. Two hundred and twenty-seven wooden vessels, costing over $300,000,000—and of this number 217 were sold the other day for $700,000—to be scrapped. To place all the American fleet in service and to keep it in operation under this bill will require about $20,000,000, less than one-half now appropriated to keep 338 vessels commercially afloat.

The opponents argue that this bill is a selfish one, rendering Government aid only for the benefit of private shipping interests. I am not in accord with this statement, as I believe the bill, when it becomes law, will be in the interest of every American citizen. All new constructive acts can not be perfected or completed in their legislative features, but this measure meets the condition of the times and future legislation will amend wherein this bill is deficient. Every dollar paid for passengers and freight to foreign vessels benefits the country where the vessel is registered. Why should America pay millions and millions of dollars yearly in interest of foreign merchant marine instead of encouraging transportation in American-flag ships?

The World War brought us nearer to all nations, and when we were conscripted our boys to fight side by side with our allies for a common cause we accepted foreign responsibilities and the entanglements arising therefrom. What may be a grave national question will be an international one for all, and America can not withdraw from its duty. To hold the position we now enjoy and to protect our commercial interests we must not lessen our power; rather, augment it with a superior merchant marine, that ships carrying the American flag will control the commerce of the seas and that American goods will be consigned only to American vessels. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12817 and had come to no resolution thereon.

RESIGNATION FROM A COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLET.

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Yours sincerely,

EWING L. DAVIS.

COMMITTEE ELECTIONS.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 450.

Resolved, That CHARLES L. ABERNETHY, Member of Congress from the third district of North Carolina, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the standing committees of the House on Coinage, Weights, and Measures; the Territories; and Expenditures in the Navy Department; and

That CLARENCE W. TURNER, Member of Congress from the seventh district of Tennessee, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the Committees on Insular Affairs and Invalid Pensions.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE TO FILE MINORITY VIEWS.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the minority have leave to file minority views on the bill for the relief of Louis Leavitt, the exact number of which I do not recall at the moment.

The SPEAKER. What committee?

Mr. BOX. The Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the minority of the Committee on Claims have, how much time?

Mr. BOX. To-morrow.

The SPEAKER. To file their views on the bill referred to. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

REFERENCE OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move the reference of the President's message of Tuesday to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the President's message may be printed as a House document.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

HOOR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, November 24, 1922, at 11 o'clock a. m.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BUTLER: A bill (H. R. 12952) to provide for the immediate needs of enlisted men upon discharge from the naval service for the good of the service; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. SLEMP: A bill (H. R. 12953) to establish a national park in the State of Virginia; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 12954) to authorize officers of the military service to accept offices with compensation and emoluments from Governments of the Republics of North America and South America; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SMITH of Idaho: A bill (H. R. 12955) to regulate and control unincorporated cooperative contract loan, savings, and investment institutions operating under declarations of trust in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SLEMP: A bill (H. R. 12956) to increase the salaries of the United States marshal and United States district attorney for the eastern district of Virginia; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KELL of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 12957) to classify photographs and photographic films as fourth-class mail matter; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. STEPHENS: A bill (H. R. 12958) to grant leave of absence to officers and employees of the United States or of the District of Columbia when ordered to duty with the United States Naval Reserve Force or the United States Marine Corps Reserve; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. ABERNETHY: A bill (H. R. 12959) to enlarge and extend the post-office building at Goldsboro, N. C.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12960) to enlarge and extend the post-office building at New Bern, N. C.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. McPHERSON: A bill (H. R. 12961) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Aurora, Mo.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12962) to provide for the purchase of a site for a post-office building in the city of Cartersville, Mo.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12963) to provide for the purchase of a site for a post-office building in the city of Neosho, Mo.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12964) to provide for the purchase of a site for a post-office building in the city of Monett, Mo.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12965) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Lamar, Mo.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SINCLAIR: A bill (H. R. 12966) to provide for the purchase and sale of farm products; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. PETERSEN (by request): A bill (H. R. 12967) to incorporate the United States Platinum Corporation and to aid in the development of the mineral resources of Alaska, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 391) directing the Public Printer to furnish, upon application, to each Senator elect, each Representative elect, and each Delegate elect a copy of each issue of the Congressional Record and indexes; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. BUTLER: Resolution (H. Res. 447) authorizing the Clerk of the House to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Frederic H. Blackford and Elizabeth F. Mullen one month's salary as clerks to the late Hon. Charles R. Connel; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. WISE: Resolution (H. Res. 448) directing the Federal Trade Commission to report to the House the cost of manufacturing and producing calcium arsenate, and whether the production and prices of calcium arsenate are controlled by any unlawful combination; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. TEN EYCK: Resolution (H. Res. 449) expressing the sincere wish and desire of the United States of America that the obligations of the signatories of the treaty of Sevres be observed by all signatories; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BEGG: A bill (H. R. 12968) granting a pension to Mary Spencer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12969) granting a pension to Jennie Boyd; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12970) granting a pension to Margaret Blackman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12971) granting a pension to Nehemiah D. Minkler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BENHAM: A bill (H. R. 12972) granting a pension to Lida O'Neal; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12973) to correct the military record of Jacob Shuey; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. COUGHLIN: A bill (H. R. 12974) for the relief of John Bray, alias John Pickthorn; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DALLINGER: A bill (H. R. 12975) granting a pension to David C. Preston; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DARROW: A bill (H. R. 12976) granting a pension to Matthew Pierce; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. EDMONDS: A bill (H. R. 12977) granting an increase of pension to Patrick H. Connelly; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GILBERT: A bill (H. R. 12978) granting a pension to Mary E. Grayson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12979) granting a pension to James A. Coppage; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GLYNN: A bill (H. R. 12980) for the relief of the Home for the Friendless, of Chicago, Ill.; the Silas Bronson Library, of Waterbury, Conn.; the Gettysburg College (formerly Pennsylvania College), of Gettysburg, Pa.; the Presbyterian Church of Bardstown, Ky.; and the Taylor Orphan Asylum, of Racine, Wis.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GREENE of Vermont: A bill (H. R. 12981) granting a pension to Katie Jane Bapp; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 12982) granting a pension to Martha Hoffman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KENDALL: A bill (H. R. 12983) granting an increase of pension to Henry C. McKinley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12984) granting a pension to Eunice A. Myers; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12985) granting a pension to Charles Ray Beeghly; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12986) granting a pension to Carrie Tissue; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12987) granting a pension to Jonathan Witt; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12988) granting a pension to Deborah H. Shaffer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LINEBERGER: A bill (H. R. 12989) granting an increase of pension to Belle Bair; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LOGAN: A bill (H. R. 12990) for the relief of George A. Nickles; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McDUFFIE: A bill (H. R. 12991) for the relief of J. E. Hendrix; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LAWRENCE: A bill (H. R. 12992) granting a pension to Martha E. Butler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MILLSAUGH: A bill (H. R. 12993) granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. A. P. NELSON: A bill (H. R. 12994) granting an increase of pension to Urzula Levissee; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REECE: A bill (H. R. 12995) granting a pension to Rachel M. Goin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SNYDER: A bill (H. R. 12996) granting a pension to Lillah Lane; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

6448. By Mr. BURROUGHS: Petition of Mr. M. W. Dunbar, of Hampton, N. H., and 35 other voters of the first congressional district of New Hampshire, protesting against any modification of or removal of any restriction from existing laws governing immigration; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

6449. By Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania: Petition of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, urging the passage of S. 1943, for the protection of aliens under their treaty rights; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

6450. By Mr. HARRISON: Petition of Frank R. Thotter and 41 other citizens of Stephen City, Va., urging Government action for the protection of Armenians; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

6451. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of W. Bernard Duke, Baltimore, Md., relating to the seizure of the Atlantic, Gulf & Pacific Steamship Corporation's fleet by the United States Shipping Board; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

6452. By Mr. SABATH: Petition of the Illinois Holstein-Friesian Association, in convention at Dixon, Ill., urging the continuance of appropriations to eradicate tuberculosis in cattle; to the Committee on Agriculture.

6453. By Mr. SINCLAIR: Petition of Harry H. Giese and 3 others, of Underwood; Algot Carlson and 4 others, of Milnor; J. D. Barclay and 35 others, of Mose; Syver Olsen and 63 others, of Ryder; G. A. Johnson and 9 others, of Carson and Almont; Mrs. R. W. Tesch and 7 others, of Werner and Taylor; Andrew Omholt and 13 others, of Williston, all in the State of North Dakota, in favor of a stabilized price on wheat; to the Committee on Agriculture.

6454. Also, petition of H. O. Hoffman and 11 others, of Morris-town, S. Dak.; William Wilson and 5 others, of Ryder, N. Dak.; Fred Landeis and 9 others, of Mandan, N. Dak.; Mrs. L. D. Best and 22 others, of Hillsboro, N. Dak.; S. O. Tveden and 28 others, of Watford City and Schafer, N. Dak.; Gustav F. Starck and 8 others, of Sweetbriar, N. Dak.; S. T. Ferguson and 6 others, of Woodworth, N. Dak.; L. A. Trudell and 77 others, of Deering and Surrey, N. Dak., urging that a fair minimum price be set on wheat; to the Committee on Agriculture.

6455. Also, petition of C. F. Johnson and 14 others, of Manfred; Mrs. Ralph Ingerson and 26 others, of Lignite and Flaxton; P. H. Paulson and 38 others, of Niagara; Mrs. F. J. Lyon and 18 others, of Dogden; C. J. Nelson and 34 others, of Beulah; A. Obermeier and 38 others, of Linton; Philip Fisher and 8 others, of Gladstone, all in the State of North Dakota, in favor of a minimum price on wheat; to the Committee on Agriculture.

6456. Also, petition of Henry Jacobson and 9 others, of Lundsvalley; Al. N. Nelson and 41 others, of Carlson; J. A. Dahl and 53 others, of Banks; Mrs. Gust Anderson and 33 others, of Sheyenne, all in the State of North Dakota, in favor of a minimum price on farm products; to the Committee on Agriculture.

6457. Also, petition of Gonvald Nodland and 9 others, of Dunn Center; N. O. Peterson and 33 others, of Turtle Lake; Emma C. Heidlebaugh and 23 others, of Rugby and Pleasant Lake, all in the State of North Dakota, asking Congress to set a price of $2 on wheat; to the Committee on Agriculture.

6458. By Mr. TEMPLE: Evidence in support of H. R. 12888, granting a pension to Lizzie C. Masters; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, November 24, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father and our God, we are the recipients of Thy mercy. Enable us to appreciate with confidence in Thee the privileges given unto us. May we live assured day by day of Thy presence and help in all the duties that may come to us. Lead us into the light when darkness may be about us. Help us to an understanding of the ways along which we should travel, and be with us, we beseech of Thee. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

CHARLES E. TOWNSEND, a Senator from the State of Michigan, appeared in his seat to-day.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Glass	Nicholson	Stanfield
Bayard	Gooding	Norris	Stanley
Borah	Hale	Overman	Sterling
Brandegee	Harrell	Owen	Sutherland
Broussard	Harrison	Page	Swanson
Cameron	Heflin	Pepper	Townsend
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Trammell
Caraway	Kellogg	Pomerene	Underwood
Culberson	Keyes	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Cummins	Ladd	Rawson	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Lodge	Reed, Pa.	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	McCumber	Sheppard	Warren
Edge	McKellar	Shortridge	Watson
Ernst	McKinley	Simmons	Weller
Frelinghuysen	McNary	Smith	Willis
George	Nelson	Smoot

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. HARRIS] on account of illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the semiannual conference of the National Board of Farm Organizations held recently in Washington, D. C., protesting against the passage of the Jones-Greene bill. I also ask that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Adopted by the semiannual conference of the National Board of Farm Organizations held in Washington, D. C., October 11-13.]

Whereas it is apparent that the question of granting subsidies to our merchant shipping will soon be brought to a vote in Congress; and

Whereas the farmers of the United States have been traditionally opposed to the granting of such subsidies; and

Whereas the plan embodied in the Jones-Greene bill, which is now under consideration, contains many provisions that are extremely objectionable and would, in our opinion, be detrimental to the best interest of the country as a whole if enacted: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this body record an emphatic protest against the passage of this proposed legislation.

Mr. EDGE. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a telegram favoring the passage of the ship subsidy bill. I also ask that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Western Union Telegram.]

TRENTON, N. J., November 24, 1922.

Senator WALTER E. EDGE,
Washington, D. C.:

Trenton Real Estate Board unanimously indorse ship subsidy bill and urge its passage.

ISAIAH BIRKS, President.

Mr. CURTIS presented a resolution of the Leavenworth (Kans.) Chamber of Commerce, favoring the passage of the so-called ship subsidy bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LADD presented a petition of the Antelope Farm Bureau Association, of Fort Pierre, N. Dak., praying acceptance of the proposal of Henry Ford relative to the operation of the Muscle Shoals plant, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented petitions of J. P. Parkinson and 22 others, of Willow City; Louis Lehmkuhl and 12 others, of Center; Eva D. Vizina and 7 others, of Williston; John Fink and 21 others, of Dodge; M. L. Forbes and 22 others, of White Earth; Mrs. Ira Heldlebaugh and 25 others, of Pleasant Lake; N. O. Peterson and 32 others, of Turtle Lake; J. K. James and 2 others, of Rolla; Anton Tanberg and 3 others, of Mohall; John Haupe and 31 others, of Medina; J. J. Costella and 18 others, of Cavalier; Walter Ott and 19 others, of Elgin; Mrs. Dan McTucklan and 11 others, of Westhope; Earl Warner and 2 others, of Fessenden; Elizabeth Jones and 8 others, of Fort Rice; Henry Gisleberg and 9 others, of Maddock; Christian Unrich and 18 others, of Glen Ullin; Ludwig Kruckenberg and 8 others, of Stanton; Therisa Sasse and 8 others, of Zap; J. L. Laheck and 9 others, of Zahl, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation stabilizing the price of wheat, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 4064) authorizing the issuance of patent to the legal representatives of Miles J. Davis, deceased; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A bill (S. 4065) for the promotion of certain officers of the United States Army on the retired list; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 4066) to create a commission to recommend to Congress amendments necessary in order to simplify the pleading, practice, and procedure in certain Federal courts; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BALL:

A bill (S. 4067) to amend the law regarding assessment of real and personal property in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. KELLOGG:

A bill (S. 4068) granting a pension to Linda A. Baker; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 248) to provide for the payment of salaries of Senators appointed to fill vacancies, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

LIBERIAN LOAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed. Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate and proceeded with.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 270) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States for the Government of Liberia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. NORRIS. I ask that the amendment may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Add at the end of the joint resolution the following additional section:

SEC. 3. That to carry out the provisions of the act of February 17, 1911, "to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their locomotives with safe and suitable boilers and appurtenances thereto," as amended, as follows:

"For salaries of 35 additional inspectors whose employment is hereby authorized for nine months at the rate of $3,000 per annum each, $78,750; for per diem in lieu of subsistence for said inspectors for nine months, $37,800; for transportation for said inspectors for nine months, $37,800; for allowances to said inspectors for nine months, $15,750; in all, fiscal year 1923, $170,100."

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, for the main joint resolution establishing a credit such as is contemplated, I can find no constitutional authority whatever. I see no legal obligation and no moral obligation. It does seem to me that it is time that we should look after the people at home instead of trying to extend credits to other countries of the world where we will never collect the money. In my section of the country a great many people have not paid their taxes for last year, much less this year. We are tired of laboring under burdensome taxation.

I can not understand how Senators should so far forget their oaths as to vote for a joint resolution which no one would claim is constitutional. There is no place for such legislation now, and I trust that it will be defeated.

Mr. President, in reference to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] I desire to say that I can see no benefit whatever to be derived from increasing the number of locomotive inspectors; in fact, I do not know that there is any necessity for those who are provided for at the present time. Congress should regain its equilibrium and allow business hereafter to function in its accustomed way. The railroads have their own experts; they repair their engines and they know better than some little Government official whether or not those engines are safe; indeed, they know when the engines come out of the shop as to whether or not they are safe. Not only that, but I should much prefer to trust to the knowledge of the engineer who operates the engine than to some Government official who may go around theorizing about it.

We all know that the railroads owe to the public the highest degree of care. They are responsible not only to public sentiment but they are also financially responsible for any injuries that may occur in railroad transportation by reason of any defect in their instrumentalities. After we have gone through a great tie-up of the commerce of the country, to appoint more locomotive inspectors to bedevil, to hamper, and to harass the railroads in the conduct of their business would be absolutely unwise.

I have no brief to speak for the railroad companies, but I do sympathize with business, and I desire to say that if we do not let people transact their business in a reasonable way, without so much Government interference, after awhile there will be no one to carry on business—there will be nobody to pay taxes.

The enactment of this proposed legislation would tend to diminish the number of engines which might be put in operation; it would retard progress; it would retard the delivery of freight. Some little fellow might go around urging some slight captious objection to an engine with which there is nothing materially wrong and have it sidetracked. How in the name of common sense can such a man know more about an engine than the man who operates it? We need practical people, and it is morally wrong and it is financially wrong to keep on tying up the railroads and worrying them with all this kind of red tape.

I do not know whether the Interstate Commerce Commission recommends this proposed legislation or not, but even if they do I desire to say that I find emanating from governmental agencies a great many impracticable visionary suggestions. I understand that a great many of the railroads are getting tired of operating their property and would be glad for some excuse to hand it over to the Government.

If we shall keep on hampering them and preventing them transacting their business in a common sense way such will be the inevitable result. Then, indeed, it will be a sad day for the taxpayers of this country. I am opposed to Government ownership or operation of any kind of business. We have witnessed a great failure in the shipping enterprise in which we are now engaged; not that it necessarily should be a failure, but the chief man who is operating it operates it so as to make it a failure instead of making it a success. It will be the same way with the railroads when they pass into Government ownership.

Mr. President, it is well to talk about the safety of individuals and the public. Senators may get up here and with maudlin sentimentality talk about the care of the lives of women and children who ride on railroad trains; but who knows that hampering the railroads in the manner proposed would improve conditions? Let us carry that suggestion a little further to its logical conclusion. I expect to see some well-meaning, tender sentimentalist get up here and introduce a bill before long proposing to provide inspectors of automobiles in this country. Such a Senator could make a most eloquent speech suggesting that as the Government appropriates money for the purpose of building highways, that it is most desirable that the women and children be not injured; that accidents should be prevented in traveling on those beautiful highways which we have built; that we know that automobiles will get out of order, and therefore suggest it would be proper for the Government to have automobile inspectors at every crossroad and garage in the country. Such a suggestion might be made with just as much reason as it is now proposed that we have locomotive inspectors; and I do not know that many Senators would oppose such a proposition. I fear not.

It seems to me that we have lost pretty much all the common sense we ever had. We have gone to extremes. We forget that there are taxpayers in this country. I do not know what there is in the atmosphere of Washington to produce that effect, but when legislators come here they seem to forget the trials and the hardships of life; we seem to think that money is just simply printed by the printing presses of the Government, with nothing behind it, and that all Senators and Representatives have to do is to introduce a bill to appropriate money.

I am here now, and I intend to take a new start, and hereafter to oppose the creation of all unnecessary offices and all unnecessary taxation, notwithstanding there is not much encouragement to do so. If we do not pursue a different course, we will be heading directly in the direction of Russia and some of the other countries of the world which can not pay their obligations.

I do not want to warn my fellow Senators; that is a matter for them; but I do say that the people back at home are more aroused than they have ever been about the extravagance of government. I am sorry to say that one can hardly get in a Pullman car or enter a hotel lobby without hearing the expression, "To hell with Congress; its Members are antiquated; Congress is out of date; it is not in harmony with the people."

In all seriousness, I can see no use of encumbering the railroads with this additional and meddlesome restriction, and certainly the Treasury is in no condition forever to have offices heaped up and expense piled up from time to time. I thought after the war we would begin to go back to normal, but it seems that we are determined not to allow expenses to decrease. I am perfectly willing to help any set of men here to try to be reasonable and sane and practical, and I am prepared to vote against all unnecessary expense. I hope that we will wake up, and there could be no better time than at the beginning of this short session to realize the condition of the country.

If we pass this appropriation to Liberia, we will force some taxpayer to enjoin its payment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask for a division.

Mr. HARRISON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIAL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and vote "nay."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and vote "yea."

Mr. NORRIS (when Mr. LA FOLLETTE's name was called). I was requested to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is unavoidably absent from the Chamber, and that if he were present, on this question, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MCCUMBER (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] and vote "nay."

Mr. MCKELLAR (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] to the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], but I am informed that if present he would vote as I shall vote. I, therefore, feel at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HALE. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] to the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]; but as he would vote as I have voted, I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] to the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Arkansas

[Mr. ROBINSON] to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK]; and

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS].

The result was announced—yeas 51, nays 9, as follows:

YEAS—51.

Ball	Glass	Nicholson	Smoot
Bayard	Hale	Norris	Stanfield
Borah	Harrison	Overman	Stanley
Brandegee	Hefflin	Owen	Sterling
Cameron	Hitchcock	Page	Sutherland
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Pepper	Swanson
Caraway	Kellogg	Pittman	Townsend
Culberson	Keyes	Pomerene	Trammell
Cummins	Ladd	Rawson	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Lodge	Sheppard	Walsh, Mont.
Edge	McKellar	Shortridge	Watson
Fletcher	McKinley	Simmons	Willis
George	McNary	Smith

NAYS—9.

Broussard	Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Wadsworth
Dial	Gooding	Myers	Warren
Ernst

NOT VOTING—35.

Ashurst	Harrell	McLean	Reed, Mo.
Bayard	Harris	Moses	Reed, Pa.
Bursum	Johnson	Nelson	Robinson
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Shields
Colt	Kendrick	Norbeck	Spencer
Dillingham	King	Oddie	Underwood
Elkins	La Follette	Phipps	Weller
Fernald	Lenroot	Poin Dexter	Williams
France	McCormick	Ransdell
Gerry

So Mr. HARRISON's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, on line 17, page 2 of the joint resolution, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 17, after the word "resolution," it is proposed to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of the sum herein authorized to be established as a credit for the Government of Liberia, or any part of the appropriation herein made to carry out the purposes of this act, shall be used for the payment of any commission to any agent, attorney, or commission by the Government of Liberia which may have been or may hereafter be contracted.

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I have offered this amendment because it is pretty generally understood, I think, that certain persons have a contract with the Government of Liberia that in the event this loan is made they are to receive a fee or commission of $650,000. It is not a secret that the five persons who have this contract with the Government of Liberia are members of the colored race. They have been very conspicuous around the corridors of the Capitol, buttonholing Senators, and using every influence in order to obtain the passage of this legislation. If the rumors that are flying everywhere are correct—and I hope some one can put us right if they are not—the persons who are to receive this commission and share in the profits of $650,000 which the taxpayers of America will have to pay are the following:

William H. Lewis, of the city of Boston, a very prominent Republican member of the colored race. He was formerly an assistant to the Attorney General when Mr. Wickersham held that high office.

Emmett J. Scott, who is the secretary and treasurer of Howard University in the city of Washington, and who is generally seen at Republican conventions. He was, as I understand, one of the lieutenants for the manager of Leonard Wood when he was a candidate for the Republican presidential nomination some time ago.

James A. Cobb, of the city of Washington, a well-known colored attorney, who was assistant to the district attorney when Mr. Wickersham was Attorney General.

Another one is a preacher, Rev. Ernest Lyon, of the city of Baltimore, who was formerly minister to Liberia under one of the past Republican administrations. He is at present, as I understand, the consul general to this country from Liberia.

Another is William L. Houston, a lawyer and very prominent colored Republican in Washington, who was recently placed upon the Board of Education by President Harding.

These men, it is generally understood, have a contract for $650,000 in the event this body is generous and kind enough to-day to pass the Liberian loan. If this contract has not been written, and these facts that are so frequently stated are not true, then my amendment can do no harm; but certainly it should be adopted, so that these commissions shall not be paid or any commission paid in the event the proposed legislation should pass.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I think the rumor that the Senator has spoken about is like a good many others he has heard of; they originate in his own fertile mind.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator if he will agree, pending this matter, to hold it up a few days until we can have a little investigation to see whether or not these charges are true. I have not seen the contract, but we can get these persons here, and we can ascertain the facts. No harm will be done thereby.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I will agree to the amendment. That will settle the question.

Mr. HARRISON. That is perfectly all right.

Mr. CURTIS. I want to say that all the time this joint resolution was before the Committee on Finance, and all the time it has been here, not one colored man, or, for that matter, one white man, has appeared in its behalf except members of the State Department and the Treasury Department. These rumors are without any foundation whatever.

I have no objection to the amendment, and hope there will not be one vote against it.

Mr. HARRISON. I am certainly thankful to the Senator for his pleasing address and indorsement of the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Mississippi knew that we would accept the amendment before he made his speech.

Mr. HARRISON. No; I did not. I am glad I convinced the Senator, though.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Senator did not convince me at all.

Mr. HARRISON. The proviso should have been in the original joint resolution, then.

Mr. SMOOT. No one thought of it. I have no objection at all to it.

Mr. HARRISON. That is all right. We are together, then.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that no colored man has ever approached me at any time about the Liberian joint resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. They knew the Senator would be all right anyhow.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be. Whether the Senator is all right or all wrong is a question of judgment. The Senator believes in recognizing a moral or legal obligation on the part of the Government as well as he does on his own part. I have no objection to the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I discussed this question a few weeks ago during the last session of Congress, but I want to say another word before it is finally voted upon, in answer to the statement that this loan should be granted in pursuance of a moral obligation that this Government has to the people of Liberia. I think that suggestion has been exploded by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. The facts show—and this is not a matter of imagination—that certain persons in New York are interested in this loan; that if this money is provided, about $3,500,000 of it will go to concerns in New York interested in the loan to Liberia.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I am quite sure the Senator does not want to make a statement unless he knows it to be true. I want to say to the Senator that the Secretary of State says that all of the $1,500,000 of bonds that Liberia is now owing is owned in Great Britain and France, with the exception of about $58,000. If the Senator wants to read the statement of the Secretary, or will let me do so, he will find that that evidence was submitted before the committee of the House.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will ask the Senator a question. How much of this money will be paid to Wall Street for indebtedness on the part of Liberia?

Mr. SMOOT. On the part of Liberia?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Fifty-eight thousand dollars is all that Liberia owes America. But it is true that the National City Bank is acting as agent for creditors in England and France, and that indebtedness amounts to about $1,500,000. That is the fact in the case.

Mr. HEFLIN. So you contend that about three and one-half million dollars will go to Liberia?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; to be expended there for the establishment of schools, the building of roads, payment of internal debts, and for improving the rivers and harbors. That is what the money is to be expended for, over and above that which goes to the payment of obligations which Liberia owes to foreign governments to-day. Our Government took the position that they were not going to advance any money to Liberia, and still have foreign governments holding the obligations of Liberia.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, all of those obligations which the Senator from Utah says are due foreign governments, and which he now claims these New York bankers are merely collecting as agents for foreign governments, were contracted in 1912.

Mr. SMOOT. Some of them before that.

Mr. SIMMONS. They are old debts.

Mr. SMOOT. They are old debts, certainly. There is no question about that. But the Government of the United States was not willing to lend a dollar to Liberia and have a foreign government owning a first mortgage and we a second one.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then the Senator's statement of fact is this, that nearly half of this money is to liquidate debts of Liberia antedating the war.

Mr. SMOOT. A third of it is.

Mr. SIMMONS. And the balance of it is to be used for internal improvements hereafter to be made in Liberia?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt about it. If necessary, I would be glad to tell the Senate just exactly why this was done, why the arrangement was made, and state the moral obligation we are under to-day.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator from Alabama permit me to ask the Senator from Utah a question?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will.

Mr. NORRIS. I will ask two questions. The first one is this: When that part of this indebtedness which is owned abroad, in England and in France, was originally contracted, did these same banks in New York act as agents, did they sell the bonds to those foreigners, or were the bonds bought directly from Liberia?

Mr. SMOOT. They made the loan direct to Liberia. Not only that, Mr. President, but I think some of the bonds are still in Germany.

Mr. NORRIS. I have forgotten all the details, but there were at least two of these amounts—one to cover a floating loan of $350,000, I think, and some other indebtedness of $250,000, as to which the statement did not show who owned the indebtedness.

Mr. SMOOT. The statement shows that all the obligations are outside of America, with the exception of $58,000. I have not a statement as to just the amount of the loans.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that in the agreement entered into by the Liberian Government and the Secretary of State October 28, 1921, it is stated first:

Two hundred and thirty-three thousand dollars, or such less amount as shall be sufficient to enable the Government of Liberia to pay its internal funded debt—

Mr. NORRIS. Who owns that?

Mr. SMOOT. That is a local obligation, owned in Liberia.

Mr. SIMMONS. It says "internal funded debt."

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; it is an internal debt.

Mr. NORRIS. It does not follow because it is an internal debt that it is owned in Liberia.

Mr. SMOOT. If it is an internal debt, it would have to be.

Mr. SIMMONS. Second, it was provided—

Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars, or such less amount as shall be sufficient to enable the Government of Liberia to pay its internal floating debt.

Mr. NORRIS. Who owns that debt?

Mr. SIMMONS. Nothing is stated as to who owns that debt.

Mr. NORRIS. Those are the two items I was inquiring about.

Mr. HEFLIN. What was the amount of that floating debt?

Mr. SIMMONS. Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Then $1,650,000 is the debt represented by these bankers in New York. The Senator from Utah says that they have no interest in it but are simply acting as representatives.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I say so.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire now to read what the agreement states about it.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator doubt that the National City Bank is acting as agent for England and France?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. SMOOT. I say they are, and I know that they are.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me read what the agreement states:

One million six hundred and fifty thousand dollars, or such less amount as may be necessary for the purpose of enabling the Government of Liberia to purchase or redeem all of its bonds now issued and outstanding.

So that they are to pay, first, their funded debt, their floating debt, and all of their bonds outstanding.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. SIMMONS. This continues:

Representing the 5 per cent sinking fund gold loan, due July 1, 1952, under the agreement for refunding loan dated March 7, 1912, between the Republic of Liberia, of the first part, and J. P. Morgan & Co., Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the National City Bank of New York, and First National Bank of New York, acting for themselves and for Robert Fleming & Co.—

"For themselves and Robert Fleming & Co."—

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. And M. M. Warburg & Co.—

and such payments of interest, costs of notices, and other payments or deposits, as well as payments which may be due from the Government of Liberia, under the fiscal agency agreement dated March 7, 1912, between the Republic of Liberia, of the first part, and the National City Bank of New York, of the second part, as shall be necessary to terminate all obligations of the Government of Liberia under all of said bonds or under the agreement for refunding loan or the fiscal agency agreement above mentioned, as shall entitle the Government of Liberia in accordance with the terms of said agreement to the cancellation and destruction of all said bonds held by the fiscal agents in the sinking fund mentioned in said agreements. Advances for this purpose shall be made at such times and in such amounts as shall be determined by the Secretary of State of the United States. It is understood that the Secretary of State of the United States may determine the best method for acquiring part or all of the aforesaid bonds, but in no event shall more than par and accrued interest be paid therefor.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not deny that at all, Mr. President. That is exactly as I stated it was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to ask the Senator from Alabama whether he has yielded the floor?

Mr. HEFLIN. He has not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognized the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me to ask a question?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to ask the Senator from Utah who owns these bonds, and what was paid for them by the owners?

Mr. SMOOT. That I can not tell. I can not say who owns the bonds now. I know that British subjects own some, French subjects some, and some were owned in Germany; but I do not know what became of the German bonds.

Mr. McKELLAR. None of these American bankers own them?

Mr. SMOOT. Not a dollar of these bonds—this $1,500,000 of bonds.

Mr. McKELLAR. If they do not own the bonds, why are they named as the owners in the proposed agreement?

Mr. SMOOT. Because they may have a small amount of the $58,000. I do not know what the amount is.

Mr. McKELLAR. Should not the State Department furnish us the information?

Mr. SMOOT. The State Department has furnished us a statement of the total amount—$58,000. That is the amount that comes to America.

Mr. SIMMONS. Why is it stated, I will ask the Senator from Utah—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to advise the Senator from Alabama that he can not yield for an argument between other Senators.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

Mr. HEFLIN. I gladly yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I simply desire to ask the Senator from Utah why, if these New York bankers have no interest in this, the agreement states that it is made for themselves and as agents?

Mr. SMOOT. They may have a small amount of this $58,000. I do not know what amount they hold, but the State Department says $58,000 of the total amount is owing in the United States. The original issue of $1,500,000 of the bonds was taken in Europe entirely, and the bonds are owned there to-day.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the debate which has been going on between Senators discloses a situation very mystifying indeed. The Senate does not know yet who owns these debts. The State Department says that $58,000 is owed to people in the United States, so far as the State Department knows. The Senator from Utah himself does not know what interest the National City Bank of New York has in these bonds, or how much commission that bank will get as the agent of the British interests and French interests for collecting this debt. So an agency in New York, having in charge this Liberian matter, is coming to the Senate of the United States to collect a debt due by the people of Liberia to various foreign powers. We do not know how much the debt is. We do know, under the facts which have been submitted, that this Government is under no moral obligation whatever to make this loan to Liberia.

Under the administration of President Wilson this Government offered to aid Liberia under certain conditions. Liberia was to do certain things. Liberia did not do any of those things, and when that administration went out of office and the war was over all that was connected with it was out of date and not binding in any way whatever upon the people of the United States, and I think it amounts nearly to a public scandal that the Congress of the United States is now solemnly about to go on record as favoring taking out of the Public Treasury $5,000,000 of the taxpayers' money and paying off obligations to New York and to foreign interests, when the people in America to-day are in distress and can not get money enough to carry on their own business at home.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] has called attention to the fact that there are farmers all over the country who have not been able to pay their taxes for last year, much less this year, and Senators are standing here now about to go upon record as voting to appropriate $5,000,000 to make a loan to the people of Liberia for no purpose on earth except to pay obligations to concerns abroad and in New York City.

It seems to me that Senators would have profited by what happened to them on the 7th of November, but it seems that the lame-duck brood still lingering in the Senate is to be called upon now in the little time that remains to them to vote $5,000,000 out of the Public Treasury to pay speculators in bonds and floating debts of various kinds in Liberia.

Mr. President, I do not believe any of those Senators who were up for election would have told their constituents before the 7th of November that they would vote for this Liberian loan. It is simply ridiculous. Why should this Government take $5,000,000 out of the Public Treasury and make this loan? What excuse is there for it?

Yesterday Senators were telling us that we ought to stay out of foreign affairs, and here you are going into the very Treasury of the people, the strong box of the Government, running your arm up to the armpit to take out millions to loan to Liberia, a foreign country, without any excuse or justification whatever. I can not understand why Senators would advocate such a thing.

I want to say just this before I sit down. There is no moral obligation on the part of the Government to make the loan. There is no excuse or justification in right principle for making the loan. There is nothing to be gained by it from the standpoint of public policy. It is unjust and unfair to do this thing. The American people need our attention. If Senators have not learned yet, they will learn in the next two years that the people are going to take hold of the Government for themselves. We are going to have a housecleaning at Washington. Instrumentalities that used to operate in behalf of the whole people have been taken hold of and are now being used in the interest of a few to the hurt and injury of the many, and we are going out after them to restore them to their rightful uses, and Senators who vote to-day to appropriate $5,000,000 to make this wildcat loan to Liberia are simply getting ready to join the list of those who on that side went down on the 7th day of November. They are going to have repudiation coming to them. The people ought to repudiate them. Why should the people not do so? This is their Government. If a representative for a business firm were to come back and report that he had done such a thing as is about to be done here with $5,000,000, that private business would kick him out before the sun went down. Here we are, intrusted with this power on the part of the people, solemnly taking an oath in this Chamber to safeguard the rights and interests of the people, and yet it is proposed here to take out of the Treasury $5,000,000 for the speculative interests of New York, to satisfy interests here and abroad who are trying to make a collecting agency of the Congress of the United States. Senators, you can not justify a vote in favor of this preposterous thing.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the necessity of this bill results from one of the legacies left us by the Democratic Party. If there were not a moral obligation on the part of the Government to advance the money to Liberia, I certainly would not support the measure and I can truthfully say that it would not be before this body for consideration.

I know of no better evidence as to whether there is a legal or moral obligation than that which has been given to Congress by the Secretary of State himself. I wish that every Senator would read the testimony given by the Secretary. I doubt whether there would be one who would question the existence of a moral obligation on the part of this Government.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, does the Senator mean the present Secretary of State or the former Secretary of State?

Mr. SMOOT. I mean the present Secretary of State.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. There is just one question, so far as I am concerned, and that is the question as to whether or not there is a moral obligation. I am not persuaded either way so far as that particular question is concerned. I tried to get a copy of the hearings, but I am advised that they are not available, being out of print.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that is true. I this morning obtained the file copies of the State Department and have them here on my desk.

Mr. POMERENE. I make this statement as leading up to a suggestion. As that seems to be the point about which the dispute exists, would it not be well to have the bill recommitted, so we could have a reprint of the hearings and give us an opportunity to investigate the subject?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; I do not think so.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator allow me to ask a further question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SIMMONS. I simply want to state to the Senator from Ohio that I intend at a later time to make a motion to recommit the joint resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Ohio for a question.

Mr. POMERENE. Did the Finance Committee of the Senate have any hearings?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not believe any hearings were had before the Finance Committee. We relied upon the hearings which were held before the committee of the House.

Mr. POMERENE. My information was that there were no hearings.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there were any hearings before the Finance Committee of the Senate.

I believe that I had better read a letter signed by Charles E. Hughes, Secretary of State, and directed to the President, dated July 29, 1921, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 29, 1921.

The PRESIDENT:

I beg to submit the following considerations with respect to the proposed loan to the Republic of Liberia:

An examination of the course of the negotiations produces the conviction that commitments have been made by this Government which imposes a moral obligation to make the loan. The negotiations were had and proceeded to the point of an announced commitment at a time when the broad authority conferred in connection with the prosecution of the war was adequate to the consummation of the plan, and the fact that this authority may not be deemed longer to exist, while making it impossible to proceed without congressional sanction, does not, in my judgment, change the fact that assurances were given which should be made good.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him at that point?

Mr. SMOOT. Had I not better read the letter through first?

Mr. POMERENE. Very well.

Mr. SMOOT. That would be the better way.

The history of the negotiations, as they appear from the information at my command, may be stated as follows:

Liberia being at war with the enemies of the United States, a loan credit of $5,000,000 was extended by the Secretary of the Treasury on September 9, 1918, under the authority of the act of April 24, 1917, "to authorize an issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend credits to foreign governments, and for other purposes." On September 12, 1918, the Government of Liberia was notified of the opening of this credit and negotiations were initiated covering the terms, service, and general purposes of the loan. The loan plan drawn up was intended to safeguard the money so advanced by American administration of expenditures and collection of revenues, and also to provide for repayments of all moneys due other foreign creditors. * * * The Governments interested were advised of the opening of this credit. The loan plan for various reasons was not submitted to the Liberian Government until June 15, 1920, and the Liberian Legislature requested certain modifications. It was clearly understood both by the Liberian Government and by the Government of the United States at that time that there was no question of a withdrawal of the offer of the money already promised, the time when the credit should be made available merely depending on a satisfactory agreement as to details of administration.

Remember, Senators, that was taken up on June 15, 1920.

Relying on the assurance that the United States was ready to enter into a definite agreement, the President of Liberia came to Washington some time ago with other plenipotentiaries to conclude the negotiations. In anticipation of this journey and at the request of this Government, the Liberian Government gave to him and his associates full and necessary authority to conclude the loan plan, and since that time it is understood they have been prepared to sign an agreement providing for the necessary administrative measures adequately to secure the loan.

It should also be pointed out, in appreciating the moral obligation of this Government, that the Republic of Liberia, which had her origin largely through the efforts of American citizens and at various times has sought the aid and counsel of this Government, decided, upon the entrance of the United States into the war, to make common cause with this country and the Allies against Germany. It was largely in consequence of this participation that the economic situation of Liberia was imperiled and that her Government was compelled to make appeal for financial aid. It was in these circumstances that Liberia was assured that the United States, her traditional friend, who had been generous in assistance to the other nations fighting against Germany, would come to her relief.

In view of these circumstances and of the obligation to which they give rise, to which we can not fail to be sensitive, I need not dwell upon the fact that the extension of this loan is highly important from the standpoint of the proper protection and promotion of American commercial interests on the West Coast of Africa. The advantages which will accrue to our people are not to be ignored, although in the presence of the considerations already mentioned they need not be detailed or stressed.

In conclusion, permit me to observe that, apart from any question of our obligation or of any benefits accruing to ourselves, our people have always been especially interested in the welfare of Liberia because of the close relation which its prosperity may be deemed to have to all that pertains to the advancement of the Negro race. The Republic of Liberia has been fostered through American interest, and at this critical time in her history we have opportunity to give a practical expression of our continued solicitude and by coming to her aid in this severe exigency to promote permanent relations of the closest friendship.

Respectfully,

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

The President,
The White House.

Now, Mr. President, unless the Senate wants me to read it, I shall merely ask to have placed in the RECORD a statement of the Secretary of State of date April 19, 1922, before the Ways and Means Committee of the House, in which he gives in detail the situation just as it exists. In that statement he not only takes the position that there is a moral obligation, but, after reciting what led up to the loan, he made this statement:

It was exercised, and I make bold to say to this committee that I do not think there is any question of legal authority that would survive the analysis of argument before any judicial tribunal.

He does not hesitate to say in his testimony and in his letter that there was a moral obligation, and he expresses the opinion that the transaction went so far that any judicial tribunal would hold that it was a legal obligation.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. GLASS. May I ask the Senator what the Secretary of State meant, then, if he had the legal authority to do it, by saying that he could not make the loan without congressional action?

Mr. SMOOT. He does not say the legal authority at the present time.

Mr. GLASS. But the Senator is saying for him that he suggests that he had the legal authority to do it.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; up to the time peace was declared with Germany, and after that he did not have the legal authority. I call the Senator's attention to the fact in his statement the Secretary said that for that reason he has to come to Congress and ask authority; but if he had taken action before peace had been declared with Germany and Austria-Hungary the Secretary said there was a legal right to advance the money.

Mr. GLASS. As a matter of fact, it has not been established here and it can not be established anywhere that there was any legal authority to make loans to fund the indebtedness of Liberia. The only legal authority that has ever existed for this Government to make any loan to any foreign nation was to make loans for the prosecution of the war and for the consummation of the security of this Government.

Mr. SMOOT. And that was what they decided to do, not this administration but the preceding administration, and this administration is carrying out that agreement.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. I have listened very closely to the reading of the letter of the eminent Secretary of State. I have very great respect for his opinion, but I think I can fairly conclude that his opinion is based upon some facts or information that he may have which may not be fully detailed in that letter. I call attention to that for the purpose of strengthening the point I made a moment ago; that it seems to me under all of the circumstances the further consideration of this joint resolution should be postponed until we can have an opportunity to read that record. I hesitate about voting these foreign loans, while at the same time I am pretty jealous of our moral obligations and the duty that we may have under them. If I were called upon to vote now, my vote certainly would not be satisfactory to me, whichever way I should vote.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that here, for instance, is a portion of a statement which I expect to put into the RECORD:

Now, what is the basis of a moral obligation? I take it to be a promise on which another has acted. We told the Liberian Government that, assuming that the proper provisions for the protection of the loan were provided, this credit was open.

We went further than that. And now I must refer to a confidential paper which I hope will not be put upon the minutes, but which I think you should closely study, and which is found on page 58 of the confidential print.

After further discussion, that was decided not to be printed in his testimony.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, like the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], I listened attentively to the reading of the letter, because I was curious to know how it came about that, although this loan was authorized in the month of October, 1918, upon certain conditions to be observed with respect to its repayment and application, and so on and so forth, it never has been consummated, but was held in abeyance until the treaty of peace with Germany was signed.

I suppose that the advances were not made and the loan was not actually consummated because, not unlikely, the conditions respecting the repayment of the loan and the security and that kind of thing were not complied with.

I did not observe from the reading of the letter exactly what those conditions were and exactly what had been done or what had been omitted to be done with respect to the observance of those conditions. Nor are we advised now, so far as I know, that the terms and conditions have even yet been complied with so that the security which was demanded in October, 1918, has been provided.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought that I could turn to the statement which was made by the Secretary of State in which he outlined some of the reasons why action had not been taken even by the former administration. Mr. President, I now ask that the statement of Hon. Charles Evans Hughes, Secretary of State, which was made before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives on April 19, 1922, be printed in the RECORD. The copy which I hold in my hand is a file copy, and I shall have to ask the official reporters to be sure to return it to me, because I have to return it to the State Department.

Mr. POMERENE. As I understand, the Senator refers to a file copy of the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives.

Mr. SMOOT. It is a file copy of the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the statement referred to by the Senator from Utah will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement is as follows:

[From hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives, on House Joint Resolution 270, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States for the Government of Liberia, April 19, 1922, part 2.]

CREDIT FOR GOVERNMENT OF LIBERIA.

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Wednesday, April 19, 1922.

The committee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m., Hon. Joseph W. Fordney (chairman) presiding.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen of the committee, the Secretary of State is here this morning and has said that he wishes to get away as soon as convenient.

Mr. Secretary, the committee has before it the resolution providing for a loan to the Liberian Government. Certain gentlemen of the committee would like to hear your statement as to why the loan should be made.

STATEMENT OF HON. CHARLES EVANS HUGHES, SECRETARY OF STATE.

Secretary HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I thank you for the opportunity of appearing here and to state the considerations which I think ought to prompt us to make this loan to the Republic of Liberia.

I shall greatly appreciate it if you will permit me to make a consecutive statement, which will only take a few minutes, and then I shall be glad to answer any questions which any members of the committee may desire to put.

There are several considerations which seem to me to support the making of this loan. There is the consideration of the good faith and moral obligation as a consideration of this Government. There is the further consideration of our historical relation to the people of Liberia, and there is also the consideration of the national interests which are involved.

These various points of view are not wholly independent, and they are not to be considered in a way entirely separate from each other. They are all important.

The consideration of primary importance, as it seems to me, is the one I mentioned first. I think it a point of honor that this loan should be made, and I shall briefly endeavor to explain why I think that the question of primary importance—that is to say, the moral obligation of the United States—is involved.

In September, 1918, the executive department of the Government, acting under the authority of the second Liberty loan act, informed the Republic of Liberia that a credit of $5,000,000 was opened in its favor.

I shall not go into any lengthy discussion of the question whether that action was authorized under the terms of the second Liberty loan act. I am speaking now not of the legal obligation but of a moral obligation, and I take it that the facts which underlie that obligation are not in dispute.

I may say this, however, as to the authority under the act: The act provided that the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, for the purpose of more efficiently providing for the national security and defense in the prosecution of the war, was authorized to establish credits with the United States for any foreign government then engaged in war with the enemies of the United States.

Liberia had entered the war, you might say, at the instance of the United States, and came within the description of these governments. Liberia had greatly suffered by reason of her relation to the war.

I notice from a perusal of the hearings that there has been a good deal of discussion in the committee upon that point. I shall not, for that reason, review the matter.

The authority conferred upon the President was a very broad one, and in time of war was not to be rigidly or strictly construed as to what it was intended to be.

I was here in the summer of 1918. I know the tension of that time. I know that through the summer of 1918 there was the greatest fear that the war would be won by the Central Powers. I know this Government was going to the extreme of expedition in providing every possible resource. There is one consideration alone which, from my point of view, justified the President in this action, and puts aside any legal question. Liberia is a great producer of palm oil, and palm oil is essential in the manufacture of munitions. Palm oil is of great importance in connection with the tin-plate industry, and in connection with the soap industry, and a by-product of that industry is important in the making of munitions; and no court in this country would have considered for a moment, in my judgment, any question of lack of authority on the part of the President of the United States to support the Republic of Liberia as an ally in this war, and to make arrangements to secure to the Allies access to that great source of necessary war supplies.

There is not any reason now, in my opinion, why we should consider this was wise or that was wise. This was a matter of discretion vested in the only one to whom, in time of emergency, it is practicable that this broad discretion can be given under our system of government.

It was given. It was exercised, and I make bold to say to this committee that I do not think that there is any question of legal authority that would survive an analysis or argument before any judicial tribunal.

Of course, you will understand, Mr. Chairman; I have no personal interest in this. I am speaking here merely from the conviction that has been produced from my study of the subject.

Now, what was done, however, quite apart from any legal consideration was this: On August 14, 1918, as you will find on page 114 of the hearings, President Wilson stated to the Secretary of State, referring to this loan of $5,000,000, that he was in sympathy with the representation which had been made. On August 27, 1918, the Treasury Department informed the Secretary of State that the President had approved the establishment of credit in favor of the Liberian Government in the amount of $5,000,000.

Further formal communication was made on September 9, 1918, to the Secretary of State by the Treasury Department to the same effect. On September 12, 1918, the Secretary of State directed the legation at Monrovia, Liberia, to inform the Liberian Government of the establishment of that credit.

Now, what is the basis of a moral obligation? I take it to be a promise on which another has acted. We told the Liberian Government that, assuming that the proper provisions for the protection of the loan were provided, this credit was open.

We went further than that. And now I must refer to a confidential paper which I hope will not be put upon the minutes, but which I think you should closely study, and which is found on page 58 of the confidential print. [After further discussion off the record.]

A plan was proposed to the Liberian Government which carried the provision for the supervision and handling of this loan. I may say here, incidentally, that this Government has tried to be very careful in the protection of the interests of the Government in case this loan were made, to see that adequate security was obtained and that the repayment of the loan would be properly assured.

The Liberian Government did not like the terms of that plan, and made certain objections. That was within their competency. Because we had offered to grant the loan did not mean that they had to submit to anything that was proposed, and there was correspondence on the point—insistence on one side and opposition on the other side. They did not think that the plan was a fair one. The result was that President King, of Liberia, with a justice of his supreme court and one or two others, came as a special commission to this country to see if they could work out a suitable plan, and I think they arrived just about the time of President Harding's inauguration. It fell to my lot to look into this matter. I considered it, reviewed what had been done, and I came to the conclusion that as we had notified Liberia that this credit was open, as we had asked the British and French to retire and to make no further plans, and assured them that we had an American program here and did not want or desire anything to stand in the way of carrying out that American program, after Liberia had lost her reasonable opportunities in the meantime to enter into negotiations with others, it was our duty to go ahead and make our word good. I thought that to default on one's word in such case would be regarded among business men in private affairs as very sharp practice, and I felt that it was our duty to go ahead, and I so informed the President. I went over the matter with him.

The result was that this matter was taken up by the present administration. Now, there came about this difficulty: Of course, the war being over, considerable time having elapsed, there was no disposition in Congress to make foreign loans, and there had been many speeches, if my memory serves me correctly, in debates upon the floor, indicating antagonism to any further credit to foreign powers. Further than that, what is more important, was that the second Liberty loan act, as amended, put a certain date of termination upon the credits under the act. I refer to the provisions of the amending act, approved April 4, 1918, that the authority granted by this act to the Secretary of the Treasury to establish credits for foreign governments shall cease upon the termination of the war between the United States and the Imperial German Government.

You remember the resolution of March, 1921, and the proclamation made by the President, if I recall the date correctly, July 2, 1921, and it was my opinion that the foundation for a legal authorization had fallen, and that there should be an authorization by Congress; that that was the only safe way to proceed. I do not think that any executive officer after that situation had been created could safely take the responsibility of either advising or paying any money under the original act, regardless of the fact the credit had been opened in the way I have stated. That, however, did not affect the practical situation at all, and I am not now dealing with the legal question. The legal basis, as to this authority, was gone, but the fact is we had told Liberia she could have the money, and told other governments that we were going to let Liberia have the money, and if that legal basis had not failed, that money would have been put up.

Now, I may come to the second consideration, as I wish to pass very briefly over these matters—our general interest in Liberia. This is one point upon which President Roosevelt, President Taft, President Wilson, and President Harding have agreed. There ought to be some presumption in favor of a view which has such an extraordinary concurrence.

In 1909, at the time of the appointment of the commission to investigate matters in Liberia, Mr. Roosevelt, then President, speaks of our historic relation to, and interest in, the welfare of that country.

Then, Mr. Taft, a little later, said the same thing. It was upon that basis, in connection with the relation of Liberia to the war, that President Wilson directed the Secretary of the Treasury to open this credit. The same consideration appealed to President Harding when he reviewed the circumstances.

We have a very deep interest in the welfare of that Republic.

Now, as to the loan plans: I notice in the hearings that there was some discussion about—at least, it seemed to breathe through the pores of the record—that there was some idea that bankers were back of this, that somebody wanted to get their bonds paid off. There is absolutely nothing in that. I have not had a communication in the last year, since I have been dealing with this matter, from a banker or from anyone interested in bonds.

The truth of the matter is this: These bonds are held, the outstanding bonds, amounting to probably $1,500,000, which are to be retired under this plan—and I will speak in a moment of the reason for retiring them—they are not held by Americans or by anybody that would be interested in the influencing of this Government. I understand that there are about $58,000 of the total of $1,500,000 held in this country.

Mr. MILLS. I got the figures in New York, and there it is estimated that they are $10,000.

Secretary HUGHES. I know, and I was going to say in a moment that that was my personal information, that it was only about $10,000; but my record information, the only thing that I am entitled to state to this committee, is that it is approximately $58,000. Personally, I believe it to be much less.

There is a considerable amount held in England; a considerable amount held in Holland; a considerable amount held in Germany; widely distributed among private investors.

It is quite obvious that we can not as a Nation enter into the plan with respect to Liberia and be in the position of a second mortgage. We can not go into that and leave this so-called international receivership outstanding. If we go into it, we should go in and clean up the outstanding loans; that is, go in just as any business man would go into an enterprise of that sort with his rights secured by a first lien and with nobody to question his supervision, because it is important that there should be very close supervision there.

If I may say to the committee, I do not think that the provisions we have put into this agreement to secure us ought to be less effective than they are. Those provisions make sure that everything will be done in the way of supervision which will be necessary to secure the results we want to see obtained, and I do not think that provisions of the agreement go beyond that. I hope you will think it is adequate for that, but we can not afford to go in without cleaning up the loans that are already outstanding and have the others withdrawn from the participation in the existing receivership and have a new organization of Americans designated by the United States, appointed, of course, by the President of Liberia, who will have the sole supervision.

Now, of course, I do not think that the margin is very great between what these bonds are held at in the market and what will be paid for them at par under this plan. That sort of thing is inevitable, but it does not mean that there has been any attempt to influence this transaction or that anybody else has had anything to do with this plan for their personal advantage.

Nothing has arisen or come to the attention of the State Department of that sort in any way, shape, or form. This is a business proposition. I feel that we should make this loan.

We should not make this loan unless we go in there with a first lien adequately protected. We can not get that unless we pay the others off.

I also wish to say this, that to which I have already adverted, I will say for the record that the consequences of a failure to give this authority, from my point of view, which, of course, with all deference, I merely submit for your consideration, would be lamentable in the first place with respect to the position of the United States before the world, not only before Liberia, but before the world.

Next, it would be most lamentable for Liberia and, third, it would forfeit to the United States an opportunity which ought not to be held as the chief motive in entering into this enterprise, but which we can very properly consider an opportunity which confers without prejudice to the interests of the people of Liberia certain natural advantages from the association which the making of this loan would create.

I thank you very much for permitting me to come before you.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any members of the committee that desire to ask the Secretary any questions?

Mr. FREAR. I should like to ask a couple of questions, which you may answer outside the record if you care to do so. And I think it is proper to say that we will accept your opinion above that of anyone else upon this question.

From September, 1918, to November, 1920, the time that the loan was withdrawn by the Government, a period of over two years, could you tell the committee what occurred in reference to this credit during that time? The record does not seem to indicate fully, and I thought possibly you had the information.

Secretary HUGHES. During the first year of that period you will find what took place stated in Secretary Lansing's letter, which is a confidential communication, which I read.

Mr. FREAR. That is the one you read to the committee?

Secretary HUGHES. Yes; he states what had been done during that time. Then a plan was developed and submitted to Liberia. That was discussed by them, and they were opposed to it. That took the remaining period to which you refer.

Mr. FREAR. That is, during two years?

Secretary HUGHES. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. There is one other question that occurs to me. One and a half million dollars of the amount to be loaned will practically cover the liability of Liberia. They have founded this claim on the agreement of the President during the war to extend a credit of $5,000,000. At this time what is the necessity for extending a credit of $5,000,000 unless Liberia has been put to some disadvantage by reason of the credit, in view of the fact that only $1,500,000 will cover their indebtedness? Of course, some additional amount, I assume, will be necessary; but why place the amount at $5,000,000?

Secretary HUGHES. Well, there is a reason for the loan being in excess of the $1,500,000, and this is the reason: We are not obliged, and the United States should not desire, to make this loan merely to take up the other loans. That is only a condition precedent, and it is a necessary preliminary to undertaking the thing that has to be done. The loan is for the purpose of resuscitating Liberia. They have not got their public works, their roads, and can not develop their resources. They largely lost, during the war, their trade. They were impoverished. We would not make any loan at all to them, as a business proposition, until we could see that there would be resources developed, and that sufficient resources would be developed to give reasonable results.

Now, of course, as I explained a moment ago, the payment of this first loan, the existing loan, is necessary to get into position to help them. The question is, how much money is needed after they get in that position to accomplish results?

We have studied the general proposition—

Mr. FREAR (interposing). I was going to say that the committee has read the general purposes contained in the report. There is one other question that I want to ask. What would be the effect of this proposition as a precedent for claims upon the Government for loans by other Governments?

Secretary HUGHES. I do not know of any case like this. I do not know of any case for which this would be a precedent. I think that our relations with Liberia are such, and we have offered to loan them under such circumstances, that in view of the present difficulty and of what we have told other Governments there has been created a unique situation. I think that I know the relations of the United States to every other Government, and I do not think that there is one which this would furnish a precedent by which we could be called upon to make another loan.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask one question in connection with those of Mr. FREAR?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. I judge from your statement that you did not consider, Mr. Secretary, the fact that Liberia declined the conditions made by Secretary Lansing in 1918 or 1919, and the fact that she declined those conditions, would in any way renew our moral obligations?

Secretary HUGHES. No; that declination was immediately followed by the resumption of negotiations to secure other terms. We continued in treaty with her.

Mr. TREADWAY. It did not conclude the agreement President Wilson made to make the loan?

Secretary HUGHES. Oh, no. It merely led to their sending a commission, sending their President over here to thrash out these difficulties, and in that way succeed. And we have gotten their signature to a more comprehensive plan at the present time than before. Of course, we were governed somewhat in that by the conditions that intervened. But the negotiations continued.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Secretary, when did Liberia enter the war?

Secretary HUGHES. In 1917. I have forgotten the time—August, I think.

Mr. GARNER. August, 1917?

Secretary HUGHES. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. Was it not 1918, Mr. Secretary?

Secretary HUGHES. No; I think it was 1917.

Mr. GARNER. And this credit was created then?

Secretary HUGHES. In 1918.

Mr. GARNER. This loan was authorized in 1918?

Secretary HUGHES. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Liberia's interest in this war was really to benefit Liberia, was it not?

Secretary HUGHES. Well, I should think that one would have to be a very close judge of benefits and disadvantages in order to pass judgment upon that. I should say that Liberia was in a terrible plight, and we wanted her cut off from the Central Powers; we wanted her cut off from any opportunity of their utilization of its resources in carrying on the war.

Mr. GARNER. Well, when Liberia declared war she was in a very precarious condition with reference to trade matters?

Secretary HUGHES. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. And she entered the war and thereby got the benefit of having the Allies purchase her palm oil and other necessary articles?

Secretary HUGHES. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. But she did not contribute either men or money to the Allies for the conduct of the war?

Secretary HUGHES. Her contribution was that the Germans were shipped out of the country. The Allies had a complete opportunity for utilization of her resources. She was absolutely denuded from the standpoint of resources and revenue, and in that plight some help was necessary, and the United States said, "We will give it." Then we said to Great Britain and France, "Now, we are going to handle this," and then long negotiations resulted by which that arrangement was made.

The conditions to which you refer were the conditions which led to the United States pledging its credit.

Mr. GARNER. I merely want to get the idea of our moral obligation. I think you will agree, probably, that the purpose of Congress at the time they authorized the loaning of money to the foreign countries was that they might contribute to the success of the war.

Secretary HUGHES. Well, Liberia did.

Mr. GARNER. And giving money at this time to the development of the Republic of Liberia undoubtedly will not contribute to the success of the war.

Secretary HUGHES. If you will look at the matter from the standpoint of August, 1918, consider the condition that we were in then, the control of the resources of Liberia could be regarded as just as essential to the effective prosecution of the war as that which attended the development of a railway to reach spruce out at Olympia, or anything else that was done.

Indeed, anybody looking at the situation then with regard to the manufacture of munitions and not knowing when the war would terminate would very naturally have reached the conclusion that was reached. It was not a question at all whether Liberia could furnish men, but that was a strategic point. That was a place with resources which should be conserved for the benefit of the allied arms.

Now, may I say that on the question of legal authority on the part of the President, Mr. Wilson, it is necessary merely to find whether that was a possible point of view on his part, and not whether it was the point of view of anyone else.

Mr. GARNER. Well, admitting that he had the legal right—and whether he had or not he assumed that legal obligation, that right, when he authorized the loan—but the Treasury Department was in such doubt about it that the Secretary asked the President to give special authority?

Secretary HUGHES. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Indicating that there was some doubt. Anyway, the Treasury did not want to take that responsibility.

Secretary HUGHES. Well, the President did take it.

Mr. GARNER. Yes, Mr. Secretary. Do you consider the correspondence in your office in the matter of making loans to foreign governments a moral obligation on the part of Congress?

Secretary HUGHES. I consider the direction of the President of the United States and the act of the Secretary of the Treasury authorizing the Secretary of State to inform foreign governments of the opening of the credit, and the action in reliance upon that, created the highest possible moral obligation, certainly when that action was taken under an act of Congress which had given that authority.

Mr. GARNER. In other words, if your office should negotiate with foreign governments with reference to a loan to any particular government, you would consider that a moral obligation on the part of Congress to appropriate the money?

Secretary HUGHES. That is as far from what I said as the east is from the west. I said nothing which would permit of such an inference, with all deference. I was considering a case where the President had acted under the authority of Congress, believing undoubtedly he had authority to act, authority couched in general terms; and I think that he certainly felt that he was basing his judgment upon the fact that the action was needed, and, after the Secretary of the Treasury had also acted under that authority, under the same authority of Congress, and the Secretary of State had communicated this to foreign governments, this action authorized by our own legislation in time of war created a moral obligation to make the promise good.

Now, that is as far from any suggestion that we can create an obligation by negotiating loans—which, by the way, we do not undertake—that I would not discuss it.

Mr. GARNER. You base your statement upon the moral obligation that the loan was already authorized, the lending of this $5,000,000, in 1918?

Secretary HUGHES. Well, I would say that I base it upon that and the fact that it was communicated and relied upon and was an announced program to other governments and was the basis on which they withdrew from negotiations.

There is nothing like it in any other case.

Mr. GARNER. If the Congress should disagree with the President as to his legal authority to make this loan, would the Congress then be morally bound?

Secretary HUGHES. The Congress must be its own judge of its moral obligations.

Mr. GARNER. Well, you stated, and if you were a Member of Congress—I will put it very clearly—if a Member of Congress investigated this matter and came to the conclusion that the President was not authorized under the Liberty loan act to order this credit of $5,000,000 to Liberia, would he be morally bound to support this bill?

Secretary HUGHES. Well, I do not think that his conviction as to the lack of authority of the President could in any way dispose of the question of moral obligation. He would first have to consider whether that was merely arbitrary action on the part of the President or whether he believed that it was taken in good faith, assuming that authority existed. He would have to consider whether there was a reasonable basis for that judgment on the part of the President. He would necessarily have to consider the light in which this country would be placed when this country, through its President and its executive officers, had acted and communicated that action through diplomatic channels to the other Governments, and he would be presumed to know that a question of legal right and a question of moral duty are not the same.

Of course, you can never settle a question of moral duty by a mere question of legal right. If you could, there would be no distinction between a legal and moral obligation.

We are dealing here in a forum of honor. Now, in that forum you have nothing to guide you but your individual conscience, as I think you appreciate.

I submit that these are my convictions, and that this is a point of honor. I can do no more than state it.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Secretary, from your study of the record, do you think that when President Wilson acted in creating the $5,000,000 loan it was for war purposes only, or do you think that it was for the payment of these indebtednesses which had been incurred before, and for exploitation as well as the conduct of the war?

Secretary HUGHES. I do not think that it had anything to do with the payment of existing indebtedness, except as that was a necessary preliminary to giving the help which he thought ought to be given.

Mr. FREAR. You think that it had nothing to do with the proposed method of exploitation?

Secretary HUGHES. The loan—I think I should not use the word "exploitation," because that is a word which is susceptible of different meanings, a good and a bad—

Mr. FREAR. I mean the better.

Secretary HUGHES. I think that the President had in mind the economic rehabilitation of Liberia, but I do not think that the President is justified in loaning money on that alone, and it must be assumed, consequently, under our system of government, that he believed that that would be a very effective method of prosecuting the war. He tried to put it on a sound basis, and the mere fact that the money was to be used for the economic rehabilitation of a country which could be an effective ally would not detract from the authority to make the loan. But that, as I said a moment ago, is not the whole consideration when you come to look at the situation which has been created by the fact that the loan was authorized, that these negotiations were continued, and that we stand before the world as having promised this $5,000,000, of having said we would do this thing. We go ahead and proclaim to the rest of the world that we would help this country, in which we have said for generations that we had a special interest, and then, in the language of the street, we "duck" it.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Secretary, have you any figures as to the total amount of indebtedness of Liberia, bonded and floating, that this loan was to pay, such indebtedness having arisen even before the European war started?

Secretary HUGHES. I think that you will find those figures in this statement, in the record of the hearings, at page 47. You will find the various items of floating indebtedness, and, running over to page 48, you will find a list of small items. The total is $2,189,000, which I understand was the amount. This is the amount of the present indebtedness.

Then the rest of the purposes of the loan are indicated in the items stated below that.

Mr. CRISP. Now, Mr. Secretary, there is one other question. As I understand, the population of Liberia is partly civilized and partly uncivilized. How many are civilized?

Secretary HUGHES. About 60,000.

Mr. CRISP. Do you know how many others there are?

Secretary HUGHES. About 2,000,000 in all.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Secretary, I would like to get your opinion as to whether the terms upon which this loan is proposed are such as to reasonably assure us that it will be wisely spent for the proper development of Liberia.

Secretary HUGHES. Those things were all very carefully gone over in the State Department and then submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, and his letter reporting upon the plan is in the record of the hearings. It was gone over from the point of view of assuring to the utmost extent that we should have the necessary supervision; and, of course, while some of those features were not popular with the Liberians, we felt that when we came to this point we could not afford to be placed where we would not have the security which would protect us.

Mr. TILSON. Then, as to the repayment of the loan, do you regard the conditions upon which the loan is made are such as to justify us in the belief that this loan is a good loan in a business sense?

Secretary HUGHES. I think it will be; yes. I think it will be a good loan, both in the direct sense and in the indirect sense.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Has a contract been drawn up between our State Department and the Government of Liberia, giving the terms of the loan?

Secretary HUGHES. That is in the record.

Mr. OLDFIELD. That is in the record?

Secretary HUGHES. Yes, sir. Now, I will tell you what was done. When Mr. King, the President of Liberia, with his commission, was here, we had a plan prepared which you will find in the record of the hearings, beginning on page 124, a plan for this loan, and we had it signed up by the representatives of Liberia, subject to the approval of Congress; that is, subject to the authorization for making the loan, so that the thing is all done so far as they are concerned. They are committed, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. OLDFIELD. What is the date of that contract, if you have it there?

Secretary HUGHES. It is in the record. It was dated October last.

Mr. MILLS. They have never defaulted on any of their bonds, have they?

Secretary HUGHES. I think not.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Secretary, your judgment is that this is a matter that should be handled under contract with Liberia rather than with a treaty?

Secretary HUGHES. Yes, sir; it is a loan contract.

Mr. HAWLEY. Would we enter into such an arrangement with a larger country, like England—

Secretary HUGHES. We have.

Mr. HAWLEY. Where we would go into and develop the country and also take charge of their Government, so far as the collection of the taxes are concerned, in paying their employees as well as our own?

Secretary HUGHES. Those conditions, of course, do not apply in the case of other countries. We are going to do that in order to insure that they get the benefit of the loan and to meet a necessary situation, which, of course, would not exist elsewhere.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Secretary, there is just one other thing with reference to the practical question that the committee finds in the way of the passage of this bill. You spoke of the opposition in Congress to further loans. I feel somewhat like the State Department may have underrated that opposition. We had so much difficulty, even under the conditions which we presented in a most pitiful situation with reference to Austria, where we were not advancing a single cent or not releasing anything of any value to this country in the passage of that bill, that the committee feels very strongly this opposition.

Secretary HUGHES. I can well understand that; but, on the other hand, my duty and obligation end in presenting to the Congress through the committee what I believe to be the essential facts, and I can not bring myself to believe that under the circumstances of this particular and important situation Congress would not realize how deeply the honor and the good faith of the United States are involved.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentleman, if that is all—

Mr. CRISP (Interposing). Mr. Chairman, in view of the confidential nature of this subject, in the preparation of the record, when the proof is prepared I would suggest that it be submitted to the Secretary, and let him strike out such portions as he sees fit.

Secretary HUGHES. I thank you very much. Of course, I do not want to hold anything back from the Members of Congress, but many of these things got across the 3-mile limit.

Mr. CRISP. I understand that thoroughly.
(Whereupon the committee adjourned.)

ADDENDA.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, April 1, 1922.

Hon. JOSEPH W. FORDNEY,
Chairman Ways and Means Committee.

MY DEAR CHAIRMAN FORDNEY: I have just learned that the Ways and Means Committee has informally decided to defer action for a couple of weeks in dealing with the proposed loan to the Republic of Liberia. I most heartily approve of the thought of the committee to fully understand the uses to which the loan is to be applied, and it is quite proper that Congress should be assured that there is abundance of security. Surely this information can be given to the committee in the most satisfactory manner without great delay.

My understanding is that the committee was furnished by the State Department with full information as to what application of the funds the Government of Liberia desires to make. These purposes were approved by the State Department in its conferences with the Liberian Plenary Commission. There seems to be no doubt about the loan being perfectly safe as a financial proposition, and arrangements are agreed upon to make certain of the payment of interest and the redemption of the principal. If there is a lack of satisfactory information, I am sure the State Department would be more than pleased to make a speedy response to any inquiry on the part of the committee.

The simple truth about this loan situation is that our Government is unable to deal with the Republic of Liberia in that good faith which is becoming a great Republic like ours. This loan was pledged to the Republic of Liberia by the previous administration, and the funds would long since have been furnished that Government except for the delay incident to the making of arrangements to guarantee its wise expenditure and certain repayment. Pending these arrangements our Government has stood in the way of the grant of the loan by any other nation, and we find ourselves in the position of denying financial assistance from others and unable to keep faith in the pledges made for ourselves. I do not believe your committee or the Congress wishes to put the Government in this position. I wish you would place the matter before the committee, so that we may have the earliest possible decision.

Very truly yours,

WARREN G. HARDING.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 5, 1922.

MY DEAR MR. FORDNEY: I have received your letter of April 4, 1922, with reference to the resolution to grant a loan credit of $5,000,000 to Liberia, now before the Committee on Ways and Means, upon which action has been postponed.

It is very gratifying to learn that you are personally in favor of this loan and that at your request further consideration of the resolution was merely postponed for two weeks rather than indefinitely, as proposed in the committee.

The matter of granting this loan to Liberia is regarded as of such importance as to move me earnestly to urge the Committee on Ways and Means to take prompt favorable action on the resolution as soon as possible. I am fully convinced that this Government has made commitments which have placed it under a moral obligation to make this loan. The origin and nature of this obligation is, I feel, completely disclosed in the documents already transmitted to the committee and included with the printed hearings on this question.

It should not be forgotten that Liberia made common cause with this country and the Allies in the war against Germany, and largely as a result of this action so imperiled her economic situation that her Government was compelled to appeal for financial assistance. In response to this appeal a loan credit of $5,000,000 was extended by the Secretary of the Treasury on September 9, 1918, pursuant to an act of April 24, 1917, "to authorize an issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend credits to foreign governments, and for other purposes."

Because of unavoidable delay, a plan to control the application and administration of this credit was not submitted to the Liberian Government until June 15, 1920. Certain modifications were requested in this loan plan by the Liberian Legislature, but there was no question of the withdrawal of the offer of the money already promised, the time when the credit should be made available merely depending on satisfactory agreement as to details of administration.

Such an agreement was concluded on October 28, 1921, with the Liberian Plenary Commission, which came to Washington for that purpose. President King, of Liberia, was the head of this commission. The loan arrangement was laid before the Liberian Legislature at its last session by President King, and that body approved the plan without change on January 23, 1922. The terms of this loan plan are now publicly known in Liberia, and those European countries interested in Liberian affairs, as well as in the United States. While the broad authority conferred in connection with the prosecution of the war may have been considered adequate to the consummation of the plan, the fact that this authority may not be deemed longer to exist, although making it impossible to proceed without congressional sanction, does not alter the fact that assurances were given which should be fulfilled.

Failure to grant this credit would not only display an unfortunate indifference toward our moral obligation in the premises but also it would undoubtedly react disastrously upon the welfare of Liberia and reverse the policy of disinterested helpfulness which has characterized the attitude of this Government toward that Republic throughout its history.

The information furnished the committee as to the uses to which Liberia desires to put the loan is entirely reliable. These uses were determined by the Department of State in conjunction with the Liberian Plenary Commission after extended conferences. Every item was given careful consideration, and the proposed expenditures for public works were based on reliable estimates by competent American engineers.

The department is also satisfied that the loan is a sound financial venture and that the resources and revenues of the Republic under normal conditions and proper administration are adequate to meet the administrative expenses of the Government of Liberia as well as to carry the interest and repay the principal of this loan.

These observations are made with the hope that they may be serviceable to the committee in reaching a full understanding of this matter and facilitate action on the resolution.

Sincerely yours,

Hon. JOSEPH W. FORDNEY,
House of Representatives.

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 17, 1922.

MY DEAR MR. FORDNEY: Referring to my letter to you dated April 5, with regard to the urgency of the matter of reestablishing the $5,000,000 credit for the Government of Liberia, I have to advise you that the department has just received additional information by cable from President King of Liberia that, due to the prolonged delay in securing financial aid, a very serious financial crisis confronts the Republic.

I am also informed that the current financial arrangement under which the Government was being advanced sums for administrative expenses comes to an end this month on account of the exhaustion of the credit upon which it operated. The Government is therefore gravely embarrassed.

In view of these circumstances the President of Liberia has urgently requested this Government to make some definite expression as to when the financial assistance requested may be expected.

I am so thoroughly impressed that we should fulfill without further delay the moral obligation of this Government to reestablish the credit that it seems necessary to call these recent developments to the attention of the Committee on Ways and Means in keeping with your recent request for information. Unless prompt action is taken on the credit for Liberia, events seem sure shortly to develop into a situation with grave consequences for the Republic.

Any information you may be able to furnish me as to the progress the matter of granting this loan credit is making will be highly appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

Hon. JOSEPH W. FORDNEY,
House of Representatives.

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

Mr. POMERENE. I desire to ask the Senator from Utah a couple of other questions in regard to this matter. The agreement to which the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] referred a moment ago was made, as I recall, in October, 1918. The statement was made on yesterday that the Liberian Republic had no army or navy and that it had furnished no troops, as I recall. I drew the inference, therefore, that whatever was done with respect to this loan was for the purpose of securing the fund for purposes other than war purposes. The Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes, refers to the fact that the Liberian authorities, relying upon this conditional agreement, had made certain commitments. What were those commitments?

Mr. SMOOT. I think one of the commitments was that they should pay the obligations owing to foreign governments.

Mr. POMERENE. But many of those obligations were not yet due.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, yes; some of them were due; in fact, I think most of them were overdue.

Mr. POMERENE. But the statement which was read this morning indicated that some of those bonds will not be due until 1952.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true only as to a small part of them, I will say to the Senator from Ohio. The loans were made in 1912.

Mr. POMERENE. Then, it all resolves itself into this: The Liberian Government had a proposition from the United States Government to the effect that the United States would make a certain loan to the Liberian Government provided that Government complied with certain conditions, and those conditions have not yet been complied with. It would seem, from the statement which the Senator from Utah has made, that with this conditional proposition before them the Liberians went to some of their creditors and suggested that when they got this money they would pay.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Government of the United States took the position—and the Secretary of State so testified—that it would not advance any money to Liberia so long as Liberia owed debts to any foreign countries. We must remember that as soon as Liberia declared war against Germany the German submarines attacked the Liberian ports. Prior to her declaration of war nearly all of the business of Liberia was done with Germany. Nine of the leading institutions in Liberia were operated by Germans. Liberia's whole trade, outside of the little carried on with England, France, and the very little with the United States, was transacted with Germany. Liberia declared war upon Germany. It is true that any navy that Liberia may have had and any army she may have put in the field had no effect upon the result of the war; but her position was such that at least the administration prior to the present one thought that it was the best of policy to have her declare war against Germany, and I myself think that declaration had a good effect upon the colored race in this country during the recent war.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Can the Senator tell us when Liberia declared war on Germany?

Mr. SMOOT. As I recall it was in August of 1917.

Mr. NORRIS. It was in August, 1917.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. So the transaction in regard to the loan occurred a year or more after Liberia had declared war.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; there is no doubt as to that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. So that Liberia was not induced to declare war by this arrangement at all.

Mr. SMOOT. Not by this arrangement, so far as I know; but the effect of her declaring war put her in a disadvantageous position so far as her former trade was concerned.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I not ask the Senator if, as a matter of fact, it did not put her in a very advantageous position?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it did not.

Mr. GLASS. The German fleet had been swept from the sea; the British fleet was dominant in all the waters of the earth; and had Liberia not declared war and had she undertaken to pursue any trade with Germany the British Navy would have interrupted that trade and would have destroyed it; so that when Liberia declared war she practically put herself under protection of Great Britain and the United States and opened the channels of trade.

Mr. SMOOT. The German submarines attacked Liberia's trade, and, as the Senator knows, her commerce fell off until it amounted to nothing to speak of; she was living within herself. Not only that, but her ports were bombarded by the submarines.

I wish to say further to the Senate that former President Theodore Roosevelt, former President Taft, and former President Wilson, in letters written by them, spoke of the advisability of this Government having close connection with Liberia; and, furthermore, I should like to say to the Senator from Ohio that it was very necessary for us to secure some of the products of Liberia found necessary during the war.

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. POMERENE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield; and if so, to whom? The Senator from Nebraska first addressed the Chair.

Mr. SMOOT. I will yield to the Senator from Nebraska, and then I will yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield to the Senator from Ohio, because my question does not pertain to this particular branch of the subject.

Mr. POMERENE. Mine does; and so I thank the Senator. The Senator from Utah has referred to letters written by former President Roosevelt, former President Taft, and former President Wilson. Did they in their letters have reference to this particular loan?

Mr. SMOOT. They did not have reference to this particular loan but to the advisability of close relations between the United States and Liberia.

Mr. POMERENE. They spoke generally of relations between the two countries?

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I said.

Mr. POMERENE. I would accept that view. However, I am not on the committee which has had the opportunity to study this question. I have listened to the opinion which has been expressed by the distinguished Secretary of State in declaring that there is a moral obligation, and I have heard expressed with equal positiveness the opinion of the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], a former Secretary of the Treasury, who usually informs himself before he expresses an opinion, that there is no such moral obligation. I can not, in view of these diametrically opposite opinions, come to a conclusion that is going to satisfy myself. I have come to the conclusion, however, that if a motion is made to recommit this bill I shall vote to recommit it, and I think that Senators ought to permit that to be done. If there is a moral obligation, I am going to vote for this loan; but I have got to be satisfied on that point.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that, so far as I am concerned, I feel in my very soul and being that there is a moral obligation on the part of the Government of the United States to Liberia to advance this money to her. If I, as an individual, were in the position of the Government and the same transaction had occurred between Liberia and myself, I would feel under a personal obligation to carry it out.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator will permit me, if I felt as he does, I should certainly vote for the joint resolution. On the other hand, if I felt as does the Senator from Virginia, I would vote against it; all of which indicates, it seems to me, the wisdom of having the joint resolution recommitted, so that Senators who want to investigate the question shall have an opportunity to read very carefully the entire record.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to ask the Senator a question as to another phase of the subject. I understand that there was advanced out of the Treasury of the United States $26,000 to pay the expenses of a delegation from Liberia to the peace conference. Is that to be repaid to our Government out of the proposed loan to Liberia?

Mr. SMOOT. Every indebtedness incurred by Liberia in relation to this loan is to be paid out of the money appropriated by the joint resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. Am I correct in my information that we did pay out of the Treasury of the United States the expenses of the Liberian delegation?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not tell the Senator whether that is the exact amount or not.

Mr. NORRIS. There was a delegation here from Liberia?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but I do not know—I can not say as to the amount our Government paid.

Mr. GLASS. The record shows it very clearly, Mr. President. The record shows that we paid $26,000 for the expenses of that delegation to the peace conference; and I have said, and I repeat, that it is the only commitment made by this Government that I think can not be justified.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will allow me, in the report sent up by the Treasury Department to the Judiciary Committee, containing all the data they had in the departments in reference to these foreign loans and commitments, there was this item for Liberia—$26,000, I believe. That was actually advanced to pay these expenses, and the Treasury Department so reported.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I said that I had not seen any papers in which it was stated positively that that advance was made; but, be that as it may, whatever advances have been made by the Government will come out of the $5,000,000 loan. There is no question about that.

Mr. President, yesterday the statement was made that this was simply a gift to the bankers in New York. I do not think a statement of that kind ought to be made upon the floor of the Senate. There is nothing to justify it. I feel just as positive as that I live that no such thing is ever going to happen. If this loan is made to Liberia, she will have to give a first mortgage, as it were, upon Liberia to the Government of the United States. No obligations will be left unpaid, and whatever there is over and above the obligations now owed by Liberia between the amount owing and the advance of $5,000,000 will be expended by Liberia, I think, in a way that will ultimately result in an increase in the commerce of the United States. While that need not be taken into consideration in deciding how we shall vote on this joint resolution, I think it is worthy at least of passing notice, and it is only carrying out the desires expressed by the last four Presidents of our country.

Therefore, Mr. President, apologizing to the Senate for occupying this length of time, I will close by simply saying that I hope this joint resolution will become a law.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am somewhat amazed and astounded that any Senator should oppose the granting of this paltry sum of $5,000,000 to Liberia for the great efforts she put forth and the great results she accomplished in winning the World War.

How soon we forget! Senators have forgotten, when we were in the midst of that terrible struggle and President Wilson was engaged in deliberations with the Liberian Government with a view to having them come in on our side, how we all held our breath and prayed that he would be successful. It was a stroke of genius on the part of our President when he undertook to perform this masterpiece of diplomacy by getting that great Government in on our side. We seem to have forgotten it, Mr. President. When those deliberations were going on, there were going up from all parts of our country hopes and prayers that he would be successful in those negotiations. The widow whose only son had volunteered to fight on foreign soil was praying that Liberia would come in. The banker in the countinghouse, in order that his bonds and obligations might be good, was hoping and wishing that President Wilson would be successful in convincing Liberia that our side of the cause was just. Not only was there great hope on the part of our people and all of our allies that Liberia would lend her wonderful power on our side, but there was great fear in the camp of the enemy that our President would succeed in getting Liberia in.

Liberia came in, Mr. President; and when she did there was great rejoicing everywhere. Everybody knew that the issues of the World War were practically settled. They knew that in no war in history had the Liberian hosts ever been defeated, or the Liberian Navy ever been conquered; and again the enemy shuddered with fear. The aim of the German soldier became less steady. The very foundations of the German Government began to shake in fear and trembling. The Kaiser himself turned from a dark brunette to a pale blond. His hair stood on end, and his mustache straightened out when Liberia entered the war. Rich and poor alike were rejoicing over that great accomplishment of statecraft that our President had brought about. Even the shepherd on the hills, with a heart full of rejoicing and joy, turned his face to the rising sun and cried aloud: "The world is made safe for democracy! Liberia has entered the war!"

She did not come in halfway. She put her entire army into the fray; she put her whole navy out against the German submarines; and it is a historical fact, Mr. President, that during that long and bitter struggle the banner of Liberia never once went down to defeat. Her soldiers were so well trained, her officers were so well equipped in military affairs, that never once was a Liberian soldier captured as a prisoner; and, Mr. President, within six months after she came into the war there was not a single, solitary German submarine in the rivers or the harbors of the great continent of Africa.

But Liberia did not stop at fighting the war. Her loyalty continued after it was over. She was at the peace conference at Versailles. It is true that at that time she was hard up; she did not have any money, and the expenses of that delegation were defrayed out of the Treasury of the United States.

Congress had not appropriated any money; Congress had not passed any act that authorized it; but, knowing the wonderful help and assistance that Liberia could be to America at that conference, President Wilson or some of his advisers took the money out of our strong box, sent it to Liberia, and paid their expenses—$26,000, Mr. President. I doubt whether our President would have succeeded in getting his League of Nations over there if it had not been for the assistance of those diplomats from Africa; and think of it, Mr. President—those dark-colored statesmen from Liberia in Paris with 26,000 good American dollars in their pockets! Ah, Mr. President, in this far-away, prohibition-afflicted land, it almost makes your mouth water; it almost gives me the hiccups, Mr. President, to talk about it.

But they were successful; and now, after all of this great assistance from this great country, they have come here and said: "We want our pound of flesh," and the cry is even made: "We can not afford it. It will increase taxation." Why, Mr. President, can we overlook such a little obligation as that when the results of their labors have been so great? Can we forget so soon that they brought certain success out of what might have been absolute failure and defeat? And are we going now to say that we will not pay them this little sum of $5,000,000?

It is true that we have some expenses at home. We have not yet paid our soldiers adjusted compensation, but our soldiers have been waiting a good while. They are used to it. They can wait a little longer. These Wall Street bankers who will get a large portion of this sum if we pay it have been waiting some time, and they can not wait any longer. There is but one course to take, it seems to me; and we ought without delay and without any hesitancy to pass this joint resolution and open up the Treasury of the United States to that great Government over in Africa that came to our relief when our Nation's very life was in danger.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read a motion which I desire now to lodge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the motion.

The reading clerk read as follows:

I move that the pending joint resolution be recommitted to the Committee on Finance, with instructions to said committee to report the same back to the Senate with all matter stricken therefrom except the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and agreed to, appropriating $20,000,000 for aid for Government reclamation projects, and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] relative to additional inspectors to carry out the provisions of the railroad safety appliance law of February 17, 1911.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I simply desire to say a few words in reference to some statements made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. CURTIS. I understand the motion of the Senator from North Carolina is not in order until after the third reading of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. The bill is in the Senate, I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Senate, but the Senate has not yet acted on the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. The Chair did not understand the Senator from North Carolina to make the motion at this time.

Mr. SIMMONS. I simply wished to lodge it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is what the Chair understood.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, in the remarks of the Senator from Utah he expressed the opinion that it was important to this country that we should have friendly and active trade relations with the little Republic of Liberia. He stressed the importance of that trade. He also said we had never enjoyed very much of it.

It is true, Mr. President, that Liberia seems to have pretty fair trade for a country of its size. It was brought to the attention of the Senate on yesterday that at one time, about the beginning of the war, the customs revenues of that Republic amounted to very nearly half a million dollars a year. Her indebtedness is small, and half a million dollars of revenue, with an indebtedness of probably less than $3,000,000, creates a financial situation as favorable, I think, as the financial situation of the United States at this time, so far as its relative obligations and revenues are concerned. Before the war the bonds of Liberia were selling at a fairly good price and are now selling at a fairly good price, so that, so far as her financial obligations to the balance of the world are concerned, Liberia is in no financial distress, certainly none calling for charitable consideration of a financial character from this country.

But what I desire to say with reference to the remarks of the Senator from Utah upon this subject is this: If this loan is to be treated as in the nature of inducement to Liberia to do business with us, to enter into trade relations with us, to cut aloof from Germany and other nations with which she has been heretofore chiefly dealing, it is the first time in the history of the United States, except when we raped the Treasury to pay Colombia $25,000,000 in order to secure her good will in trade, that the United States has ever gone into the business of purchasing with money good will and trade relationships with the other nations of the world.

I had hoped that the tragedy of Colombia would end the business of the United States buying its way into the markets of the world, but it seems that is to be revived in the case of Liberia.

An examination of the facts discloses one thing about which there can be no dispute. If we lend Liberia this money, thus enabling her to pay off and discharge all her obligations of whatever kind to all the world, to pay all of her floating indebtedness, all of her bonded indebtedness, and leave her something like $3,000,000 to be devoted to the improvement of her rivers and harbors and other transportation facilities, if we shall do that, we will place Liberia, by reason of our munificence, in a finer financial situation than that to-day enjoyed by any other country upon the face of the earth, including ourselves. The question to my mind is whether, with an indebtedness of over $20,000,000,000 pressing down upon the distressed people of this country, with a Treasury in such a state of depletion that we are unable, according to the President of the United States, to pay the soldiers who fought and won the Great War a small pittance in recognition of their services to their country, we have any right to call upon the Treasury, at a time when it is in financial straits, almost verging upon bankruptcy, to relieve Liberia or any other country of all its indebtedness, whenever or however incurred, and finance its requirements for transportation and other internal schemes of development.

Under these circumstances, unless, Mr. President, it can be shown that the United States is under a fast, binding legal obligation to do this, or under a compelling moral obligation to do it, a clear, undisputed, incontrovertible moral obligation to do it, I say, to thus tax the American people for these purposes would be a crime against a people who are to-day tax-ridden almost to the point of ruin.

Nobody questions that the Secretary of the Treasury said to these gentlemen representing the Liberian Government, "If you will do certain things, comply with certain requirements, the United States will extend you, for the purpose of the prosecution of the war, a credit of $5,000,000."

Upon any just and proper interpretation of what that commitment meant it must be admitted that that obligation did not live a day beyond the time of the final making of peace between this country and Germany. If it was a commitment that we were in honor bound to recognize, we were not in honor bound to recognize it except upon the happening of two conditions: First, the compliance by that country with the conditions and terms imposed by the Secretary of the Treasury; secondly, a compliance within the time limit.

Shall it be said that a commitment of that kind has no limitation of time, especially when the commitment is to accomplish a definite and a specific purpose? I contend that whatever obligation there was, therefore, that obligation expired when the purposes for which that obligation was entered into had expired and terminated, and did not live a day longer.

I want to make only one further observation. Administrative officers are in the habit, as the present Secretary of State has done in this case, of going forward and entering into agreements with foreign governments involving the expenditure of large sums of money on the part of the Government of the United States, and then coming to Congress and asking that Congress shall ratify and approve those commitments. If Congress shall fall into the practice, whenever one of these administrative officers has committed the Government, as it is contended the Government was committed in this case, of saying, because an administrative officer has made a commitment, that we are under a moral obligation to see that the thing which he has agreed to do is done and the Congress must sanction it, we shall establish in this country a practice of the most dangerous character, and for that reason I do not want to see any such practice established. I want it distinctly understood, when an administrative officer makes an agreement or an understanding that he is not authorized by the law to make, that he does not by that act obligate the Congress of the United States to its ratification; that it comes to us to be determined and decided upon its merits, and not upon the theory of some obligation.

Here we have an illustration of the danger of that proposition. The facts in this case are so vague, uncertain, and indefinite that men differ as to whether there was any commitment at all which was justified and warranted under the law, and whether that commitment created a moral obligation or not.

We have this joint resolution here and we have the insistence of its proponents that we shall pass it and appropriate the money without regard to the merits of the commitment and the transaction. That is the position of Senators on the other side. "Do not analyze the facts in this case. Do not bother yourselves about whether the loan ought to be made in the public interest or not. Do not trouble yourselves about any fact connected with the transaction, but blindly, and without the exercise or the approval of your judgment as to whether the thing is in the public interest, vote this enormous sum of money out of the pockets of the people." I do not wish us to be put in that position. I want it to be understood that whatever the obligation to which the administrative officers may seek to commit the Government, when it comes to the question of whether we shall approve of that or not, we shall not act upon any theory that we are compelled to do it, because it has been promised, without reference to the merits of the case or the authority to make the promise or commitment. I undertake to say that if the question were to be tried upon its merits, as it ought to be, I do not believe there are a half dozen Senators in the Chamber who, upon investigation of the facts, would have any doubt that the measure ought not to pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was not passing on that question. The Chair was simply suggesting that the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole have not yet been concurred in in the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand the motion is not in order until the amendments have been agreed to in the Senate. That is undoubtedly correct.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] called attention on yesterday to the fact that there were a whole lot of offices to be created in connection with the proposed loan. I have figured up the number, with the salaries. They are as follows: A financial commissioner, at $15,000 a year; a deputy financial commissioner, $10,000; an auditor, $6,000; 10 administrative assistants, at $4,000 each; 10 others, at $3,000 each; aggregating $101,000 a year, and the United States Government is to pay the money. That is, we are putting up the $5,000,000, and the $101,000 a year will be paid out of that money. It creates a nice junketing arrangement for quite a lot of fellows who will be appointed to office.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I call the attention of the Senator to the further fact that, as disclosed by the record, the revenues of the Liberian Government in 1921 amounted to $163,000. I imagine they have to spend some money for their own Government. After spending money for their own Government, I am wondering where they are going to get the money with which to pay these salaries. Of course, if the United States appoints the officers, it must pay them. Even if the Liberian Government is not able to pay them, of course the American Government has to pay them. So we find in addition to the $5,000,000 that we are putting a permanent charge upon the Treasury of the United States of over $100,000 a year, and as we know how these bureaus constantly grow, within a few years it will undoubtedly put a charge upon the Treasury of the United States of probably a quarter of a million dollars a year to pay salaries.

Mr. HEFLIN. I thank my friend from Tennessee for his suggestion.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. OWEN. I observe that the joint resolution has been amended so that the commission of $650,000, which it has been suggested will be due from the Liberian Government, shall not come out of the $5,000,000; but there appears to be no reason why the Liberian Government itself, if left in control of its own resources, should not use those resources to liquidate the indebtedness due under the contract of commission which has been suggested here.

Mr. HEFLIN. Absolutely. What right have we to say to them what they shall do with the $5,000,000 if we let them have it?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is proposed by the contract which they have that the New York creditors, who are made the preferred creditors, shall be paid direct by our Government, and our Government is directed to pay them.

Mr. OWEN. But after that has been done, I take it under the amendment adopted here to-day, no part of the $5,000,000 could be used to pay the $650,000 which was to be paid by Liberia under the proposed contract. But I do not know of any reason why the revenues of Liberia might not be used to liquidate the contract which has apparently been entered into. I do not see why we should not cause an examination to be made of the contract. I would like to see the contract. I want to know who is behind the measure and I want to know what is going to become of the $650,000. If there is such a contract in existence, if it is true that William H. Lewis, of Boston; Emmett J. Scott, of Washington; James A. Cobb, of Washington; Ernest Lyon, of Baltimore; and William L. Houston, of Washington, have a contract of this kind with the Liberian authorities, I think we have a right to know it.

Mr. HEFLIN. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. SMITH. What is the nature of the contract?

Mr. OWEN. That they shall receive a commission out of the $5,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the revenues of Liberia are negligible and they can not pay anything out of the very small revenues which now come from that source. Just think of it a moment. The interest on the $5,000,000 loan is more than the annual revenues of Liberia.

Mr. OWEN. But, as I understand it, our security from the Liberian revenues will be affected by the obligation of $650,000 if the contract is an existing fact, and yet we are willing to pass the joint resolution without ascertaining whether it is an existing fact. I want these men summoned. I want them to state whether there is a contract of this kind or not.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma is eminently correct. We, as the representatives of the people in this body, ought to have this information. I want it just as he wants it, and I can not understand why Senators are driving this measure through and will not permit us to have a proper hearing—a hearing that will give us the facts in the case.

I want to suggest this thought to the Senate. I do not know when the Finance Committee ever acted on the measure and reported it favorably. There are members of that committee on the floor of the Senate to-day who do not recall that a meeting was ever had for the consideration of this measure. That is a rather strange and serious situation. I remember that yesterday the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], ranking Democrat on that committee, had no knowledge of the Finance Committee ever acting.

Mr. SIMMONS. No recollection.

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; no recollection. How did the measure get in here? When was a meeting held? What hearings were had, and how did the joint resolution ever slip into the Senate with a favorable report when members of the Finance Committee do not know when action was had? The more we discuss the matter the worse it gets.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is very serious in contending that we ought to pass the measure because it is a moral obligation growing out of the Wilson administration. It is really touching and pathetic to see the Senator from Utah and some others speaking seriously of living up to an obligation created under the Democratic administration. I remember that in the national convention of his party in session in Chicago in June, 1920, the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] delivered the keynote address. He said among other things, "We are going to wipe out the last vestige of the Wilson administration." Here is a vestige that you are charging to us, and we are trying to help you wipe it out, and you will not let us do it. That is a queer situation, Mr. President.

They want us to live up to a so-called moral obligation. I say again there is no moral obligation on our part. This Government under President Wilson said to Liberia during the war, "If you will do certain things, the loan will be made to you." Liberia did not comply with those conditions. The war ended. The Wilson administration passed out, to the hurt and injury of everybody in the country, and a new administration came in. The new administration, through some suggestions and influences at work in the Government, has taken up the matter with Liberia, and now, in order to excuse this monstrous thing, are hooking it back onto the Wilson administration. As a Democrat I repudiate it. It is in no way a moral obligation growing out of the preceding administration.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. In connection with what the Senator now says I want to quote from the testimony of Mr. Dearing, as published in the report of the hearings. Congressman FREAR was examining him:

Mr. FREAR. That was, as I say, just prior to the end of the war. Nothing more was done regarding the loan until June, 1920, by Liberia, and the reason advanced, as I get it from the record, is that the conditions or terms imposed were not satisfactory and Liberia refused to take action until 1920, in June. That was over a year and a half after the conclusion of the war.

Mr. DEARING. Yes, sir.

That shows that Liberia refused to take the loan during the war or to meet the conditions by which she could obtain the loan during the war, and did not bring the matter up, did not even make an application for any loan until June, 1920, or some year and a half after the war was over.

Mr. HEFLIN. If any Senator needed any evidence to convince him that the pending measure is not justified, the testimony just read by the Senator from Tennessee would do it. A year and a half had gone by after the war had ended, and here was a witness who testified before the committee in behalf of Liberia and who stated that Liberia refused to comply with conditions laid down by that administration, which was the Wilson administration.

What justification can there be for Senators solemnly voting to appropriate this money when our people are debt ridden and tax ridden, as the Senator from North Carolina has pointed out? Where will this thing stop? I have seen three groups of special interests come here and take money out of the Public Treasury since the Republican Party has been in power. The pending measure and the ship subsidy are the two remaining ones. It now remains to be seen whether Senators will vote to take these two sums out of the Treasury in order to satisfy these special interests.

Do you not know, Mr. President, and do not other Senators know that but for the Wall Street interests which are connected with the Liberian loan we never would have heard of it in this body; and but for the millions that the Shipping Trust expects to make out of the ship subsidy bill we should not hear of a ship subsidy in this Congress?

However, I am not going to detain the Senate further. I wish merely to submit this statement in conclusion. The pending joint resolution ought to be recommitted. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] has raised some points which ought to be considered. We ought to have hearings right on the point which the Senator has raised; there ought to be an investigation along that line. The able and distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has stated that he would have to vote against the proposition, or that he felt inclined to do so, unless he could be satisfied in reference to certain points. Why not satisfy him? Why not let Senators investigate the matter? There is some doubt as to how the joint resolution came into the Senate from the Finance Committee. I submit, mysterious as it is, some suspicious things being connected with it, we ought to have an opportunity very thoroughly to investigate the measure before we pass it through this body. It ought either to be recommitted or defeated outright. It should not become a law by the action of Congress.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I notice that there is no Senator listening to the argument, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Gooding	Nelson	Smoot
Bayard	Hale	Nicholson	Stanfield
Broussard	Harrell	Norris	Stanley
Cameron	Harrison	Overman	Sterling
Capper	Heflin	Owen	Swanson
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	Page	Townsend
Culberson	Kellogg	Pepper	Underwood
Cummins	Keyes	Pittman	Wadsworth
Curtis	Ladd	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	Lodge	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
Edge	McCumber	Rawson	Warren
Ernst	McKellar	Sheppard	Willis
France	McKinley	Shorridge
George	McNary	Simmons
Glass	Myers	Smith

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I have been interested in watching the peculiar features of the debate on the pending measure. We are afforded the spectacle of a Republican majority insisting that it is their duty to see that a moral obligation, alleged to have been assumed by a Democratic administration, shall be carried out. They do not bring any proof as to the moral obligation having been assumed in a national sense by the Democrats. If the Republican Party in good faith had substantial and incontrovertible proof that while the Democrats were in control of the Government they committed the Government to a solid moral obligation, we could understand why they should stand up and rebuke us if we attempted to repudiate it when the administration had shifted into the hands of the Republicans; but they have brought no such proof. On the other hand, certain members of the former Democratic administration who are alleged to have entered into and become the agents through whom the obligation was incurred, men of undoubted character and integrity, have risen here and declared that no such obligation exists. It is just such proceedings as this which cause the American people, when they analyze the situation, to doubt the serious integrity of this body when it comes to the fulfillment of the solemn obligations which rest upon us as Senators of the United States.

It can not be said that the difference which exists between the other side of the Chamber and this side of the Chamber is based upon a relation that the Government has assumed by virtue of any promise made which has appealed to the intellect of all Senators on the other side of the Chamber in one way and to all on this side in another way. Therefore the reason for the advocacy of this measure must be found in some other than a moral obligation.

I, for one, should feel as though I were bound to give serious consideration to the indebtedness of the Republic of Liberia had the debt which we are asked to furnish the money to liquidate been incurred subsequent to her negotiation with this Government; but these obligations all antedate even the outbreak of the war. They are obligations which were incurred before ever the world had entered into the war or had any suspicion that a war would be engaged in. There is not a scintilla of evidence to show that the Liberian Government rendered any assistance whatever in the prosecution of the war. However, that has all been gone into in minute detail. As there is not only serious doubt about the matter, but not a scintilla of evidence to show any moral or legal obligation on our part to pay the Liberian indebtedness, suppose we assume that we are guardians of the Republic of Liberia—and I believe that Senators on the other side claim some such attitude on the part of the American Government—and waiving the moral and legal obligation, let us look at the matter from the standpoint of a business venture.

We propose now to fund the indebtedness of the Republic of Liberia. We are the guardians of the money of the people of America. When we have taken the bonds of that Government in lieu of the money that we give them, and allow them to retire the bonds that are now outstanding against them, and the floating debt, the internal funded debt, what assurance have we that we will ever get a nickel of it back even then?

I have before me here the facts as alleged from the statistical department. The total revenue of the Liberian Government in 1920 was about $260,000. The amount that we propose to lend the Liberian Government is $5,000,000, at 5 per cent, which means $250,000 annually. The board of officers that we propose in the law to make the administrative officers for this Government to see that the terms upon which we lend the money are carried out carries with it $100,000. This makes a total of $350,000 for the bare items of interest and salary of the administrative officers appointed by this Government, leaving a deficit of something like $100,000 from the total revenue of the Liberian Government in meeting the expenses of administration and interest on the bonds. There is no one but that knows that in the ordinary execution or administration of the laws of Liberia perhaps half of that revenue will be required; so that, brought to its last analysis, it means that the other side of the Chamber is proposing without rhyme, reason, legal obligation, moral obligation, or any kind of a business obligation, to make a present to the Government of Liberia of $5,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States without ever intending to get back one penny of it.

It is needless for me to go into any of the details. This side has challenged the other side to point to the document that renders the obligation a moral one. This is an old indebtedness, held by foreigners. We have not even the official statement and the itemized account as to who holds this Liberian indebtedness. The Senator from Utah says that it is principally held by foreign governments, and that only $58,000 of it is held by citizens of America. We have his statement, and doubtless he believes that the statement given him is right; but what official facts have we to show that it is right? Even if we did have, that does not enter into the merits of this question at all. The question for us is, Have we a moral obligation or a legal obligation to carry out this contract? That would answer the question if the proof were forthcoming.

As a business proposition it might appeal to us if it was good business for a foreign account; but it is not a business proposition, it is not a moral obligation, it is not a legal obligation. Then why do we go into the Treasury of the United States and take $5,000,000 and turn it over to this Government?

If the advocates of this measure would be honest and come out and say "It is for the purpose and the sole purpose of marshaling the negro vote in this country, as we will sorely need it in 1924," and do it openly and aboveboard, I think they would perhaps muster more votes in certain quarters than they will get now. That is my opinion—that it is purely a piece of politics, playing to the colored vote by catering to their Republic and giving it $5,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States.

Regardless of color, regardless of what the nationality might be, if we were under moral obligations to carry out a contract, do you not suppose that amongst these on this side there would be found men whose moral sense is as acute as yours? If there were a legal obligation, do you not suppose that you would find men on this side whose sense of legal obligation would be as acute as yours? If it were a business proposition, do you not suppose that there would be men on this side as acutely alive to a business proposition as those on the other side? And yet the line of demarcation along political lines is going to determine this vote.

This matter has been before the Congress now for several weeks, and there should have been presented incontrovertible arguments that would force us to recognize whatever obligation there may be; but I state here this afternoon that it is my opinion that this is pure, unadulterated politics, costing this country $5,000,000.

During all the discussion of the unfortunate affair from Michigan I never referred to it; but the people of the State of Michigan and the American people have set their seal, in a manner that saddens me for the parties interested, against the use of money, even private money, in an attempt to control the votes and politics of this country; and they will rebuke the party that without any reason other than a political reason will go into the Treasury of the United States and take $5,000,000, and, under the guise and camouflage of a moral obligation coming from another party, will seek to entice the votes of the colored people of this country.

Mr. President, I want to say in conclusion that we as Democrats and you as Republicans can play the game without involving moral or official turpitude. We can do that. You have that by which you can appeal to the people of this country, and we have that by which we hope to appeal to them. It is not to the credit of the Republican Party or to the credit of the Senate of the United States that there is seriously discussed in this body a question so flagrant as this question. Do you not suppose that the American people know why this Liberian loan is here and why we are asked to pay $5,000,000 to the Liberian Government? Not one man in ten thousand believes that we are under any obligation to pay them a nickel. Not one man in fifty here believes that we are under any obligation to pay them; but political exigency is here. Nineteen hundred and twenty-four is approaching, and $5,000,000 spent in this way might count at that time. It does not augur well for the United States Senate; it does not augur well for doing away with the spirit of unrest that is abroad in the land; and I hope that if this matter shall come to a vote a rebuke will be given to this proposition by this body that will reflect credit on the sitting Members here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I send to the desk a proposed unanimous-consent agreement, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

The reading clerk read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 2.30 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Monday, November 27, 1922, the Senate will proceed to vote without further debate upon any amendment that may then be pending or that may be offered in the Senate, and immediately thereafter upon the passage of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 270) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States for the Government of Liberia.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, it was understood that there would be a provision in reference to a vote on the motion to recommit.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; I ask that that be added.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator might say "all amendments and all motions."

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. After the words "or that may be offered in the Senate" insert:

And immediately thereafter upon any motion or motions that may be made to recommit the said joint resolution to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SIMMONS. "With or without instructions."

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, what hour is suggested?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two-thirty o'clock p. m.

Mr. OVERMAN. The joint resolution will remain the unfinished business until the vote is taken?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly; and I may state, for the benefit of the Senate, that I understand that it will be almost impossible to have a quorum to-morrow, and if this unanimous-consent agreement is entered into I shall ask unanimous consent that when the Senate adjourns to-day it stand adjourned until Monday at 12 o'clock.

Mr. SIMMONS. I suppose it is necessary that we shall have a quorum for the purpose of passing on the proposed unanimous-consent agreement. I therefore make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bayard	Frelinghuysen	McNary	Smith
Borah	George	Myers	Stanfield
Broussard	Glass	Nelson	Stanley
Cameron	Gooding	Nicholsen	Sterling
Capper	Hale	Norris	Swanson
Caraway	Harrison	Overman	Townsend
Culberson	Hefflin	Owen	Underwood
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Page	Wadsworth
Curtis	Kellogg	Pepper	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	Keyes	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
Edge	Ladd	Sheppard	Willis
Fletcher	McKellar	Shortridge
France	McKinley	Simmons

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] proposes a unanimous-consent agreement, which the Secretary will read for the information of the Senate.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 2.30 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Monday, November 27, 1922, the Senate will proceed to vote without further debate upon any amendment that may then be pending or that may be offered in the Senate to the resolution (H. J. Res. 270), and immediately thereafter upon any motion or motions that may be made to recommit the said joint resoultion, either with or without instructions, to the Committee on Finance; and, in the event that no such motion shall prevail, the Senate will, without further debate, proceed to vote upon the passage of the said joint resolution (H. J. Res. 270) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States for the Government of Liberia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on entering into the unanimous-consent agreement. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is entered into.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next at 12 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CURTIS. As no Senator rises to present further business, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate (at 2 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) adjourned until Monday, November 27, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, November 24, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, infinite in righteousness, boundless in mercy, and perfect in law, to Thee we come. In our breasts is the hymn of praise and the silent chant of adoration. O let Thy blessed Spirit find its way into our hearts, there to nourish those virtues which were taught and exemplified by the Divine Teacher of men. Let us labor this day with wise energy and be glad with a new joy. Lead us in Thy light that we falter not. As the mornings come and the evenings die away give us to feel that they are bringing us nearer the haven of eternal truth and eternal love. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR MILEAGE, ETC.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 12859) making the mileage appropriations available, and ask that the House agree to the Senate amendment providing for the Senate pages.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill referred to, with a Senate amendment. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12859) to provide certain expenses incident to the third session of the Sixty-seventh Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

NO QUORUM—CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. It is clear that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Almon	Black	Burroughs	Chandler, N. Y.
Anderson	Bowers	Burton	Chandler, Okla.
Andrew, Mass.	Brand	Byrnes, S. C.	Christopherson
Ansorge	Brennan	Byrnes, Tenn.	Clague
Anthony	Brooks, Ill.	Cable	Clark, Fla.
Barbour	Brown, Tenn.	Campbell, Kans.	Classon
Barkley	Browne, Wis.	Campbell, Pa.	Clouse
Bell	Burke	Cantrill	Cockran

Codd	Hudspeth	Mills	Sinnott
Colton	Humphreys, Miss.	Montague	Sisson
Connolly, Pa.	Hutchinson	Montoya	Slemp
Copley	Ireland	Moore, Ill.	Smith, Mich.
Coughlin	Jacoway	Moore, Ohio	Stanford
Crowther	James	Morin	Steenserson
Cullen	Jeffers, Ala.	Mott	Stiness
Curry	Johnson, Ky.	Mudd	Sullivan
Davis, Minn.	Johnson, Miss.	Nelson, Me.	Summers, Wash.
Dempsey	Johnson, S. Dak.	Newton, Mo.	Swank
Denison	Jones, Pa.	O'Brien	Tague
Dickinson	Kahn	O'Connor	Taylor, Ark.
Dominick	Kelley, Mich.	Ogden	Taylor, Colo.
Drane	Kendall	Olpp	Taylor, N. J.
Dunbar	Kennedy	Osborne	Taylor, Tenn.
Dunn	Kiess	Overstreet	Temple
Dupré	Kindred	Parker, N. Y.	Thompson
Echols	King	Patterson, N. J.	Tinkham
Fairchild	Kirkpatrick	Perkins	Treadway
Faust	Kitchin	Periman	Underhill
Fess	Klecza	Petersen	Upshaw
Fish	Kline, N. Y.	Porter	Vare
Focht	Kline, Pa.	Pringey	Vestal
Fordney	Knight	Purnell	Volk
Free	Kopp	Rainey, Ill.	Ward, N. C.
Freeman	Kraus	Ramseyer	Wason
French	Kreider	Reber	Weaver
Frothingham	Reece	Rece	Webster
Funk	Lanham	Reed, N. Y.	Wheeler
Gallivan	Lee, N. Y.	Reed, W. Va.	White, Kans.
Gernerd	Lathicum	Riordan	White, Me.
Gifford	Longworth	Roach	Williams, Ill.
Goldsborough	Luce	Robson	Williams, Tex.
Goodykoontz	Luhring	Rosenbloom	Wilson
Gould	McArthur	Rossdale	Winslow
Graham, Pa.	McCormick	Sabath	Wood, Ind.
Griest	McFadden	Sanders, Ind.	Woods, Va.
Hardy, Colo.	McKenzie	Sanders, N. Y.	Woodyard
Hawes	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Schall	Wurbach
Henry	Maloney	Scott, Tenn.	Yates
Herrick	Mann	Shaw	Zihlman
Hickey	Mansfield	Shreve
Himes	Mead	Siegel
Hogan	Michaelson	Sinclair

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and twenty-three Members have answered to their names.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

The doors were opened.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12817.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] will please resume the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12817, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12817, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I was amazed yesterday to hear the merchant marine act of 1920 referred to as a Government ownership bill and the statement made that in advocating the measure under consideration we were departing from the policy for which we stood in 1920. Permit me to read the first section of the act of 1920:

Be it enacted, etc., That it is necessary for the national defense and for the proper growth of its foreign and domestic commerce that the United States shall have a merchant marine of the best equipped and most suitable types of vessels sufficient to carry the greater portion of its commerce and serve as a naval or military auxiliary in time of war or national emergency, ultimately to be owned and operated privately by citizens of the United States; and it is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to do whatever may be necessary to develop and encourage the maintenance of such a merchant marine, and, in so far as may not be inconsistent with the express provisions of this act, the United States Shipping Board shall, in the disposition of vessels and shipping property as hereinafter provided, in the making of rules and regulations, and in the administration of the shipping laws, keep always in view this purpose and object as the primary end to be attained.

A merchant marine to be privately owned and privately operated.

Now, if the proposition under discussion were the creation of an American merchant marine by means of Government aid, direct and indirect, there might be room for debate as to the practicability, desirability, and feasibility of such a plan. But that is not the situation that is confronting us at all at the present time. We have a merchant marine, and the question is, What shall become of it? We own 1,442 steamships, of a gross tonnage of some 7,000,000 tons.

We have in actual operation to-day 338 of these ships and the remaining 1,104 are tied up. Of these ships that we are operating, 28 are passenger ships, of which 5 are ex-German and the other 23 are Shipping Board vessels. Our total passenger tonnage is 500,000 tons, of which 300,000 tons are ex-German. One hundred and forty thousand tons of these ships are so old that they have no continuing potential value, but in the course of a few years they will go to the scrap heap; so that we have about 160,000 tons in German passenger ships to be reckoned with for the future. We have a fewer number of fast freighters, but the bulk of this tonnage that we have consists of the standard type of smaller and slower cargo ships.

Now, what are we doing with these ships that are being operated? They are in the hands of private companies to whom they are allocated for operation under contracts by the Shipping Board. The standard contract under which these ships are being operated, and which is the best contract that after years of experiment has been found to be obtainable by the Government, is this: The Government places the ship in charge of a steamship company or a private operator to run. The Government pays all the expenses of running the ship exclusive of the overhead office charges of the operating company or ship operator. The Government pays for the maintenance of the ship, it pays for the fuel, it pays the wages of the crew, it pays for the subsistence of the crew, it pays the terminal charges, and the incidental charges for repairs or replacement of equipment, and so forth. It pays the insurance, or insures the ship itself. It pays all these incidental expenses and receives the gross freights that are earned by the ship. Out of that it repays to the operator on outgoing voyages 5 per cent of the gross freight receipts, and on incoming voyages 2½ per cent of the gross freight receipts, and in addition thereto pays a husbanding fee which approximates about $350 per ship for each voyage.

In the operation of these ships under these contracts and under other contracts then in existence, the Shipping Board in 1920 lost, as nearly as can be ascertained from the state of its books, from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000 a year. The present Shipping Board, by rigid economy, by efficient methods, and by eternal vigilance, has reduced the losses to approximately $50,000,000 a year, and the testimony bears out and the fact is that that is the rock bottom to which the expenses of the Government can be reduced—$50,000,000 or thereabout for operating these ships.

Now, what does that mean? What is that in practical effect? We give these ships to private owners to operate. We get all the revenue there is, and it is not sufficient to cover the operation, but we turn around and pay them 5 per cent gross commissions on the freight for outgoing and 2½ per cent for incoming freights, and $350 per voyage per ship. Where do we get that money? The income from the operation of the ships is not sufficient to pay it. We take the remainder out of the Treasury; and if that is not a subsidy, in heaven's name will somebody tell me what this money is that we are paying to the private operators of the ships to-day?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Is it not a fact that the Shipping Board have not attempted to compete with American shipping lines, and that they have not sought to get foreign trade, and that they have not made competition in any way to get business?

Mr. LEHLBACH. The Shipping Board have spent thousands and thousands of dollars in advertisements here and abroad to get business. They do compete throughout the world wherever it is possible to compete.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. In rates?

Mr. LEHLBACH. In rates and in every way. Why, immediately when a reduction of rates to South America was advertised by British lines the Shipping Board met that rate in order to compete.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. But the gentleman knows that Mr. Lasker has repeatedly said that we are not competing with American shipping.

Mr. LEHLBACH. We are trying to build up American shipping.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Yes; of course we are.

Mr. LEHLBACH. And the American shipping not owned by the Shipping Board and not operated, as I have described, is negligible in the foreign trade. We are not going to compete with the few American private lines that there are which are not owned by the Shipping Board, and put them out of business completely. If there were privately owned American lines operating to a substantial degree, the Shipping Board could shut up shop and go out of business, and we would not need this bill, but it is foreign shipping that we are competing with for foreign trade.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] knows and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. J. M. NELSON] ought to know that we not only advertised through the Shipping Board, but we have commissioners all over the world hunting for business for our ships in practically every trade market in the world.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. But not competing with our own.

Mr. SNYDER. Competing everywhere.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The gross tonnage carried in world commerce to-day is materially less than it was a year ago. Yet notwithstanding that falling off in the gross tonnage of the commerce of the world the Shipping Board has maintained for its vessels an amount of tonnage equal to that which it had a year ago. That shows how persistently and how effectively the Shipping Board is going after business and competing with foreign rivals.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Are other countries in the same condition that we are, in so far as we find ourselves with an insufficient amount of tonnage to carry? Are their ships also laid up without commerce to carry?

Mr. LEHLBACH. To a very large extent the ships all over the world owned by nationals of all countries are tied up.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Our present situation then may be due in part at least if not largely to the shipping conditions of the world?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Our condition with respect to volume of business may be due to the condition throughout the world, but freight rates to-day are about 30 per cent lower than they were a year ago.

The amount of commerce that is carried is much lower than it was a year ago, but notwithstanding the fact that the freight rates are lower and the amount of commerce is less we are now under the Shipping Board operations carrying an equal amount of commerce that we did a year ago with 30 per cent less freight rate than a year ago. That shows that the operations of the Shipping Board are as efficient and effective as they possibly can be under this system. Notwithstanding that fact we must reach into the Government Treasury and take $50,000,000 as a subsidy for running our ships.

All we ask is to reduce this subsidy, to end this improvident, reckless, and extravagant expenditure which merely enables us to operate our ships to-day with no thought of to-morrow. We wish to substitute a reduced subsidy, devised in accordance with a rational plan which will enable the operation of an American merchant marine, not only to-day and to-morrow and the next day, but 10 and 20 years from now. That is what this bill intends to do.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Admitting that conditions are getting better, is it possible for the next two or three years when the business of the world is recovering, that no losses would be sustained, or is it inevitable that with the present method no matter how much the tonnage may be increased the operators of the ships will continue to lose money?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I stated a while ago, and I will repeat, that the losses to-day under the present method of operating the ships has reached rock bottom and will not get less no matter what the conditions of the world may be. We can not under the present system operate the ships without a loss; we have reduced it to the least possible amount.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Will not the gentleman admit that this shipping situation is universal throughout the world. Are not we in the same boat with all the other nations of the world?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I will admit that the shipping business is at a low ebb and that a good many boats are tied up. Comparatively few are operated, and the freight charges are low. But I know of no case where the shipping of another country is carried on at a loss save in this country, a loss that must be made up out of the government treasury of that country as it is out of the Treasury of this country.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I will.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I have been interested in a statement I found—I think in the hearings—that the ships built by the British Government, somewhat on the same plan as our ships were built, have been sold since the war, and a great proportion of them for something like $125 a ton; that the British Government to-day did not have the same problem that we have. Can the gentleman tell us whether that is substantially correct or not?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I am not informed about that. If any such price was obtained it must have been immediately following the armistice. The standard price for tonnage throughout the world to-day is about $30 a ton.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The information I have is that the ships were turned over to a certain man for the purpose of sale, and soon after the armistice they were sold at that considerable price. I am wondering whether that information is correct. The gentleman does not know?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I do not know, but I know that shortly after the armistice we had an opportunity to sell ships at a high price, but on account of opposition by injunction and great opposition by certain minority members of the then Shipping Board who said that we ought to hold them to get higher prices, we were not permitted to sell them at $125, so we lost the sale.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. Is there enough tonnage in the world to-day to carry the commerce of the world?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I think there is at the present time.

Mr. LONDON. Under normal conditions is there enough tonnage to carry the commerce?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I should say at the present time there was. Of course ships are always depreciating and have to be renewed.

Mr. LONDON. The present conditions are subnormal?

Mr. LEHLBACH. They are.

Mr. LONDON. To what extent has the destruction of ships by the submarines affected the carrying tonnage of the world?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I believe that when peace came the tonnage of the world, notwithstanding the destruction of ships by submarines, exceeded the tonnage of the world when war was first declared. In other words, there were more ships built during the war than were destroyed.

Mr. LONDON. We are now called upon to build up a merchant marine when there is an oversupply of ships.

Mr. LEHLBACH. No; we are called upon to utilize the merchant marine that we already have.

Mr. LONDON. The ships that we have are ships built because of the necessities of war?

Mr. LEHLBACH. That is true.

Mr. LONDON. Just as were the supplies of ammunition and artillery. We are now entering upon a new enterprise, the building up of a private merchant marine. Is not that so?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Possibly the gentleman uses the term "building up."

Mr. LONDON. I will say developing.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The gentleman predicates his question on the statement that there are enough ships now, and then asks why we should build up a merchant marine. We are attempting to utilize the merchant marine that we have which is counted in with the tonnage of the world. We ought to utilize the tonnage that we have.

Mr. LONDON. We are attempting to develop a merchant marine which we have not to-day.

Mr. LEHLBACH. We are attempting to utilize the boats that we already have.

Mr. LONDON. And the gentleman says that the world has too much tonnage?

Mr. LEHLBACH. No; not too much tonnage.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If it is true that we now have leading experts in charge of the shipping business of the Nation, and they are conducting it on a businesslike basis, and if it is true that with ships furnished to these people free, when they do not have to account for any investment, they can not make a profit, but it is costing the Government admittedly, according to the President, $50,000,000 a year, then how does the gentleman expect private enterprise to buy these ships and make a profit out of them?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Because there is not any line of human endeavor or human activity that can not be made to pay by private people whose heart is in the business and whose future is staked in the business when it does not pay when run by Government officials.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I agree to that, as applied to the Shipping Board.

Mr. LONDON. And if the gentleman will permit an addition to that—whose hands are in the pockets of Uncle Sam.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and I agree to that. I agree to both statements.

Mr. ARENTZ. Is it not a fact that the operators of these ships do not know what the minority Members of the House will do in the future if this bill is not passed? They are not going to build up their capital and their dockage, and so forth.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, it was stated yesterday by one of the speakers in opposition to this bill that he was unequivocally opposed to Government ownership, but that it was better to continue Government ownership for a little while longer than to adopt the remedy suggested in the measure now under consideration. However, neither he nor any other man who has spoken in opposition to this bill—and I predict now that that will prove true in respect to any who may speak in opposition to it—has suggested how much longer Government ownership and operation, wasteful and extravagant as it is, must continue, if this remedy is not adopted. What on earth in the future will keep the boats afloat if some such constructive measure as this is not adopted? No alternative has been suggested by anyone at any time anywhere. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman; will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I presume the gentleman was referring to the statement made by me yesterday with reference to a temporary continuation of Government ownership. Does the gentleman think that any prudent business man with the assets now owned by the Shipping Board, under the present depressed financial condition of the country, would sacrifice that property for 10 cents on the dollar?

Mr. LEHLBACH. A prudent business might not and ought not to, but a Government under the circumstances certainly ought to get out of this and out of the loss the operation of it entails as quickly as possible, when by getting out of it it can get some of its investment back by selling the ships and at the same time reduce the cost of the maintenance of a merchant marine by one-half, conservatively speaking.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In other words, a prudent business man should not do this thing, but a prudent Government should.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Certainly; because a business man ought to be in business and the Government ought not to be in business. That is the difference. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Is not the present argument of the gentleman a wholesale indictment of operators who are employed by the Government, when he says that working for the Government they will create a loss, but that if we should give it to them they would make a profit?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Oh, no; it is not an indictment of the operators. It is the experience of human nature in all walks of activity, under all circumstances, that a man will work with his heart in his work if he is working for himself, but that he will get what he can out of it if he is simply working temporarily for some one else, and has opportunity to use some other person's material.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Is not that an indictment of the grossest kind against these operators?

Mr. LEHLBACH. No; it is not. It is simply ascribing to them the human nature and the human motives that actuate the average man throughout our civilization.

Mr. LONDON. Is not this a good reason for the disbanding of Congress? [Laughter.]

Mr. LEHLBACH. It may be that some people view the disbandment and dissipation of our merchant marine with equanimity, and say, as long as shipping exists, what difference does it make, that ships are common carriers and are available to everybody who has a cargo to send. But that is not the fact. The merchant marine of a nation engaged in foreign commerce is not like a common carrier. It is not available to all who seek to travel or seek to transport. The merchant marine of a commercial nation is not like a common carrier, but it is like the delivery system of a big mercantile establishment. That delivery system may be induced to carry the goods of a competitor or of a rival establishment which had no delivery system of its own, when it suits the purpose and convenience of the establishment that owns the delivery system; but you can not rely upon the delivery system of a rival if he is seeking to sell goods to the same customer at the same time that you are. You can not get the ships at that time.

There seems to have been an impression created by some of the remarks made yesterday that this bill provides for an extensive building program, and the question was asked, Why should we build new ships when we already have 7,000,000 tons of ships ready at hand? Mr. Chairman, a merchant marine is like a railroad. You can not run it entirely with one style of equipment. You can not run a railroad simply with freight flats or with box cars or with passenger coaches. You must have a balance of equipment. You must have coal carriers, box cars, flat cars, passenger coaches, Pullman cars, and you must have a repair equipment and wrecking apparatus. In your rolling stock you have to balance the equipment. For a merchant marine that is to be equal to the carrying of 50 per cent of our commerce, both outgoing and incoming, and that is all that anybody seeks to accomplish, we need about 1,250,000 tons of passenger ships, 1,250,000 tons of cargo ships; we must have a certain number of tankers and a certain number of refrigerator ships, and we have to have a certain number of ships especially adapted to certain kinds of freight and certain kinds of commerce going to certain parts of the world, such as the Tropics, and so forth. Then the balance of the fleet would be made up of the ordinary standard type of slow freighters. We have plenty of slow freighters. We have some fast freighters. We have a fair supply but not an adequate supply of fast passenger ships. The provision for a revolving fund to lend to those who are willing to build ships is not a new provision. It is merely an amplification of what you all voted for when the act of 1920 was passed, and the only thing new in the provision for a construction fund in this law that has not already been law for the last two years is to say that the interest on the money so loaned shall not be at less than 2 per cent. There was no limitation of the interest to be charged under existing law.

I will not take the time to point out the little details in which the law is amended by the proposed bill.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question for information?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I will.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I understood the gentleman in the beginning of his remarks to say we had 160,000 tons of passenger ships now.

Mr. LEHLBACH. German passenger ships.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. How many passenger ships have we got in all?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Five hundred thousand tons.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I understood the gentleman a moment ago to say we ought to have 1,250,000 or 1,500,000 tons of passenger ships to complete the complement. Is that correct?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Eventually. We now have a nucleus for a merchant marine and desire to complement this shipping with vessels of necessary types which we do not at present have. To that end, out of this construction fund, created by the act of 1920, we intend making loans, under proper safeguards and at a comparatively low rate of interest, to stimulate and facilitate the building of such types of ships. No money for building can be loaned except for such types of ships as may be approved by the Shipping Board, and there is no opportunity under the act of 1920, as amplified by the existing measure, to loan Government money merely to duplicate existing shipping.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. And the purpose is to lend private shipbuilders $125,000,000 in the bill in order to build additional ships?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Is not that what the gentleman voted for when he voted for the law of 1920?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The law of 1920 was to build ships necessary for our use and the ships were to be sold at a fair price, if possible, or chartered, or if neither was possible the Government was going to run them itself and establish desired lines under the law of 1920.

Mr. LEHLBACH. And that provision, coupled with the aids provided for in this, will insure that private operators will operate them and we will not need to invoke the reservation that if private owners will not build and operate, the Government will. That is what this bill is for.

Now, there has been some discussion as to certain taxation features in this bill. The proposition that such part of the net profits derived from the operating of ships in the foreign trade as is reinvested in new ships shall not be subject to taxation is in the law of 1920, so unanimously voted for by this House and the Senate, including both sides of this center aisle. The same is true of the provision that such money may be placed in a trust fund and within a reasonable time applied to building new ships. That is not a change in the law. It is merely a change in details of administration, and we provide in the bill safeguards which in the original law were left to rules and regulations to be established by the administrative body. If anything this is a restriction rather than an enlargement of the act of 1920.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I yield 10 minutes additional to the gentleman.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Now, in the act of 1920, which, as I say, everybody joyfully and wholeheartedly voted for, including gentlemen who are now opposing this measure, there is a provision in section 34 directing the President of the United States to serve notice that certain treaties were to be abrogated or denounced.

The purpose of denouncing those treaties was this: To allow a 10 per cent customs duty rebate on all goods imported into the United States in ships flying the American flag; and everybody, as I say, voted for it. That was a tax remission of 10 per cent on goods brought into this country to be marketed here in competition with goods manufactured and produced in this country. It not only was a tax rebate to the importer, but it was a tax rebate made in such a way as to enable him more successfully to compete against home producers, and you all voted for it. It was furthermore a tax rebate which was of advantage only to those who imported goods into this country and did not give any advantage to the shipper who exported from this country. It gave no advantage to the farmer who sent his grain abroad, to the cotton planter who sent his cotton abroad, to the cattle raiser who sent his cattle abroad, to the manufacturer who sent his goods abroad. They got no tax rebate under the plan of 1920, but only the importer who brought goods in here in competition with our own producers got the 10 per cent rebate in customs duties. But there was not any opposition raised to that provision of the act of 1920 for which everybody voted. Now it is impracticable to apply that benefit, and in substitution thereof it is now proposed to give a credit on income taxes amounting to 5 per cent of the freight paid on shipments in American ships. That is practically giving a trading stamp with a shipment of goods under the American flag. It is a comparatively trifling amount, does not come to much, but is just sufficient to call attention to the fact that he ought to ship in American ships rather than foreign ships, to ship in our merchant marine instead of that of our competitors. This benefit will accrue to the farmer who ships his grain, to the cattle grower who ships his cattle, to the cotton planter who ships his cotton, to the manufacturer who ships his goods, to every American producer who sends stuff abroad, if he will only avail himself of American ships and send his goods in those ships—

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for one question? I do not want to interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I will.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman stated the amount of the drawback in reference to the income tax would be trivial?

Mr. LEHLBACH. As to the individual shippers.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But in the aggregate can the gentleman state approximately how much?

Mr. LEHLBACH. If full advantage is taken of this rebate by the shippers and when our shipping is developed up to our highest expectations, it will amount to in the neighborhood of $7,000,000.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to a further question?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I wanted to see if I understood correctly the rebate proposition. As I understand it, with your explanation, the rebate now is in favor of the American producer, while the rebate under the old measure was in favor of the importer. Is that correct?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Exactly; and gentlemen who now have qualms of conscience about allowing this little rebate to a man who is patriotic enough to ship his goods to the world in American ships in place of foreign ships are the very same gentlemen who voted for this 10 per cent customs duty rebate. You are straining at a gnat when you have swallowed a camel. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey yields back three minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for one hour.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, we are confronted with an anomalous situation. For the first time in the history of the Republic the same Congress is called into extra session for the second time. We would naturally infer that there was some very impelling reason to prompt such extraordinary action. And what is the reason? It is for the sole purpose of forcing through this ship subsidy bill.

DEFIANCE OF PUBLIC WILL.

This is not in response to any demand from the American people. It is contrary to the expressed verdict and emphatic protest of the American people. It is to be passed upon, not by the Congress that was recently elected, but it is to be passed upon by a Congress that was elected two years ago, when this bill and this subject was in no wise an issue. It is to be acted upon by the present Congress, of which nearly one hundred Members were defeated in the recent primaries and election, for the bold, specific purpose of preventing action upon this bill by a Congress that comes fresh from the people. This is representative government with a vengeance.

The greatest member of the Republican party who ever lived pronounced the doctrine that this should be a "Government of the people, by the people, and for the people." He would turn over in his grave if he knew that a proceeding of this kind was taking place; if he knew that the President of the Nation and the head of the administration that is now parading under the name of the Republican Party had appeared before the Congress and asked the Members thereof to vote, not in accordance with the will of their constituents, but to vote against the will of their constituents.

Last spring, after the effort had failed to muster enough Members to put this bill through the House, the President, in a letter to the majority leader, asked that the Members take this proposition back to their people and, as some papers expressed it, to "sell it to their people." He asked them to discuss it with their people and obtain a favorable reaction. Now, having gone before the people, and it having been an issue, and an unfavorable reaction having been recorded, he comes before the American Congress and in effect says that, "Having had a solemn referendum, having ascertained that the American people repudiate this thing, along with other policies, I now ask you to vote contrary to that verdict, to support this measure in spite of such unfavorable reaction."

The situation was well expressed by an editorial appearing in the New York Globe (Republican), June 16, 1922, as follows:

The Republican Party made its first great fight in behalf of human liberty in order that government of, by, and for the people might not perish from the earth. The high priests of privilege now in Washington are endeavoring to destroy the principles which Lincoln bequeathed.

Now, what prompts this extraordinary action? As stated, it is not prompted by the people. It is not prompted by the demands or pronouncements of any party, because, as has already been stated, neither party has ever at any time in national platform asked for the enactment of this legislation or indorsed ship subsidies. Attention was called to this by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] yesterday—to the fact that the last Republican platform, instead of asking for legislation of this kind, boasted of the merchant marine act of 1920—Jones Act—which had recently been enacted, and stood upon that, proudly declaring that that measure would "insure the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine."

Now, where does the demand come from? There is no indication that the inspiration comes from any member of the Cabinet, no intimation that it comes from any of the great Republican leaders in the Senate or in the House. According to undenied newspaper reports that have appeared from time to time, the pressure of this measure is contrary to the advice of numerous Republican leaders in the Senate and in the House. In fact, from expressions which we hear on all sides, I believe I am safe in estimating that not 10 per cent of the membership of this House wanted this question brought up. I believe I am also safe in estimating that, if left to the individual judgment and will of the Members of this House alone, not 25 per cent of them would vote for this measure.

PRESIDENT MISLED BY LASKER.

Where does the demand come from? Where does the inspiration come from? And in this connection I want to say that I do not for a moment question the sincerity of the President of the United States. I accord him full honesty of purpose. Although he is advocating this bill with a zeal which he has not manifested with respect to any other measure, and in spite of the fact that soon after he was elected he said he was not going to dictate to Congress, yet I assume that he has been convinced that this is the wisest course to pursue.

However, if the President had displayed as much interest and energy in behalf of measures for the benefit of the people, his administration would not now be confronted with many of the embarrassments with which it is beset.

By whom and upon what information has the President been convinced of the correctness of his course in pressing this ship subsidy bill to the full extent of his ability?

There is where the trouble comes, because there is no question in my mind but that the President has been sadly imposed upon, that he has been misled. In the very nature of things it was impossible for him, considering the multitude of duties he has to perform, to give a close study to the question. He had to rely upon the investigation and advice of others. And who is it who has had his ear? Who is it who has his ear now?

It is not necessary for me to dwell upon that. I simply want to call attention to some typical references that have been frequently appearing in the press for a year, without ever any denial. For instance, in the Washington Star of the 16th instant, among other things, it is said:

Within the last day or so the President conferred with Chairman Lasker, of the United States Shipping Board—

And so forth. Then further:

It is intimated that Chairman Lasker will attend further conferences with the President between now and the time that he finally completes the portion of his message referring to the merchant marine.

Then the Washington Times has this reference:

President Harding devoted yesterday afternoon and part of the evening to drafting his ship-subsidy message. Immediately after luncheon he summoned Chairman A. D. Lasker, of the United States Shipping Board, and with him went over a number of the important points and facts to be incorporated in the address. The President and Mr. Lasker were in conference for more than an hour.

Those are typical of what we have all been reading all the time, and the address made by the President contained no new matter, no new argument, no new alleged facts. It contained substantially, with somewhat changing language, the same alleged facts and the same arguments that were presented by Chairman Lasker in his original address at the hearings and that have appeared from time to time in the propaganda that has been so extensively disseminated. It contained arguments and allegations which have been already completely answered out of the mouth of Chairman Lasker upon cross-examination and out of the mouths of various other proponents of the bill, answered upon the floor of this House, answered in the minority report. But in view of the reiteration of these alleged facts and arguments it becomes necessary, at the expense of repetition, to again present facts in refutation of such arguments.

However, before doing that I want to state that neither I nor any other member of the committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries opposed to this bill, nor the Democratic Party, is opposed to an adequate American merchant marine, or is in favor of permanent Government ownership of an American merchant marine. On the other hand, the Democratic Party is now, as it ever has been, the zealous friend and champion of a strong American merchant marine. The Democratic Party is not now, nor has it ever been, in favor of Government ownership of this or any other public utility.

PENDING BILL PRESENTS NO SOLUTION.

I also want to say that the proponents of this bill have from the very beginning persistently insisted that this bill presents the only solution, when, as a matter of fact, it presents no solution whatever. It presents the antithesis of a solution. The fact of the business is that Chairman Lasker and his highly paid associates, after having pretended to study this question for a year and more, offer no remedy, offer no solution of the ills of which they all complain with regard to our merchant marine. They admit their inability to present any businesslike, constructive solution of the problem. All that they offer is simply to change the method by which the money shall be paid out of the Public Treasury. Instead of paying the money for voyage losses to the managing agents now operating the lines, they propose to shift it and permanently pay at least fifteenfold as much directly to the shipowners after they give them the vessels. That is the only solution they offer. They simply propose to administer a very expensive artificial stimulant which will leave the patient in a worse condition. They have not even correctly diagnosed the disease. They only offer to treat the symptoms with a poisonous nostrum instead of treating the disease with a scientific remedy. Suppose you should call an efficiency expert to study and offer a remedy for a sick business, and he made a report to you in which his only recommendation was that you continue operating the business at a loss and then call upon the stockholders to make up the annual deficit. You would immediately discharge him and call in somebody to discover the inefficiency, the leaks, the extravagances, the errors of management, and to suggest remedies.

A member of the Shipping Board naively suggested that, as we are spending $50,000,000 a year through the Shipping Board, we may as well give it to the private shipowners. We say, "Why not save it?" which can be done by the application of economic, scientific, and businesslike methods.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. SNYDER. A short time back in your argument you stated that there was no demand for this bill, and that no member of the Cabinet had called upon the President to bring this measure before the country. I thought at that time you were going to tell us who did prevail upon the President to bring it before the country. You have not done so yet.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I read the press notices which I said were typical, showing the constant waiting upon the President by Albert D. Lasker.

Mr. SNYDER. Who would the President be likely to consult in his efforts to get up a proper statement to make to the country if not the chairman of the Shipping Board?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I think he would naturally consult the man whom he had seen proper to appoint chairman of the Shipping Board, and he is the man who was appointed, a man who admitted that he knew absolutely nothing about the business when he came to it. He was simply a publicity expert. And right in that connection I want to say that, assuming that the President is acting upon the advice of the chairman of the Shipping Board, it is the merest chance that this bill is presented for the consideration of the American Congress; because the President first offered this chairmanship to James A. Farrell, and held up the appointment for weeks in an effort to induce Mr. Farrell to accept. If Mr. Farrell, who has had a wide experience in the construction and operation of ships, had been appointed, no ship-subsidy proposition would have been presented to this Congress.

Everybody understands that Lasker is controlling the policy of the administration with regard to this proposed legislation. That is what I am talking about—the blight of Laskerism. While it does not yet seem to be appreciated by some, before you get through with this thing those standing for this policy will find that Laskerism is more embarrassing than Newberryism.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. If it is very brief. I have a great many things that I want to say.

Mr. SNELL. Do I understand correctly that the Shipping Board at the present time is made up of four Republicans and three Democrats? Is that correct?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Why, yes; three alleged Democrats.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand the Democrats and Republicans both are unanimous in the support of this bill and the general provisions of it. Is that correct?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes; that is true. And right in that connection I want to say that two newspaper men who were present at a newspaper conference with Chairman Lasker said that Chairman Lasker told them that the President had advised him that, if any member of that Shipping Board did not go along in harmony with Chairman Lasker in his policies, he—Lasker—should notify the President, and he would discharge such member of the Shipping Board; that the only reason he appointed any of them, except Mr. Lasker, was because the law required it. [Applause.]

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I should like to get along, but go ahead.

Mr. LONDON. The gentleman does not mean to say that any Democrat would recommend something against his conscience and against his judgment simply for the sake of holding on to a job, does he? [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I said "alleged Democrats." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

RELATIVE LOSSES AND CAUSES THEREOF.

Much has been said about the relative losses under the former and present administrations; in both of his merchant marine messages the President mentioned $16,000,000 monthly losses before the present Shipping Board took charge; and extravagant claims have been advanced as to the reduction in losses effected by the present Shipping Board.

The net profits from the operation of Shipping Board vessels from the beginning to March 31, 1920, were $132,783,781.29, as reported by the Shipping Board, and as incorporated in the report on the merchant marine bill of 1920, filed by Chairman JONES for the Senate Committee on Commerce.

According to the report of the Shipping Board, the excess of cash outgo, Division of Operations, for May, 1921, was $6,000,000 and for June was $1,714,000. The present Shipping Board took charge as of July 1, 1921. It is a fact that the largest losses in the operations of the Shipping Board vessels occurred during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, although I have seen no report showing a loss of $16,000,000 per month except for one month. During the fiscal year mentioned there came the slump in business and commerce, not only applicable to our own country but world-wide in scope; our foreign commerce dwindled tremendously. When the depression arrived there were about 1,300 Shipping Board vessels in operation busily carrying our foreign commerce. The slump in commerce naturally brought a slump in cargoes for our ships. Our large number of ships could not continue operating profitably when there was only cargo sufficient for one-third or one-half of their number. This situation required expert attention. However, commencing about the time the depression arrived in full force, our immense Government shipping interests were left practically leaderless and rudderless, the business being largely directed by subordinate officials, due to the following situation, to wit: The merchant marine act of 1920 increased the Shipping Board to seven members and directed the appointment of an entirely new board. Congress adjourned the day following the passage of that law. Not even was an appropriation made to pay the salaries of the new board. President Wilson made recess appointments of the new board. When Congress reconvened the Senate refused to confirm his appointments. President Harding did not appoint the members of the Shipping Board until June 8, 1921, they being sworn in a few days later, so that the largest business in the world's history was permitted to drift from June 5, 1920, to March 4, 1921, without a Shipping Board which had been confirmed by the Senate, and from March 4, 1921, until after June 8, 1921, a period of more than three months, without any Shipping Board whatever. Under those conditions, what else could be expected except the result which followed? Of course, Mr. Lasker naturally found the business in a sick and demoralized condition. However, the former Democratic administration can certainly not be justly held responsible for that situation.

In laying up all of the ships except slightly over 400, and doubtless in tying up those sustaining the heaviest losses, the present Shipping Board certainly should have effected very great savings. Furthermore, they certainly ought to do better than no Shipping Board at all.

In a recent and apparently inspired article that appeared in the Washington Post, generally regarded as the official organ of the administration, appeared the following:

The views of the supporters of aid to American shipping are pithily set forth in an editorial written by Edward G. Lowry, appearing in yesterday's issue of the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

"Here is the argument," writes Mr. Lowry, "that won President Harding:

"The United States owns 1,500 ships. Of these, 1,100 are rotting in idleness and 400 are being operated by the Shipping Board at an annual loss of about $50,000,000. That is what the ships are now costing the taxpayers. This sum may be reduced. The estimated first-year cost of the subsidy will be about $15,000,000, and it will run up to about $30,000,000 a year if the proposal is a complete success. If the subsidy is a success, it will increase the value and sale price of the ships which the Government will turn over to private shipping firms."

Now, according to this article, those are the alleged facts that were presented to the President, that have induced him to take the course he has, and are substantially the same arguments made by him in his message as a reason for his persistent advocacy of this measure.

If you will recall, the chief argument that was made by the President in his recent address was that we should enact this legislation in order to stop the annual $50,000,000 loss.

WILL NOT STOP $50,000,000 ANNUAL SHIPPING BOARD LOSS.

Now, what are the facts in regard to that? In the first place, only a small portion of that $50,000,000 goes to the payment of voyage losses. The appropriation for the Shipping Board this year, based on the estimate furnished by the Shipping Board, was $50,000,000, and the Shipping Board themselves itemized it so as to provide $5,497,000 for the payment of the voyage losses for the current year. All of the balance of the $50,000,000 is for administration, repairs and betterment, insurance, lay up, and advertising. They were conservative in their estimate, because the voyage losses are running less than that, and the last monthly report of the voyage losses and profits showed no losses at all, but a small profit. Under the worst depression in the history of shipping, under the wasteful, inefficient, red-tape management of the Shipping Board, the 400 ships that are being operated were operated without any voyage loss for the month that was last reported.

A better showing could and should have been made than that, but now it has reached the point where there are no voyage losses. Moreover, the sum total of all the expenses, instead of reaching $50,000,000, according to the estimate, is now running about $35,000,000 annually.

WILL NOT GET GOVERNMENT OUT OF BUSINESS.

But, as I say, will this legislation stop that? I say emphatically that it will not; I say emphatically that it will not get the Government out of the business. I say emphatically that it will not promote any substantial sale of the fleet. If you will hear me I will prove each and all of these assertions by the testimony of those who appeared at the hearings in behalf of this bill. I did so in my speech in this House June 13, and the same was repeated in the minority report on this bill.

The Shipping Board is operating but 13 ships directly, or at least that was the number operating at the time of the hearings. They are operated in the name of the United States Line, of which Thomas H. Rosbottom is manager on a salary of $10,000 per annum. He is managing it for the Shipping Board, and although he has been operating these vessels in the North Atlantic trade, which is recognized as embracing the sharpest and the most pronounced competition of any section of shipping in the world, and although in part he was operating some "old German tubs," as he termed them, 21 years old, which he said no man could operate at a profit anywhere, yet with a few good vessels he has been operating the fleet at a substantial profit, and that, too, under the worst depression in the history of shipping and in competition with the strongest maritime nations on earth.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Oh, I know the gentleman from Pennsylvania is going to say that that did not include interest on the investment.

Mr. EDMONDS. And depreciation and advertising.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. It included advertising. Mr. Rosbottom said that it did include advertising, but the profits he reported did not deduct anything for interest and depreciation. But the profit was sufficient to count and overcome interest and depreciation and still leave a profit, and he said if they would give him all the fleet like some of the ships he had he would not take off his hat to any nation on earth under any conditions. [Applause.]

You will find these facts fully stated in the hearings, and in this connection I want to say that if every Member of the House would read the hearings from beginning to end I know that this bill would not have any more chance of passage through this House than the proverbial snowball.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I wish the gentleman would tell the experience that Mr. Rosbottom has had.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I am going to state that in connection with what I think ought to be done to meet the situation. Now, remember that although the Shipping Board is operating only about 13 ships directly and all the others are operated by managing agents who are operating them on a commission basis, each and every one having its own organization, yet the Shipping Board, according to information they furnished the Appropriations Committee, had 8,280 employees. Oh, I tell you, my friends, the trouble is there. This political job house in which they persist in paying such high salaries—

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield? On November 15 there were 4,079 employees. I know the gentleman does not want to make a mistake.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I do not want to make a mistake, but I do not concede those figures. I have seen no statement to that effect and it is contrary to the ones I have seen. No claim of reduction was made at the hearings when Chairman Lasker and others were asked why they had been unable to reduce the number of employees in view of the fact that such a large number of ships had been laid up. I know that they have discharged a great many employees down there, but they have filled their places with deserving Republicans.

A MEMBER. I hope that is so.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I am sure many of you gentlemen who are hoping it is so are helping to bring it about. That is all right; that is politics. I am discussing the facts. I am showing the trouble is not in the operation of vessels, but the trouble is that they have an extravagant organization. All the work that is necessary to be done by the Shipping Board can be better performed by less than a thousand men. That is the trouble, and if you want to clean house, there is the place to begin.

Now, what else? What will happen if we pass this bill with regard to the reduction in expenses? Will this $50,000,000 expenditure stop by the operation of this bill? I say nearly all of it ought to stop whether this bill passes or not. But right in that connection I want to say that I believe any fair-minded man who will carefully read the provisions of this bill will agree with me that there are more functions imposed upon the Shipping Board in the pending bill than are imposed upon them by existing law. It will take a larger force of permanent employees to carry out the provisions of this bill than are actually required to perform the present services. It will not reduce the number of employees.

Chairman Lasker was asked why it was that there had not been a reduction in Shipping Board expenses in view of the fact that there had been a large reduction in the number of ship operations. I read from the hearings:

Mr. DAVIS. Well, you are only operating less than one-third of the vessels now.

Mr. LASKER. Well, as a business man, you know this: That whether we are operating 400 ships or 1,200 ships, there isn't much difference in your overhead.

That is some of the business acumen displayed. Of course we emphatically denied that. Now listen further:

Mr. DAVIS. Even under the operation of this law, and at least until the ships that are sold on time are paid for, will it not be necessary to continue a very substantial Shipping Board force?

Mr. LASKER. Do I understand you to ask "until the ships are paid for will it be necessary"?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes.

Mr. LASKER. The answer to that is no; but if your question means as long as we have to operate the ships, where we have to keep substantially the same organization as now, the answer is yes.

Now, it being conceded that the present expenses of the Shipping Board will continue until our ships are disposed of and the Shipping Board ceases to have any of same operated, the query naturally arises as to when that time will arrive, and when there will be no longer any operations under the supervision of the Shipping Board. During the cross-examination of Mr. Lasker he made the following statement:

It will be a good many years before we do not have any stuff left, with most favorable legislation. I want to make it plain here that I do not think the proposed legislation is going to, by the wave of a magic wand, give us a merchant marine.

In his original statement at the hearings, Chairman Lasker said:

The Shipping Board wishes to emphasize to your committee and to Congress that world shipping is now more depressed than it ever has been in proportion to world tonnage.

We believe that of the 700 good freight ships we have, the Shipping Board would feel very happy if, within 30 months from the time of the passage of this bill, it could dispose of sufficient ships to take care of the routes it is now operating and put the Emergency Fleet Corporation out of business as an operating company.

He makes no prediction as to the disposition of the remainder of the 1,700 vessels owned by the Shipping Board. The following also occurred on the cross-examination of Mr. Lasker:

Mr. DAVIS. Now, you stated yesterday that if this bill should pass you estimated it would take 30 months within which to dispose of the 400 vessels owned by the Shipping Board now in operation. I want to ask you how long it would take you to dispose of the balance of the Government fleet and other shipping property?

Mr. LASKER. That is a very difficult thing to answer. First, we would have to solve what is to be done with the figures 5,000,000 dead weight of questionable ships, because as long as they are in existence it hangs as a pall over the whole market for the good ships, and whether or no the last 300 would sell very fast would be determined by world conditions, on the one hand, and how successful we were in building up an American merchant marine, on the other hand.

It will be noted that Mr. Lasker does not even pretend to say how many years it would take to dispose of those that are not now in operation on trade routes. If Mr. Lasker, the zealous father and champion of the bill, is unwilling to say upon cross-examination that this expense would stop under 30 months, at best, and then only in part, I want to ask you in all fairness if he did not impose upon the President when he led him to believe and to make the statement to this Congress, which I think the President did in all sincerity, that the passage of this bill would stop this $50,000,000 annual loss? [Applause.]

WILL NOT CAUSE SALE OF SHIPS.

However, my conclusion is not only conceded by Lasker, but it is proven by numerous other proponents of this bill, and I want to call your attention to the fact that Winthrop L. Marvin, the general manager of the American Steamship Owners' Association, who has taken a more active interest toward procuring the passage of this bill than any man except Chairman Lasker, testified at the hearings and gave, perhaps, the most favorable testimony as to what effect the passage of this bill would have upon promoting the sale of our vessels; and I want to read briefly from the hearings on that point:

Mr. BRIGGS. Now, do you feel that the policy of pushing those ships upon the market for sale, to get them in the hands of private operation and the Government out of the business, even after the passage of this bill, will result in any material increase in the price of those ships?

Mr. MARVIN. That can not be answered yes or no, very easily. If general world conditions improve, if the volume of traffic returns to normal, it is possible—and, indeed, probable—that there will be an appreciation in the world price of ships.

Right in that connection I want to say that the Shipping Board is already offering these ships at specified prices, and at prices about a third or a fourth or a fifth, not of what the ships cost, but of what they would have cost under normal conditions before the war, and of what they will cost when conditions again become normal; and no member or representative of the Shipping Board indicated that they even expected to ask for more after the passage of this bill, but, on the other hand, stated the opposite. Therefore, do not delude yourselves into the belief that the Government will ask or get any higher prices after the passage of this bill.

Right along the line of what Mr. Marvin said about world conditions, I want to make this assertion, without the fear of contradiction, that no subsidy, no Government aid, can increase commerce. It can not produce a single ton of freight, and ships can not be operated successfully or profitably without commerce to carry unless you propose to pay sufficient subsidies to justify them to operate in ballast. This fact was recognized by the majority report on this bill, which states:

Fundamentally, the existence of a merchant marine is dependent upon actual carrying of cargo. All privileges, economies, and aids, notwithstanding the ultimate success or failure of a merchant ship, lie in its employment at sea carrying cargo. Then, and then only, does the vessel become a producer.

The difficulty is not a lack of subsidies, but a lack of cargoes, due to diminished commerce.

Let us read further from the hearings:

Mr. BRIGGS. What I am asking you is, even if the bill should pass, as suggested, whether you think there would be really any substantial increase in the price the fleet would bring? Some gentlemen seem to think so. I am asking your opinion about that.

Mr. MARVIN. With no substantial improvement in world trade conditions, I am of the opinion—no man can be absolutely certain—

Mr. BRIGGS. Certainly.

Mr. MARVIN. But I am of the opinion that the passage of this bill will insure in a reasonably short time the sale of a substantial proportion of the good cargo steamers of the Shipping Board at prices comparable with the present-day world market price of such ships, of $25 to $35 a dead-weight ton.

Mr. BRIGGS. When you say a substantial proportion, what do you mean, and of the good ships? Just put that in concrete terms.

Mr. MARVIN. Some hundred thousand tons of cargo ships.

Mr. BRIGGS. A half million?

Mr. MARVIN. Well, I had rather not name any specific number of hundred thousand tons.

So here is one of the chief advocates of this bill, a man on a salary paid by the American Steamship Owners' Association, that is pressing this legislation, who, when put to the test on cross-examination, would not go any further than to say that if this bill passed and if world conditions improved he thought that within a reasonable length of time some hundred thousand tons could be sold at the low prices which he named.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. And out of how many?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Out of over 10,000,000 tons that the Government owns, not counting the wooden ships. I am now quoting their own witnesses. It is not necessary to refer to the illuminative and convincing and irrefutable testimony introduced by the opponents of the bill. No legislation which you pass will get the Government out of business, will promote a sale of ships at any price worth while, until world conditions improve.

The Government ought to do just what any prudent business man would do when, according to the testimony of all who have testified on the subject, there is now no sale for ships because there is no use for them. It is no time to throw them upon the market in order to be gobbled up at sacrifice prices by a syndicate which will later sell them at advanced prices when conditions do improve. Their own witnesses repeatedly said what I am saying. J. B. Smull, one of the $35,000 experts, said before the Committee on Appropriations that "there is no possibility of selling the boats at any price," and he further stated that the time when they could sell the boats would arrive when financial conditions improved. Even Chairman Lasker said at those same hearings that "you can not give a ship away to-day; I mean that literally, if a man must pay the cost of operation." Before the Committee on Appropriations about a year ago Mr. Lasker further said, before this subsidy bug had gotten into his system:

When the world's shipping gets buoyant the avarice of men will make them want to increase their fleets, and we will sell the ships, and that day is sure to come; and the Government has got to keep the ships going and put confidence either in ourselves or some others to keep them going as efficiently as can be under the circumstances, until such time arrives.

In an address last year Mr. James A. Farrell, president of the United States Steel Corporation, whom the President first wanted to be chairman of the Shipping Board, said:

It is questionable whether under present conditions any considerable tonnage could be sold except at a sacrifice which is not warranted, pending a revival of business in foreign markets, and considering the nominal cost of maintenance laid up.

Of course, there has been no appreciable improvement in conditions, as recognized by Chairman Lasker at the hearings on this bill when he stated:

At the present time there is, by and large, no market for our vast tonnage. We can not sell ships to-day at all.

Lasker further stated at the hearings on this bill:

While world trade is at the moment at its lowest, the time will come when trade will expand.

Attention is also called to the following quotations from the large study prepared and distributed under the direction of the Shipping Board in behalf of this bill, to wit:

One of the most difficult problems confronting the Shipping Board is the sale and transfer of Government-owned ships to private owners. The task has been made especially difficult by the present world-wide depression in industry and by the large overproduction of ships. These two important factors have delayed the sale of Government-owned tonnage to such a degree that only a few ships have been sold in the 18 months that have elapsed since the passage of the Jones Act. * * *

The present depression in shipping will doubtless continue for several years. Ships can not, therefore, be sold except at very low prices, as is evidenced by the low prices at which privately owned British tonnage and a few Shipping Board ships have been sold in recent months. * * *

W. J. Love, vice president of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, in charge of traffic, and one of the $35,000 experts, stated at the hearings:

The foreign lines have been hit just as well as we have, and, while they have not abandoned a single essential route or service that they covered prior to 1914, they are reducing their tonnage in keeping with reduced revenue and volume of cargo moving.

There is a large amount of idle tonnage all over the world. France pays the most liberal subsidies of any nation, and yet on March 1 one-third of her tonnage was laid up. Sixty-five per cent of Italian, 50 per cent of Belgian, 40 per cent of Danish, 40 per cent of Swedish, 38 per cent of Spanish, and 25 per cent of Greek merchant tonnage are laid up. A large amount of Japanese tonnage is idle, but the exact figures are not available. Great Britain, which pays no subsidies, and whose seamen receive the largest wages of any country except the United States, has the smallest percentage of idle tonnage—I believe about 10 per cent—except that there is probably a smaller percentage of idle German tonnage, although their entire fleet is very small. Italy, which pays the lowest wages of any country except the oriental countries, has the largest percentage of idle tonnage, although she pays ship subsidies.

However, even if the passage of this bill would result in the immediate sale of our ships at the hoped-for price of $200,000,000, it would be the costliest sale imaginable, as the subsidies and aids provided in the bill would cost more in three years than such $200,000,000, not to speak of the $125,000,000 loan at 2 per cent interest for at least 15 years, and the further fact that the annual cost of at least $75,000,000 would continue indefinitely. The argument that the passage of this bill is necessary in order to enable us to sell the fleet is without merit, either from the standpoint of fact or economy. From the standpoint of economy it would be infinitely cheaper to absolutely give the ships away in the first instance than to sell them for the insignificant sum of $200,000,000 and pass this bill involving the enormous permanent expenditure which it would entail.

CHARGES UPON THE PUBLIC TREASURY IMPOSED BY THIS BILL.

It has been repeatedly asserted that if this bill should pass the cost the first year would be only about $15,000,000, and thereafter about $30,000,000 annually. Even the President in his recent message repeated this assertion in substance. While such assertions doubtless have reference alone to the voyage subsidies, and therefore constitute only half truths, in view of the various other burdens upon the Treasury imposed by the bill, yet such an assertion is very inaccurate even as applied to voyage subsidies alone.

As fully appears on pages 239 to 241 and 273 of the hearings, Chairman Lasker admitted that if this bill should pass and its provisions get into full operation, certain specified provisions of the bill would impose a direct charge on the Public Treasury of $52,000,000, and this did not include certain provisions, the cost of which he was unwilling to estimate.

This bill creates a "merchant marine fund" for the payment of the voyage subsidies, "which shall be subject to withdrawal by the United States Shipping Board on requisition approved by the chairman of the board." This fund is to be derived from 10 per cent of our custom receipts, which Chairman Lasker estimated will amount to about $30,000,000 per annum; by tonnage taxes, which he estimated will amount to about $4,000,000 per annum; and by the amounts which would otherwise be paid for carrying the mails, which he estimated at $5,000,000; making a total of $39,000,000; and all of which amounts the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to pay into said merchant marine fund without any appropriation by Congress.

Since Chairman Lasker thus testified, the bill has been changed so as to not cover the amount which would otherwise be paid for ocean postage into the merchant marine fund, but such is to be paid direct for carrying the mails, which thus increases the pay to the shipowners to the extent of about $5,000,000.

Attention is called to the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury is directed by the provisions of the bill to annually pay into said merchant marine fund 10 per cent of custom receipts and all of the tonnage taxes, and the only way such funds can be paid out is upon vouchers signed by the chairman of the Shipping Board for the payment of subsidies. The fund is cumulative. The burden upon the Public Treasury consists of the amount paid into said fund, regardless of the fact as to whether all of same should be paid out the first year or any year. However, in view of the fact that the Shipping Board has the power to double the basic subsidies provided in the bill, and in view of the fact that the shipowners contended at the hearings that the subsidies provided were not sufficient, we may rest assured that the amounts paid into the merchant marine fund will be paid out for subsidies.

Another direct charge on the Public Treasury is involved in the provision authorizing deductions from net Federal income taxes of 5 per cent of the freight paid on goods imported or exported in American-flag vessels, which Chairman Lasker and the Shipping Board report estimate would amount to about $10,000,000 per annum when the program gets into operation; as a matter of fact, it would amount to much more than that.

Mr. Lasker also conceded that in lending the $125,000,000 at 2 per cent interest the Government would be losing at least 2 1/2 per cent, which would amount to $3,125,000 per annum. Furthermore, the 2 per cent interest, amounting to $2,500,000 annually, if collected, will go into this loan fund and not the General Treasury.

It will be noted that these different items involving a direct charge on the Treasury aggregate $52,125,000, according to Mr. Lasker's admissions and figures, and not including the $2,500,000 annual interest, which should also be counted.

Lasker's estimate of $30,000,000 from 10 per cent on import duties was predicated upon the supposition that such import duties would amount to $300,000,000 per annum, whereas it is estimated by Treasury experts that under the operation of the recently enacted tariff act such revenues will amount to $450,000,000 per annum, so that this item should be increased from $30,000,000 to $45,000,000. Accepting Lasker's figures on the other items, all of which are entirely too low, and also adding the 2 per cent interest on the loan fund, which would go into the loan fund instead of the General Treasury, we have a total cost of $69,625,000 per annum under the above-mentioned items.

Furthermore, this bill exempts the operators or vessels from the payment of "war-profits and excess-profits taxes imposed by Title III of the revenue act of 1918 or any and all taxes on income, corporate or individual, imposed by the revenue act of 1921, or by any subsequent revenue act, an amount equivalent to the net earnings of such vessel during such taxable year," provided the owner "invests or sets aside in a trust fund for investment" for the construction of new vessels.

The bill further provides for the exemption from taxation of the profits made upon the sale of vessels built prior to January 1, 1914, provided such owner "invests or sets aside in a trust fund for investment for the building of new vessels." I do not know why this advantage is accorded to privately owned vessels but not to those built by the Shipping Board.

Of course, it is impossible to state the extent of the charge upon the Public Treasury of these tax exemptions and none of the representatives of the Shipping Board would give any estimate thereon.

The bill further provides for the elimination of the Army and Navy transports so as to require our troops, munitions, and supplies to be carried in privately owned vessels without any distinction in time of war. Chairman Lasker and the Shipping Board report estimated that the income to privately owned ships from this source would amount to $7,500,000 per annum in the Pacific alone; of which amount they state that approximately $5,000,000 would be net profit to the ship operators. It will be noted that this amount does not include the Army and Navy transport service to the Canal Zone, Porto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Haiti, and so forth.

One of the provisions of the bill provides that 50 per cent of the immigrants to this country shall be transported in American vessels. Mr. Thomas H. Rossbottom, a representative of the Shipping Board, who testified at the hearings, estimated that under the present 3 per cent quota law "this traffic would give the transporting companies a gross income of $17,600,000 per year, of which one-half, or $8,800,000 should come to American owners." He further stated that one-half of this sum would be net profit.

There are other indirect aids carried in the bill, which I shall not now discuss.

However, Lasker stated at the hearings that the indirect aids provided in the bill were of much greater value than the direct aids.

Wherefore, as previously stated, it is a conservative estimate to state that this bill would constitute a direct charge upon the Public Treasury of at least $75,000,000 per annum, not to speak of additional costs to the American public.

I have quoted the estimates made by the proponents of the bill with regard to the cost to the American people. Their estimates are entirely too low. The charges upon the Public Treasury which would accrue from the operation of this bill may be fairly and conservatively estimated as follows:

10 per cent of customs duties-----	$45,000,000
Tonnage taxes-----	4,400,000
Ocean postage-----	5,000,000
Rebate on income taxes of 5 per cent of ocean freight-----	15,000,000
Ship operators' exemption from all Federal taxes on profits, incomes, etc-----	15,000,000
Exemption from taxation of the profits upon sale of certain vessels-----	( <sup>1</sup> )
Additional expense for Army and Navy transport service-----	5,000,000
	89,400,000

The difference between the proponents of this bill and those of us opposing it is this: We are in favor of the Government getting out of the business; but when the Government gets out we want it to get out entirely. We do not want it to stay in there to the extent of maintaining a tremendous and expensive force of employees to perform the different functions enumerated in the bill. We do not want the Government to stay in it to the extent of at least $75,000,000 additional burdens of taxes upon the American people.

AGAINST INTERESTS OF FARMERS.

I revert for a moment to the lesson taught in the recent election. The majority floor leader is reputed in the Washington Times of the 16th instant to have given out an interview in which he said in substance that the farmers had defeated the Republican Party in the recent election, and that "the closer a candidate was to the administration the harder he got hit." He goes on to explain, according to this interview, that the farmers did it because they were discontented and dissatisfied with their intolerable condition. They were protesting against the burdens of taxation and the conditions which have obtained in regard to agriculture during the past two years. Yes; that is true. We all know the prostrate condition of agriculture.

The President himself recognized it but not to the extent of calling an extra session to relieve that prostrate condition, although our agricultural element constitutes nearly half of our population, the bone and sinew of our country, and our chief and only absolutely necessary industry. Yes, they cry out for relief, and the answer is that instead of relieving them of some of the tax burdens you will impose upon them additional and very large tax burdens. They asked for bread and they are handed a stone. They asked for fish and they have been handed a serpent. But one of the most ridiculous arguments made in behalf of this bill is that it is in the interest of the farmer. However, it being apparent that it is not deceiving the farmer any more than the claim that this bill was in the interest of labor is deceiving labor, the proponents of this bill, many of them, have lost their temper and are indulging in criticism of the farmers because they say, "You have got your subsidies and now you are complaining at the Shipping Trust getting theirs." Different speakers, even including the President in his address, have referred to the pitifully small appropriations that have been made from year to year in the interest of agriculture. This great industry, constituting such a large proportion of our population, has been given less consideration by the American Congress than any other class or industry in it. Out of the billions and billions of dollars of annual appropriations the appropriations for agriculture are $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 a year, and they are prating of that, and now in the next breath they say that this bill is in the interest of the farmer. I deny it. I say that it will impose additional burdens upon the farmer not only without helping him but without any intention of the framers to help him. This bill is not in the interest of commerce, this bill is not in the interest of the cargo carriers. This bill is in the interest alone of the palatial ocean greyhounds, which cross the seas for the comfort of those who are able to travel abroad.

<sup>1</sup> Can not estimate.

Mr. HIMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Why do I say that—I think I will answer the gentleman's question, if he will pardon me for a moment, and then I will yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It has always been my impression that the theory upon which appropriations for agriculture are made is that they are not made for the benefit of the farmer alone, but were made in an effort to increase production.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes; and reduce the cost of production.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of those things essential, the food and clothing of the world.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Absolutely.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And thereby try to benefit all the people. I do not think that the appropriations for agricultural purposes can in any proper manner be dubbed a subsidy of any private or special interest.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. My distinguished colleague is absolutely correct. None of the things they cite constitutes a subsidy. They are in the interest of all of the people and not in the interest of individuals, absolutely not. They are in no sense a subsidy or bounty.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. In just a moment. I was referring to the ridiculously small amount of appropriation of these particular classes, and as suggested by my colleague the thing that is in the interest of agricultural production is in the interest of every man, woman, and child of America, because each and all of them are consumers of farm products. I yield.

Mr. EDMONDS. Who receives the financial benefit of the agricultural subsidies?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Well, those who sell their goods to the farmer receive about all he makes, because the farmer receives less upon his investment and in return for his labor than any other class of people in America. [Applause.]

However, there have been no agricultural subsidies.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Before the gentleman proceeds further along that line I want to ask him a question.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit, not a dollar appropriated for agriculture goes directly to any farmer. The money is used for the purpose of employing educators, publishing literature, and matters of that sort. It is not taking money out of the Treasury and giving it to the farmer.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Certainly not. And it is for studying diseases in order to increase production of the crops and to make the production correspondingly cheaper.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

NO REDUCTION OF OCEAN FREIGHT RATES.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. In this connection, what will be the effect of eliminating competition in freight for farmers on products that go to Liverpool?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. There is not any assurance, not even a claim, by any of the proponents of the bill that these subsidies and burdens upon the people will result in any reduction of ocean freight rates. On the other hand, it is predicated upon the alleged basis that it is necessary to pay these subsidies in order to equalize them; and, more than that, I want to say that Chairman Lasker at the hearings called attention to the fact, in explaining the benefit of the provision which permits shippers in American bottoms to deduct 5 per cent of their freight money paid from their income taxes—I say, in discussing the benefits of that Chairman Lasker said that the shipper could afford to pay 4 per cent more freight for carrying in an American bottom than he would have to pay for carrying in a foreign bottom and still save 1 per cent. There is no provision in this bill providing for the regulation of ocean freight rates.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, the time of the gentleman from Tennessee will expire in 2 minutes. I desire to extend to him 30 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the time of the gentleman from Tennessee will be extended for 30 minutes. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HIMES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a brief question? I want to ask it now, because I must leave the Chamber presently.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. HIMES. In the very interesting argument of the gentleman it seems to me the outstanding point that he is trying to make is that the $50,000,000 expense will not cease immediately. Does not the gentleman believe that after a period of years the Government and the taxpayers will be saved a considerable amount? I know, having served with the gentleman on a committee, that he is frank, and I ask him that question, whether money will not eventually be saved in a period of years as the result of this subsidy?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. No; because the passage of this bill will not only not eliminate the Shipping Board expenses but will impose very heavy additional burdens that will continue indefinitely, as I have heretofore explained. And in that connection I want to warn those of you who may be deluded in the idea that if this policy is once fastened on the American people it will be only temporary. That is not the history of such things. It is not the purpose of the proponents, and it will not be the result.

However, I want to get back to the proposition I was discussing, and that is this, that this bill is not designed in the interest of commerce nor in the interest of the farmer. Under the provisions of this bill the direct subsidies, the voyage subsidies, are from one-half cent to 2.6 cents per ton for 100 miles traveled. The increase in subsidy is effected by increased speed. Seventy-five per cent or over of the world's commerce is carried in tramp cargo steamers of about 5,000 to 7,000 gross tons and of 8 or 9 or 10 knots speed, and a ship must have 12 knots speed before it can get in excess of the one-half cent.

Homer L. Ferguson, one of the witnesses for the Shipping Board, and R. T. Merrill, their star witness, in fact their "pinch" witness, both testified that an ordinary 5,000 gross ton cargo steamer under 12 knots speed running on regular time would draw $7,500 annual subsidy. A 7,000-ton ship of the same kind, which would be about 10,500 tons dead weight, would draw $10,500 subsidy per annum; a comparatively small sum in the year's operation of a ship. And various witnesses appeared in behalf of the bill who testified that if you are going to pay subsidies, that is not nearly enough for the cargo steamers, the ones that carry the farm products and the commerce of the world, and which meet the sharpest competition.

Now, what is this bill for? It is admitted that the $125,000,000 fund to be loaned at 2 per cent interest is to go for the construction of other classes of ships, and it is conceded that most of the voyage subsidies will go to other than these cargo steamers. You have seen it stated in the press from Chairman Lasker and others that negotiations are under way for the construction of two 1,000-foot passenger liners, each of 70,000 gross tons, the largest in the world, their construction being contingent upon the passage of the pending bill. It is entirely possible that these ships may be constructed, as under the provisions of the Lasker subsidy bill the owners could borrow two-thirds of the cost of construction on 15 years' time and at 2 per cent annual interest. Then under the provisions of this bill those ships would be entitled to more than $4,000,000 annually, according to the basic subsidies, and twice that amount if the Shipping Board doubles the basic subsidies, under the discretion lodged in them by the pending bill; so that the two ships would be entitled to more than $60,000,000 in voyage subsidies during the 15-year period, and $120,000,000 if such subsidies were doubled by the Shipping board. Also they would be exempt from the payment of all Federal taxes, provided they set same aside for reinvestment. And they would be entitled also to various other benefits under this bill.

Take the Leviathan, of 54,000 tons, which Mr. Merrill, the Shipping Board witness to whom I referred, conceded at the hearing would be entitled to more than $900,000 voyage subsidy annually, according to the basic rates, and twice that if doubled. I say that he is entirely too conservative, as anybody can see by taking a pencil and a piece of paper and figuring out what it would be entitled to. Of course these are large vessels that I am talking about, but there are numerous passenger vessels already in existence that would be entitled to subsidies of one-half or one-third or one-fourth as much as these. And who would use them? Who would travel upon these palatial steamers? None except the very wealthy. How many farmers would be able to travel upon them?

I have referred to the subsidy that would be received by 5,000 to 7,000 gross-ton cargo vessels, which would be about 50 per cent more dead-weight tonnage. These two giant liners would be entitled under the provisions of the Lasker bill to basic subsidies equal to that received by 522 5,000-gross-ton cargo steamers, or 389 7,000-gross-ton cargo steamers, with an aggregate tonnage of 2,660,000 gross tons. If the subsidies of the said liners were doubled, as could be done, and the cargo vessels received the basic subsidy, the bounties received by the two large passenger vessels would equal the subsidies received by 1,064 of the 5,000-ton or 760 of the 7,000-ton cargo steamers with an aggregate tonnage of 5,320,000 gross tons or about 7,750,000 dead-weight tons.

In other words, under the basic subsidies provided in the bill for the different classes of vessels these two large liners would be entitled to over half as much subsidy as the entire Government fleet of cargo vessels, and if the Shipping Board should exercise their discretion of doubling these subsidies to the two liners they would receive as much as all of the cargo vessels, figured upon the basic rate to which they are entitled.

The pending bill is thus framed in spite of the fact that it was conclusively shown at the hearings that American passenger vessels labor at a less disadvantage than do cargo vessels, according to the admission of the witnesses introduced by the Shipping Board and controverted by no man. Now, this is the way that this bill is drafted in the interest of the farmers!

PACIFIC MAIL SCANDAL.

Right on the question of those two liners I want to call your attention to something. In this connection I want to make this assertion, that if this bill becomes a law—I do not think it will—there will result the worst scandal in the history of the American Republic. Bad as subsidies are in principle, they have proven worse in practice; and with the enormous powers and opportunities which this bill confers upon the Shipping Board and which they are zealously seeking, and which they have steadfastly refused to yield in any particular, I repeat my statement. But you may say, "You are extravagant in your assertions." But, my friends, we have something in our history to which I wish to call your attention at this time. I referred to it on the last day of the last session. I read from two standard authorities, Meeker's History of Shipping Subsidies and Grosvenor M. Jones's Government Aid to Merchant Shipping. Both these gentlemen were then and are now United States officials. On pages 40 and 41 of Jones's Government Aid to Merchant Shipping appears the following:

In 1872 the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. proposed the establishment of another monthly mail steamship line to China and Japan for an additional subvention of $500,000 per year. After much debate Congress adopted the proposal and a contract to that effect was entered into. This contract, however, was abrogated by act of March 3, 1875, after it was discovered that the law had been passed as a result of corruption and the company had failed to carry out its part of the agreement.

During this period, however, the policy of granting mail subventions received a deathblow. The disclosures as to the maintenance of a corrupt lobby to secure congressional approval of the second Pacific Mail contract left such an unfavorable impression upon the popular mind that no serious attempt was made to institute subvention payments for at least 10 years.

And Meeker's History of Shipping Subsidies, on pages 160 and 161, discusses the same subject as follows:

In 1872 the Pacific Mail Co. offered to run another monthly service to China and Japan for an additional $500,000 a year. With considerable difficulty a bill authorizing such a contract was passed by Congress June 1, 1872. In 1874 it was discovered that bribery had been employed to secure the passage of the measure. It was proven that the company had spent about $1,000,000 to push the bill through Congress. The new contract was abrogated by the Government because of the improper methods used in gaining the necessary legislation, and the subsequent failure of the company to fulfill the conditions of the said contract. (House Doc. No. 598, 42d Cong., 2d sess.; miscel. docs. Nos. 74 and 255; House Doc. No. 268, 43d Cong., 1st sess.)

The official documents here cited embody the proof taken upon the congressional investigation proving these facts. Here one company spent a million dollars in order to corruptly procure the passage of a bill which gave them a contract for carrying the mails, for actual service, which paid them only $500,000 a year for 10 years. Yet this bill for the benefit of all of them involves absolute bounties to the extent of at least $75,000,000 a year for an indefinite period—at least 10 or 15 years.

SYNDICATE OF SHIPPING BOARD OFFICIALS.

But going back to what I started to discuss, I want to read from the November 22, 1922, issue of the New York Tribune a news item appearing on the shipping news page, as follows:

NEW SHIP SYNDICATE TO BUY UNITED STATES LINES GETS NEW BACKING—PERSONNEL NOW SAID TO INCLUDE HOMER FERGUSON, J. B. SMULL, W. J. LOVE, E. J. MCCORMACK, W. F. GIBBS.

The personnel of the syndicate which proposes to buy the United States lines from the Government as a going concern, and to form the largest Atlantic operating company, it was indicated yesterday, includes E. J. McCormack, of McCormack & Moore; W. F. Gibbs, naval architect; William J. Love and J. Barstow Smull, of the Shipping Board, and Homer Ferguson, of the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co.

Reports circulated a month ago, when the syndicate's plan was first broached, had it that either Mr. Ferguson, Mr. Gibbs, and Mr. Love, or else Mr. McCormack, who is one of the operating directors of the United States lines, and Mr. Gibbs were the promoters. The names of all five have been linked together in the latest reports, making a strong combination. Further strength of the syndicate was hinted by the report that the powerful Huntington estate interests were supporting Mr. Ferguson.

The syndicate's original plan, as submitted to Chairman Lasker of the Shipping Board, contemplated the taking over of the Leviathan, as well as of the fleet of the United States lines, and the building of two palatial 1,000-foot liners for the Atlantic passenger trade. Approximately 200,000 tons of shipping would be represented in this deal. The new company was said to plan a nominal capitalization of $5,000,000, with the expectation that further substantial assistance would be received from the Government through the Shipping Board.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield right there?
Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The United States Line is the one run by Rosbottom.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes. I was going to explain that.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. And that is the line we have made a success of, and now they want to buy it.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes; and the Shipping Board apparently wants to sell to them. The prospective purchasers are reputed to largely control the policies of the Shipping Board. Four of these five men mentioned are officers of the Shipping Board, and two of them are receiving $35,000 a year each. They are only to put up $5,000,000 for the purchase of this fleet, which is the only one being directly operated by the Government, and which, as Judge HARDY says, is being operated at a profit. In addition to these ships in operation they also procure the Leviathan, which is being reconditioned by the Shipping Board at an expense of $8,200,000, and then they are to build by Government aid the two largest passenger steamers in the world, and according to this report all that they put up in order to get this valuable property is $5,000,000 in cash.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman give the date of that article that he just read?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. November 22, 1922, page 22 of the New York Tribune.

Mr. EDMONDS. I simply wanted to know when this horrible conspiracy was being hatched.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. This "horrible conspiracy" is reported in the New York Tribune, which is supporting this administration, and supporting this bill, and has so much interest in the passage of the bill that they are sending every morning to the offices of all Congressmen copies of their paper advocating the bill. [Applause.]

I want to say that it is a matter of common and persistent report in shipping circles and among newspaper men and has been published in the press, without giving names, that there is already on foot a large syndicate to buy the balance of these ships. You know that there was a good deal in the hearings on the subject about a syndicate, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] indicated that was in his mind in questions that he propounded to Winthrop L. Marvin.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman from Pennsylvania knows nothing about any of the syndicates and has no interest in them.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I assume that is true, and I did not say that he did.

Mr. EDMONDS. If my questions tended that way I want gentlemen interested to understand that I know nothing about it and that I had no idea of it. The gentleman from Tennessee has said that we could not sell a ship, and now says we are going to sell the whole of them.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Oh, you are going to sell them for a price that would be a mere bagatelle of what the Government could get if the Government would keep them until conditions improve and when there will be use for them on the seas and when there would be competition among buyers. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania questions what I said about his questions I will be glad to turn to the testimony. I would not do the gentleman an injustice for anything. Let the record speak for itself. I read from page 1087 of the hearings, as follows:

Mr. EDMONDS. A great many questions have been asked here with regard to the advertising of these ships. Wouldn't the natural result be that if Congress absolutely required that these ships be advertised and sold that they would be purchased probably by one syndicate? Wouldn't there be a greater danger of creating a monopoly by that system of selling ships than to hold them in order to build up these special lines that these people want continued to those ports?

Mr. MARVIN. I believe anything like a forced and sudden sale would increase the danger of a syndicate, although I don't conceive it within the bounds of reasonable possibility that any syndicate will be organized to take over these ships.

Mr. EDMONDS. Suppose the Shipping Board should assume from the action of this committee that we want them to sell these ships, and they go out and advertise them, one man might bid for the whole shooting match, possibly, the highest price of anybody. Then the danger of monopoly would be increased, of course?

Mr. MARVIN. Greatly.

In this connection I also call attention to the statement of H. H. Raymond, president of the American Steamship Owners' Association, as follows:

Mr. RAYMOND. I had the privilege of serving on a committee two or three years ago—an advisory committee—with five other experienced men, known over the United States as men of ability, one of whom has passed away, and we recommended at that time the sale of those ships and a price for them. We conferred with every shipowner and others that were interested in the purchase of ships, and even with bankers; and at that time a syndicate could have been formed similar to what was done in Great Britain. When Great Britain turned over to this syndicate headed by Lord Inchcape—I do not know what his first name was—a syndicate could have been formed to have taken the Shipping Board fleet that was desirable out of the Government's hands and then disposed of it over the country. There was business then for them. To-day there is no business. But I would have the courage to believe that if it could be determined what ships would be sold and at a low price, that the aid that is here asked for, plus little additions that we may ask for, could be had, you could have something concrete to go before the banking communities of the Nation, and that this syndicate could be formed again, and they would carry those people that wanted to buy them. I believe that; I do not know that it could be done, but I believe it.

I also call attention to another probable result, as explained by Mr. Raymond, as follows:

Mr. BRIGGS. Do you think, if the Government turns over its fleet at once, as you said, that it would require more vessels to be tied up than are tied up now, or do you think it will mean any advantage in releasing some that are now tied up?

Mr. RAYMOND. I think it probably might mean tying more of them up.

As to whether the big shipowners or the financial interests would take advantage of the Government, in the event the ships were thrown on the market and sold under present depressed conditions, I call attention to the following general opinion expressed even by Chairman Lasker in his original statement at the hearings:

I think we ought to have the right to sell anywhere. I am not for a private owner holding up the Government, and I think the private owner will do it if he gets a chance.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BEEDY. I have listened with great interest to what the gentleman has had to say, and I would like to know whether it is his belief that if this bill is passed we are not to get out of the shipping business—whether there is to be an immediate sale and we are to get out of it entirely?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Under the provisions of this bill we will not get out of it, whether we do or do not sell the ships. The syndicate, if it buys them, will buy the cream and will leave the balance of the fleet in the Government's hands.

Mr. BEEDY. If we sell all the ships—

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. They will not buy all the ships. They will buy the cream.

Mr. BEEDY. I understood the gentleman to say that a syndicate was being formed to buy all the ships.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I did not mean it literally if I said it; they will buy all that they consider worth buying, because it is claimed by the Shipping Board that of these vessels some are first class and others varying from worthless to good. They would buy the ships at a fraction of their real value and hold them for the rise in price and sell at a large profit.

Now, I had intended to discuss the legislative portion of the seaman's act, the differential in wages, but it is impossible to discuss all of these subjects; and on that question I respectfully suggest to those who are sufficiently interested to go to the bottom of it to read what we detail in our minority report on that subject, and which shows that there is no differential operating against the American shipowners on the wage or subsistence question. I believe that will also be discussed by one of my colleagues to-morrow. I want, however, to say that, according to the report of the United States Commissioner of Navigation for 1921, there was infinitely more variation in the wages in the different ports of the United States for seamen from 1895 to 1921 than there was at any time during that period between the average wages in the United States and any foreign country. You will find that in the hearings on pages 1908 to 1939.

I must leave all other subjects in order to do what I said I wanted to do, give my idea of what the trouble is, in so far as there is any trouble, and say what I think ought to be done in regard to our merchant marine. I shall not be able to discuss it as fully as I would like, but I will discuss it as fully as time will permit.

AMERICA'S FORMER MARITIME PRESTIGE.

In the first place, I call your attention to the historical fact that up to the time of the Civil War the United States was a great maritime nation, and when that war broke out the United States had a merchant marine nearly 600,000 tons larger than that of Great Britain, the next largest. This great American merchant marine had been established and maintained without subsidies. Along in the fifties there were some contracts for carrying the mail involving comparatively small payments to a few passenger lines, but I think it is entirely proper, just as we have been doing all along, to pay for the carriage of our ocean mails. It is just as legitimate to have a good ocean mail service as it is to have a good land mail service. But that is not a subsidy. It is sometimes called a subvention. Prior to the Civil War America excelled them all in the construction and operation of wooden vessels. They sailed all the seven seas, they carried a large portion of our commerce and of the commerce between other nations. The shipping industry was one of the few important industries of our young Nation, and it offered a profitable field for the employment of American capital and labor. None of the nations could successfully compete with us, although the American wages were one-third more than the foreign wages. But that was a small item then, just like it has always been and just as all unbiased experts declare.

However, there was a subsequent decline in our prestige on the seas, and I wish to discuss the reasons therefor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, on the first extension of time granted to the gentleman from Tennessee the Chair stated that it could be done unless there was objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand that under the rule we adopted the control of the time is divided up between the majority and the minority.

The CHAIRMAN. It has always been held, so far as the present occupant of the chair is aware, that in accordance with the rules of the House no extension beyond an hour can be made, except by unanimous consent, which, so far as the present occupant of the chair now recalls, has always been granted.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I am very anxious to extend further time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS], because he has given great study to this question. I wish to extend to him the privilege of concluding his remarks, and I am willing to yield him that time. Under the ruling of the Chair could I not do that, or does it require unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. Since the gentleman has raised the question, the Chair will refer to the rule very briefly and to the decisions under the rule. In Rule XIV, second paragraph, it is provided:

and no Member shall occupy more than one hour in debate on any question in the House or in committee, except as further provided in this rule.

The further provision in the rule is to be found in paragraph 3, as follows:

The Member reporting the measure under consideration from a committee may open and close, where general debate has been had thereon; and if it shall extend beyond one day he shall be entitled to one hour to close, notwithstanding he may have used an hour in opening.

This paragraph of the rule has no application here.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, that, of course, is taken from the general rules of the House, but we are now operating under a special rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The rulings in the precedents have been made largely under special rules and unanimous-consent agreements. If the gentleman wishes to have the decisions cited, the Chair will be very glad to do so.

By permission of the committee the Chair submits a number of precedents in line with the ruling just indicated.

(Hinds' Precedents, section 5004.)

On May 13, 1896, the House was considering the contested-election case of Rincher against Downing, and by unanimous consent it had been agreed that the time should be divided between the two sides and controlled by gentlemen representing them. Mr. Edward D. Cooke, of Illinois, who controlled the time on the side of the majority of the committee, having yielded to Mr. James A. Connolly, of Illinois, such time as he might desire, the latter in his remarks exceeded one hour.

Mr. William H. Moody, of Massachusetts, made the point of order that the other side was entitled to the floor.

The Speaker pro tempore [James S. Sherman, of New York] said:

The Chair holds that the gentleman's time has expired. * * * The present occupant of the chair fails to find from the Record that there was an absolute agreement as to unlimited time. There was simply an agreement not to fix any time, but to allow the time occupied to be controlled on the one side by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cooke] and on the other side by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Moody]. Under the circumstances the time occupied by any particular Member would be governed by the rules of the House, and the gentleman from Illinois could have been granted but one hour. He has exceeded that time; therefore his time has expired, and he can not proceed now unless by unanimous consent.

Several parliamentary inquiries having been made as to the right of Mr. Cooke to yield unlimited time to Mr. Connolly, the Speaker [Thomas B. Reed], who had resumed the chair, said:

Whenever the time is under the control of two gentlemen on opposite sides of the question it is always understood that it is under such control subject to the rules of the House, and the rule of the House limits any Member to 60 minutes unless by unanimous consent it is changed. (Hinds' Precedents, sec. 5005.)

On January 5, 1897, a bill to amend the postal laws relating to second-class matter was under consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the time of debate had, by unanimous consent, been placed under the control of Mr. Eugene F. Loud, of California, on the one side, and Mr. Lemuel E. Quigg, of New York, on the other.

Mr. Quigg having taken the floor and having at the end of an hour been informed that one hour had expired, was proceeding when the Chairman informed him that he was proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. Quigg thereupon made the point that he was proceeding in his own time. The Chairman [Mr. James S. Sherman] said:

But the gentleman could not, without the unanimous consent of the committee, which had been given, occupy more than one hour.

On January 7, 1897, the House was in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union considering the Pacific Railroad funding bill, and it had been arranged, by unanimous consent, that the time should be controlled by Mr. H. Henry Powers, of Vermont, on the one side, and by Mr. Joel D. Hubbard, of Missouri, on the other.

Mr. Powers, having taken the floor, was informed at the end of one hour that his time had expired. Mr. Powers made the point that he had entire control of the time on one side.

The Chairman [John A. T. Hull] said:

That is correct; but under the rules of the House, even where unlimited time is within the control of a Member, he is not allowed, except by unanimous consent, to occupy the floor for more than one hour.

Under the rules of the House and the unbroken precedents, so far as the present occupant of the chair has been able to ascertain, the Chair holds that the gentleman can proceed only by the unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, under the ruling of the Chair the gentleman from Tennessee has consumed an hour and a half; and if I desire to extend him further time, do I understand that I must ask unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. If no objection be made, it is tantamount to unanimous consent.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee such further time as he may desire.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the time of the gentleman from Tennessee may be extended for such time as he may desire. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection. Of course, the Chair would interpret this extension so as to keep within the provisions of the special rule under which we are proceeding.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I wish to thank my colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD] for his extreme courtesy. Of course, Mr. Chairman, we all understand there was a decline from the former proud eminence occupied by the United States as a maritime nation.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. EDMONDS. Of course, the gentleman knows that while these ships were growing larger and stronger and doing good work at sea, they were, of course, receiving a 10 per cent preferential duty.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. No; I do not know any such thing, except this, that up until 1815 there was a 10 per cent preferential duty; but the United States Government became so sick of that policy and its baneful effects that the American Congress, by a unanimous vote both in the Senate and the House, abandoned that position and adopted a policy of reciprocity, under which that preferential duty was done away with, and it was after that was done away with that we reached what has been termed the "golden era in American shipping."

Mr. EDMONDS. And the merchant marine afterwards declined.

CAUSES OF DECLINE.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I referred to the time up until the Civil War and had started to discuss the decline. The authorities on this subject are in substantial accord upon the causes of the decline, and they are stated with substantial accuracy in one of the reports made on the "History of shipping discriminations and on various forms of Government aid to shipping" compiled by the present Shipping Board.

A. In the first place there was the advent of steam, and while American genius invented the steamboat, yet Americans were so wedded to their fast wooden clippers, in the construction and operation of which they had so long excelled the world, that they clung to them too long with the result that England outstripped us in the construction and operation of steamships and also of iron ships which gradually replaced the wooden sailers.

B. Another cause of the decline was our tonnage destroyed and transferred to foreign registry during the Civil War.

During that time a large amount of the American tonnage was destroyed by one side or the other in that unfortunate fratricidal contest, and, in addition, about 1,000,000 tons that were under the American flag were transferred to foreign registry, chiefly the British. Because of those two things the American merchant marine was greatly depleted and the British merchant marine forged ahead. Then instead of trying to remedy the situation the American Congress, perhaps in a spirit of pique, in 1866 passed a bill preventing the reregistry under the American flag of that enormous tonnage which had transferred to foreign flags in order to prevent capture or destruction. Thus occurred what was one of the severest blows that has ever happened to the American merchant marine, but other things also have happened.

C. Beginning about that period, and this is enumerated in said report of the Shipping Board, we find a third reason. The board report correctly states that another very important cause of the decline of our shipping lay in the fact that both labor and capital had been attracted to other and more lucrative fields of employment; that the opening of the West took the interests of the United States away from navigation to the internal development of the country, and that railways, manufacturing, and industries generally commanded higher rates of return without the risks which were considered incidental to shipping. That situation has since continued to a very large extent.

D. There is another reason assigned in this Shipping Board report. It correctly states that "a most effective cause for the decline was the protective tariff," first mentioning the rates on shipbuilding materials, which militated against American ship construction. They then refer to the further fact that the "tariff has restricted the number and amount of cargoes that American ships could bring from foreign ports," and state, "that condition will always be present in the face of a high tariff." It was stated by the President in one of his messages, and it has been stated by others in the hearings, including Mr. Lasker, that before you can have a successful and a profitable merchant marine you must have both incoming and outgoing cargoes. Nobody disputes this truism. The situation is such that Mr. Lasker himself described it at the hearings by saying that the tonnage of all exports to Europe is three and a half times as much as our imports. The result is that five-sevenths of the ship tonnage that goes over loaded must come back in ballast or empty.

Now, I am not discussing the merits of the high protective tariff. I am discussing what is recognized by all the authorities on the subject as one of the chief causes that has militated against an American merchant marine because it has greatly reduced the importation of foreign products. Mr. Lasker himself very properly recognized the situation at the hearings when he said:

It is not a good thing for the Shipping Board, it is not a good thing for the ship operator, and it is not building up permanently one of the main advantages, for the lack of which we suffer with an American merchant marine, that while we have full outgoing cargoes we have not full incoming cargoes, or anything like it. This is controversial. Is it due to a high protective tariff? I do not propose to get into that, because the Shipping Board has to take the thing as it is.

Then he says it is a settled question, one party believing in a high protective tariff and the other in a tariff for revenue only. Now, this situation has been very greatly augmented by the passage of the recent tariff bill. In other words, we have in Congress the very inconsistent policy of having passed one law to prevent foreign commerce and now passing this bill for the pretended purpose of promoting foreign commerce.

Was there ever anything so incongruous as the administration program of blocking foreign trade by the imposition of prohibitory tariff duties and then attempting to stimulate foreign trade by the payment of enormous ship subsidies? The program is to promote foreign trade with one hand and strangle it with the other, both efforts being in behalf of special interests and very expensive to the masses of the people who pay the taxes. They seem to be laboring under the delusion that we can stimulate our export trade and at the same time repress our import trade. It can not be done. All the authorities agree that we must have incoming as well as outgoing cargoes in order to maintain a successful merchant marine.

E. There is another reason given by this Shipping Board report and by all the authorities for the decline, and for the fact that our American merchant marine engaged in the foreign trade did not keep pace with our tremendous growth in foreign commerce after the Civil War. The American registry law down to 1914, prohibiting the registry of foreign-built ships, necessarily operated to bring about a decline in shipping under the American flag. When we excelled the world in the construction of wooden ships it cut no figure. Because of the very fact that we could build wooden ships better and cheaper than anybody else, Great Britain abandoned such a policy in 1849 and went to a "free ship policy," permitting the registration under the British flag of foreign-constructed vessels in order that her shipowners might get the ships as cheaply as possible. England was more interested in putting a British merchant marine on the seas than she was in favoring the British shipbuilders. However, her "free ship policy" resulted in building up the greatest shipbuilding yards in the world, because under the spur of foreign competition they build soundly by the application of economical, efficient businesslike methods. America can do the same. In fact, we are the only nation on earth that has not long since come to a "free ship policy." There is a natural conflict between the shipbuilder and the shipowner. The shipbuilder strives to get as much as he can for his ship, and the shipowner strives to get his ship as cheaply as he can. And I want to ask you this: When, until recently at least, it cost 25 per cent more, by reason of the tariff and other things, to construct a ship in the United States than it did in Great Britain, could you expect Americans, who wanted to go into the business, to pay 25 per cent more to get a ship here than they could get the same ship for in England? Of course not. If they went to England and bought it, they could not then register it under the American flag. Consequently, Americans either did not buy, or they bought their ships abroad and then operated them under foreign flags, as they were compelled to do. Now, that policy prevented the registry of innumerable ships that would have otherwise been purchased abroad and registered under our flag. The said Shipping Board report, in accord with all unbiased authorities, correctly states that—

The American registry law, prohibiting free ships, necessarily operated to bring about a decline of shipping under the American flag. * * * The free ship policy has added greatly to the British merchant marine.

However, our law against the registry of foreign-built ships did not even accomplish what it was intended to do, aid American shipbuilders, because for many years before the recent World War there was no construction in American shipyards of ships for the foreign trade. It did not help the shipbuilders, and it did not provide employment for American labor, but it did help to destroy the American merchant marine. Now, we abandoned that policy in 1914, to the extent that foreign-built ships owned by Americans were admitted to American registry for use exclusively in the foreign trade, and I just want to read from the 1916 annual report of the Department of Commerce one citation showing the immediate effect:

The American merchant marine, which is another great weapon needed for our foreign trade, has never before increased so fast as during the past two years. In that time we have doubled our shipping in the foreign trade—from 1,076,152 gross tons to 2,191,715 gross tons. No other nation in so short a time so increased the shipping in foreign trade.

Now, listen—

Under the ship registry act admitting foreign-built ships to American registry for foreign trade 182 vessels of 616,033 gross tons have been added to our merchant marine.

The pending bill, with a minor exception, provides against the future registry of foreign-built ships by withholding the subsidies and aids from them.

I have briefly discussed the chief reasons why our merchant marine engaged in the foreign trade has not kept pace with our growth in population and with the enormous growth of our foreign commerce.

GROWTH OF AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

However, our merchant marine is not in near as bad shape as they would have you believe. While, for reasons which I have explained and other reasons which I shall later explain, there has been a decrease in the relative amount of our foreign commerce carried in American ships, yet there has been a large increase in our total merchant marine, including our ships engaged in the foreign trade, in the coastwise trade, and in the fisheries, as shown by the figures taken from the report of the Commissioner of Navigation for the year ended June 30, 1921, pages 160 to 163, inclusive, giving the total documented tonnage of the United States merchant marine for the years stated:

	Gross tons.
1789	201,562
1800	972,492
1820	1,280,167
1840	2,180,764
1850	3,535,454
1860	5,353,868

	Gross tons.
1870	4,246,507
1880	4,068,034
1890	4,424,497
1900	5,164,839
1910	7,508,082
1915	8,389,429
1920	16,324,024
1921	18,282,136

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Our merchant marine did not keep pace with our enormous growth in commerce. I yield for a question.

Mr. EDMONDS. I would state, page 41, paragraph 5, we do allow compensation to be paid to foreign-built vessels registered under the laws of the United States, provided, of course, they are agreed to as being strictly needed by five members of the board.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Oh, yes; there is an exception with a purpose, in my opinion, only to permit the registry of certain ships of a certain line, the International Mercantile Marine Corporation, whose obligation to remain under the British flag expires in a year or so.

Mr. EDMONDS. Is it desirable to have those ships under the American flag?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes; that is all right. But I was telling the reason for the exception; however, I would not play any favorites or permit the Shipping Board to do so. I would permit all Americans to purchase their ships where they can get them cheapest and then register under the American flag.

Mr. EDMONDS. I want to say to the gentleman that of course we are trying to protect American labor in the shipyards, because 50 per cent of the cost of the ships is labor.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. But you are not protecting American labor, as it has not resulted in any increased production, just as I explained. Under our policy there has been no shipbuilding in American yards for the foreign trade, and consequently no employment of American labor.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. I did not quite understand what you mean by the statement that our merchant marine was growing. What time and what period has that reference to?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Well, all along, so far as the tonnage of our entire merchant marine is concerned, but, as I was conceding, there had been a decline in the percentage of our foreign commerce that we carried.

Mr. SNELL. I understood the lowest ebb of our merchant marine that was employed in foreign service was in the period just before the World War, and that we actually had just six ships engaged in foreign trade at that time. If that is so, I can understand your other statement that we were growing. I think I am correctly informed on that.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. In the first place, that is not correct. The gentleman's assumption is absolutely incorrect.

Mr. SNELL. That is not an assumption.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. The gentleman's information is not correct as to the number of ships engaged in the foreign trade. However, we did reach the lowest ebb along in 1909 and 1910 in the percentage of our foreign commerce that we carried. However, a larger tonnage of American-flag vessels entered and cleared in the foreign trade of the United States in 1909 than during any previous year in the history of our Republic, and a still larger tonnage in 1910 and for each year following. Such tonnage of American vessels entered and cleared in our foreign trade in 1909 amounted to 17,263,189 for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1909, and this was increased to 27,470,703 for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1914, the increase being still greater after the World War commenced. (See page 178 of the 1920 report of the Commissioner of Navigation.) There was a corresponding increase in the American tonnage registered for the foreign trade and in the value of our commerce carried. (See pages 177 and 222 of the same report.)

UNITED STATES MERCHANT MARINE SECOND LARGEST IN WORLD.

Prior to the outbreak of the World War the United States had the largest merchant marine of any nation on earth except Great Britain, and the United States at that time had the greatest merchant marine engaged in the foreign trade except Great Britain, and Germany exceeded us in that respect to a very slight amount. And at the present time, when they talk about the deplorable situation we are in, we have nearly as large a merchant marine as Great Britain, and our merchant marine is equal to the combined merchant marines of the next five largest in the world.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. Is it not true that the greatest period of industrial and commercial prosperity in the United States was the period when its merchant fleet disappeared?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. That is true, if you mean when the percentage of our foreign commerce carried in American-flag ships was at its lowest.

Mr. LONDON. In other words, American capital found it more convenient to employ the carriers of other nations?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. That is the fact exactly, just as I explained. That is one of the reasons that both labor and capital found it more profitable to engage in internal development.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, at that point will the gentleman permit me also to ask a question?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Was it not also a fact that when American capital sought to enter the overseas trade, as common-sense business men they bought British vessels, because they could be bought at half the price?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes; they could buy them cheaper and they had to register under the British flag.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes; and they sailed them under the British flag.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes. Under our law they could not buy a British ship and sail it under our flag.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Was it not a fact that American capital was employed in shipping but engaged under a foreign flag?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes; a large amount.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I want to understand the gentleman's statement. Does the gentleman say that in 1914 our foreign tonnage was exceeded only by that of Great Britain and Germany?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes; according to the Commissioner of Navigation.

CONDITION OF AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE BETTER THAN REPRESENTED.

Now, what is the present situation? They talk about the "deplorable situation." I have here a bulletin of the American Bureau of Shipping, published by the American Bureau of Shipping, and on the first inside page there appears this:

THE AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

The growth of the American merchant marine since the close of the war is one of the most amazing developments of modern international commerce. It is also an achievement in which every American citizen can take pride. Never before in the history of the world has a country succeeded in creating such a great merchant marine in so short a time.

The last decades of the nineteenth century witnessed a discouraging decay of American shipping. The American flag, which once flew at the mastsheads of thousands of splendid American vessels, almost disappeared from the ocean. Americans who wished to cross to other lands were forced to sail on foreign vessels; American cargoes were stowed in the holds of alien ships. Then the World War brought the country to a realization of how serious this situation had become.

And to-day this state of affairs has been reversed. To-day American vessels are sailing the seven seas, helping to spread American business all over the world. Five great lines of Government-owned passenger ships are in operation—the United States Lines between New York and Europe, the Munson Steamship Lines between New York and the east coast of South America, the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. between San Francisco, Honolulu, and the Orient, the Admiral-Oriental Line between Seattle and the Orient, and the Los Angeles Steamship Co. between Los Angeles and Honolulu. American merchant vessels sail direct to the most remote parts on the globe, from Scandinavia to Cape Town. On every run, competition is keen; ships of all nations are bidding eagerly for the trade. But in spite of every disadvantage, American ships, officered and manned by American seamen, are winning out.—(Statement issued by United States Shipping Board.)

And who is this from? It is from a statement issued by the present United States Shipping Board and published in this official publication. And so it is, and without subsidy.

I want to state furthermore that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, under the worst shipping depression in all history, the American ships carried 51.6 per cent of our foreign commerce, including both imports and exports, and they did just as well for the fiscal year ending last June. In order to let you know what that means, it is conceded by experts on the subject that it is practically impossible for any nation to carry little, if any, more than 50 per cent of the commerce between it and foreign nations, because other foreign nations with their merchant marines have the advantage in shipping from their countries, and no one nation can get it all; no one nation can get little, if any, more than 50 per cent of it.

Is not that natural? It is not only natural but it is a fact. Now, as evidence of that, Great Britain, which carries 53 per cent of all the world's commerce, including that which she carries between herself and her colonies, including that which she carries between her colonies, and including that which she carries between herself, her colonies, and foreign countries, and including that which she carries between foreign countries, yet, carrying all that enormous amount of commerce, with her great fleet, with her efficiently managed fleet, Great Britain succeeds in carrying only 53 per cent of the commerce between herself and foreign nations.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Are most of the lines that are now established operating at a profit?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I think that the private lines are, and in that connection I want to say that eight private ship operators, most of whom are also operating Shipping Board vessels, appeared as witnesses in behalf of this bill, and every one of them admitted that they were either operating at a profit or without a loss. We asked the Shipping Board to file statements of the profits and losses of the different companies that are operating Shipping Board vessels and they refused to do it. They refused to disclose that information to Congress, just like they refused to disclose a lot of other valuable information that we asked for.

Mr. McDUFFIE. What was the objection to letting you have that information?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. They gave various reasons and sometimes gave none. One of the reasons given was that it was not in the interest of public policy.

When members of the committee were endeavoring to get certain facts from the Shipping Board, Meyer Lissner, a member of the Shipping Board, who represented the Shipping Board at the hearings practically all of the time, said:

If we attempted to put in the absolute detail on all these things, these hearings would go on until the end of time. We have to use good judgment and good common sense about a good many of these things, and this is one of them. (Hearings, p. 1532.)

And yet the Shipping Board introduced the most minute details in an effort to prove whatever they wanted shown.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And just like they refuse to have their accounts audited, by having such provisions placed in this bill as prevent a proper auditing.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes; and I suppose for the same reason that, although repeatedly requested to furnish itemized statements of the disbursements of the $1,715,000 advertising fund at their disposal this year, they have never furnished same, although they promised to do that.

Mr. BEEDY. The Government of England owns no fleet, does she?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. No.

Mr. BEEDY. The American Government does own a fleet?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BEEDY. In your minority report, on page 6, you state:

We readily concede the desirability and importance of having an adequate merchant marine. We are opposed to permanent Government ownership or operation of our merchant ships. We favor the sale of them to private owners as soon as practicable.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes; that is right. The full statement of the minority report in this particular is as follows:

We are opposed to permanent Government ownership or operation of our merchant ships; we favor the sale of them to private owners as soon as practicable, but at such time and in such manner as will protect the public interest and insure the establishment and maintenance of a real American merchant marine for the interest of the whole American people, and so as to prevent our ships from falling into the hands of a large syndicate, or our merchant marine being controlled by a few large companies which would drive out of business the smaller companies and numerous valuable trade routes.

We readily concede the desirability and importance of having an adequate American merchant marine, but we insist that such can be had without imposing upon the American people the tremendous burdens carried in the pending bill. This bill is based upon a false diagnosis of the situation; it treats the symptoms and does not deal with the basic difficulties, which can be and should be remedied in a businesslike and statesmanlike manner. It attempts to overcome artificial difficulties by superficial stimulants instead of removing the causes. Subsidies have never built up or maintained a merchant marine, as is conclusively shown in the Shipping Board report before referred to and by all of the unbiased authorities who have discussed the subject.

Even the committee report on this bill concedes that—
"A permanent and healthy merchant marine can never be established merely by paying subsidies."

If those engaged in the shipping business would devote as much time to efforts to establish and manage their enterprises along efficient and economical lines as they do in proclaiming that they can not succeed, in an effort to obtain Government aid, they would succeed. Those who adopt the method suggested do succeed.

Mr. BEEDY. You further say:

We will offer a constructive solution of the problem with which we now stand confronted.

What does the Democratic Party offer to this do-nothing Congress for a constructive policy to get us out of the situation in which we now find ourselves unless it be to drift on indefinitely at a loss of $50,000,000 a year? There is no opportunity to sell ships to-day at a fair price, is there?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 30 minutes more.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Thank you. I want to consume a little more time. I was coming to that, but I desired to analyze the situation before presenting an alternative program. And right in that connection I was going to compare the situation here and in Great Britain, because the comparisons all the way along by the Shipping Board have been as between the United States and Great Britain. They want to equal or excel Great Britain, but they are attempting to do so by adopting some of the policies which England long ago discarded as failures, and by utterly ignoring the policies and methods by which the British have built up and maintained their great merchant marine. If we adopt her policy we will succeed in maintaining as large a foreign-trade merchant marine as is practicable to be maintained in this country. But it is not practicable for us to own or maintain as large a merchant marine as Great Britain does any more than it is practicable for Great Britain to have as much railroad mileage as the United States has. Why? Simply because most of Great Britain's commerce is on the sea, while 85 per cent of our commerce is within the confines of our own borders.

Edward C. Plummer, one of the commissioners of the United States Shipping Board, who is going over the country making speeches in behalf of this bill instead of attending to his duties, made such a speech in Boston yesterday. He is quoted in the press as having said, in part:

We seek no monopoly in trade. We recognize that from the very nature of her Empire Great Britain may well aspire to have a merchant tonnage three times the size of that which may carry our flag in foreign trade; but every American can and should stand squarely on the proposition enunciated by Fisher Ames, of Massachusetts, that we must always have a merchant fleet capable of handling 60 per cent of the cargoes which our people furnish to and take from the other nations of the world.

If one-third as large a merchant marine as Great Britain's would carry 60 per cent of our foreign commerce, is it not absurd for us to undertake to establish and maintain in foreign trade as large a merchant marine as Great Britain?

As a matter of fact, our entire merchant marine is now three-fourths as large as the entire merchant marine of Great Britain.

Admiral Benson, former chairman of the Shipping Board and now a member thereof, said in a speech before the South Atlantic Ports Association, November 15, 1920:

We should always bear in mind that other nations are more dependent upon a successful merchant marine than the United States.

REASONS FOR ENGLAND'S LARGE AND SUCCESSFUL MERCHANT MARINE.

Great Britain is first in shipping because she is first in foreign commerce. The reasons why she is first in foreign commerce may be briefly summarized as follows:

1. She imports practically all of her food and raw materials and exports her surplus manufactured products.
2. Her free-trade policy.
3. The enormous trade between her and her numerous wealthy colonies.

4. The British have large investments in their various colonies and in foreign countries and have well-established, world-wide mercantile, banking, and shipping connections.

Additional reasons for the success of her merchant marine may be summarized as follows:

5. England's resources and industries being fully developed, capital, looking for an outlet, naturally turned to the sea.
6. Because of national pride and because of the fact that investments in maritime enterprises are widely scattered among the English people—as is the case in all European countries—they loyally support their own merchant marine.
7. Great Britain's imports and exports are well balanced, so that her ships carry incoming and outgoing cargoes.
8. Great Britain's merchant marine enterprises are efficiently and economically managed on businesslike principles. By reason of such methods she is able to successfully compete and outdistance other national merchant marines which receive subsidies and pay much smaller wages.
9. English coaling stations are established throughout the world where needed for the British merchant marine and Navy.

In other words, the causes for Great Britain's maritime success are natural and not artificial. Her merchant marine is great, not because it has been aided by legislation but because it has been unhampered by legislation.

While the proponents of this bill continually refer to England as our real maritime rival and set up England's merchant marine as a criterion, the goal which we should attain, yet they steadfastly ignore the reasons for the British merchant marine's success and refuse to emulate the methods by which it has succeeded. They propose to follow policies which England long ago tried and discarded as useless and worthless. They propose to adopt England's old discredited subsidy experiments, which she abandoned forever in 1694—228 years ago. They propose to cling to the discredited policy of refusing to permit the registry of foreign-built ships, which policy England discarded 72 years ago.

If we are wise enough to profit by England's experience, with a view of maintaining a merchant marine as successful as England's, we should not adopt those false theories which England has tried and found wanting and long ago discarded, but should adopt the policies which England has accepted and retained and which have resulted in building up and maintaining her great merchant marine.

Having by unnatural restraints and artificial policies hampered and diminished our commercial eminence on the seas, it is now proposed to maintain an American merchant marine—not by removing the causes of the difficulties but by attempting to counteract them by the adoption of still further artificial means. It is proposed to combat the injurious effects of one unnatural artificial system by the adoption of another. Could anything be more economically unwise, impracticable, and futile?

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman permit me? Great Britain owns no fleet. Does the gentleman advise a further drifting policy with Government ownership at a loss of $50,000,000 a year indefinitely until world conditions enable us to make some attempt to get out of the business?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Let me answer that.

Mr. BEEDY. Yes or no?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I have already shown that the passage of this bill would not stop said expense or result in the sale of our ships at any fair price, or get the Government out of the business. I have already said that we are opposed to permanent Government ownership; but I do say, as I have tried to explain, and proven by the witnesses in favor of this bill, that now is no time to throw this fleet on the market, because it can not be put to sea; it can not be sold at anything like what it can be sold for later; and having incurred the expense that we have in this matter I say that these trade routes, which the Shipping Board say cover every needed, essential route between this country and other nations, should be continued until world conditions improve, and then that we should sell them as going concerns at a time when they can be bought, paid for, and maintained.

WOULD ABOLISH SHIPPING BOARD.

And I want to say in this connection that in the meantime we should immediately abolish the Shipping Board [applause] because they have not properly functioned. They have not functioned and are not functioning in the interest of the people. They are controlled by private shipping interests. They have not got the interests of a healthy merchant marine at heart. They are not going to solve this question.

I would abolish absolutely the Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet Corporation, and I would appoint a joint bipartisan congressional committee to investigate and cull out thousands of these Shipping Board employees who are not needed [applause], and I would reduce that force down to what is actually needed, and thereby get rid of it once—not in 30 months, as Mr. Lasker indicated, or in several years, but at once—of nearly all of that $50,000,000 expense. [Applause.]

WOULD CANCEL MO 4 CONTRACTS.

In the meantime, I would also do away with the managing-agent contracts, known as the "MO 4 contracts," under which nearly all of our Shipping Board vessels in operation are being operated, and under which the managing agents are paid a commission of 5 per cent of the gross freight receipts on outgoing cargo and 2½ per cent on incoming cargo (hearings, pp. 1076-1078); they are also paid husbanding fees, which I shall later explain.

Chairman Lasker testified at hearings before a subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee, July 7, 1921, and described this MO 4 contract as follows:

The contract is the most shameful piece of chicanery, inefficiency, and of looting of the Public Treasury that the human mind can devise.

Later Chairman Lasker gave out a statement which was carried in the Associated Press, August 19, 1921, the article stating in part:

Decision to substitute a "bare-boat" charter for the system under which practically all Shipping Board vessels are now operated was announced last night by Chairman Lasker after a conference with President Harding. Instead of the boats being turned over to operators on a 5 per cent commission basis, it is the board's intention to adopt a uniform charter, under which the vessels will be leased on a tonnage basis, the lessee assuming the same risks of profit or loss as he would under the routine commercial charter.

However, Chairman Lasker has not changed any of the existing MO 4 contracts. While he laid up a large number of ships, yet those which were permitted to continue in operation, were permitted to continue under the MO 4 contracts, which Lasker described as above stated; and he was doubtless correct in his characterization. They have changed no MO 4 contracts to bare-boat charter contracts, although this great advertiser announced to the world more than a year ago that he was going to make such change.

He has not only not made such change but he called the managing agents of Shipping Board vessels together in Washington, June 21, 1922, and voluntarily adopted and announced a policy of paying such managing agents additional compensation in the shape of husbanding fees, under which since that time operators handling 5 vessels or less receive $400 per month per ship in addition to the regular commission previously paid, and operators handling up to 10 vessels receive $400 per month per ship for the first 5 ships and $250 per month for each additional ship. It was announced by the Shipping Board at the time that this allowance of husbanding fees would add $1,200,000 annually to the cost of operations, but it was estimated that more than this amount would be saved by new arrangements for subsistence—the allowance for subsistence being reduced from 80 cents to 65 cents per day per man at that time—stevedoring, and general supplies.

Why should not the taxpayers have been given the benefit of such savings? Why were these additional voluntary bounties given to the managing agents, and by what authority? Was it done for the purpose of preventing a showing of profits, to the end that they might make out a stronger case for this ship subsidy bill?

As previously stated, I recommend an immediate abandonment of all of those MO 4 contracts. I would lease the ships on bare-boat charter contracts wherever possible, giving preference to those now operating the ships. Where the present managing agents should be unwilling to change to bare-boat charter contracts, I would, wherever possible, lease the ships on the respective lines to responsible persons "who have the support, financial and otherwise, of the domestic communities primarily interested in such lines," as provided in the merchant marine act of 1920, and who would agree to maintain such lines. On account of depressed conditions in shipping, and in order to insure the maintenance of these trade routes, I would lease the ships on very low bare-boat charter rates. I would also give the charterers an option to buy the ships, and in the event they should subsequently purchase the ships, they should be given credit on the purchase price of the amounts which they had paid for charter hire. By paying the very reasonable charter hire of 15 cents per ton per month, they could easily pay for the vessels on a basis of $30 per ton, at which the best are now being offered, within 10 or 12 years, and so pay same out of the net profits on the basis of present freight rates and cost of operation, including all incidental expenses and charges.

I am advised that the customary bare-boat charter hire in foreign countries is from 30 to 60 cents per ton per month. Consequently the charter hire mentioned would give the American operators a large advantage.

I would require those receiving ships under bare-boat charter contracts to execute adequate bonds for the protection of the Government's interest. The adoption of the policy suggested would permit the dismissal of the very large number of Shipping Board employees which are now retained under the pretext of directing and supervising the Shipping Board operations under the managing agents, as no Government employees would be required under the bare-boat charter system, except a nominal number to tabulate and collect the charter fees.

If any of the ships operating in the trade routes now maintained could not be leased under bare-boat charter contracts, I would have the Government employ salaried managers to operate those lines, in the same manner that Thomas H. Rossbottom is successfully operating the United States Lines, until conditions improve to such an extent that such ships could be sold or leased under bare-boat charter contracts.

This system would eliminate the division of operations in the Shipping Board, as the manager of each line would have his own operating and office force, which, however, would certainly be no larger or more expensive than the organization under the present managing agent of such line. The Government would get all the profits made, and it now has to stand all of the losses under the managing agents. It would save the commission on gross receipts, and also save the husbanding fees now being paid to managing agents. Both plans above suggested are fully authorized in section 7 of the merchant marine act of 1920. In advocating said bill, which bears his name, Senator JONES of Washington, in a speech in the Senate, said in part:

We may differ about Government ownership, but that can be no issue here. The Government owns these ships, whether we will or no. They can not be given away. The people will not stand for that. We must not allow private parties to take the cream of this shipping and let the Government hold the balance to dispose of at a great sacrifice. Grant that Government ownership should end as soon as may be; it must be brought about as nearly as may be without unnecessary sacrifice and just as a private individual would get rid of property he did not desire to keep but that he did not have to dispose of at a sacrifice. Furthermore, the Government is interested in the future success of shipping and the maintenance of a permanent fleet. That object must be kept in view, and in getting rid of Government ownership we must try not to sacrifice our property and must strive also to build up and put our shipping on a permanent basis.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Gentlemen, please refrain. I want to make a connected statement.

Mr. BEGG. I want to ask the gentleman a question on the line of the statement he has just been making.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I must decline.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. The gentleman can not afford to be unfair after being allowed all the time he has.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Your side has not yielded to me a minute and I do not ask you to.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes, I will yield to the gentleman two minutes if he will answer.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I decline to yield, because I do not want to be diverted from the argument I am attempting to make, and for which many of you have asked, to tell you what our solution would be. You have asked for an alternative, so give me a chance to answer.

Having cut this tremendous and expensive Shipping Board organization down as indicated, I would then place the organization under one responsible man. In view of the fact that I do not want it to be permanent, and in view of the fact that we are in favor of getting the Government absolutely out of the business, I would not recommend a Cabinet officer at the head of it; otherwise I would. I would place at the head of it some well-informed, experienced, patriotic shipping man of demonstrated ability and patriotism, absolutely free from any connection with or obligation to any private shipping interests; and I think that an ideal man for that position would be Thomas H. Rossbottom [applause], a man who for 20 years, in competition with foreign lines, has successfully and profitably operated the Panama Steamship Line for a corporation owned by our Government. Mr. Rossbottom was placed in charge by the Shipping Board of the United States lines, and he is operating it at a profit, as shown in the hearings and as I have already stated. Mr. Rossbottom has several times appeared before our committee and, to my mind, displayed more knowledge, more intelligence, upon this subject than any man I ever heard discuss shipping matters. I believe that he would work out the chaotic conditions. I believe it would be but a short time until there would be no loss whatever, and that as soon as world conditions would permit we could dispose of our ships to private interests and maintain the operations and do it without subsidies and upon businesslike principles.

I would transfer a goodly number of our suitable idle ships to the Army and Navy for use as transports and auxiliary vessels in case of emergency. We already have the ships, can get but comparatively little for them, and it is claimed by the Shipping Board that we have many more ships than can be utilized in a long time. It will cost but little to care for the ships while laid up. The cost of lay up for 5 or 10 years would amount to nothing as compared with what the Government would be compelled to pay for ships purchased from private interests, or what it would have to pay for the use of ships. This would be in the interest of national defense and at the same time a protection to the public purse.

During the recent war American shipowners ran up their rates on the public and their Government more than 1,250 per cent on the average over pre-war rates, as stated at the hearings by W. L. Marvin and W. J. Love (pp. 1083, 1521-22).

I would place all shipbuilding materials on the free list and keep them there. I would remove all restrictions against the use of imported materials in our ship construction. Prior to the act of 1909, which permitted ships constructed in whole or in part of imported materials to engage in coastwise trade six months out of the year, and the passage of the Panama Canal act of August 24, 1912, which permitted such ships to engage in the coasting trade during the entire year, American manufacturers sold steel plates, the chief material entering into ship construction, from $6 to $15 per ton cheaper in England than they sold them for in the United States. Since the passage of those acts they began selling steel plates cheaper in the United States than they or anybody else sold them for in England, until finally in December, 1914, the selling price of steel plates in the United States was $23.74 and in Great Britain $35.59, and the differential in favor of the United States finally went to over $20 per ton; steel plates sold for $8 per ton cheaper in the United States than in Great Britain the month following the passage of the said 1912 act. In a recent statement P. A. S. Franklin, president of the International Mercantile Marine, declared that under the provisions of the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act—

Now we can't even paint a ship in a foreign port without paying duty on it when the vessel reaches the United States.

I would permit the registry of foreign ships under the American flag.

However, I prefer to defer a further discussion of the policies which I recommend until I have completed my analysis of the true situation and laid the basis therefor, after which I shall summarize in detail the plan which I offer as a substitute for the pending bill.

Homer L. Fergerson, president of the Newport News Shipbuilding Co.—which is reconditioning the Leviathan—and a member of the claims commission of the Shipping Board, said:

England's superiority in maritime affairs is due to her shipowners and traders being expert in all branches of the shipping business, while ours are not.

W. J. Love, vice president of the Emergency Fleet Corporation and in charge of traffic, and one of the $35,000 experts, was asked at the hearings why it was that Great Britain without the payment of subsidies and paying the highest wages of any nation except America had been all along able to successfully and profitably compete against other European and oriental nations which employed cheaper labor and also paid subsidies, and his reply was:

It is a question of organization. Every man thoroughly knows his business.

At another point Mr. Love said that—

Management is the essence of successful operation.

Winthrop L. Marvin, general manager of the American Steamship Owners' Association, and one of the most active advocates of this bill, in a letter published in the May 20, 1922, issue of the Nautical Gazette, declared:

This is the world-around combination for the preferment of British ships which has long enabled those ships to meet the competition of the lower wages of some other nations. But no similar combination covering all ports and trades has yet been built up by the United States. When we have it, as our forefathers had in the heyday of our clippers and packet ships, we may get along without subsidy, but not until then can we possibly do so.

SUBSIDIES WRONG IN PRINCIPLE.

Are we Americans going to concede that, although we can excel the world with our genius and intelligence, skill and resources in every other line of industry and endeavor, we are absolutely impotent when it comes to the maritime industry. That is what this bill means, and it is all it means. Instead of presenting a remedy it presents a quack nostrum. Instead of presenting something that will build up and maintain a healthy merchant marine it simply applies an artificial stimulant.

Ship subsidies are not only unwise, expensive, uneconomic, and self-defeating, but they are debauching. There is no greater evil than for an administration to build upon the sale of favors. Once begun such a habit grows by what it feeds upon. Once a party has debased government to an agency for collecting taxes from the many to be dispensed as subsidies and gratuities to the few, the abandonment of such a policy is difficult if not impossible.

Like all professional mendicants, the recipients of subsidies lose all independence and self-reliance, all pride and self-respect. They are not even in the infant class. An infant soon reaches an age when it becomes ashamed to longer nurse the bottle and will wean itself, but not so with those who have been permitted to nurse from the Public Treasury. The lustier they get the greedier they grow.

If we adopt this unsound, unclean policy it will become an incurable cancer and eat into the very vitals of our institutions. It will poison the entire system of our body politic.

SUBSIDIES HAVE NEVER BUILT UP A MERCHANT MARINE.

The worst feature of it all is that subsidies never have built up a merchant marine and they never will.

I shall not at this time enter into any extended discussion of the experience of other countries, but I shall quote briefly from the first report prepared at the instance of the present Shipping Board entitled "Report on the history of shipping discriminations and on various forms of Government aid to shipping, compiled by the United States Shipping Board," and which was inserted in the record of the hearings as Appendix A.

(Hearings, 67 to 103.) After discussing the experience of the various countries this report in its final conclusions states in part:

A study of the authorities on subsidies, taking into account the policies adopted by various countries, would seem to indicate that with the exception of Japan the policy has not been important in the building up of a merchant marine.

As a matter of fact, the growth of the Japanese merchant marine was not due to subsidies, but simply coincident with the marvelous growth of all the Japanese industries, as recognized and stated by the standard authorities, and as I fully showed in a speech delivered in the House last June.

GREAT BRITAIN DOES NOT PAY SUBSIDIES.

Desperate advocates of ship subsidies repeatedly make the statement that Great Britain pays subsidies, and that in such manner her merchant marine has been established and maintained. This is absolutely untrue. In view of the fact that Great Britain is our chief maritime rival, and nearly all the comparisons have been made with Great Britain, I wish to cite some evidence on the subject.

R. T. Merrill, an official of the Shipping Board, and a star witness in behalf of this bill, said at the hearings—page 634: No, sir; practically no subsidy was ever given by England.

Meyer Lissner, one of the commissioners of the Shipping Board, and a partisan advocate of this bill, stated at the hearings—page 635:

They (Great Britain) have never given anything, so far as I know, purely as a subsidy to build up their merchant marine.

The above-mentioned report compiled by the present Shipping Board states, in part, as follows:

Great Britain has never granted general navigation bounties nor construction bounties, with the exception of the early Elizabethan subsidies above mentioned in 1662-1694—

Which said report states—had no noticeable effect on ship construction. Practically the only money aid given by Britain to its marine is in the form of postal subventions.

The net postal subvention, after deductions, paid by England to its various services amounts to about two and a half million dollars.

All the writers seem to agree that the growth of the British merchant marine is in no sense due to the small subsidy paid, admitting that the payments are in excess of the postal service rendered. The growth of the British marine was probably due to the early development of British industry, the acquisition of extensive colonial possessions, and the monopolistic or preferred position in colonial trade. The cheapness of construction and the concentration on the business account for most of its success.

In this connection it is interesting to note that our ocean mail act of 1891 authorizes as liberal a policy as Great Britain has ever pursued with regard to mail contracts. In fact, we are now paying about twice as much annually for the carriage of our ocean mails to foreign countries as Great Britain is paying. However, this is not a subsidy either in the case of Great Britain or the United States; it is a payment for service, either on the basis of ocean postage rates or under contracts let by competitive bidding. It is just as legitimate and proper as is the payment for the carriage of our mails on land.

As stated by Grosvenor M. Jones, in his "Government Aid to Merchant Shipping," and by other authorities, at least 95 per cent of the total tonnage under the British flag has long consisted of cargo ships, the commerce carriers, which never received one cent mail pay or Government aid in any other form.

Much has been said by the proponents of this bill about the loan made by the British Government to the Cunard Line, which is offered as an excuse for the $125,000,000 loan fund provided in this bill, and apparently as an excuse for the various other subsidies and aids carried in the bill. This transaction is correctly described in the above-mentioned work on "Government Aid to Merchant Shipping," by Grosvenor M. Jones, as follows:

The only instance of a loan to a steamship company by the British Government was the loan made to the Cunard Steamship Co. under the mail and Admiralty subvention contract of 1903. Under this contract the British Government loaned the steamship company £2,600,000 ($12,652,900) for the building of two steamers (the Lusitania and the Mauretania) that should be faster than any afloat and suitable for the use of the Admiralty. The loan was made at the rate of 2½ per cent, which is about 2 per cent lower than the rate at which the company could have borrowed a similar amount in the open market.

However, it is quite probable that the British Government could borrow the money at that time at as low a rate as that charged the Cunard Co.

The British Government is a stockholder in the Cunard Co. to the extent of one share and has a mortgage on its fleet and other property as a security for the loan. The Government has, moreover, the right to charter or purchase at agreed rates all or any of the company's vessels at any time, and requires that the company shall remain a purely British undertaking; that its management shall be in the hands of, and that its shares and vessels shall be held by, British subjects only; that it shall not give preferential rates to foreigners; and that it shall not unduly raise freights.

Dunmore, in his book on "Ship Subsidies," declares that—there is nothing in the experience of our own or other nations to justify any faith that permanent benefits would result from a subsidy policy.

The recognized standard work on the subject is "Meeker's History of Shipping Subsidies," and it shows conclusively and declares emphatically that subsidies have proven a failure wherever tried, with the result that the shipping interests have almost invariably begged for more and more subsidies, frequently being influential enough to secure additional bounties from time to time.

SUBSIDY-PAYING NATIONS ABANDONING POLICY AS UNWISE.

However, it has become so evident that government bounties and other aids to shipping are economically unsound, unwise, and futile that such policies are being either curtailed or abandoned by many nations which have been most liberal in granting same. This is notably the case with Japan, France, and Italy, which have been the most liberal subsidy-paying nations. These facts are shown by articles which have been appearing in recent issues of "Commerce Reports," published by the United States Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. For instance, it is stated in the Commerce Reports of September 25, 1922 (page 838):

In brief, within two years submarine warfare developed Japanese shipbuilding and Japanese shipping at sevenfold the rate of its increase in 20 years under a carefully devised bounty project. The purpose of the shipbuilding bounty law of 1896 was being accomplished by other instrumentalities, and in 1918 the Japanese Government suspended its operation; so far as can be ascertained, Japan has no intention of putting it into effect again in the near future.

This same article shows that the entire Japanese budget for 1922-23, covering every form of aid to shipping, including mail pay, is approximately $5,000,000—less than it was even 15 years ago.

In the August 7, 1922, issue of Commerce Reports (page 398-400), appears an article by E. T. Chamberlain, Transportation Division of the Department of Commerce, on "French Maritime Policy," in which it is shown that France is retrenching considerably in her aid to shipping. I quote briefly from said article, as follows:

The French navigation, construction, and equipment bounty act of April 18, 1906, expired in 1918. * * * The budget for 1922, accordingly, contains an appropriation for the current year of 4,000,000 francs, and the budget estimates for 1923 provide for 3,000,000 francs. The appropriations for navigation, construction, and equipment bounties during 1913 were $5,425,000 (about 26,000,000 francs).

The French construction and navigation bounty system, which began with the act of 1881 and was continued, with modifications, up to 1918, was the result of the loss in 1871 of her rich iron-ore mines through German annexation of Alsace and part of Lorraine.

In another recent issue of Commerce Reports appears an article by Mr. Chamberlain on "The Italian Merchant Marine," which concludes as follows:

Indeed, even in July the Government's explanation of the budget estimates for 1922-23 seemed to forecast reductions or abandonment of the construction and navigation bounty system.

The annual report of the Commissioner of Navigation for 1909 detailed the Government aid paid shipping by all nations, and contained the following résumé:

The aggregate amount paid by foreign nations in the form of subsidies, ocean-mail pay, navigation and construction bounties, admiralty subventions, naval reserve appropriations, fisheries bounties, refund of Suez Canal tolls, and other forms of contribution, which directly or indirectly add to the volume of business under their respective national flags, is upward of $46,000,000 a year. (P. 19.)

TOTAL AID TO SHIPPING PAID BY ALL NATIONS.

The aggregate amount of Government aid to shipping granted by all the nations is considerably less now than it was then.

If the pending bill should become a law it would impose upon our National Treasury burdens equal to about twice as much as the subsidies, bounties, ocean-mail pay, and all other aids of every character and description given shipping by all the other nations combined.

ROBERT DOLLAR SAYS SUBSIDIES NOT NEEDED.

In the last June issue of Nation's Business, the official organ of the United States Chamber of Commerce, is an article by Robert Dollar, who ever since 1893 has operated a large number of ships in the foreign trade under both American and foreign flags. In this article he says:

A subsidy for American ships has been proposed in Washington. The whole country, as well as the shipowners of America, are very deeply interested in that question. I have been operating ships for a good many years, and I feel that I ought to know something about this subject. I have always felt that a shipowner that must have "pap" from the Government does not deserve to be in the business.

[Laughter.]

In another article that appeared in the August, 1922, issue of the same magazine, Mr. Dollar expresses it as follows:

We do not need "pap" that destroys hardihood and resourcefulness.

In the first article mentioned Mr. Dollar continues:

We do not need any advantage over the other fellow; we can take care of ourselves; but we do ask for an even break. Government interference and foolish laws have prevented that.

Then he explains how it was he had made a success by establishing foreign offices and foreign trade connections.

The entire article is illuminative, but I shall only read from same briefly, in order that you may obtain some idea of the efficient businesslike methods employed by Mr. Dollar and by which he succeeded. I quote from the article further:

We bought the Newsboy of about 300 tons, and she paid for herself in less than a year. We then bought several more vessels. That was in 1893.

It is about 20 years since we sent our first steamer to China. It was the M. S. Dollar, and the result of that voyage was a loss. This convinced me that if we were to make a success of this trade we would have to have an organization on the ground. So I made a trip and carefully looked over the field, and, as a result, opened an office in one small room on the Szechuen Road, Shanghai.

This was certainly starting on a very small scale, but this is my ideal—start on a small scale and work up from a sure foundation. We were forced to move several times to get larger quarters, and we now have our own office building, one of the handsomest in the wonderful city of Shanghai. At present we have 11 offices in the Far East, and each one of them seems to have plenty to do. The same progress has been made in America. Twenty years ago we only had the San Francisco office; now we have five others. Our fleet has grown until it includes 13 good cargo steamers and 10 sailing vessels.

The necessity for return cargoes made us open our offices in the Far East. We filled the ships with our lumber on this side, but we had to work it so they made a profit both ways.

VIEWS OF P. A. S. FRANKLIN.

In a statement by P. A. S. Franklin, president of the International Mercantile Marine Co., in hearings before the United States Shipping Board held in New York October 4, 1921, Mr. Franklin said, in part:

Simply as an example I would like to say that we have for some years past operated one of our most important passenger services (the Red Star Line between New York and Antwerp) with a fleet in which there are steamers of American, Belgian, and British registry. These ships have run side by side year in and year out and without discrimination of any kind. We have done it successfully for years, and can do it even more successfully on a larger scale.

This same company more than two years ago, before there was any prospect of a subsidy, submitted a bid of $28,500,000 for 30 certain vessels owned by the Shipping Board. The offer included an agreement to operate them under the American flag and in the American trade, chiefly in the north Atlantic and the remainder to Mediterranean, Adriatic, and Black Sea ports and to South America. The Shipping Board was about to accept that offer when William R. Hearst filed a bill of injunction and the sale was enjoined. He did a very bad thing, because more was offered then by far than can now be procured for these same ships. However, this substantial offer showed conclusively that the International Mercantile Marine Co. knew from experience that they could successfully operate that large number of ships under the American flag and chiefly in trades where competition is the sharpest in the world.

A letter recently appeared in the New York World by a shipowner and operator, William Willard Howard, in which he says:

A Government ship subsidy is not necessary for profitable operation of American ships. An American merchant marine can not be built permanently upon a foundation of Government subsidy. * * * As an American shipowner I say that we can put the American flag upon the Seven Seas and keep it there without a ship subsidy or other Government aid, but we can not do it with lawyers and advertising agents and manufacturers of washing machines on the flying bridge.

[Laughter and applause.]

Now, on the question of the alleged differential on labor, I want to call attention to the fact that Capt. Daniel A. J. Sullivan appeared before the Society of Naval Architects and Marine Engineers at New York November 12, 1922, and stated:

American steamship lines can equalize their operating costs with their foreign competitors, but a subsidy is necessary to offset the higher first costs, depreciation, and insurance.

He is wrong about that, for the reason that we propose to sell these ships at a small percentage of even their pre-war cost and value, and at a much lower price than most foreign competitors obtained theirs. Those who already had ships before the war made such large profits with them during the war that they earned many times their total investment, as is shown in the hearings and in the minority report.

In this connection, I call attention to a very instructive article that appeared in the September-October, 1921, issue of Bulletin of the American Bureau of Shipping, as follows:

AMERICAN YARDS MEET FOREIGN COMPETITION.

Mr. George J. Baldwin, chairman of the New York Shipbuilding Corporation and president of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co., recently pointed out some of the encouraging points sometimes overlooked by American shipbuilders in these days of depression, which it will be well to bear in mind.

"Our yards," says Mr. Baldwin, "attract the best type of workmen at high wages; gives them the most modern tools to work with, and can now successfully meet the low-wage competition of foreign countries by the greater speed and, therefore, lowered unit cost of production. The result is that the American yards can turn out ships capable of the most economical operation and can deliver them with a promptness which is a valuable asset in the calculations of the owner or operator."

In this connection it is noted that a British oil-transport company that formerly placed all its orders at home found construction so slow in England that it contracted for six tankers from American shipyards. And, better still, the results have been so satisfactory, both as to quality and speed of delivery, that other orders are likely to come to this country.

One of the past handicaps—the lack of a bureau of shipping—has been happily solved by the rejuvenation, expansion, and modernization of the American Bureau of Shipping, which now bids fair to be the best of the classification societies, and, moreover, a thoroughly American institution. (From Bulletin of the Atlantic Coast Shipbuilders' Association, July 15, 1921.)

On the question of the alleged differential in first cost, I also call attention to the discussion of that subject in the minority report.

NO DISADVANTAGE ON MARINE INSURANCE.

With reference to the alleged disadvantage operating against American shipowners with respect to marine insurance, I call attention to the following testimony in the hearings, pages 2164-2166, given by Meyer Lissner, a commissioner of the present Shipping Board, as follows:

I don't pretend to be a marine insurance expert, but it just happens that marine insurance matters are delegated to me by the board for such consideration as the board gives to them. We have insurance experts in our employ.

Mr. Lissner explains that the marine insurance experts gave the matter some month's study and—came to the conclusions embodied in the report that has been filed here and is in the record, prepared by Doctor Huebner, which is practically Professor Leslie's report, and generally they came to the conclusion that as at present organized the American steamship companies suffer no disability in regard to marine insurance as compared with their foreign competitors; that the market is wide open; that there is direct and complete competition; and there is such keen competition that American shipowners can secure in the open market, class for class, terms for marine insurance and rates comparable with what foreign shipowners may secure.

Mr. DAVIS, Mr. Lissner, hasn't it been thoroughly understood and claimed that in the past the American operators have been at a disadvantage so far as insurance was concerned?

Mr. LISSNER. Yes; up to the time of the organization of these syndicates that was notoriously true.

Mr. DAVIS. When were they organized, Mr. Lissner?

Mr. LISSNER. Just a couple of years ago.

Mr. DAVIS. And you think that they have solved the situation?

Mr. LISSNER. To a very considerable extent; yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS. And do you think that the Edmonds bill, which recently passed Congress, will still further help along that line?

Mr. LISSNER. Yes, sir; I do.

Listen to what Captain Sullivan says further:

The American scale of wages at the moment is actually below the British, the Danish, and the Swedish. The time has arrived to establish the American merchant marine on a clean, efficient business basis, and to regulate the operating cost so that it will be on a par with international competition.

That is what we say. It should be on a clean, businesslike basis.

VIEWS OF J. H. ROSSETER.

I want to now come to a very high authority, Mr. J. H. Rosseter, who has had over 30 years experience in the shipping business. He was vice president and general manager for many years of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. and was later vice president of the William R. Grace Co. For 30 years he operated ships under the American flag on both the Pacific and the Atlantic in competition with British, German, Japanese, Norwegian, and other foreign-flag ships—a man who ought to know something about the game and who does know very much about it. He would certainly have no selfish motive to say anything against a policy which would give him and other ship operators "pap," as described by Mr. Dollar. I want to read now from pages 2242 and 2244 of the hearings.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. EDMONDS. That statement of Mr. Rosseter was a copied statement; it was not given actually before the committee of investigation in regard to this bill.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Oh, no. It was a statement made by him before another congressional committee and inserted in the hearings on this bill.

Mr. EDMONDS. And it was made two or three years ago, when entirely different conditions prevailed. I shall put in the testimony a letter from Mr. Rosseter which shows an entirely different conception from what the gentleman is going to read.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I assume that Mr. Rosseter is a man who is not going to swallow his words. I am going to quote his words exactly. It is true they were made two or three years ago, but the conditions now would make truer what he said at that time. Mr. Rosseter appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means in October, 1919, and, among other things, in referring to the British advantages and disadvantages, he said:

Now, one of the disadvantages they suffer, and one of the great advantages we have is the fact that their merchant marine was constructed to use coal as the agency of propulsion, whereas our fleet is largely composed of so-called oil burners. All British bunker stations in the trades of the world are designed to handle coal. Practically the entire British merchant marine, both as to regular and irregular lines, rests entirely on coal.

The value of oil propulsion we have discovered to be of dominating advantage as compared to coal. In my experience this was made plain as far back as 1900. Generally speaking, the operation of sister ships, one with oil and the other with coal, will show an advantage in the case of the oil burner amounting in dollars and cents to more than the total pay roll for officers and men, not the difference between American and foreign scales, but offsetting the entire pay roll of the ship.

Remember that in connection with the fact that 75 or 80 per cent of the American ships are oil burners and that but 10 per cent of the British and other foreign ships are oil burners. The fact is that we have under the American flag more oil burners than exist in all of the merchant marines of all the balance of the nations of the earth combined. Think of that fact alone in connection with what Mr. Rosseter says and in connection with what Mr. Rosbottom and Mr. Munson say, and in connection with what everybody else says who have testified as to the advantage of oil burners over coal burners. In fact, witnesses in behalf of the bill admitted at the hearings that an oil burner had from 15 to 20 per cent advantage over a coal burner, and the advantage, according to the testimony of others, is even greater than that. That fact alone overcomes every advantage, fancied or real, that foreign merchant marines have over the United States, just as Mr. Rosseter says.

I quote further from said hearings before the Ways and Means Committee:

Mr. TILSON. Would it not be possible for England to build her new ships the same way, so that her new ships could burn oil?

Mr. ROSSETER. Yes, sir; and she is doing that.

Mr. TILSON. But these new ones cost her as much to produce as they cost us?

Mr. ROSSETER. Right. And she has no arrangement for oil-bunkering stations along her trade routes, and she has yet to begin where we began a year ago.

Mr. TILSON. Therefore, so far as her new ships are concerned, we shall be practically on a parity, in your judgment, in the capital cost of a ship and in the cost of operations. Now, what about the difference in wages of the men who man those oil-burning ships run by England and those run by this country?

Mr. ROSSETER. On the oil burner we do away immediately with what is known as the black squad. We have in the engine room what might correctly be designated as junior engineers. They are called water tenders and oilers, etc., but they are a class of men who are in course of apprenticeship for engineers, and the black squad is gone. There is no more shoveling of coal. In the burning of oil it is like the turning of the wick in a lamp, and the black squad is dispensed with, and thus the engine-room force on cargo ships is reduced by from 8 to 14 men, while on passenger liners the crew is reduced from 50 to 250 men, according to the size of the ships.

The advantages of oil burners over coal burners are also clearly set forth in an editorial appearing in the Nautical Gazette of April 15, 1922, in part as follows:

A large reduction in the size of a vessel's personnel; the ability to maintain a full head of steam irrespective of the expenditure of human energy; the elimination of the periodical cleaning of boilers; the avoidance of trimming at sea; the greater rapidity with which ships can be bunkered; the increased radius of action for a given weight of fuel; the ability to make faster turnarounds at the end of a trip and consequently more voyages in the course of the year. Furthermore, oil-burning ships are able to transport more freight than coal-burning vessels, since the oil fuel can be carried in spaces like the double bottoms of ships which can not be used either for coal or cargo. Large economies can also be effected by substituting on ships oil in place of coal burning apparatus. When this change was made on the steamer Arizona, of 8,533 tons gross, of the American-Hawaiian Line, the resultant saving amounted to $105 a day. In the case of an average-sized cargo carrier converted from coal to oil burning, Mr. Robert E. Annin has figured the direct saving at $80 a day.

In the amount of tonnage built to burn oil under boilers, the American merchant marine has a long lead over other maritime competitors. In 1920, when our shipping had not attained its present size, American vessels of 500 tons or over so equipped numbered 1,367, of 6,500,000 tons. Since there were only 2,536 such vessels, of 12,797,000 gross tons, in the whole world, according to the latest available statistics, the United States can justly claim to have a larger oil-burning merchant fleet than all the other nations put together. In estimating the chances of the survival of our merchant marine this is an advantage not to be overlooked. In time other nations may catch up with us in this respect, but for the present we have outdistanced all maritime rivals as regards the more widespread adoption of the burning of liquid fuel on ships.

Reverting to the views of Mr. J. H. Rosseter; he appeared at the hearings before the House Committee on Appropriations in June, 1919, he then being director of the Division of Operations of the Shipping Board. I quote from the hearings as follows:

Mr. VARE. Have you any figures showing the cost of manning an English ship as compared with the cost of manning an American ship of the same size?

Mr. ROSSETER. Yes, sir. The prejudice on account of the somewhat higher wages and of the larger manning scale amounts to about 2 per cent of our operating cost. The difference in cost on 100 per cent of operation. About 2 per cent is the prejudice to the total of operation costs. I have always used that figure as an answer to the widespread impression that that is one of the serious items that we have to encounter. I consider that one of the inconsequential items. It is a prejudice, but it is so small that I express it by saying it is only 2 per cent of the operating average.

I want now to quote from a letter written by Mr. Rosseter to Mr. E. N. Hurley, then chairman of the United States Shipping Board, about two years ago, in which he made some observations. This was done in response to a request from Chairman Hurley for his views on what ought to be done with regard to our merchant marine, because Mr. Hurley and the Shipping Board were then studying the problem through various different investigating committees, and they made an elaborate report. In that letter Mr. Rosseter, in part, said:

As often happens in large questions, the controlling factors are overlooked or neglected. The amount of wages paid is to be properly measured by accomplishment. It is true we have a larger number of officers and men on a ship than required under foreign flags and that we pay higher wages and provide better food, all of which costs more than our competitors are paying. That is not to be contradicted, and for my part it is not to be changed, confidently expecting, as my own experience has proven, that we get better and more efficient service from men who are well paid and well fed.

While that was true at that time, yet under the manning scales now in force, according to the admission of the Shipping Board witnesses, we are now required to employ on American vessels a smaller number of men than is used by any other nation on earth for the same class of ships. We pay a little more for our licensed officers, yet that is more than offset by the fact that we employ a smaller crew than is employed on foreign ships.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In regard to this very question of crews, why is it that all of these vessels come in with larger crews in ballast than they take out, if what he says is true? Nearly every one of them comes to the United States officered and manned with a larger crew than is carried out, and they thus succeed in dumping alien sailors in the United States.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I do not know of that condition.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Maybe the dumping has something to do with it, and not the necessity.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Certainly; but the gentleman is talking about higher efficiency in the crew. They bring in a larger crew on a vessel in ballast than they carry out on a vessel loaded.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I know of no such condition as that.

However, if such things occur it must be either that the white seamen are discharged in Asiatic ports and a larger number of Chinamen are required to perform the same service or else that the ships bring back Chinese for the purpose of smuggling them into this country, as the customary price for smuggling a Chinaman into this country is said to be $1,000 or $1,500. If such a practice is being indulged as indicated by the gentleman's question, it is an additional argument why this bill should be amended so as to provide that no ship shall receive the subsidies and aids in this bill unless their crews shall consist of American citizens or persons eligible to become American citizens. We minority Members have made futile efforts to get the bill amended in that respect.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. That would not have anything to do with this question.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. No; that has no application to what I am discussing. Mr. Rosseter further says:

Much emphasis has been laid on these items and too little attention given to the really important problems. Within our reach are advantages to be gained far offsetting our disadvantages, and I firmly believe that American ingenuity when properly directed will triumph.

As an example, consider the cost of water-borne commerce on the Great Lakes. There you find, under the spur of necessity and achievement, that American-built and American-manned ships are handling and carrying cargo at the lowest cost per ton known in world's commerce. It is but a step to the equal establishment in our ocean business, but we must approach the problem with confidence and determination.

The prejudice of higher costs of manning, by which I mean larger crews at higher pay, and extra cost of victualing, can be fairly stated as amounting to less than 2 per cent of the total operating expense.

This can be entirely offset, and more, by a reasonable increase in the speed of our ships and by improving loading and discharging equipment, thus reducing the time in port as well as on voyage.

Again, there is the problem of improving the method of propulsion by utilizing the great natural advantage we hold in our supply of oil fuel. As you know, even with the ordinary reciprocating type of engine, we get one-third greater distance from a ton of coal, besides doing away with the so-called "black squad," which means a reduction of at least six men in the engine room. So great are the possibilities in the field of propulsion that I will not venture a surmise as to what may be accomplished in that respect.

Other questions which have a most important bearing on our maritime enterprises may be briefly mentioned:

- (a) Cost and type of construction, in which we should lead the world.
- (b) Utilization of natural highways and channels of trade, including coordination of railways and steamship lines.
- (c) Development of efficient maritime organizations abroad as well as at home. Without proper representation and facilities abroad we would be at a fatal disadvantage.
- (d) Assurance of shipowners and merchants of the lowest rates of marine insurance.
- (e) The most favorable facilities for foreign exchange and discounts.
- (f) Such conservation or legislation as may be necessary to assure a supply of fuel oil for our ships.

These are the real problems we are facing, and, confident of a successful solution, I believe we will reach a high place in world's commerce.

AMERICAN SUBSISTENCE COST LESS THAN FOREIGN.

As previously explained, even the small wage differential mentioned by Mr. Rosseter has since been overcome. On the question of the cost of victualing or subsistence, R. T. Merrill, one of the chief witnesses in behalf of this bill, testified at the hearings (p. 441) as follows:

Reports from our London representative give an average of about 60 cents for the European countries, and our representative in Japan cables that 62½ cents was the cost of feeding on Japanese ships at the end of 1921.

On June 20, 1922, the Shipping Board reduced the subsistence allowance of the crews on Shipping Board vessels from 80 cents to 65 cents per man per day. The present subsistence allowance on privately owned American vessels is from 49 cents to 51 cents per day per man.

Consequently it will be seen that according to the present rates the subsistence allowance on privately owned American ships is very considerably less than that on British ships or of any other European maritime country. However, the most startling feature of it is that the Shipping Board allowance is only 2½ cents per day per man more than the Japanese allowance, and that the allowance reputed to now obtain on privately owned American vessels is from 11½ to 13½ cents less than on Japanese ships, and yet they say that American operators must have these enormous subsidies in order to make up the differential in labor and subsistence cost due to the higher American standard of living.

VIEWS OF JAMES A. FARRELL.

I have previously stated that if James A. Farrell had accepted appointment as chairman of the Shipping Board, no ship subsidy bill would have been presented for the consideration of the Congress. As I am reliably informed, Mr. Farrell is opposed to ship subsidies as being a premium on waste and inefficiency and not calculated to aid in establishing and maintaining a merchant marine. Mr. Farrell is the grandson of a sea captain, and his father was an experienced shipping man. Mr. Farrell himself is president of the National Foreign Trade Council, and also president of the United States Steel Corporation, and has had a large experience in the construction and operation of ships. He is generally recognized as one of the highest authorities in this country on shipping matters. In an address on "American Maritime Policy," delivered by Mr. Farrell in May, 1921, Mr. Farrell, among other things, said:

It is unlikely that anything effective can be accomplished for the time being, during the present world-wide depression, for which there is no precedent in the history of shipping. * * * All maritime nations are affected. * * * In normal times, had there been no interruption to the natural growth of trade, this tonnage would be largely employed; but because an economic metamorphosis has taken place as a result of the war and the ordinary processes of trade have been unbalanced, it will require time to build up the economic structure.

The Shipping Board, as owners of the steamers, when assigning steamers to loading brokers to operate for their own account on a designated trade route, should stipulate a trade name under which the line will operate, this to be the property of the Shipping Board; and should they eventually sell these steamers operating in this trade, the trade name should go with the line.

Until trade revives and opportunity exists for obtaining a fair sales price an early retirement of the Shipping Board and liquidation of its shipping business seems impracticable, but a partial solution of one of the difficulties confronting the Shipping Board is to continue to lay up a considerable portion of their tonnage and, in line with the timely slogan, "Less Government in business, more business in Government," withdraw from all but supervision activity by chartering the steamers to reputable and experienced operators, either on a bare-boat basis or on time charter, allowing the charterers the option of purchasing the steamers when conditions improve.

Since Mr. Farrell made this suggestion about 800 of the ships have been laid up. Mr. Farrell further said:

The claim is made, and justly, that the cost of American ships must reasonably approximate the cost of their competitors, and that capital charges must be substantially equalized with those of our competitors. The fact remains that while a considerable number of ships built abroad have been sold under stress of necessity at less than half the cost of reproduction, as in the case of ex-enemy ships sold by Great Britain, the great bulk of the world's tonnage built during the war fairly approximates the average cost of our own fleet. Again, it is said that operating cost must be approximately equal to those of our competitors. Leaving wages paid in American ships out of consideration, does the foreigner, loading from American ports, obtain any lower prices for fuel, ship repairs, wharfage, harbor dues, stevedoring, supplies, and stores in United States ports than do our own ships?

The main factor in determining whether we can compete successfully lies largely in our shipping laws. * * *

While the cost of the ships will be written down eventually to a reasonable figure, the ships can not be sold until a market exists for them, and until that the investors will not furnish the money to buy them. Meanwhile they will at least save the Government large outlay in carrying on their present plan of operation, if chartered to shipping people on a competitive bare-boat basis. This will relieve the Government of expense and enable them to earn a moderate revenue.

The bare-boat-charter basis with an early revision of our navigation laws—the latter an urgent requirement of the situation—might be called a plan to enable shipping people to send our ships to sea upon terms of equality.

The chief criticism of the navigation laws made by Mr. Farrell was of the former requirement of more men on American steamships than of other nations. However, as previously explained, that has been changed since this address by Mr. Farrell. Under the manning scale adopted by the Shipping Board in December, 1921, a smaller number of men is required on American ships than on that of any other nation.

AMERICAN PEOPLE SHOULD SUPPORT OUR MERCHANT MARINE.

In another address on "An American Foreign Trade Policy," delivered by Mr. Farrell before the National Foreign Trade Convention at Philadelphia last May, Mr. Farrell said:

The United States Shipping Board are supporting a project of legislation in Congress aimed at furnishing both direct and indirect aid to a privately owned and operated merchant marine. A considerable measure of public support has been accorded to the bill, and some degree of opposition to it has been expressed.

Whatever may be the fate of these particular proposals, some things are quite clear. The greatest subsidy our ships can have in overseas trade would be the support of the American people. The greatest hardship under which they are at present laboring is the lack of such support. We shall not have a successful American merchant marine unless its ships are more largely used by American shippers. That does not mean that American exports should be confined entirely to American vessels. Such a proposition is impractical and ridiculous, since shipping is an international problem and we require inward as well as outward cargoes. It does mean that Americans should always have that "favoring spirit" toward the use of their own vessels on equal consideration. They must control, either directly or by selling their goods c. i. f. foreign ports, the choice of routing their shipments and thereby likewise influence the obtaining of competitive freight rates. Other nations have developed this spirit of cooperation in a high degree, and much of their success is attributable thereto.

Anyone with experience in foreign commerce understands that ocean shipping is an international business. Any attempt to confine all American cargo to American vessels would have as its inevitable corollary the confining of all foreign cargo to foreign bottoms, which is all that is needed to show that while we are advocating peace as between nations and have agreed to a limitation of armament that we propose to use our merchant marine as a weapon in trade wars with other countries. But there is in this, as in other matters, a reasonable mean that can and should be accomplished. Our Government should establish friendly relations with foreign shipping in order to enable our shipowners to share in inward cargoes which are necessary if our American merchant marine is to have that share of success which will make it permanent. If those who control inward cargoes for their respective countries and colonies are expected to lift our ballast losses homeward to a playing basis, they must in turn receive consideration at our hands. Many factors in shipping are not susceptible of discrimination by the Government of any nation as against others without corresponding limitations.

Thomas H. Rossbottom (hearings, pp. 356-357), W. J. Love, Phillip Manson, and various others testified to the fact that the citizens of foreign countries are much more loyal to their merchant marine than are American citizens. This is doubtless due to the fact that investments in shipping are more widely distributed in foreign countries, and to the fact that American shipowners do and say everything they can to keep American citizens from being proud of the American merchant marine. Lasker readily fell into the same habit, and much of his propaganda has been to the disparagement of our ships and the American merchant marine.

A few years ago the New York Chamber of Commerce appointed a special committee to investigate and report on the American merchant marine problem. This committee was composed of men experienced in shipping matters, of which Irving Bush was chairman and George E. Dearman, president of the American-Hawaiian Steamship Co., Irving Douglas, and others were members, and the report of the committee was unanimous. The said committee reported as follows:

If a substantial tonnage is to be created, it is idle to suggest that it be entirely constructed in this country, for the facilities do not exist for the work. * * * If a large tonnage built abroad is placed under the American flag, the necessary repair work will be an important aid in establishing American yards on a basis where they can compete with foreign shipbuilders.

We desire, first, to point out that there has been a general misunderstanding of the added cost of operating American vessels as compared with the same vessel under a foreign flag. It has been frequently stated and generally accepted that the operation under the American flag will cost from 40 to 50 per cent more. We believe this percentage should be applied to wages alone, for the cost of fuel, supplies, insurance, and upkeep is substantially equal for the same vessel in the same trade, regardless of flag. On the passenger ships, where the wage item may be a larger percentage of the total operating costs, the difference in favor of foreign vessels is somewhat greater; but with strictly freight carriers your committee is informed that the disadvantage under which American tonnage must labor is 5 and 10 per cent of the total operating cost. Even in passenger vessels of a type suitable for South American trade the disadvantage probably does not exceed 10 per cent. The steamship man must obtain his capital for American ships from American investors. The American investor knows little of the value of securities of steamship companies beyond the repeated statements of the public press that it costs 40 per cent more to operate an American vessel than one owned abroad, and that consequently competition is impossible without a heavy subsidy. These statements are not calculated to attract American capital to vessel securities.

As Senator FLETCHER said in discussing this report:

In other words, according to the New York Chamber of Commerce report, subsidists have for years been deceiving the American people as to the cost of operating American ships in their efforts to wring from Congress a subsidy to make up the fictitious difference of 40 to 50 per cent in cost of operations, but have only succeeded in destroying the confidence of American investors in shipping investments.

EXORBITANT SALARIES PAID BY AMERICAN STEAMSHIP LINES.

One of the chief difficulties of the American steamship lines is that they are closed corporations, maintain unnecessarily large forces of high-paid executives, and do not run their businesses on economical, businesslike principles. During the hearings, when efforts were being made to ascertain the high salaries paid, Meyer Lissner, a commissioner of the Shipping Board, who was ever present attempting to protect the interests of private shipowners, spoke up and admitted that the salaries of some of the officials of American steamship lines ran as high as $100,000 a year. In other words, although the capital stock of none of these companies is over about $100,000,000, including watered stock and stock dividends, yet they pay larger salaries than that received by the President of the United States or by the presidents of the various large railway systems with their billions of dollars invested and with systems infinitely larger and more complex than any of these steamship lines.

VIEWS OF JOHN C. SEAGER, JR.

Along this line I call attention to a statement made by John C. Seager, jr., the vice president and treasurer of the Seager Steamship Co., a leading American line, organized in 1907, and having operated American-flag ships to various European ports in the sharpest competition in the world. Mr. Seager is an American citizen, the son of John C. Seager, sr., the president of the company, who is said to be the oldest and one of the most highly esteemed shipping men in New York. In an article appearing in the Nautical Gazette, May 13, 1922, Mr. Seager is quoted as follows:

The success of the mercantile fleets of European nations can be largely attributed to the fact that the people of the various countries support their ships.

This end is achieved by a different method of financing from that which prevails in this country. In the United States our shipping industry is conducted by what we might term a closed corporation. By that I mean that the companies operate their ships on private capital which is usually subscribed in large blocks. The result is that only a comparatively few persons in this country are interested in our merchant marine and that a large majority of our population is not ship-minded.

Steamships purchased at the present time can be operated at a profit; foreign owners are not losing money, and there is no reason why an American owner can not make a profit with his ships. The most potent factor militating against the successful operation of American ships is the large overhead which is incurred by the payment of large salaries to unnecessary executives. With few exceptions in Britain there are no large salaries paid to steamship men in Europe, and if this example were followed in this country the balance sheets of the industry would make a better showing.

VIEWS OF PHILIP MANSON.

While I shall not take time to quote, yet I especially call attention to the statement of Philip Manson, president of the Pacific & Eastern Steamship Co., and one of the best-informed men on shipping in the United States (hearings, 1623-1701). Mr. Manson presents a very strong array of facts and makes a very illuminative, intelligent, and logical statement to the effect that subsidies are merely a premium on waste, extravagance, and inefficiency, and that by the employment of efficient methods American steamship lines can succeed, as those are succeeding which employ such methods, even in a moderate degree.

VIEWS OF EDWARD N. HURLEY, FORMER CHAIRMAN UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD.

When Edward N. Hurley was chairman of the Shipping Board, said board through various committees made an intensive study of our merchant-marine problem. Mr. Hurley published a volume entitled "The New Merchant Marine," which contains much valuable information on the subject and which can be read with profit by those desiring to solve this problem.

The following extracts are taken from his final report to the President, made July 31, 1919, by Edward N. Hurley, chairman United States Shipping Board, to wit:

The wage and subsistence items combined constitute at the maximum 12 per cent of the total operating expenses of a ship. I cite it not particularly in refutation of the argument that high wages furnish any valid reason why a high-wage ship can not compete with a low-wage ship but rather to show how superficial is the chief argument that has been advanced to prove the contention that it is impossible to operate ships under the American flag. The other arguments on their very faces are equally superficial, and in the case of inspection laws, etc., they can be easily corrected the moment it is affirmatively shown that they are unwise. At the same time, it may be worth while to note in passing that none of these alleged handicaps seem to have prevented the Red D Line from doing a successful business under the American flag between New York, the West Indies, and Venezuela during the last thirty-odd years; nor have they interfered with the prosperity of the Atlantic, Gulf, and West Indies Co., whose vessels also fly the American flag. The successful competition of the American-flag ships of W. R. Grace & Co. with the powerful British P. & O. Line in the South American trade has been a matter of common knowledge for many years; and last, but perhaps most significant of all, is the fact that the vessels of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co., flying the American flag, have successfully met the competition of ships paying the lowest wages on earth in the trans-Pacific trade for about 70 years.

Of much more importance than the wage-and-subsistence item, which is not over 12 per cent of the total operating cost, is the coal-fuel item, which ranges between 30 and 40 per cent of the total. Here the advantage is heavily in favor of the ship which takes her coal in an American port. The use of oil fuel turns coal-bunker space into revenue-earning cargo space, gives a larger steaming radius, and also reduces the propelling cost per mile. Here, again, the American merchant marine as a whole has a really worth-while competitive advantage, because it contains a greater percentage of oil burners than any other merchant marine in the world. Also the matter of effecting a quick turn around offers an opportunity for turning costly idle days into money-making days at sea which is not yet fully appreciated and which American ships are free to use their initiative in developing by planning their voyages and arranging for return cargoes in advance.

I cite these suggestions and recommendations in detail chiefly to show the prevalent habit of accepting conditions as stated simply because for many years they have been so stated. It is quite difficult to understand why our shipping people, if truly American, continue to argue against our ability to operate in competition. Two of the most striking characteristics of the letters I received were the apparent absorption of the writers in operating details and the obvious disinclination to dig below the surface of the problem. For instance, the expressed fear of competition from ships carried on owners' books at $20 or $30 a ton is wholly without justification. A vessel which had been written down to that figure would be old and worn, costly to operate, often laid up for repairs, and not at all comparable with a new modern ship, economical to operate, and having a long life of usefulness in prospect. Such an argument is the last thing one would expect to hear from a steamship man at this time, when every shipowner in the world is at his wits' ends for time and shop facilities with which to recondition his vessels after the continuous, hard, racking service to which they have been held and driven during the war.

But this is not the whole story. Superimposed upon the classification and insurance restrictions has been the heavy burden of universal overcapitalization. This process began when the steamship companies were hard pressed during the trade slump which followed the panic of 1873. Very few companies seem to have escaped overcapitalization, and most of the new ones seem to have been systematically "watered" almost as soon as they sprang into existence.

I have before me a 200-page analysis of the annual financial statements of representative steamship companies of all nations covering a period of 20 years. The collator remarks that many of the statements seem to have been prepared with the idea of showing the position of the company "as it is not." However, practically all of them whose statements are sufficiently complete to admit of intelligent interpretation show degrees of overcapitalization, indicating that they are obliged to find money to pay dividends on stock issues which are from 10 to 40 per cent in excess of all the property value they can show. A recent statement of one American company frankly admitted that its capitalization of $11,000,000 consisted of $5,000,000 in "tangible assets" and $6,000,000 of "good will."

When we can get both the insurance and overcapitalization handicaps out of the way I expect to see the merchant marines of other countries worrying about their ability to compete with American ships, and the arguments about our inability to compete with foreigners will disappear.

ORGANIZATION OF STEAMSHIP COMPANIES.

From a close study of world shipping and from the experience of the Government since the slow return toward commercial conditions begun last autumn, I am convinced that ships can be operated to maximum advantage only when the individual fleets are of such size that the management can give careful personal attention to every detail and all the potentialities of each voyage. I believe, and all my colleagues and associates in the Shipping Board agree with me, that when an operating organization exceeds this size its routine becomes too complicated and its reactions too slow; the comparatively few big, competent brains of the organization do not have the time to bestow the proper attention upon the details and potentialities of each venture; too much of the planning and bargaining is left to relatively inferior subordinates whose names and personalities mean nothing to customers, either at home or abroad; profitable business opportunities are overlooked; personal contact with customers is to a large extent lost; and many forms of lost motion and other kinds of wastefulness are certain to germinate, develop, and multiply.

ADVANTAGES IN FAVOR OF AMERICAN SHIPOWNERS.

Advocates of ship subsidies talk much of alleged disadvantages of American shipowners, but totally ignore the advantages in their favor. Some of the advantages operating in favor of American shipowners may be summarized as follows:

1. The very great advantage of oil burners over coal burners, as previously explained.
2. The Shipping Board vessels are already being offered at very low prices, and will probably be sold as a whole at even lower prices, so that American owners will have the advantage of a very low first cost, very much lower than such ships could have been constructed for anywhere even before the war, and much lower than reproduction cost at any time in the future, either here or abroad. They would be purchased at much lower prices than the overwhelming bulk of foreign tonnage cost.

Does it not constitute sufficiently generous aid to sell the ships at such low prices and on 15 years' time, as already authorized by law? As American owners even in normal times profitably operated ships costing from three to five times as much, is it not reasonable to assume that either those same operators or other purchasers could successfully operate these ships at the low prices indicated?

3. Our Shipping Board vessels are new and modern, whereas an overwhelming percentage of foreign ships are getting old.

Nearly all of the Shipping Board ships have been completed since the armistice. The deliveries were as follows: For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, 218 ships; 1919, 854 ships; 1920, 1,002 ships; 1921, 218 ships; 1922, 23 ships, as reported by the Shipping Board. Nearly all of the foreign merchant ships were constructed prior to the World War, so that they are practically all more than 8 years old. In fact, a large percentage of the world's tonnage is now over 15 years of age. The importance of this comparison is seen when it is understood that the average life of a ship is 20 years, and Homer L. Ferguson testified that the average useful life of a ship was 14 years, because of the expensive repair bills accruing after that time.

Edward P. Farley, vice president United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, in charge of ship sales, stated at the hearings:

Mr. CHINDELOM. Britain has enough ships now to handle her trade? Mr. FARLEY. Yes; but always people want—a good operator wants the most modern and the newest type of ships. The minute a good operator finds business improving he wants to get rid of his old ships and replace them with more modern ships, knowing there is going to be another drop in values, and the modern ship can operate profitably when the older ship can not.

Mr. DAVIS. You spoke about our ships being modern. I will ask you, in that same connection, if it is not a fact that a very large percentage of foreign fleets are not only not modern but are either old or getting old, practically all of them having been built before the World War?

Mr. FARLEY. Well, 400 British ships, or more, were built during the war; but you are correct as to the large percentage. (Hearings, pp. 2045, 2058.)

Mr. Farley had just returned from an extensive investigation of maritime conditions in Europe at the instance of the Shipping Board.

With respect to the quality of our Shipping Board vessels, Mr. James A. Farrell declared in the first address previously mentioned, as follows:

The steel ships were well constructed, and with few exceptions compare favorably with the work of the best builders in any country. While we may only surmise what will ultimately become of the wooden ships which were built as a result of the dictates of military necessity, and in response to the appeal of our associates for ships, and more ships, the fact remains that our steel ships are fine examples of the skill of American mechanics.

In this same connection we must not lose sight of the fact that 80 per cent of our Shipping Board vessels are oil burners, whereas 90 per cent of foreign ships are coal burners.

4. Our immense coastwise trade is reserved exclusively for American-flag ships, whereas the extensive coastwise trade of Great Britain and between Great Britain and her colonies has been open to the ships of all nations without any restrictions whatever since 1853. On the importance of our coasting trade, I quote from Government Aid to Merchant Shipping, by Grosvenor M. Jones, a publication of the Department of Commerce, issued in 1916, as follows:

The coasting trade of the United States includes not merely the trade along the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific coasts of continental United States and between the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts, but also the trade between continental United States and Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico. The distances traversed by many of the ships in the coasting trade of the United States are greater than the distances covered by many of the ships in the foreign trade of European nations.

It is probably safe to say that the freight tonnage carried in the coasting trade of the United States exceeds the total freight transported in all the ships of any other country, with the possible exception of Great Britain.

No other country has such extensive stretches of coast with so many valuable ports that are of easy access and open at all times of the year and such varied commodities seeking water transportation.

The United States has a greater number of important ports than any other country in the world. The freight available for coasting trade is enormous.

Stress has been laid on the importance of the United States coasting trade, chiefly to emphasize its value to American shipping. Too often the extent of the coastwise commerce is overlooked or minimized and little or no account is taken of the fact that the vessels engaged in this trade are for the most part as efficient as vessels in the overseas trade of foreign countries; that many of the coasting vessels of the United States are, in fact, strong ocean-going craft that travel long distances on the open seas; and that many of them can be used effectively in the trans-Atlantic trade, as has been demonstrated since the outbreak of the present war in Europe.

While the coastwise shipping of the United States has been developing rapidly, the actual tonnage registered for the foreign trade has on the whole declined. Nevertheless—and this is a fact too often ignored in discussions as to the strength of the American merchant marine—the potential tonnage has increased steadily since 1880. And in this connection it should be remembered that the strength of a merchant marine is more accurately stated in terms of potential tonnage than in actual tonnage, since the former takes account of the greater efficiency of steam tonnage, which is commonly estimated as being three times that of said tonnage. (Pp. 30-33.)

A large number of the ships engaged in foreign trade also engage in part in coastwise trade. Furthermore, a large number of ships engaged exclusively in our coastwise trade are entirely suitable for foreign service and so available in case of national emergency. In fact, a large number of such ships were so utilized during the World War.

5. There is a very material advantage in favor of American shipowners as compared with British shipowners by reason of the fact that under the respective maritime liability laws of the two Nations British shipowners are held to much stricter accountability for the loss of life or property. This is a very important difference and, fully explained on pages 607 and 614-616 of the hearings.

6. Tonnage taxes in the United States are much lower than those of foreign countries, and will still be much lower if our tonnage taxes are doubled, as provided in the pending bill. Upon this point I quote from page 605 of the hearings as follows:

Mr. LISSNER. Their tonnage taxes are almost universally much higher than our own; are much higher than they would be if doubled, as proposed in the act.

Mr. DAVIS. Do you mean the taxes on their own tonnage are greater than our taxes on our tonnage?

Mr. LISSNER. I understand, so far as I am informed, that the charges for tonnage taxes abroad are the same in most instances for their own vessels as they are for our vessels, but they are uniformly higher than the taxes that we charge to our own and to foreign vessels in our ports.

7. American shipping interests are not required to pay various fees for measurement of tonnage, issuing licenses, and for the performance of various other services by collectors or other officers of customs, inspectors, and shipping commissioners, which all foreign countries charge their shipping interests. All of those fees were repealed by act of July 1, 1886, but the present Commissioner of Navigation recommends the enactment of a bill restoring those fees, and estimates that it would net the Government between $1,000,000 and $1,500,000 a year. For a full explanation see hearings, pages 615, 616.

PROFITS OF AMERICAN SHIPOWNERS.

A large amount of evidence was introduced at the hearings showing that American shipowners made good profits before the war and made fabulous profits during the war. (See especially hearings, 1658-1719, 2217-2241, 2470-2475.) Some of those enormous profits are enumerated in the minority report on this bill. None of the evidence mentioned has been questioned or refuted by anybody. There is no evidence whatever that American shipowners did not operate profitably before the war or that they did not profiteer during the war upon their Government and the public to such an extent that they made outrageous profits; and there is no evidence in the record that private shipowners have not made money since the war or that they are not doing so now, even though we are passing through the worst depression in the history of shipping. Of the eight steamship owners who testified at the hearings, none of them claimed that they were even now losing money in the operation of their ships or that they had lost money prior to the war. They were questioned about it on cross-examination, and some of them admitted that they are making some profit now and made a profit last year, although some few stated that they were about breaking even at this time. In view of the fact that there was a large amount of evidence to the effect that American shipowners could and were operating profitably, and no evidence to the contrary, some of us felt that as the shipowners were asking such enormous subsidies they should be required to give the committee and the Congress the actual facts. H. H. Raymond, president of the American Steamship Owners' Association, who appeared in behalf of this bill, flatly refused to disclose what his salaries were as president of several shipping companies. Winthrop L. Marvin, vice president and general manager of the American Steamship Owners' Association, the real father of this bill, who has taken a most active interest in its behalf from the beginning, appeared as a witness at the hearings. The following propositions were propounded to him:

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Marvin, the private operators of which you are a representative are asking the people to pass a bill that will result in the payment of very large subsidies, predicated upon the claim that you can not compete with foreign ships, and you want the mass of the people to make up the difference. Now, many high authorities with just as much experience and knowledge of these matters as any who have testified insist that the question of wage and subsistence differfial and the other matters pressed by the proponents of this bill are overcome by advantages that obtain in favor of American operators, and that these matters do not constitute the real difficulty; and they state that the real difficulty is that the American companies have been overcapitalized, have paid excessive salaries, have been extravagant and wasteful in their methods, that they have not employed the same efficiency as England and Germany and other nations, etc.

It is furthermore insisted with regard to charges growing out of capital investment that such enormous profits were made by the American private owners during the war that they not only repaid the original investment, including watered stock, and paid large dividends, but also laid up large surpluses, so that they will not now be burdened with interest, amortization, and depreciation charges, etc.

In view of these views that are urged by very respectable authorities, and in view of the fact that you gentlemen are asking for these bounties, do you not concede that the representatives of the people are entitled to know just what the facts are in these respects?

Mr. MARVIN. The representatives of the people, Judge, are absolutely entitled to know what the exact facts are in these and all other respects, but that is a pretty long question, Judge. I don't know that I can remember all of it, but I would like to ask you, in the first place, who these authorities are that have been conveying to the committee these insinuations against the American merchant marine? Who are they? I would like to know. I have never seen any authorities cited of that kind.

Mr. DAVIS. Oh, such men as Mr. J. H. Rosseter, Mr. E. N. Hurley, and various others that I do not now recall, and others who will be produced before the hearings conclude.

After much quibbling on the part of Mr. Marvin, the proposition was put up to him as follows:

Mr. DAVIS. Now, if these charges are untrue, this is the best opportunity you gentlemen have had to prove it, and here in this public hearing, in which you are asking these enormous benefits, I want to know if you are willing to show the facts? In other words, I want to know if a representative of each of the members of your association is willing to appear before this committee and lay their cards on the table and not hide behind any such pretext as that these matters are personal? And I want to know if they will come prepared to give full and definite information as to the organization, capitalization, assets, liabilities, when the ships were bought, and the prices paid, and their age, and at what they were capitalized; the annual profits or losses of the company, the dividends paid, the amount added to surplus, the bonds paid, salaries paid, facts with regard to subsidiary and affiliated connections, and dividends, etc., of these concerns?

After much more quibbling and dodging, in which certain members of the committee came to his relief, the matter was finally concluded, as follows:

Mr. DAVIS. Now, Mr. Marvin, what is your answer?

Mr. MARVIN. I am entirely willing to submit to the association any request that comes from the committee. (Hearings, 1063-1065.)

It is needless to state that the said requests were not complied with. We heard no more from it. However, I am curious to know whether or not a majority of the sworn representatives of the people will vote these enormous bounties to these shipowners in the face of these facts. If this bill passes, what will result is fairly represented in the announcement taken from Town Topics Financial Bureau, of New York, in the special curb market bulletin of October 24, 1922, as follows:

AMERICAN-HAWAIIAN STEAMSHIP.

American-Hawaiian steamship sold at 20 yesterday and picked up around this price; we regard it as a splendid buy for the moderate or longer pull. The company is in excellent financial shape and has a good history as a dividend earner and payer. The shares at present are paying 37½ cents quarterly, which means a yield of 7½ per cent. The passage of the ship subsidy bill, which now is considered probable, would mean a violent advance in this stock.

PROPOSED PLAN IN LIEU OF PENDING BILL.

The proponents of this bill, including the President, challenged its opponents to offer a better plan. Of course, it is not incumbent upon the minority to offer a substitute, and no plan which could be devised, even though admittedly perfect, would have any chance of being accepted by those who are bent upon this raid on the Public Treasury. However, as I stated I would, I, for one, present a definite, specific, concrete plan, features of which I have already discussed, and which plan is briefly summarized, as follows:

1. Abolish the Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet Corporation.
2. Appoint a by-partisan congressional committee to investigate and cull out all useless employees of the Shipping Board organization.
3. Place one responsible man at the head of the remaining organization and of our shipping affairs.
4. Cancel all MO 4 contracts and lease the ships now in operation on trade routes under bare-boat charters, or, wherever that may be impossible, place such trade routes in charge of salaried managers.
5. Transfer a goodly number of our ships to the Army and Navy transport services for use in case of emergency.
6. Employ a liberal policy in the payment of compensation for the carriage of our ocean mail, employing American ships as far as possible, all of which is fully authorized by the act of 1891, now in force.
7. That foreign-built ships owned by American citizens be permitted to register under the American flag.
8. The repeal of tariff duties on all shipbuilding materials, and the repeal of all restrictions against the use of imported materials in our ship construction.

9. A tariff for revenue only. A tariff which is so high as to prevent the importation of foreign goods and which in turn cuts down our exports because of inability of foreigners to pay for our products with their own, will naturally diminish our foreign commerce and militate against our merchant marine, as previously explained. Of course, I do not expect those wedded to a high protective tariff policy to look with favor upon this recommendation.

10. The establishment of oil stations wherever they would be needed by our Navy and our merchant marine.

11. Our shipowners must establish efficient organizations at home and shipping agencies and connections abroad.

12. Our merchant marine should have the full cooperation and aid of our Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, commercial attachés, radio service, and other Government functions.

13. American shipowners should eliminate overcapitalization, squeeze out watered stock, cut out wasteful overhead, get rid of useless officials, reduce the exorbitant salaries of many executives; in other words, get on a sound, economical, business basis.

14. American shipowners should forever stop begging for public bounties, and should apply themselves to effecting the results just suggested. They should quit disseminating the false doctrine that Americans are not competent to succeed in the maritime industry without subsidies.

15. The American public should loyally support the American merchant marine, as do the nationals of other countries. They should ship and travel on American ships whenever possible.

16. Strict enforcement of the seamen's act, particularly sections 4 and 13, which will insure and maintain an equalization of wages on American ships and on foreign ships operating to and from our ports, as shown in the minority report, and more fully shown in the hearings by William S. Brown (pp. 1218-19), Capt. John H. Pruett (p. 1230), and by Henry Howard (p. 1256), and by other witnesses introduced by the proponents of the bill, and as is conclusively shown by the officers of the Seamen's Union, Andrew Furuseth (pp. 1263 to 1330) and Patrick O'Brien (pp. 1853 to 1942).

The adoption of and compliance with the foregoing suggestions, even to a reasonable extent, will insure the full establishment and the permanent maintenance of a sound, healthy, successful, privately owned American merchant marine, fully adequate for all of our needs in peace or war; and it will do it without the adoption of a single vicious policy or a single additional burden upon the taxpayers of the country.

I have consumed more time than I should. I appreciate the patient hearing accorded me by Members on both sides of the Chamber. I wish to thank my colleagues on the committee for their indulgence and all the Members for their patience. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. If the committee will indulge the Chair a moment, the Chair wishes to say that during the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] the Chair was called upon to rule in regard to a Member occupying more than one hour on the floor. At that time the Chair stated that in his ruling he had followed the precedents. At this time the Chair would like to secure the privilege of inserting the references to those precedents in connection with the ruling just mentioned. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIRKPATRICK].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in what I have to say I shall try to confine myself to a discussion of the section of the bill dealing with the payment of the direct subsidy.

This provision is contained in Title IV, and it is the corner stone of the policy embodied in this bill. Any nation which proposes to aid its shipping must do so in one of two ways: Either by indirect aid, which includes favorable legislation and preferential duties, or by the payment of a direct subsidy.

Now, we tried the first of those two methods in the Jones Act. The Jones Act contains just about the maximum which can be expected of legislation in the nature of indirect aid. But, unfortunately, we were unable to get the benefit of the principal provision on which we had relied in the Jones Act, and that was section 34, which provided for the denunciation of treaties so that Congress could go ahead and enact preferential duties.

The keystone of the Jones Act having fallen, if we really mean to aid our merchant marine we must turn to the other alternative and adopt a policy of direct aid, and that is what we are doing in this bill.

The principal operative sentence of the whole bill is found in section 403, providing that—

The board is authorized and directed on behalf of the United States to enter into a contract with any person, a citizen of the United States who is the owner of a vessel, for the payment of compensation in respect to such vessel.

Now, the first question which is of interest is the rate of that compensation, and if we observe the provision as to the rate of compensation contained in the next section we will note that it provides for a rate of compensation based upon three things, namely, a combination of the size of the vessel, the distance traveled, and the speed of the vessel. It provides for a flat rate of one-half of a cent for each 100 nautical miles traveled per gross ton of the vessel. That is the basic rate, and then in addition there is a gradually ascending scale and additional payments to be made to vessels, based on their speed, as they increase their speed over and above 12 knots an hour.

Now, the underlying theory of that scale of payment and of that system is that it is necessary for our merchant marine, in the condition in which we now are, to develop large, fast passenger liners. We have plenty of tramps. We have plenty of the ordinary slow cargo vessels. We have plenty of tankers. But the thing in which we are woefully lacking, the thing that is absolutely necessary to the development of any well-planned merchant marine, is a fleet of passenger liners, and that is what this additional compensation for speed is intended to develop.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question? Will it interrupt him?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BANKHEAD. As I gather from the gentleman's statement, the main incentive for the application of this subsidy is to develop these fast liners?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. That is the purpose for the additional subsidy for high speed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Can the gentleman tell us how that is going to be of assistance to the farmers and the American interests that will be subserved?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The basis of our foreign trade must be liner service. The tramp service is valuable, but the basis of the development of the foreign trade is liner service, and the farmers and everyone else in the country will benefit, in my opinion, by the development of our foreign trade.

Now, what is the situation in regard to our ships as compared with those of other nations of the world in regard to their speed and type? The United States merchant marine to-day has 92 per cent of her ships under 12 knots an hour speed and 8 per cent over 12 knots. Japan has 81½ per cent of her ships under 12 knots an hour and 18½ per cent of her ships over 12 knots an hour; and Great Britain, our greatest competitor, has 72 per cent of her ships under 12 knots an hour speed and 28 per cent of her vessels over 12 knots an hour in speed.

Now, I want to show you just how this compensation is going to work out in the case of certain vessels which I had selected for the purpose of showing the various types of ships and what they would earn. Take the first, the case of a large passenger ship, the George Washington, one of the finest ships in our fleet to-day. She makes 19 knots an hour, and her tonnage is 24,000. If she makes 12 voyages in the course of a year she will earn in that year under the rate of compensation provided in the bill $306,000.

Take another vessel, the American Legion, the picture of which is exhibited in the lobby, a fine type of ship, what is called a 535 ship, plying to South America, 14,000 tons in size, steaming 18 knots an hour; if she makes six voyages in the course of a year she will earn $170,000. The President Harrison, a smaller ship of the 522 type, cargo liner with passenger accommodations, making 15 knots an hour, with a tonnage of 10,500; if she makes five voyages in the course of a year she will earn $68,000.

Here is the West Farralone, of 8,000 tons in size, making 10 knots an hour. If she covers 15,000 miles in the course of a year, which would be the average mileage for such a ship, she will earn in direct compensation $18,000.

Of the smaller cargo type is the Lake Gilboa, a 9-knot ship of the tramp type, 2,100 tons. If she makes 12 trips in the course of a year she will earn $2,800.

The compensation is also payable to sailing vessels, with this distinction, that the power-driven vessels of between 5,000 tons and 1,500 tons all receive a constructive tonnage of 5,000 tons in figuring out the compensation. That is, all those smaller ships under 5,000 tons are rated as of 5,000 tons for the purpose of figuring the compensation. This is because there is very little difference in the pay roll of a power-driven vessel of between 5,000 tons and 1,500 tons. Under the shipping regulations of the United States there is comparatively little difference. That does not apply to sailing vessels, however. Sailing vessels receive their compensation directly, based on their tonnage, and they receive it down to 1,000 tons.

At this point it would be well to clear up some confusion about the amount of this direct subsidy. I am not talking about the net result of the various indirect aids which are provided for by this act; but if this act went into effect to-morrow, and if the next day every ship now operated by the Shipping Board passed into private hands and received a direct subsidy, the direct subsidy alone to those vessels would amount to $8,500,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I dislike to interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. It will not interrupt me at all.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does not your bill provide that 10 per cent of all customs receipts shall be turned into this Shipping Board fund?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is estimated that $450,000,000 will be derived annually as customs receipts under the present tariff bill. That revenue of $45,000,000 is to go into this fund, is it not?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is there any provision by which any of the excess out of that fund over the $15,000,000 you suggest will be turned into the Federal Treasury?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. There is not in the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What becomes of it? Does not the Treasury lose the benefit of that amount of customs receipts?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Not necessarily.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] knows that at his own suggestion in the committee he thought a revolving fund was the only way it could be handled, and in a revolving fund the money will be left in the Treasury, and it is only a bookkeeping account.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It does not go back into the Treasury at all.

Mr. EDMONDS. Where does it go?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is not available for ordinary Government purposes.

Mr. EDMONDS. It is available for ordinary Government purposes. As far as the money is actually concerned, the revolving fund becomes a mere bookkeeping charge and only goes out of the Treasury when it is drawn out. The gentleman knows that as well as I do. He has had the handling of revolving funds before.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. As long as the money is not actually covered by any subsidy contract, it can be reached. It has not gone beyond the control of the Government.

Now, that $8,500,000 would cover all Shipping Board boats at present operating. If in addition to that the day after the bill was passed every privately owned vessel made a subsidy contract with the Government, it would amount to $6,500,000 more, making the maximum possible present direct subsidy about $15,000,000. But that is not going to happen. Considerable time will elapse before the Shipping Board vessels pass into private hands.

Various statements have been made as to exactly what Chairman Lasker said, so I had occasion to look it up, and he said that in 30 months he expected that enough of the 400 ships now being operated by the Shipping Board to keep the present routes going would pass into private hands. Let us assume that he meant the whole 400. Still we can not estimate anything like $15,000,000 of subsidy the first year. If we say half of that we will be somewhere near the truth.

Mr. GAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. GAHN. Into what private hands? Were any interests named when he said they would pass into private hands?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. No.

Mr. GAHN. Has the gentleman any idea who is going to purchase those boats?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. No. Now, in that connection, the matter of the voyage losses and the question of getting these ships out of the hands of the Shipping Board into private hands was discussed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS], and I want to pause just a moment in the direct course of what I have to say, to call attention to one or two statements he made about the voyage losses. I am sure the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] has been grossly misinformed as to the operations of the Shipping Board. The statement was made that only a very small percentage of the $50,000,000 annual loss of the Shipping Board was accounted for by voyage losses. That is only true in this sense: If you take voyage loss to mean simply the difference between the actual cash income and cash outgo of any particular voyage, then it is correct that not a large percentage of the $50,000,000 loss is due to voyage losses. But every business man knows perfectly well that in estimating operating losses, which is the thing we are talking about, you must take into account so much of the overhead as is chargeable to operations. You must take into account repairs. You must take into account betterments, and those things are totally ignored by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] when he makes the statement that only a small percentage of the $50,000,000 is accounted for by voyage losses. As a matter of fact, a very large proportion of that $50,000,000 is accounted for by operating losses, and that is the thing we are trying to cut down.

The statement was also made that the Shipping Board itself was extravagant in its operations, that it had failed to curtail the number of its employees, that it was employing 8,280 employees, most of whom were useless. I have here the facts upon that question.

On June 15, 1921, the Shipping Board had in its employ 8,324 employees. The total of their salaries was $15,861,400.

On July 1, 1922, the Shipping Board had in its employ 5,083 employees at a total pay roll of $10,519,242, or a reduction in the first year of the present Shipping Board control of 3,241 employees at an expense of $5,342,155.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman prepared to state that none of these vacancies have been refilled since July 1, 1922?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I might say that there has been some slight increase since then; but on October 21, 1922, there were 4,948 employees at a salary of $10,019,261, and there has been since that date a further reduction. So that we have now a reduction of about 4,000 employees between June 15, 1921, and the present time.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman state whether that was due to the discontinuance of the operation of vessels?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. These are mainly office employees.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is not prepared to state, however, that of the 76 lawyers that are employed by the Shipping Board at an average salary of $11,000 a year any of them have lost their positions.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I do not think they have. I listened to the testimony, and I was of the opinion that there were no more than were necessary for the work that was to be done. Now, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] went on to argue from a statement made by Mr. Lasker, the chairman of the Shipping Board, that the expenses of operation would not be stopped by the sale of these vessels. Assuming that we can sell the 400 vessels in 30 months—and it is anybody's guess as to whether we can or not—it is the guess of the chairman of the Shipping Board that we can. I say that when these vessels are disposed of the great bulk of the operating expenses is going to cease. You must keep your operating force as long as you are operating ships, but you do not need to keep the operating force when you stop operating, even though you may have 800 or 900 ships undisposed of. The gentleman from Tennessee is confusing the question of ceasing the operation of the ships and the disposition of them. We have a lot of ships on our hands to-day that probably we will never be able to sell, but that does not mean that we are going to operate those ships. It may be that there are ships in the possession of the Shipping Board that it will be profitable to scrap. Of all the tonnage laid up to-day it is impossible for anybody to say how much is valuable and useful. You can not draw a straight line through your list of ships and say that all above that are good ships and all below are bad ships. I think that is an error that most of us are apt to fall into.

The fact is that whether much of the tonnage will be useful or not depends on world trade conditions. A ship may be a valuable asset under certain conditions of commerce and trade and the same ship may be simply a liability under other conditions. The fact of the matter is, and I do not think it can be disputed, that when you stop operating a ship the bulk of the operating expenses is going to stop. Mr. Lasker did say that there was not much difference in overhead between operating 400 ships and 1,200 ships, but there is a big difference in overhead between operating 400 ships and not operating any ships at all.

I have said that the purpose of a graduated scale of payment was to develop a type of large passenger and cargo liners. I am sure that that type is valuable in the world trade. In addition, it is above all things the only type of ship that is really valuable to the United States for use as a naval auxiliary. The speed of a fleet is necessarily determined by the speed of its slowest ship. A slow cargo ship, a tramp steamer, is practically useless in naval operations to-day. If we are going to keep our Navy up to the 5-5-3 ratio, if we are going to compete with Great Britain at all in the matter of armament, we must develop liners for use as naval auxiliaries, and that is the theory of that portion of the bill.

Mr. GERNERD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. GERNERD. These passenger liners are at the same time large cargo carriers?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes; they are all cargo carriers to a more or less extent.

Now, in order to be entitled to compensation, the vessel must have a certain status. It goes without saying that we want only to compensate ships flying the American flag. We also want to encourage the building of ships in the United States. In order to accomplish these purposes the bill limits the compensation to vessels built in the United States and flying the United States flag, with the single exception that ships already existing, built in foreign countries, may, with the consent of the board, within the next three years, be transferred to the United States flag and receive compensation. The purpose of this exception is to allow American owners to acquire certain particular types of ships which are greatly needed to-day. The net result is that no ship can be built abroad after the act and then transferred to American register and receive compensation.

There are certain other requirements that must exist in order to entitle a vessel to compensation. These are the restrictions appearing in sections 406, 407, 408, and 409. In order to make clear the reason for these restrictions, let me call attention to the broad aims intended to be attained by the act. We want to create a privately owned merchant marine engaged in foreign trade, owned by American capital, and manned by American labor. To this end are directed the various provisions referred to which determine the conditions under which compensation—the status of the vessel being satisfactory—is payable:

The vessel must be a privately owned merchant vessel.

It must be engaged in foreign trade.

The complicated definition of foreign trade contained in section 407 of the bill is due to the rather unusual situation of the United States and her island possessions with regard to the distance of the islands and their present lack of any great volume of trade. The next result of the section is that trade between the United States, Alaska, Porto Rico, and Hawaii is not considered foreign trade. Trade between the United States and the Panama Canal Zone is considered as foreign trade. In the case of Hawaii an exception is made where the vessel to be compensated trades between the United States and a foreign port touching at Hawaii. In such case, if the cargo or passengers destined to or from Hawaii is less than one-fourth of the total the vessel will not lose its compensation.

In addition to the above, section 408 provides for the compensation of tramp ships, provided a call is made at a port of the United States once a year, and also what are known as feeders, small boats which ply between foreign ports collecting cargo for American ships engaged in foreign trade. There is no reason why these types should be excluded, as they are both builders of our commerce.

Compensation shall be paid only while the person or corporation which owns the vessel is American. This is provided for in section 409, and the provisions contained in that section for determining the nationality of the control of any corporation have been taken from the United States Treasury Regulations.

In addition, it was deemed unwise to pay compensation to an American owner unless his major interest was in American shipping and American trade. As a result, this section provides that even though the ship and the owner be American, compensation shall not be paid unless at least 75 per cent of the owner's shipping flies the United States flag.

Lastly, the crew must be substantially American. There is no use in building or maintaining a merchant marine if we are compelled to man it with foreigners, and no lasting benefit can be derived from a marine so operated. Section 406 provides that the crew of any ship which applies for compensation must be at least two-thirds American citizens and the remainder can not be Chinese or Japanese. During the first two years after the enactment of this act some slight leeway is given in order to permit necessary adjustment of present labor conditions. In addition, the provisions of the act are suspended as to the steward's department of passenger ships, it being impossible to obtain a sufficient number of American citizens in these departments.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. On the subject of American ownership, will a corporation organized under the laws of any of the States of the Union or of the District of Columbia be considered American for the purposes of this bill?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I so understand.

Mr. LONDON. Irrespective of who may be the stockholders?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. There is a provision—section 401 (a)—that the term "citizen of the United States" shall have the meaning given it by the shipping act of 1916. That act requires the controlling interest in such corporation to be owned by Americans in order that such corporation may be considered a citizen of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM]. [Applause.]

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, the majority members of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries some time ago agreed upon a division of the subject matter of this legislation, and it fell to my lot to give particular attention to the question of the so-called differentials in the cost of construction and of operation. Two of my colleagues, who are opposed to the bill, have given some attention to this subject. I think many of the Members of the House were surprised to learn that anyone seriously contended that there are no differentials in the cost of construction and of operation of American ships and the ships under foreign flags. I dare say it has never been doubted or denied by any real, responsible authority up to this time that these differentials have existed and do exist. My very good friend from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] dismissed the question of the wage differential by a discussion of the seamen's act and of the observations of Chairman Lasker upon that act. The purpose of the seamen's act was to create greater safety for crews and passengers on board ship, and also to increase the number of seamen and unlicensed crews as well as to improve their living and subsistence conditions on American ships. All of these, while salutary in purpose and effect, did create increased charges against American ship owners and operators. It is not argued, nor is it the purpose of this bill, that any of the conditions created by the seamen's act shall be abrogated or in any sense reduced in scope or effect. That fact is proven conclusively by the circumstance that the committee made no suggestion whatever for any amendment of the seamen's act. On the contrary, this bill will strengthen and enlarge the purposes of the seamen's act, particularly through those provisions which require the further Americanization of the crews.

Two-thirds of the crew upon every vessel which receives any benefits under this act must be American citizens. There is no doubt that the employment of American citizens in ship personnel will tend to further increase the cost of operation, because American citizens will always require and should receive higher standards of living than any other nationals. However, the existence of differentials in construction and in operation costs against American ships follows not merely as the necessary logical result of American law and American living conditions, but is abundantly proven by experience and actual facts.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question right at that point?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STEVENSON. Right on the point the gentleman is speaking of, on page 29 of the bill, subdivision (5), I find the following language:

During the first year after the enactment of this act the required number of citizens of the United States shall be one-half instead of two-thirds; and, during the second year, six-tenths instead of two-thirds.

Is that a modification of the doctrine of which the gentleman is speaking?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It provides for an ultimate two-thirds, of course.

Mr. STEVENSON. After it has been on the books long enough to be repealed, then it may have the two-thirds.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman expect this provision to be repealed?

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not expect it to be passed, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It will be passed, and I do not think it will be repealed. Of course, the gentleman is correct in one sense. If I should stop to discuss every single detail of the legislation, I would have to take a great deal more time than is available. It is a fact that while the ultimate purpose is that two-thirds shall become American citizens, for the first couple of years provision is made for a practical accomplishment of that result, and if the gentleman thinks I made a misstatement because I did not speak of those details, then I yield to his superior judgment in that regard.

Mr. STEVENSON. I was not accusing the gentleman. I thought he had overlooked the fact when he said there was absolutely no modification of the La Follette Act, because you suspend it for two years.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. We do not suspend it at all. The La Follette Act does not require Americanization of American crews. I say that we are enlarging that act and providing for more Americans in the crews of these ships than were ever provided for in any previous law. [Applause on the Republican side.] My good friend from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] a moment ago laid a great deal of stress upon the opinions of Mr. J. H. Rosseter. Although Mr. Rosseter did not appear at the hearings and was not heard by the committee, I happen to have a copy of a communication, I think of later date than anything quoted by the gentleman from Tennessee, from Mr. Rosseter, and I am going to take the time to read this communication. It is the communication to which my colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS], adverted a moment ago.

It is as follows:

JANUARY 27, 1922.

Mr. PAUL SCHARRENBERG,
Vice President International Seamen's Union of America,
525 Market Street, San Francisco, Calif.

MY DEAR MR. SCHARRENBERG: This is to acknowledge and to thank you for the article entitled "Ship subsidy debate" appearing in the Seamen's Journal of 18th instant.

These questions remain of general interest to me, although I am determined to exclude from my future activities any active interest in shipping.

The whole question of American shipping is complex and difficult from the fact that, as a Nation, the question is not understood. Our form of government, or proceedings therein, make a practical solution very difficult, if not impossible.

I am free to concede that there are many questions on which people of experience may honestly differ in opinion. You know my views and I think you will concede that in all my dealings with the question I endeavored to take into account all interests concerned, to the end that we might actually establish and hold a fair share of foreign commerce under our flag. After a long and earnest effort, I have been forced to the conclusion that there is no hope of accomplishing a solidarity of opinion, and that we will gradually drift back to an inconspicuous and unworthy position in comparison with other nations.

The term "subsidy" is an unfortunate one and leads, as instanced in the debate to which you refer, to a state of almost hopeless misunderstanding in the public mind. Possibly you will recall an article I wrote to the Examiner in January, 1920, and that I therein endeavored to make clear what was required, viz, to substitute a policy of reasonable encouragement on the part of the Government in place of the chilling and discouraging attitude in vogue for several decades, resulting in the practical elimination of the American flag in foreign trade.

Our laws have effectively protected coastwise shipping in conferring exclusive right of operation. While this was well and good enough in a way, the actual result of such protection has been, in my opinion, prejudicial to the extent that it resulted in a frail and artificial condition.

On one point we must be agreed, and that is unless we can actually operate on equal terms with other nationals we can not hope to develop or maintain a merchant marine. Without ships the opportunity of following the sea as a livelihood is restricted and, in large measure, denied to our people. It is not to be disputed from our standards of living and civilization that Americans can not endure a scale of wages and living conditions acceptable to other nationals. Translated into practical terms this means, as you know, that expenses of operating under the American flag amount to $10,000 and upwards of $50,000 for wages and victualing alone in excess of our international competitors on each and every foreign voyage. Disregarding all other prejudicial conditions. How, then, is that to be overcome? To me it seems simple enough, but unhappily your organizations of seamen apparently encourage the idea that this or other forms of encouragement are to be classed as subsidy.

Disregarding entirely, if you will, the direct subsidy allowed by some nations, why can not the question be fairly considered from the standpoint of indirect encouragement provided by other nations in contrast with burdens imposed by our Government? Such a course is to be briefly described as encouragement in the form of—

- (a) Reasonable and proper mail compensation.
- (b) Relief from the burden of Federal taxation or a distribution thereof over a period of years, so that a fair average will permit carrying the benefits that may be derived during any prosperous period that may occur, to offset the losses and grief of lean years.
- (c) Rules and regulations to take care of extra cost of manning and victualing, in the form of an appropriation to provide and assure naval reserves.
- (d) Schedule of allowances according to size, class, and speed for the privilege and assurance of having ships in reserve for Navy and Army emergencies.

There are other reasonable and proper things that can be done in the way of encouragement to the benefit of national interests. Certainly such reasonable forms of encouragement can not be classified and denounced in the unpopular and onerous term of "subsidy."

I am thus addressing you on the impulse of the moment, but with some hesitancy and misgivings, as on no account do I desire to again be brought into public issue on this question.

With kind regards,

Yours very truly,

J. H. ROSSETER.

[Applause.]

Now, I submit that Mr. Rosseter can not be cited as an authority against every form of Government aid or encouragement, and with his experience, his wide experience, which has been vouched for by the gentleman from Tennessee himself, he goes to the extent of saying that on every foreign voyage our ships suffer a disadvantage in differential running to from $10,000 to $50,000 for wages and subsistence. That is his view; that is his opinion after his many years of connection with the shipping business.

I asked the gentleman from Tennessee a question with reference to the amount of tonnage operating in the foreign trade by the various countries in 1914, and his reply was that our tonnage was exceeded only by Great Britain and Germany, and by Germany only to a small extent. I have the figures here, taken from the report of the Commissioner of Navigation of the Department of Commerce, showing that in the United States for 1914 the tonnage for the foreign trade was 1,066,288 tons. The total tonnage, including the coastwise trade, was 2,026,098, our foreign tonnage, exclusive of the coastwise tonnage, being, as I said, 1,066,288. For the same year, 1914, the United Kingdom had 18,892,089 tons; France, 1,922,286 tons; Germany, 5,184,720 tons; Japan, 1,708,386 tons; Norway, 1,957,353 tons; Italy, 1,430,475 tons. Of course, in the case of Great Britain, some of its tonnage was in what they call the coastwise trade, but the other countries have practically no such trade as what we call coastwise, so I think it is demonstrated by the figures that we were away below any of the other countries in 1914; that our tonnage was far below any of the other countries that have been enumerated. I do not think that is perhaps very material. It simply disturbs to some extent the roseate, happy, and prosperous picture which was painted by my friend from Tennessee with reference to the condition of American shipping. That was far the most exhilarating exhibition of conditions in American shipping I have ever heard. One would have thought that we were on the high road to prosperity in foreign shipping after listening to the descriptions of my friend from Tennessee.

Much has been said about the Republican position upon this question. I do not care whether it has been in a Republican platform or not. After long study of this subject by men who seriously wanted to solve it they reached the conclusion that now and here something must be done, and it is a very important question. My friend was somewhat disturbed about the sinister influence which Chairman Lasker might have exerted upon the President of the United States; that he had induced the President to take the position which he has taken in regard to this subject. Anyone who heard the really marvelous exposition of this matter by the President must have been convinced of his personal sincerity and of the absolute conviction in his mind as to the position which he has taken. [Applause.] It is a serious thing, Members of the Congress, for the Chief Executive of this Nation to be faced with a problem such as is facing him now; and while I have no right to make any suggestion to the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle, it does seem to me that it is most unfortunate and almost unworthy to make a suggestion of partisanship in the disposition of this matter. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] said with considerable force that no subsidy and no Government aid can create commerce or increase cargoes. Of course, that is true. But Government aid can secure for us our share of the commerce which exists. Government aid will not create commerce, except to this extent and in this way—that the better shipping facilities we have and the better able we are to supply the markets of the world, the more we will create markets for our own products, for which we will need tonnage.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. For a moment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman if it was not practically the last act at the last session of Congress, immediately before adjournment, to destroy foreign commerce in so far as the enactment of Congress was concerned and in so far as it was possible?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Well, the gentleman from Tennessee, of course, makes the suggestion that the gentleman, his colleague from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS], made. We on our side will never agree with you on the subject of a protective tariff. I presume the gentleman refers to a protective tariff. I will say this to the gentleman, this kind of legislation is of the same general nature and purpose as the protective tariff, and perhaps that is why it is a little hard for you to be reconciled to it. [Applause.] The purpose of this legislation is to protect and promote American commerce and American trade and American shipping by giving it necessary aid. You have always contended that a protective tariff is a robbery. You have always contended that a protective tariff is for special interests. You are making that same argument against this bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, it is true in both instances.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman thinks it is. The gentleman, the distinguished leader of the minority, must think it is, or I know he would not say so. But let us not confuse the two propositions. I do not think the two belong together except that they run in parallel lines.

We have insisted that those who are opposed to this legislation should suggest some alternative, and my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Tennessee, attempted to make some suggestions.

I wonder whether anybody thinks, whether anybody will be of the opinion, that the suggestions which he made really can accomplish anything like the purpose sought by this bill. I did not have an opportunity of writing down his suggestions as fast as he made them, but I did notice that he wanted a repeal of the law preventing the American registry of foreign ships. Of course, that would immediately throw us into open, direct competition, right in our own trade, with foreign ships; and how that could benefit the situation I believe even the gentlemen on that side will find it difficult to explain.

We have before us the alternative of continuing the present system or of making some change. When pressed for an alternative, our friends across the aisle say, "Let us continue this present system for a while, until world conditions improve, or until something else happens, and then let us try to devise some system different from this."

I think the people of the country pretty generally are getting quite tired of this continual postponement of action on important matters. Speaking for myself and with reference to our side of the House, I think we to-day would be better off if we had passed this bill six months ago, and if we had passed the tariff bill one year ago. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The people want action. Neither of these pieces of legislation is erroneous, but I believe the people are more disposed to forgive us if we occasionally make a mistake than they are to forgive us for continual procrastination and delay. You have nothing else on that side to suggest but delay. If you have any constructive proposition, let us have it; let us know what you propose to do with this fleet. Let us know how you propose to handle these ships. Let us know what substitute you have to offer for building up the American merchant marine rather than doing it in the way proposed by this bill.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. With pleasure.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman from Tennessee proposed to investigate. [Laughter.]

Mr. BEEDY. And the gentleman from Tennessee undertook to say that he would get the Government out of the shipping business, but then concluded with facts to the contrary, and finally decided he would like to continue the Government Shipping Board, only he wanted the right to constitute its personnel.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes. There was a suggestion about the appointment of the Shipping Board, and all that.

But I do not want to inject any partisan spirit into this discussion at all. I was quite impressed the other day when I received a document which showed the attitude of one distinguished member of the Democratic Party. Much has been said about our early experience in shipping. That has been very aptly described by the distinguished Senator from Louisiana, Mr. RANDELL, in a document which I believe has been delivered to all the Members of the House. However, I think it should go into the RECORD in this discussion. In a statement addressed to the National Merchant Marine Association recently, Senator RANDELL said:

I hear it stated from time to time that the Democratic Party can not support a plan of subsidy, because the policies of the party are fundamentally opposed to such a policy. History, however, shows us that the very reverse is true. Under the early shipping policies of the Democracy the American merchant marine was developed to a point of efficiency and power beyond the trade fleets of all other nations. Under the laws framed by the founders of the Republic we had discriminating duties in favor of goods carried in American vessels, and as a result of these we transported nine-tenths of our exports and imports under our own flag for many years. Just before the late war, however, conditions had become exactly reversed, and it was the foreigner who carried the nine-tenths of our ocean commerce.

What had happened? In the period from 1828 to 1850 we gradually gave up discriminations against the vessels of those nations which agreed not to discriminate against us. And then, when our hands were tied, foreign nations began to take up effectively the subsidization of their own vessels, and our sea power began to wane.

It was the Democracy which stepped into the breach at this crisis in American shipping affairs and initiated the American policy of ship subsidies. Two southern statesmen began it—Senator Thomas Butler King, of Georgia, and Senator Thomas J. Rusk, of Texas. Both advocated annual appropriations for the carrying of mails and the encouragement of American steamship building and navigation. President Polk stood strongly for this policy, and in 1845 and 1847 Congress passed legislation to this end. As to the effectiveness of this step inaugurated by the Democratic Party, let me offer some Republican testimony from the majority report of the Merchant Marine Commission of 1904-5. That body was appointed by Congress and headed by the late Senator Gallinger. The report says: "As a result of this enlightened statesmanship the United States from 1850 onward for several years built more ocean steamships than Great Britain did, and better steamships, superior in size, speed, power, and commercial value. . . . The national policy thus approved would doubtless have continued unbroken to the present day but for the fierce and deplorable sectional quarrel that immediately preceded the Civil War. * * * In the white heat of this quarrel the mail subventions were withdrawn, and the north Atlantic steamships, struggling hard with subsidized British rivals, were abandoned."

The report continues:

"It is sometimes said that this national effort to create a steam fleet by mail subventions failed of its purpose. But it failed only because the effort was given up in the very crisis of the contest. A few years more would probably have made our steamships as securely masters of the north Atlantic as our packet ships and clipper ships had been before them."

This tribute to subsidization, penned nearly 20 years ago, has an even greater bearing to-day than then, for now we have a mighty nucleus in hand for a mighty fleet. The ships are here, but they must be vested with competitive power before it is too late. Support of subsidy will not be an abandonment of Democratic policies, but a renewal of the very ones on which the American merchant marine was set forth on a voyage to sea supremacy that ended with the goal in sight, and only then because the sailing orders were canceled. Let us not make this mistake again.

I commend Senator RANDELL's views and the action of the distinguished Democrats of a former generation, to whom he refers, to the very serious consideration of gentlemen who, for party reasons, now feel constrained to oppose this legislation.

The best proof that we can not establish an American merchant marine under private operation without Government aid is the fact that it has not been done. [Applause on the Republican side.] American genius, American enterprise, American patriotism, have done all else. This alone is a problem in the solution of which we must meet not only the competition but the opposition of other nations. It is therefore a national problem, one which the Nation must solve as a sovereignty engaged in a contest with other national sovereignties, for all other nations treat their shipping problems as national, not to say international, problems.

We are told that there is no need for Government aid; in other words, in effect that this situation will take care of itself. Is not that, after all, the attitude of those who merely oppose the proposed solution and have no alternative to offer? The President has spoken. The Committee of the House has spoken. What will the House do? Avoid the issue by sophistry and skulking or assume some measure of their responsibility as Representatives of a great people?

DIFFERENTIALS IN COST OF CONSTRUCTION.

It has been deemed important in this debate to ascertain something certain with reference to the differentials against American shipping. Our principal competitor in building and equipping ships is England. Before the war—and I speak advisedly, because the records and the hearings bear this out—it cost approximately 25 per cent more to build American ships than it cost to build vessels of the same type and size in British shipyards. The cause of this difference lies almost entirely in the higher price paid for labor to American workmen. Formerly there was also an advantage in favor of Great Britain in the cost of materials, but most of those can now be purchased almost as cheaply on this side, on account of our ability to handle quantity production.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. May I have another 30 minutes, or 15? Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I yield the gentleman 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 20 minutes more.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Equipment and furnishings, in which the largest element of cost is labor, are still more expensive in the United States. Since labor constitutes one-half of the cost of a ship, and this cost is twice as great in the United States as in Great Britain, it will readily be seen that the differential of 25 per cent in the initial cost of construction is a conservative estimate.

Among the materials which are slightly cheaper in this country than in England are plates, forgings, and shapes, which in the main constitute the largest and simplest parts, while articles of equipment such as windlasses, winches, boilers, boats, and the like cost more in this country on account of the large element of labor involved in their production. Freight charges for hauling these materials are also greater in the United States on account of the longer distances over which they must be carried. With reference to wages, on January 1 last the average hourly wage in British yards at the rate of exchange then prevailing was 31 cents, while the corresponding wage in American yards was 58 cents. At the present time most of the American shipyards are closed down, and this condition of depression and lack of operation will make for inefficiency and loss of initiative when shipbuilding may again be resumed on anything like a normal scale.

I shall not take the time to quote some of the authorities which appear in the hearings. Even the opposition has quoted

Mr. Homer L. Ferguson, president of the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., than whom there is no better authority on the subject, who makes the following analysis of the relative cost of shipbuilding in England and the United States:

If we assume the completed price of a standard freight ship constructed in American yards to be 100, we may take this as constituted as follows: Labor, 40; overhead, 20; and material, 40. Since about half of overhead is labor we can, if we prefer, express this as labor 50 and material 50. Of the 50 which represents the American cost of labor 55 per cent, or 27.5, will represent the British cost of labor. Of the 50 which is the American figure for material, no increase would give the same figure, 50, for the British material figure. The sum of the two would give 77.5 as the index for the British ship against 100 for the American. This would amount to a difference of slightly over 20 per cent of the American costs, and represents the figure which it is believed will closely approximate the permanent differential after the present exceptional conditions disappear.

Quotations secured last January from representative British and American shipyards, for instance, gave the prices on an 8,800 dead-weight ton cargo vessel, which is the average tramp type, as ranging from $55 to $65 in London and Glasgow, while for American yards the average was $95 per dead-weight ton. This made a differential for new construction of the standardized cargo ship type of about $35 per dead-weight ton, or over 36 per cent.

The initial cost follows the ship throughout its life and is an important element in the subsequent cost of operation. Landlords whose buildings were erected before the war at low prices of wages and materials have reaped enormous harvests in the increased rentals which they have been able to collect from tenants during and since the war. Buildings now being erected on the present schedules of wages and prices of materials will never yield an equal return on their investment to those which were built before the war. So also with ships. The initial cost is the capital investment or account upon which future earnings must be figured.

There are at least three continuous charges which depend upon the initial cost of construction. They are, first, the interest on the amount invested; second, the amortization or depreciation to be allowed on the investment; and, third, the cost of insurance. You will find in the hearings a large number of tables and statements with reference to this initial cost of production as well as the cost of operation. It would be impossible, I must confess, for the other side or for our side to make a presentation here of all those facts, of all those tables and statements upon which our conclusions are reached; but these statements show and these hearings show that these three items which I have just mentioned together involve annual costs or charges of from 15 to 20 per cent above the cost or book value of the vessel. On a typical 8,800-ton ship at $30 per ton, each 1 per cent increase in the cost of capital amounts to a charge of $2,600 per annum, continuing throughout the life or operation of the ship. It is estimated that the life of a ship is approximately 20 years. An average of from 4 to 5 per cent per annum must be set aside for amortization or depreciation. With a higher initial cost the amount of this depreciation charge must necessarily be correspondingly increased.

Another important element is insurance, and the differential between British cost of insurance and the American cost of insurance exists to-day notwithstanding the law to which my friend from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] referred yesterday, which we passed six months ago. A higher rate of only 1 per cent on an 8,800 dead-weight ton ship with a valuation of $30 per ton amounts to an annual increase of $2,600.

These various items, the interest on the amount invested, the amortization or depreciation account, and the cost of insurance show, in the experience of American shipping men, a differential against the American and in favor of the British operator of from 3 to 4 per cent. The total annual excess of capital charges to an American owner over similar charges to a British owner can therefore be fairly stated at not less than 15 per cent on the excess of the initial cost, which in turn is at least 20 per cent of the total initial cost or, as stated, at least 3 per cent of the entire initial cost.

It is to be noted, also, that the higher wages paid to American labor follow the ship through every item of repair and maintenance cost where labor is employed in American ports or shipyards. For many reasons shipowners prefer to have at least substantial repairs made in their home ports or, at least, in the ports of the ship's flag. These repairs must be added to the capital account upon which interest or profit should be allowed and add another element of differential against the American shipowner. It has been estimated that repairs amount to from $5,000 to $15,000 per annum for a medium-sized tramp ship, and a minimum excess cost of 20 per cent would amount to from $1,000 to $3,000 per year on an average cargo ship.

It is a well-known fact, also, that such administrative expenses as salaries of port staff, freight agents, and clerical force show higher figures in the United States than in foreign countries. These items are not included in what is ordinarily called and discussed as the wage scale of a ship, nor are they included in the compensation paid so-called executives in a shipping concern.

While British conditions have been used by way of comparison, it must not be forgotten that the British probably approach more nearly American wage conditions and costs of material than do other maritime nations, such as Japan and Germany.

When was it ever argued before that American workmen in American shipyards do not receive higher or better wages than are received in any other country in the world? And still that must be the basis of the argument here when it is said that there is no differential in the cost of constructing ships. We have boasted that our American scale of wages is higher in all branches of industry than anywhere else in the world, and it is. It is higher in the shipyards; it is higher in the repair yards; it is higher in the shops which manufacture the furnishings and equipments for ships. It is higher in every place, in every factory, and every shop where a single thing is produced which goes into the building or the equipment of a ship. It seems to me that without going into detailed figures, he who runs may read the story of the increased cost of construction of American ships.

WAGE DIFFERENTIALS.

I shall turn for a moment, because my time is running rapidly, to the matter of wages on ships. For obvious reasons it is somewhat difficult to calculate the differential in wages to a mathematical certainty, but men engaged in operating ships have had a uniform experience to the effect that the pay roll on an American ship is uniformly about 30 per cent higher than on a corresponding British ship.

This was true before the World War and is true now, although it is true also that before the World War we had a somewhat limited opportunity for comparison. A British wage scale is now in operation which is expected will be reduced within a very short time, but I have here with me some comparisons of the present wage scales in America and in Great Britain. You will observe the difficulty of this demonstration when I show you these sheets of paper upon which these tabulations occur. You will find these ships discussed in the hearings.

Here are two ships, one the United States Shipping Board vessel Galesburg and the other the Ballygally Head, a British ship. The American ship is 5,138 gross tons, 9½ knots, and burns coal. The British ship is 5,179 gross tons, 13 knots, and burns coal. The difference in cost of the American pay roll for wages over the British pay roll—and this is taken from actual figures, from the records of these two ships—the difference in cost of the American over the British ship per month for wages is $746.79, or during a year $8,961.48.

Comparison of American and British wage scales.

[Pound sterling=$4.45.]

DECK DEPARTMENT.

United States, "Galesburg," 5,138 gross tons, 9½ knots, coal.				Great Britain, "Ballygally Head," 5,179 gross tons, 13 knots, coal.
Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.	Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.
Master.....	1	$270	$270	Master.....	1	£ 48 0	£ 48 0
First officer.....	1	165	165	First mate.....	1	23 10	23 10
Second officer.....	1	145	145	Second mate.....	1	17 0	17 0
Third officer.....	1	130	130	Third mate.....	1	13 0	13 0
Carpenter and boatswain.....	1	65	65	Fourth mate.....	1	12 0	12 0
Able-bodied seamen.....	6	55	330	Sailor and carpenter.....	1	12 10	12 10
Ordinary seamen.....	2	40	80	Boatswain.....	1	11 0	11 0
				Able-bodied seaman and lampman.....	1	10 10	10 10
				Able-bodied seamen.....	4	10 0	40 0
				Sailors.....	3	10 0	30 0
				Ordinary seaman.....	1	5 10	5 10
				Deck boy.....	1	4 10	4 10
Total.....	13		1,185	Total.....	17		227 10

* Master's pay on "Ballygally Head" estimated.

Comparison of American and British wage scales—Continued.

ENGINE DEPARTMENT.

United States, "Galesburg," 5,138 gross tons, 9½ knots, coal.				Great Britain, "Ballygally Head," 5,179 gross tons, 13 knots, coal.
Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.	Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.
Chief engineer.....	1	$240	$240	First engineer.....	1	£ 25 10	£ 25 10
First engineer.....	1	165	165	Second engineer.....	1	20 10	20 10
Second engineer.....	1	145	145	Third engineer.....	1	17 0	17 0
Third engineer.....	1	130	130	Fourth engineer.....	1	13 0	13 0
Oilers.....	3	65	195	Donkey man.....	1	11 10	11 10
Firemen.....	9	57½	517½	Stokekeeper.....	1	11 10	11 10
Coal passers.....	3	50	150	Greaser.....	1	11 10	11 10
				Firemen and trimmers.....	12	10 10	126 0
Total.....	19		1,542½	Total.....	19		236 10

STEWARD'S DEPARTMENT.

United States, "Galesburg," 5,138 gross tons, 9½ knots, coal.				Great Britain, "Ballygally Head," 5,179 gross tons, 13 knots, coal.
Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.	Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.
Chief steward.....	1	$105	$105	Chief steward.....	1	£ 14 10	£ 14 10
Chief cook.....	1	90	90	Second steward.....	1	9 5	9 5
Second cook and baker.....	1	70	70	Mess room steward.....	1	9 0	9 0
Mess boys.....	3	35	105	Assistant steward.....	1	8 10	8 10
				Ship's cook.....	1	13 10	13 10
				Cook.....	1	9 10	9 10
Total.....	6		307	Total.....	6		64 5
Radio operator.....	1	90	90
Grand total.....	39		3,097½	Grand total.....	42		528 5

RECAPITULATION.

United States, "Galesburg," 5,138 gross tons, 9½ knots, coal.				Great Britain, "Ballygally Head," 5,179 gross tons, 13 knots, coal.
Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.	Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.
Deck department.....	13		1,185	Deck department.....	17		$1,012.38
Engine department.....	19		1,542½	Engine department.....	19		1,052.42
Steward's department.....	6		307	Steward's department.....	6		285.91
Radio.....	1		90
Grand total.....	39		3,097½	Total.....	42		2,350.71

Difference in cost of American over British:

Per month.....	$746.79
Per year.....	8,961.48

I have another comparison—between the Shipping Board ship Hog Island and the English ship Cornish Point. The American ship is 7,800 dead-weight tons, oil burner, 10 knots, and the Cornish Point is 8,200 dead-weight tons, coal burner, 12½ to 13 knots. There is one point of difference between coal-burning and oil-burning ships. An oil-burning ship requires about one-third of the firemen that are required in a coal-burning ship. Notwithstanding this reduction in crew, the difference between these two ships in wages per month is $735, or per year $8,820, against the American ship. But it will be noted that the English ship has a higher dead-weight tonnage and that it has an excess of 2 knots per hour, and is therefore a more valuable ship.

Comparison of American and British ship wages.

DECK DEPARTMENT.

[Pound sterling equals $4.50.]

United States, "Hog Island," 7,800 dead-weight tons, oil burner, 10 knots.				England, "Cornish Point," cargo, 8,200 dead-weight tons, coal burner, 12½-13 knots.
Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.	Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.
Master.....	1	$270	$270	Master.....	1	£ 48 10	£ 48 10
First officer.....	1	165	165	Chief officer.....	1	23 10	23 10
Second officer.....	1	145	145	Second officer.....	1	17 0	17 0
Third officer.....	1	130	130	Third officer.....	1	13 0	13 0
Carpenter and boatswain.....	1	65	65	Carpenter.....	1	12 10	12 10
Able-bodied seamen.....	6	55	330	Boatswain.....	1	11 10	11 10
Ordinary seamen.....	2	40	80	Able-bodied seamen.....	8	10 0	80 0
				Apprentices.....	2	0 0	0 0
Total.....	13		1,185	Total.....	16		157 10

Comparison of American and British ship wages—Continued.

ENGINE DEPARTMENT.

United States, "Hog Island," 7,800 dead-weight tons, oil burner, 10 knots.				England, "Cornish Point," cargo, 8,200 dead-weight tons, coal burner, 12½-13 knots.
Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.	Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.
Chief engineer.....	1	$240	$240	Chief engineer.....	1	£ 30 10	£ 30 10
Assistant engineer.....	1	165	165	Second engineer.....	1	23 10	23 10
Second assistant engineer.....	1	145	145	Third engineer.....	1	17 0	17 0
Third assistant engineer.....	1	130	130	Fourth engineer.....	1	13 0	13 0
Oilers.....	3	65	195	Donkeyman.....	1	11 10	11 10
Firemen.....	3	57½	172½	Greasers.....	2	11 0	22 0
Wipers.....	2	50	100	Firemen.....	12	10 10	126 0
Total.....	12		1,147½	Total.....	19		243 10

STEWARD'S DEPARTMENT.

Chief steward.....	1	$105	$105	Chief steward.....	1	14 10	14 10
Chief cook.....	1	90	90	Assistant steward.....	1	9 5	9 5
Second cook and baker.....	1	70	70	Mess room steward.....	1	9 0	9 0
Mess boys.....	3	35	105	Chief cook.....	1	13 10	13 10
Total.....	6		370	Second cook.....	1	10 0	10 0
Wireless operator.....	1	90	90	Total.....	5		56 5
Grand total.....	32		2,792½	Grand total.....	40		457 5

RECAPITULATION.

Deck department.....	13	$1,185		Deck department.....	16	157 10	$708½
Engine department.....	12	1,147½		Engine department.....	19	243 10	1,095½
Steward's department.....	6	370		Steward's department.....	5	56 5	253
Wireless operator.....	1	90		Total.....	40		2,057½
Total.....	32		2,792½	Total.....	40		2,057½

Difference in cost American wages over English:

Per month.....	$735
Per year.....	8,820

Here is the United States ship Orleans and the Great Britain ship Mongolian Prince, both about 9,600 tons dead weight, both 11 knots. The American ship burns oil and the British ship burns coal, and the difference in wages is $593 a month, or $7,116 a year, in favor of the British.

Comparison, American and British wages.

DECK DEPARTMENT.

[Pound sterling equals $4.50.]

United States, "Orleans," 9,638 dead-weight tons, 11 knots, oil.				Great Britain, "Mongolian Prince," 9,670 dead-weight tons, 11 knots, coal.
Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.	Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.
Master.....	1	$270	$270	Master.....	1	£ 48 10	£ 48 10
First officer.....	1	165	165	First officer.....	1	23 10	23 10
Second officer.....	1	145	145	Second officer.....	1	17 0	17 0
Third officer.....	1	130	130	Third officer.....	1	13 0	13 0
Carpenter.....	1	70	70	Carpenter.....	1	12 10	12 10
Boatswain.....	1	65	65	Boatswain.....	1	12 10	12 10
Able-bodied seamen.....	6	55	330	Boatswain and able-bodied seaman.....	1	11 10	11 10
Ordinary seamen.....	2	40	80	Able-bodied seamen.....	7	10 0	70 0
Total.....	14		1,255	Apprentices.....	4
				Total.....	17		196 0

ENGINE DEPARTMENT.

Chief engineer.....	1	$240	$240	First engineer.....	1	30 10	30 10
First assistant engineer.....	1	165	165	Second engineer.....	1	23 10	23 10
Second assistant engineer.....	1	145	145	Third engineer.....	1	17 0	17 0
Third assistant engineer.....	1	130	130	Fourth engineer.....	1	13 0	13 0
Oilers.....	3	65	195	Donkey man.....	1	11 10	11 10
Firemen.....	3	57½	172½	Second donkey man and greaser.....	1	11 0	11 0
Wipers.....	2	50	100	Greaser.....	1	11 0	11 0
Total.....	12		1,147½	Firemen and trimmers.....	12	10 10	120 10
				Total.....	19		238 0

Comparison, American and British wages—Continued.

STEWARD'S DEPARTMENT.

United States, "Orleans," 9,638 dead-weight tons, 11 knots, oil.				Great Britain, "Mongolian Prince," 9,670 dead-weight tons, 11 knots, coal.
Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.	Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.
Chief steward.....	1	$105	$105	Chief steward.....	1	£ 14 10	£ 14 10
Chief cook.....	1	90	90	Second steward.....	1	9 5	9 5
Second cook and baker.....	1	70	70	Engineer's steward.....	1	8 10	8 10
Mess boys.....	3	35	105	Cook.....	1	13 10	13 10
Total.....	6		370	Assistant cook.....	1	9 10	9 10
Radio operator.....	1	90	90	Total.....	5		55 5
Grand total.....	33		2,862½	Radio operator.....	1	17 6 8	15 0
				Grand total.....	42		504 5

RECAPITULATION.

Deck department.....	14	$1,255		Deck department.....	17		$882
Engine department.....	12	1,147½		Engine department.....	19		1,071
Steward's department.....	6	370		Steward's department.....	5		249
Radio operator.....	1	90		Radio operator.....	1		67½
Grand total.....	33		2,862½	Grand total.....	42		2,269½

Difference in cost of American over British:

Per month.....	$593
Per year.....	7,116

Here is the United States ship Dakota compared with the English ship Rexmore, 10,200 tons dead weight. The English ship makes 13 knots and the American ship makes 12 knots. Both oil burners, a very fair comparison. The difference in cost of the American wage scale or the wage pay roll over the British is $531.50 per month, or $6,378 per year.

Comparison of American and British wages.

[Pound sterling equals $4.50.]

DECK DEPARTMENT.

United States, "Dakota," 6,426 gross tons, 10,200 dead-weight tons, 12 knots, oil.				England, "Rexmore," 6,512 gross tons, 10,200 dead-weight tons, 13 knots oil burner.
Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.	Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.
Master.....	1	$270	$270	Master.....	1	£ 48 10	£ 48 10
First officer.....	1	165	165	First officer.....	1	23 10	23 10
Second officer.....	1	145	145	Second officer.....	1	17 0	17 0
Third officer.....	1	130	130	Third officer.....	1	13 0	13 0
Carpenter.....	1	70	70	Carpenter.....	1	12 10	12 10
Boatswain.....	1	65	65	Able-bodied seamen.....	10	10 0	10 0
Able-bodied seamen.....	6	55	330	Apprentices.....	4
Ordinary seamen.....	2	40	80	Total.....	20		226 0
Total.....	14		1,255

ENGINE DEPARTMENT.

Chief engineer.....	1	$240	$240	Chief engineer.....	1	30 10	30 10
First assistant engineer.....	1	165	165	Second engineer.....	1	23 10	23 10
Second assistant engineer.....	1	145	145	Third engineer.....	1	17 0	17 0
Third assistant engineer.....	1	130	130	Fourth engineer.....	1	13 0	13 0
Oilers.....	3	65	195	Fifth engineer.....	1	12 0	12 0
Firemen.....	3	57½	172½	Donkey man.....	1	11 10	11 10
Wipers.....	2	50	100	Greasers.....	3	11 0	33 0
Total.....	12		1,047½	Firemen.....	6	10 10	63 0
				Total.....	15		203 10

STEWARD'S DEPARTMENT.

Chief steward.....	1	$105	$105	Chief steward.....	1	14 10	14 10
Chief cook.....	1	90	90	Second steward.....	1	9 5	9 5
Second cook and baker.....	1	70	70	Mess room steward.....	1	9 0	9 0
Mess boys.....	3	35	105	Ship's cook.....	1	13 10	13 10
Total.....	6		370	Second cook and baker.....	1	10 0	10 0
Wireless operator.....	1	90	90	Cabin boy.....	1	5 0	5 0
Grand total.....	33		2,762½	Galley boy.....	1	5 0	5 0
				Total.....	7		66 5
				Grand total.....	42		495 15

Comparison of American and British wages—Continued.

RECAPITULATION.

United States, "Dakota," 6,426 gross tons, 10,200 dead-weight tons, 12 knots, oil.				England, "Rexmore," 6,512 gross tons, 10,200 dead-weight tons, 13 knots, oil burner.
Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.	Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.
Deck department.	14	.....	$1,255	Deck department.	20	£ 226 0	$1,017
Engine department.	12	.....	1,047½	Engine department.	15	203 10	915½
Steward's department.	6	.....	370	Steward's department.	7	66 5	297
Wireless operator.	1	.....	90
Total.....	33	.....	2,762½	Total.....	42	495 15	2,231

Difference in cost of American over British:

Per month..... $331.50

Per year..... 6,373.00

Another case: The United States ship Susquehanna and the English ship Berrima. The American ship is 11,700 gross tons; the English ship 11,202 gross tons. Both are rated at 13 knots, and both burn coal. The difference in the wage cost per month is $3,647.26, or per year $43,767.12, which is the differential against the American ship.

Comparison of wages on American and British ships.

[Pound sterling equals $4.45.]

DECK DEPARTMENT.

United States, "Susquehanna," 11,700 gross tons, 13 knots, coal.				England, "Berrima," 11,202 gross tons, 13 knots, coal.
Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.	Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.
Master.....	1	$315	$315	Master.....	1	£ 30 0	30 0
Chief officer.....	1	175	175	Chief mate.....	1	21 0	21 0
Second officer.....	1	155	155	Second mate.....	1	18 0	18 0
Third officer.....	1	135	135	Third mate.....	1	13 10	13 10
Fourth officer.....	1	120	120	Carpenter.....	2	14 10	29 0
Carpenter.....	1	70	70	Boatswain.....	1	11 10	11 10
Carpenter's mate.....	1	60	60	Lamps.....	1	10 10	10 10
Boatswain.....	3	60	180	Quartermasters.....	4	10 10	42 0
Masters-at-arms.....	3	60	180	Able-bodied sea-	28	10 0	280 0
Quartermasters.....	6	60	360	men.....	2	5 10	11 0
Able-bodied sea-	18	55	990	Ordinary seamen.....	2	10 0	20 0
men.....	6	40	240	Seamen.....	1	3 0	3 0
Ordinary seamen.....	6	40	240	Deck boy.....	1	3 0	3 0
Total.....	43	.....	2,980	Total.....	46	.....	489 10

ENGINE DEPARTMENT.

Chief engineer.....	1	$280	$280	First engineer.....	1	35 10	35 10
First assistant engineer.....	1	175	175	Second engineer.....	1	23 10	23 10
Second assistant engineer.....	1	155	155	Third engineer.....	1	18 0	18 0
Third assistant engineer.....	1	135	135	Fourth and assistant engineers.....	5	14 0	70 0
Fourth assistant engineer.....	1	120	120	Donkey men.....	2	11 10	23 0
Junior engineers.....	3	100	300	Refrigeration greasers.....	3	11 10	34 10
Chief electrician.....	1	85	85	Greasers.....	6	11 0	66 0
Assistant electrician.....	1	80	80	Firemen.....	18	10 10	189 0
Chief refrigeration engineer.....	1	90	90	Trimmers.....	16	10 0	160 0
Deck engineer.....	1	70	70
Chief storekeeper.....	1	65	65
Water tenders.....	3	65	195
Oilers.....	9	65	585
Firemen.....	18	57½	1,035
Coal passers.....	18	50	900
Total.....	61	.....	4,270	Total.....	43	.....	619 10

STEWARDS' DEPARTMENT.

Doctor.....	1	$175	$175	Chief stewards.....	1	£ 16 10	16 10
Hospital attendants.....	2	60	120	Second stewards.....	2	12 10	25 0
Chief radio operator.....	1	105	105	Third stewards.....	3	10 10	31 10
First assistant radio operator.....	1	95	85	Assistant third stewards.....	4	9 15	39 0
Second assistant radio operator.....	1	75	75	Chief cook.....	1	13 10	13 10
Baggage master.....	1	85	85	Second cook.....	1	9 15	39 0
Chief purser.....	1	175	175	Assistant cooks.....	1	13 10	13 10
				Baker.....	1	12 10	12 10
				Second baker.....	1	9 15	9 15
				Assistant baker.....	1	9 15	9 15

Comparison of wages on American and British ships—Continued.

STEWARDS' DEPARTMENT—continued.

United States, "Susquehanna," 11,700 gross tons, 13 knots, coal.				England, "Berrima," 11,202 gross tons, 13 knots, coal.
Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.	Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.
Assistant purser.....	1	$100	$100	Mess room steward	1	£ 9 5	£ 9 5
Clerk.....	1	85	85	Stewardesses.....	2	9 5	18 10
Chief steward.....	1	165	165	Assistant stewards	46	9 5	425 10
Second steward.....	1	110	110	Steward's boys ..	7	5 0	35 0
Chief third-class steward.....	1	90	90
Assistant stewards and waiters.....	19	50	950
Stewardesses.....	2	50	100
Chief, chief cook.....	1	140	140
Chief cook, second class.....	1	115	115
Chief cook, third class.....	1	80	80
Chief crew cook.....	1	90	90
Assistant crew cook.....	1	70	70
Kosher cook.....	1	60	60
Steage cook.....	1	70	70
Chief baker.....	1	115	115
Second or night baker.....	1	90	90
Assistant baker or third baker.....	1	75	75
Chief butcher.....	1	90	90
Third butcher or assistant refriger-erator butcher.....	1	80	80
Chief pantryman, first class.....	1	75	75
Chief pantryman, second class.....	1	65	65
Chief storekeeper.....	1	85	85
Assistant store-keeper.....	1	50	50
Canteen man or barman.....	1	50	50
Scullions and dishwashers.....	5	50	250
Messmen.....	2	60	120
Mess boys.....	5	55	275
Bell boys.....	2	30	60
Inspectors or watchmen.....	2	55	110
Musician.....	1	75	75
Timekeeper.....	1	60	60
Barber and hair-dresser.....	1	1	1
Total.....	70	.....	4,780	Total.....	75	.....	704 0
Grand total.....	174	.....	11,715	Grand total.....	174	.....	1,813 0

RECAPITULATION.

Deck department.....	43	.....	$2,665	Deck department.....	46	£ 489 10	$2,178.18
Engine department.....	61	.....	4,270	Engine department.....	43	619 10	2,756.77
Steward's department (radio included).....	70	.....	4,780	Steward's department.....	75	704 0	3,132.80
Grand total.....	174	.....	11,715	Total.....	174	1,813 0	8,067.75

Difference in cost of American over British:

Per month..... $3,647.26

Per year..... 43,767.12

Here is another United States ship America and a Great Britain ship Baltic. Both of them are familiar to many Members of the House. The American ship has a gross tonnage of 21,114 and the British ship of 23,884. Both make 17 knots and both are coal burners. The differential in the American pay roll over the British pay roll for each month is $19,451.50, or for the entire year, $233,468.

Comparison of American and English ship wages.

DECK DEPARTMENT.

[Pound sterling equals $4.50.]

United States, "America," 21,114 gross tons, 17 knots, coal.				Great Britain, "Baltic," 23,884 gross tons, 17 knots, coal.
Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.	Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.
Master.....	1	$500	$500	Master.....	1	£ 75 0	£ 75 0
Chief officer.....	1	250	250	Chief mate.....	1	43 0	43 0
First officer.....	1	200	200	First mate.....	1	42 0	42 0

¹ Estimated.

Comparison of American and English ship wages—Continued.

DECK DEPARTMENT—continued.

United States, "America," 21,114 gross tons, 17 knots, coal.				Great Britain, "Baltic," 23,884 gross tons, 17 knots, coal.
Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.	Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.
First junior officer.	1	$200	$200	Second mate.....	1	£ 38 0	£ 38 0
Junior second officer.....	1	185	185	Third and fourth mates.....	2	28 0	56 0
Junior second officer.....	1	185	185	Fifth mate.....	1	27 0	27 0
Senior third officer.....	1	165	165	Carpenter.....	1	15 10	15 10
Junior third officer.....	1	165	165	Carpenter's mate..	1	12 10	12 10
Carpenter.....	1	70	70	Boatswain.....	1	13 10	13 10
Second carpenter.....	1	60	60	Boatswain's mate..	1	12 0	12 0
Third carpenter.....	1	55	55	Lamps and able bodied seamen..	1	10 10	10 10
Boatswain.....	1	65	65	Stores and able bodied seamen..	1	10 10	10 10
Second boatswain.....	1	60	60	Able-bodied seamen.....	31	10 0	310 0
Third boatswain.....	1	60	60	Ordinary seamen.....	8	7 0	56 0
Quartermasters.....	6	60	360
Lookout quarter-masters.....	6	55	330
Masters-at-arms.....	9	60	540
Able-bodied seamen.....	42	55	2,310
Ordinary seamen.....	11	40	440
Deck boys.....	7	30	210
Senior radio operator.....	1	120	120
First assistant radio operator.....	1	100	100
Junior or second assistant operator.....	1	90	90
Total.....	98		6,720	Total.....	52		726 10

ENGINE DEPARTMENT.

United States, "America," 21,114 gross tons, 17 knots, coal.				Great Britain, "Baltic," 23,884 gross tons, 17 knots, coal.
Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.	Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.
Chief engineer.....	1	$350	$350	Chief engineer.....	1	£ 66 0	£ 66 0
Senior first assistant engineer.....	1	250	250	Second engineer.....	1	47 0	47 0
Junior first assistant engineer.....	1	200	200	Third engineer.....	1	42 10	42 10
Senior second assistant engineer.....	1	185	185	Fourth engineers.....	6	38 0	228 0
Junior second assistant engineer.....	1	170	170	Storekeepers.....	2	11 10	22 0
Third assistant engineer.....	1	150	150	Refrigerator greasers.....	3	11 10	34 10
Junior third assistant engineer.....	1	140	140	Greasers.....	11	11 0	121 0
Fourth assistant engineer.....	1	130	130	Leading firemen.....	6	11 0	66 0
Junior engineers.....	9	100	900	Firemen.....	37	10 10	358 10
First refrigerating engineer.....	1	125	125	Trimmers.....	35	10 0	350 0
Second refrigerating engineer.....	1	100	100
Third refrigerating engineer.....	1	85	85
Chief electrician.....	1	125	125
Second electrician.....	1	100	100
Third electrician.....	1	85	85
Assistant electricians.....	3	85	255
Deck engineer.....	1	70	70
Machinist.....	1	90	90
Chief plumber.....	1	90	90
Assistant plumber.....	2	80	160
Chief storekeeper.....	1	65	65
Assistant storekeeper.....	1	60	60
Oilers.....	24	65	1,560
Leading firemen.....	3	65	195
Firemen.....	48	57½	2,760
Wipers.....	4	50	200
Coal passers.....	57	50	2,850
Phone operators.....	3	59½	178½
Total.....	172		11,628½	Total.....	103		1366 10

STAFF AND COMMISSARY.

United States, "America," 21,114 gross tons, 17 knots, coal.				Great Britain, "Baltic," 23,884 gross tons, 17 knots, coal.
Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.	Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.
Purser.....	1	$225	$225	Chief steward.....	1	£ 35 0	£ 35 0
Second purser.....	1	100	100	Second steward.....	1	15 0	15 0
Clerk.....	1	85	85	Third steward.....	1	13 0	13 0
Baggage master.....	1	90	90	Chief storekeeper.....	1	10 10	10 10
Yeoman.....	1	72½	72½	Second storekeeper.....	1	9 15	9 15
Do.....	1	72	72	Assistant storekeepers.....	4	9 5	37 0
Surgeon.....	1	175	175	Writers.....	3	10 10	31 10
Second surgeon.....	1	150	150	Saloon stewards.....	3	10 10	31 10
Pharmacist.....	1	90	90	Second and third saloon stewards.....	2	10 0	20 0
Nurse.....	1	85	85	Stewards.....	32	9 5	296 0
Attendant.....	1	60	60	Night watchmen.....	4	9 5	37 0
Mistress at arms.....	1	60	60	Chief printer.....	1	11 10	11 10
Chief steward.....	1	200	200	Assistant printer.....	1	10 0	10 0

Comparison of American and English ship wages—Continued.

STAFF AND COMMISSARY—continued.

United States, "America," 21,114 gross tons, 17 knots, coal.				Great Britain, "Baltic," 23,884 gross tons, 17 knots, coal.
Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.	Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.
Second steward.....	1	$150	$150	Deck steward.....	1	£ 9 5	£ 9 5
Assistant second stewards.....	2	115	230	Assistant desk steward.....	1	9 5	9 5
Saloon steward.....	1	65	65	Reading room steward.....	1	9 5	9 5
Chief storekeeper.....	1	100	100	Lounge-room steward.....	1	9 5	9 5
Assistant storekeeper.....	1	75	75	Smoke-room steward.....	1	9 5	9 5
Assistant storekeepers.....	2	65	130	Bath and lavatory stewards.....	4	9 5	37 0
Bartender.....	1	80	80	Bathroom stewards.....	16	9 5	148 0
Messmen.....	1	60	60	Linen keeper.....	1	10 0	10 0
Messboys.....	8	50	400	Chief pantryman.....	1	12 0	12 0
Steward's yeoman.....	1	50	50	Second pantryman.....	1	10 0	10 0
Engineer's messmen.....	2	60	120	Assistant pantrymen.....	3	9 5	27 15
Engine mess boys.....	2	50	100	Boots.....	5	9 5	46 5
Post-office messmen.....	1	60	60	Plate stewards.....	4	9 5	37 0
Post-office mess boys.....	2	50	100	Bell boys.....	4	2 10	10 0
Firemen's messmen.....	1	60	60	Chief second-class steward.....	1	13 0	13 0
Firemen's mess boys.....	8	50	400	Chief pantryman.....	1	10 0	10 0
Linen keeper.....	1	80	80	Assistant pantryman.....	1	9 5	9 1
Assistant linen keeper.....	1	60	60	Saloon steward.....	1	9 15	9 5
Printer.....	1	75	75	Stewards.....	25	9 5	231 55
Do.....	1	65	65	Smokeroom steward.....	1	9 5	9 5
Liftman.....	1	50	50	Library steward.....	1	9 5	9 5
Bugler.....	1	60	60	Boots.....	1	9 5	9 5
Captain's man.....	1	60	60	Lavatory and bath stewards.....	2	9 5	18 10
Chief engineer's man.....	1	60	60	Plate stewards.....	4	9 5	37 0
Cellar man.....	1	50	50	Night watchmen.....	2	9 5	18 10
Bell hops.....	6	30	180	Stewardesses.....	10	9 5	92 10
Silvermen.....	3	50	150	Chief third-class steward.....	1	13 0	13 0
Gym. steward.....	1	50	50	Second-class stewards.....	1	10 10	10 10
Boots.....	1	50	50	Interpreter.....	1	10 0	10 0
Library stewards.....	2	50	100	Pantry.....	1	9 10	9 10
Smoking room stewards.....	4	50	200	Ordinary steward.....	1	9 5	9 5
Bath stewards.....	2	50	100	Night watchmen.....	2	9 5	18 10
Deck stewards.....	3	50	150	Chief.....	1	23 0	23 0
Watchmen.....	4	50	200	Assistant chef.....	1	19 0	19 0
Stewardess.....	8	50	400	Larder cook.....	1	15 0	15 0
Assistant stewards.....	43	50	2,150	Sauce and entree cook.....	1	15 0	15 0
Bedroom stewards.....	24	50	1,200	R. & G. cook.....	1	12 10	12 10
Stewards' mess boys.....	2	50	100	Second-class cook.....	1	14 0	14 10
Chief steward, third class.....	1	100	100	Vegetable cook.....	1	13 0	13 0
Second stewards, second class.....	2	75	150	Assistant cooks.....	4	10 0	40 0
Assistant stewards.....	41	50	2,050	Scullions.....	7	9 5	64 15
Chief cook.....	1	200	200	Pastry cook.....	1	14 10	14 10
Assistant cook.....	1	180	180	Assistant cook.....	1	10 0	10 0
Roast cook.....	1	140	140	Chief baker.....	1	17 10	17 10
Assistant cook.....	1	100	100	Hebrew cook.....	1	10 0	10 0
Saucier.....	1	140	140	Ships' cook.....	1	12 10	12 10
Assistant saucier.....	1	125	125	Assistant cook.....	1	11 0	11 0
Fry cook.....	1	140	140	Confectioner.....	1	15 10	15 10
Assistant fry cook.....	1	100	100	Second baker.....	1	13 10	13 10
Grill cooks.....	2	115	230	Assistant baker.....	1	12 10	12 10
Gardmanger.....	1	140	140	Third baker.....	1	12 0	12 0
Assistant gardmanger.....	1	100	100	Assistant bakers.....	3	10 0	30 0
Confectioner.....	1	150	150	Chief butcher.....	1	13 10	13 10
Assistant confectioner.....	1	120	120	Second butcher.....	1	11 0	11 0
Do.....	1	100	100	Third butcher.....	1	10 10	10 10
Chief baker.....	1	120	120	Fourth butcher.....	1	10 0	10 0
Vienna baker.....	1	100	100	Assistant butchers.....	2	9 10	19 0
Second Vienna baker.....	1	80	80	Bedroom stewards.....	8	9 5	74 0
Assistant Vienna bakers.....	2	70	140	Messroom stewards.....	2	9 10	19 0
Chief butcher.....	1	115	115	First-class barber.....	1	1	1
Second butcher.....	1	85	85	Second-class barber.....	1	1	1
Third butcher.....	1	75	75	Bandmaster.....	1	1	1
Assistant butcher.....	1	70	70	Bandsmen.....	3	1	3
Chief cook, second class.....	1	150	150
Second cook.....	1	70	70
Assistant cook.....	1	70	70
Chief cook.....	1	110	110
Chief crew cook.....	1	110	110
Second crew cook.....	1	75	75

Comparison of American and British ship wages—Continued.
STAFF AND COMMISSARY DEPARTMENT—continued.

United States, "Susquehanna," 11,700 gross tons, 13 knots, coal.				England, "Berrima," 11,202 gross tons, 13 knots, coal.
Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.	Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.
Assistant crew cook.....	1	$70	$70			£ s.	£ s.
Kosher cook.....	1	90	90
Night cook.....	1	90	90
Chief pantryman.....	1	100	100
Second pantryman.....	1	75	75
Assistant pantrymen.....	3	70	210
Canteenmen.....	3	65	195
Second officer, chief pantryman.....	1	70	70
Third officer, chief pantryman.....	1	70	70
Assistant pantrymen.....	2	60	120
Scullions and dishwashers.....	43	50	2,150
Musicians.....	13	50	650
News agent.....	(1)
Manicurist.....	(1)
Barber.....	(1)
Tailor.....	(1)
Telephone operators.....	3	59½	178½
Assistant stewards.....	6	50	300
Do.....	122
G. H. stewards.....	5	50	250
Total.....	342		19,567½	Total.....	209		2,012 6
Grand total.....	612			Grand total.....	364

1 No pay.

RECAPITULATION.

Deck department.....	98	$6,720	Deck department.....	51	$3,269½
Engine department.....	172	11,628½	Engine department.....	103	6,139½
Staff and commiss-ion.....	342	19,567½	Staff and commiss-ion.....	209	9,055½
Grand total.....	612	37,916½	Grand total.....	364	18,464½

Difference in cost of American over British:

Per month.....	$19,451.50
Per year.....	233,468.00

Here is the United States ship President Harrison compared with the Japanese ship Rakuyo Maru. The American ship is 13,000 dead-weight tons and the Japanese is 12,500 tons. The American ship makes 14½ knots and the Japanese ship 13 knots. The American ship burns oil and the Japanese ship coal, and the difference of cost of the American wage over the Japanese wage is $2,965.50 a month, or, per year, $35,586.

Comparison of wages on American and Japanese ships.

DECK DEPARTMENT.

United States, "President Harrison," 13,000 dead-weight tons, 14½ knots, oil.				Japan, "Rakuyo Maru," 5 S. E. boilers, 12,500 dead-weight tons, 13 knots, coal.
Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.	Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.
Master.....	1	$375	$375	Master.....	1	Yen. 310	Yen. 310
First officer.....	1	200	200	First officer.....	1	202	202
Second officer.....	1	175	175	Second officer.....	1	165	165
Third officer.....	1	155	155	Third officer.....	1	124	124
Fourth officer.....	1	140	140	Fourth officer.....	1	110	110
Carpenter.....	1	70	70	Extra officer.....	1
Boatswain.....	1	75	75	Apprentice officer.....	1	30	30
Quartermasters.....	4	60	240	Wireless operator.....	1
Able-bodied seamen.....	14	55	770	Second wireless operator.....	1
Ordinary seamen.....	6	40	240	Boatswain.....	1	97	97
Deck watchman.....	1	55	55	Carpenter.....	1	79	79
First radio operator.....	1	115	115	Storekeeper.....	1	74	74
Second radio operator.....	1	100	100	Quartermasters.....	6	74	442
Total.....	34		2,710	Sailors.....	12	64	768
				Total.....	30		2,401

Comparison of wages on American and Japanese ships—Continued.

ENGINE DEPARTMENT.

United States, "President Harrison," 13,000 dead-weight tons, 14½ knots, oil.				Japan, "Rakuyo Maru," 5 S. E. boilers, 12,500 dead-weight tons, 13 knots, coal.
Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.	Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.
Chief engineer.....	1	$310	$310	Chief engineer.....	1	Yen. 284	Yen. 284
First assistant engineer.....	1	200	200	First engineer.....	1	184	184
Second assistant engineer.....	1	175	175	Second engineer.....	1	150	150
Third assistant engineer.....	1	155	155	Third engineer.....	1	130	130
Junior engineers.....	3	120	360	Fourth engineer.....	1	120	120
No. 1 refrigerator engineer.....	1	115	115	Fifth engineer.....	1	110	110
No. 2 refrigerator engineer.....	1	90	90	Extra engineer.....	1	90	90
No. 3 refrigerator engineer.....	1	75	75	No. 1 oiler.....	1	75	75
Deck engineer.....	1	85	85	Storekeeper.....	1	80	80
Electrician.....	1	95	95	Oilers.....	8	75	600
Storekeeper.....	1	65	65	Firemen.....	11	64	704
Oilers.....	5	65	325	Coal passers.....	18	57	1,020
Water tenders.....	2	65	130
Firemen.....	7	57.50	402½
Wipers.....	4	50	200
Total.....	31		2,782½	Total.....	46		3,547

PURSER'S DEPARTMENT.

Purser.....	1	$175	$175	Purser.....	1	$250	$250
Freight clerk.....	1	130	130	Freight clerk.....	1	115	115
Chief steward.....	1	165	165	Surgeon.....	1	185	185
Second steward.....	1	100	100	Storekeeper.....	1	110	110
Saloon steward.....	1	80	80	Clerk.....	1	80	80
Chief cook.....	1	140	140	Do.....	1	70	70
Second cook.....	1	90	90	Do.....	1	60	60
Waiters.....	8	50	400	Tally clerk.....	1	65	65
Third cook.....	1	80	80	Chief steward.....	1	235	235
Fourth cook.....	1	70	70	Second steward.....	1	150	150
Scullions.....	2	50	100	Third steward.....	1	125	125
Butcher.....	1	90	90	Barkeeper.....	1	50	50
Chief baker.....	1	110	110	Chief cook.....	1	100	100
Second baker.....	1	75	75	Second cook.....	1	80	80
Printer.....	1	60	60	Third cook.....	1	75	75
Bath steward.....	1	50	50	Chief baker.....	1	75	75
Bell boy.....	1	30	30	Second baker.....	1	60	60
Messman.....	1	45	45	Butcher.....	1	85	85
Second laundryman.....	1	65	65	Cooks.....	5	90	450
Steergasteward.....	1	85	85	Pantry waiter.....	1	40	40
Surgeon.....	1	150	150	Assistant pantry waiter.....	1	35	35
				Hospital boy.....	1	60	60
				Cabin waiters.....	9	52	468
				Second-class waiters.....	3	51	153
				Steerage waiters.....	4	51	204
				Waiter (Chinese crew).....	7	50	350
				Chinese interpreter.....	1	43	43
				European food cooks.....	2	90	180
				Cabin waiters.....	5	46	230
Total.....	29		2,290	Total.....	57		4,183

RECAPITULATION.

Deck department.....	34	$2,710	Deck department.....	30	$2,401	$1,163
Engine department.....	31	2,872½	Engine department.....	46	3,547	1,718
Purser's department.....	29	2,290	Purser's department.....	57	4,183	2,025
Grand total.....	94	7,872½	Grand total.....	133	10,131	4,907

Excess of American wages cost over Japanese wages:

Per month.....	$2,965.50
Per year.....	35,586.00

Here is another Japanese ship, the Tenyo Maru, compared with the United States ship President Taft. The President Taft is 14,123 gross tons, 16 knots, oil type, and the Japanese is 13,398, making 17 knots, and burns coal. The difference in cost of the American wage over the Japanese wage is $1,099 per month, or $13,188 per year.

Comparison of American and Japanese wages—Trans-Pacific.

DECK DEPARTMENT.

United States, "President Taft," 14,123 gross tons; 16 knots; oil.				Japan, "Tenyo Maru," triple screw; 13 S. E. boilers; 52 furnaces; 13,398 gross tons; 17 knots; coal.
Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.	Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.
Master.....	1	$416	$416	Master.....	1	Yen. 475	Yen. 475
First officer.....	1	225	225	Chief officer.....	1	275	275
Second officer.....	1	185	185	First officer.....	1	210	210
Third officer.....	1	165	165	Second officer.....	1	185	185
Fourth officer.....	1	150	150	Third officer.....	1	175	175
Carpenter.....	1	70	70	Junior officer.....	1	150	150
Boatswain.....	1	65	65	Apprentice officers	2	40	80
Boatswain's mate.....	1	60	60	Boatswain.....	1	97	97
Quartermasters.....	4	60	240	Second boatswain.....	1	73	73
Able-bodied seamen.....	16	55	880	Carpenters.....	2	79	158
Ordinary seamen.....	6	40	240	Storekeeper.....	1	74	74
Chief radio operator.....	1	115	115	Quartermasters.....	6	74	444
Second radio operator.....	1	100	100	First-class sailors.....	5	64	320
Third radio operator.....	1	90	90	Second-class sailors.....	5	59	295
Total.....	37		3,001	Fourth-class sailors.....	6	56	336
				Apprentice sailors.....	7	54	378
					2	23	46
				Total.....	44		3,771

ENGINEER'S DEPARTMENT.

Chief engineer.....	1	$330	$330	Chief engineer.....	1	410	410
First assistant engineer.....	1	225	225	First assistant engineer.....	1	325	325
Second assistant engineer, senior.....	1	185	185	Second assistant engineer.....	1	275	275
Second assistant engineer, junior.....	1	155	155	Third assistant engineer.....	1	185	185
Third assistant engineer.....	1	165	165	Junior assistant engineer.....	1	145	145
Junior licensed engineers.....	3	130	390	Fourth assistant engineer.....	1	130	130
No. 1 refrigerator engineer.....	1	125	125	Fifth assistant engineer.....	1	95	95
No. 2 refrigerator engineer.....	1	100	100	Apprentice engineer.....	1	40	40
No. 3 refrigerator engineer.....	1	85	85	Extra engineers.....	2	93	186
No. 1 electrician.....	1	100	100	Electrician.....	1	145	145
No. 2 electrician.....	1	90	90	Fitter.....	1	80	80
No. 3 electrician.....	1	65	65	Machinist.....	1	75	75
Water tenders.....	6	65	390	Boiler maker.....	1	75	75
Oilers.....	6	65	390	Chief fireman.....	1	95	95
Storekeeper.....	1	65	65	Assistant chief fireman.....	1	82	82
Wipers.....	6	50	300	Storekeeper.....	1	80	80
Firemen.....	12	57 1/2	690	Water tenders.....	5	80	400
Machinist.....	1	90	90	Oilers.....	9	75	675
Plumber.....	1	90	90	Donkeyman.....	1	65	65
Boiler maker.....	1	90	90	First-class firemen.....	12	64	768
Total.....	48		4,120	Second-class firemen.....	17	60	1,020
				First-class coal passers.....	10	57	570
				Second-class coal passers.....	19	55	1,045
				Apprentice firemen.....	3	24	72
				Total.....	93		7,048

PURSER'S DEPARTMENT.

Staff and commissary.
Purser.....	1	$175	$175	Purser.....	1	280	280
Freight clerk.....	1	130	130	Surgeon.....	1	265	265
Assistant purser.....	1	100	100	Freight clerk.....	1	170	170
Storekeeper.....	1	90	90	Store clerk.....	1	125	125
Baggage clerk.....	1	65	65	Clerks.....	4	80	320
Surgeon.....	1	150	150	Chief steward.....	1	340	340
Chief steward.....	1	165	165	Second steward.....	1	100	100
Second steward.....	1	100	100	Steward steward.....	1	100	100
Third steward.....	1	70	70	Baggage-master.....	1	72	72
Steward steward.....	1	70	70	Hospital steward.....	1	60	60
No. 1 stewardess.....	1	45	45	Second-class steward.....	1	60	60
No. 2 stewardess.....	1	40	40	Bartender.....	1	60	60
Saloon watchman.....	1	65	65	Assistant bartender.....	1	46	46
Steering watchman.....	1	60	60	Butchers.....	2	85	170
Manicurist.....	1			Smoking room waiter.....	1	53	53
Barber.....	1			Deck stewards.....	2	52	104
Total.....			1,325	Saloon night watchman.....	1	65	65
				Saloon bathroom waiter.....	1	52	52
Chinese crew.....				Postmaster.....	1
No. 1 saloon cook.....	1	86.25	86.25	Assistant postmaster.....	1
No. 2 saloon cook.....	1	51.75	51.75	Saloon waiters.....	19	52	988
No. 3 saloon cook.....	1	48.30	48.30

Comparison of American and Japanese wages—Trans-Pacific—Continued.

PURSER'S DEPARTMENT—continued.

United States, "President Taft," 14,123 gross tons; 16 knots; oil.				Japan, "Tenyo Maru," triple screw; 13 S. E. boilers; 52 furnaces; 13,398 gross tons; 17 knots; coal.
Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.	Rate.	Num-ber.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.
Chinese crew—Continued.
Vegetable cook.....	1	$31.05	$31.05	Second-class waiters.....	5	Yen. 51	Yen. 255
Crew cook.....	1	38.75	38.75	Mess-room waiters.....	5	38	190
No. 1 baker.....	1	80.25	80.25	Steering waiters.....	6	51	306
No. 2 baker.....	1	57.50	57.50	Apprentice waiters.....	3	20	60
No. 1 pantryman.....	1	46.00	46.00	Japanese food cooks.....	5	86	430
No. 2 pantryman.....	1	34.50	34.50	Laundrymen.....	4	83	332
No. 3 pantryman.....	1	28.75	28.75	Musicians.....	5
No. 4 pantryman.....	1	25.87	25.87	Barber.....	1
Silvermen.....	2	28.75	57.50	Chinese crew.
Printer.....	1	46.00	46.00	No. 1 saloon waiter.....	1	67	67
Porters.....	2	23.00	46.00	Saloon waiter.....	1	46	46
Officers' mess boy.....	1	28.75	28.75	Saloon waiters.....	20	32	640
Petty officers' mess boy.....	1	25.30	25.30	Saloon bathroom waiters.....	2	32	64
No. 1 butcher.....	1	74.75	74.75	Second-class waiter.....	1	32	32
No. 2 butcher.....	1	34.50	34.50	Chinese interpreter.....	1	43	43
Engineers' messman.....	1	28.75	28.75	Steering waiters.....	4	27	108
Junior engineers' messmen.....	2	25.30	50.60	Apprentice waiters.....	4	15	60
No. 1 saloon boy.....	1	48.25	48.25	European food cooks.....	8	100	800
Deck boys.....	2	23.00	46.00	Bakers.....	3	65	195
Bar boy.....	1	46.00	46.00	Pantrymen.....	6	35	210
Smoke-room boys.....	2	23.00	46.00	Chinese food cooks.....	3	46	138
Social hall boy.....	1	23.00	23.00	Porter.....	1	32	32
No. 2 saloon boy.....	1	37.37	37.37	Printer.....	1	50	50
Saloon boys.....	30	25.30	759.00
Bathroom boys.....	4	23.00	115.00
Interpreter.....	1	40.25	40.25
No. 1 steering cook.....	1	46.00	46.00
No. 2 steering cook.....	1	31.05	31.05
No. 3 steering cook.....	1	28.75	28.75
No. 1 steering waiter.....	1	31.05	31.05
Steering waiters.....	4	25.30	101.20
No. 1 checker.....	1	57.50	57.50
Assistant checkers.....	4	28.75	115.00
Sailors' mess boys.....	2	20.70	41.40
Firemen's mess boys.....	2	20.70	41.40
Total.....			2,567.34
Philippine Band leader.....	1	50.00	50.00
Filipino bandsmen.....	5	45.00	225.00
Total, purser's department.....	105		2,827.50
Grand total.....	190		9,969.60

RECAPITULATION.

Deck department.....	37	$3,001.00	Deck department.....	47	1,827.00
Engineer's department.....	48	4,120.00	Engineer's department.....	94	3,415.00
Purser's department.....	16	1,325.00	Purser's department.....	78	3,628.00
Chinese crew.....	89	1,523.60	Chinese crew.....	56
Grand total.....	190	9,969.60	Grand total.....	275	8,870.00

<sup>1</sup> Mexican, at $0.54 equals $1,386.60 United States currency.

<sup>2</sup> Mexican, at $0.50—$137.50.

<sup>3</sup> Yen=$0.4845 United States currency.

Excess of American wage cost over Japanese wages:

Per month.....	$1,099
Per year.....	13,188

The last two Japanese ships are in actual competition with Shipping Board vessels in the trans-Pacific service.

"The proof of the pudding is the eating thereof," according to a very old saying that we all heard in our childhood.

When the hearings were in progress the American wages had just been reduced, while the British wages were undergoing curtailment. It was therefore easy for the opponents to the bill to make a comparison of American wages after the reduction with British wages before reduction. However, the correct proceeding has been followed in some of the tables which you will find in the hearings. These tables show what the pay would be on a British ship compared with an American ship if the British ships were as fully manned as the American ships.

It happens that not only in the amount of wages but also in the number of personnel the differential is against the American ship. There are more employees on an American ship, and that is caused partly by the seaman's law. We are not complaining about it, we think it is for the benefit of the men, for the benefit of the industry, but when you provide the conditions you must provide a way to meet the differential.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman assert that on the ordinary ships there are more men in an American crew than in a foreign crew?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The entire personnel on the American ship is more than on the foreign ship.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I mean the unlicensed crew.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The licensed and the unlicensed are both paid by the shipowners.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think the gentleman is entirely inaccurate in his statement in reference to that matter.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. Has the gentleman the time to explain this? The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] made a statement that the American crew was smaller than the crew on the foreign vessel.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I did not hear the gentleman make that statement.

Mr. LONDON. He made that statement and it is an important statement of facts. Can the gentleman state what is the situation?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I say that the American crew is larger and that the hearings bring that out. I say that upon a British ship they do not have as many men employed as they are compelled to have on the American ship.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Under the leave to extend my remarks I want to add that my statement about the number of the crews on American and British ships refers, of course, to the ordinary white crews. It would not be applicable to ships employing orientals, particularly lascars, who work for a pittance and never perform the labor of which a white man is capable. Some English ships also have so-called cadets or apprentices who are in training for future service. These are not members of regular crews and are not included in the ordinary wage scales.

The following tables, to which I have referred above, appearing on pages 459 to 469 of the hearings, show comparisons of the scale rates of pay upon various types of ships for the American Steamship Owners' Association, American private owners (marked "A. S. S. O. A."), the United States Shipping Board (marked "U. S. S. B."), and the British Shipping Federation (Ltd.), British private owners (marked "British scale"). These figures have been adjusted to the present rate of exchange ($4.50 per pound sterling), while those in the hearings are shown as of April 1, 1922.

8,800 dead-weight tonnage type (Auburn).

[Dead-weight tonnage, 8,968; gross tonnage, 6,047; 3 boilers; coal burner; power tonnage, 8,547.]

Rating.	A. S. S. O. A., class B.			U. S. S. B., class C.			British scale.
	Number.	Pay per man per month.	Total.	Number.	Pay per man per month.	Total.	Number.	Pay per man per month.	Total.
Master.....	1	$275	$275	1	$270	$270	1	£ 45	£ 45
First officer.....	1	165	165	1	165	165	1	21 10	21 10
Second officer.....	1	140	140	1	145	145	1	17	17
Third officer.....	1	125	125	1	130	130	1	13	13
Carpenter.....	1	70	70	1	65	65	1	12 10	12 10
Able-bodied seamen.....	6	47½	285	6	55	330	8	10	80
Ordinary seamen.....	2	35	70	2	40	80	1	24 10	24 10
Chief engineer.....	1	250	250	1	240	240	1	21 10	21 10
First assistant engineer.....	1	165	165	1	165	165	1	17	17
Second assistant engineer.....	1	140	140	1	145	145	1	13	13
Third assistant engineer.....	1	125	125	1	130	130	1	11	11
Oilers.....	3	55	165	3	65	195	3	10 10	30 10
Firemen.....	9	50	450	9	57½	517½	9	10 10	90 10
Coal passers.....	3	40	120	3	50	150	3	10	30
Chief steward.....	1	105	105	1	105	105	1	14 10	14 10
Chief cook.....	1	90	90	1	90	90	1	13 10	13 10
Second cook and baker.....	1	70	70	1	70	70	1	9 10	9 10
Mess boys.....	2	30	60	3	35	105	2	8 10	17
Radio.....	1	90	90	1	90	90	1	13 10	13 10
Boatswain.....	1	65	65	1	65	65	1	11 10	11 10
Messman.....	1	40	40	1	40	40	1	9	9
Donkey man.....	1	70	70	1	70	70	1	11 10	11 10
Total.....	41		3,135	39		3,187½	41		522 10

<sup>1</sup> Including allowance for superior certificate.

8,800 dead-weight tonnage type (Auburn)—Continued.

Rating.	A. S. S. O. A., class B.			U. S. S. B., class C.			British scale.
	Number.	Pay per man per month.	Total.	Number.	Pay per man per month.	Total.	Number.	Pay per man per month.	Total.
Carpenter.....	1	$70	$70	1	$65	$65	1	£ 12 10	£ 12 10
Able-bodied seamen.....	6	47½	285	6	55	330	8	10	80
Ordinary seamen.....	2	35	70	2	40	80	1	24 10	24 10
Chief engineer.....	1	250	250	1	240	240	1	21 10	21 10
First assistant engineer.....	1	165	165	1	165	165	1	17	17
Second assistant engineer.....	1	140	140	1	145	145	1	13	13
Third assistant engineer.....	1	125	125	1	130	130	1	11	11
Oilers.....	3	55	165	3	65	195	3	10 10	30 10
Firemen.....	9	50	450	9	57½	517½	9	10 10	90 10
Coal passers.....	3	40	120	3	50	150	3	10	30
Chief steward.....	1	105	105	1	105	105	1	14 10	14 10
Chief cook.....	1	90	90	1	90	90	1	13 10	13 10
Second cook and baker.....	1	70	70	1	70	70	1	9 10	9 10
Mess boys.....	2	30	60	3	35	105	2	8 10	17
Radio.....	1	90	90	1	90	90	1	13 10	13 10
Boatswain.....	1	65	65	1	65	65	1	11 10	11 10
Messman.....	1	40	40	1	40	40	1	9	9
Donkey man.....	1	70	70	1	70	70	1	11 10	11 10
Total.....	41		3,135	39		3,187½	41		522 10

American private owners.....	$3,135.00	United States Shipping Board.....	$3,187.50
British, at $4.50.....	2,351.00	British, at $4.50.....	2,351.00
Difference.....	884.00	Difference.....	836.50
Difference:		Difference:
American scale (per cent).....	28	American scale (per cent).....	25
British scale (per cent).....	37	British scale (per cent).....	35

<sup>1</sup> Carpenter and boatswain.

<sup>2</sup> Including allowance for superior certificate.

8,800 dead-weight tonnage type (west shore).

[Dead-weight tonnage 8,800; gross tonnage, 5,714; 3 boilers; oil burner, power tonnage 8,214.]

Rating.	A. S. S. O. A., Class B.			U. S. S. B., Class C.			British scale, 5,001/7,000.
	Number.	Pay per man per month.	Total.	Number.	Pay per man per month.	Total.	Number.	Pay per man per month.	Total.
Master.....	1	$275	$275	1	$270	$270	1	£ 45 0	£ 45 0
First officer.....	1	165	165	1	165	165	1	21 10	21 10
Second officer.....	1	140	140	1	145	145	1	17 0	17 0
Third officer.....	1	125	125	1	130	130	1	13 0	13 0
Carpenter.....	1	70	70	1	65	65	1	12 10	12 10
Able-bodied seamen.....	6	47½	285	6	55	330	8	10 0	80 0
Ordinary seamen.....	2	35	70	2	40	80	1	24 10	24 10
Chief engineer.....	1	250	250	1	240	240	1	21 10	21 10
First engineer.....	1	165	165	1	165	165	1	17 0	17 0
Second engineer.....	1	140	140	1	145	145	1	13 0	13 0
Third engineer.....	1	125	125	1	130	130	1	11 0	11 0
Oilers.....	3	55	165	3	65	195	3	11 0	33 0
Firemen.....	9	50	450	9	57½	517½	9	10 10	31 10
Wipers.....	2	40	80	2	50	100	2	10 0	20 0
Chief steward.....	1	105	105	1	105	105	1	14 10	14 10
Chief cook.....	1	90	90	1	90	90	1	13 10	13 10
Second cook and baker.....	1	70	70	1	70	70	1	9 10	9 10
Mess boys.....	2	30	60	3	35	105	2	8 10	17 0
Radio.....	1	90	90	1	90	90	1	13 10	13 10
Boatswain.....	1	65	65	1	65	65	1	11 10	11 10
Messmen.....	1	40	40	1	40	40	1	9 0	9 0
Donkey men.....	1	70	70	1	70	70	1	11 10	11 10
Total.....	34		2,795	32		2,792½	34		450 0

American owners.....	$2,795.00	U. S. S. B.....	$2,792.50
British, at $4.50.....	2,025.00	British, at $4.50.....	2,025.00
Difference.....	770.00	Difference.....	767.50
Difference:		Difference:
American scale (per cent).....	27	American scale (per cent).....	27
British scale (per cent).....	38	British scale (per cent).....	35

<sup>1</sup> Including allowance for superior certificate.

<sup>2</sup> Carpenter and boatswain.

5,500 dead-weight tonnage type.

[Dead-weight tonnage, 5,495; gross tonnage, 3,444; 2 boilers; coal burner; power tonnage, 5,344.]

Rating.	A. S. S. O. A., Class C.			U. S. S. B., Class D.			British scale, 3,001/5,000.
	Number.	Pay per man per month.	Total.	Number.	Pay per man per month.	Total.	Number.	Pay per man per month.	Total.
Master.....	1	$265	$265	1	$265	$265	1	£ 43 0	£ 43 0
First officer.....	1	155	155	1	160	160	1	20 10	20 10
Second officer.....	1	130	130	1	140	140	1	16 10	16 10
Third officer.....	1	115	115	1	125	125	1	13 0	13 0
Carpenter.....	1	70	70	1	70	70	1	12 10	12 10
Able-bodied seamen.....	4	47½	190	4	55	220	7	10 0	70 0
Ordinary seamen.....	2	35	70	2	40	80
Chief engineer.....	1	240	240	1	230	230	1	23 10	23 10
First assistant engineer.....	1	155	155	1	160	160	1	20 10	20 10
Second assistant engineer.....	1	130	130	1	140	140	1	16 10	16 10
Third assistant engineer.....	1	115	115	1	125	125	1	13 0	13 0
Oilers.....	3	55	165	3	65	195	3	11 0	33 0
Firemen.....	6	50	300	6	57½	345	9	10 10	94 10
Coal passers.....	3	40	120	3	50	150
Chief steward.....	1	105	105	1	105	105	1	14 10	14 10
Chief cook.....	1	90	90				1	13 10	13 10
Second cook and baker.....	1	70	70	1	70	70	1	9 10	9 10
Mess boys.....	2	30	60	3	35	105	1	8 10	8 10
Radio.....	1	90	90	1	90	90	1	13 10	13 10
Messman.....	1	40	40				1	9 0	9 0
Total.....	34		2,675	33		2,775	34		445 0

American private owners.....	$2,675.00	U. S. S. B.....	$2,775.00
British, at $4.50.....	2,002.50	British, at $4.50.....	2,002.50
Difference.....	672.50	Difference.....	772.50
Difference:		Difference:
American scale (per cent).....	25	American scale (per cent).....	28
British scale (per cent).....	34	British scale (per cent).....	38

¹ Including allowance for superior certificate.

² Steward and cook.

Submarine boat type (Alcona).

[Dead-weight tonnage, 5,070; gross tonnage, 3,658; 2 boilers; oil burner; power tonnage, 3,158.]

Rating.	A. S. S. O. A., Class C.			U. S. S. B., Class D.			British scale, 3,001/5,000.
	Number.	Pay per man per month.	Total.	Number.	Pay per man per month.	Total.	Number.	Pay per man per month.	Total.
Master.....	1	$265	$265	1	$265	$265	1	£ 43 0	£ 43 0
First officer.....	1	155	155	1	160	160	1	20 10	20 10
Second officer.....	1	130	130	1	140	140	1	16 10	16 10
Third officer.....	1	115	115	1	125	125	1	13 0	13 0
Carpenter.....	1	70	70	1	70	70	1	12 10	12 10
Able-bodied seamen.....	4	47½	190	4	55	220	7	10 0	70 0
Ordinary seamen.....	2	35	70	2	40	80
Chief engineer.....	1	240	240	1	230	230	1	23 10	23 10
First assistant engineer.....	1	155	155	1	160	160	1	20 10	20 10
Second assistant engineer.....	1	130	130	1	140	140	1	16 10	16 10
Third assistant engineer.....	1	115	115	1	125	125	1	13 0	13 0
Oilers.....	3	55	165	3	65	195	3	11 0	33 0
Firemen.....	3	50	150	3	57½	172½	3	10 10	31 10
Wipers.....	2	40	80	2	50	100	2	10 0	20 0
Steward.....	1	105	105	1	105	105	1	14 10	14 10
Second cook and baker.....	1	70	70	1	70	70	1	9 10	9 10
Mess boys.....	3	30	90	3	35	105	1	8 10	8 10
Radio.....	1	90	90	1	90	90	1	13 10	13 10
Chief cook.....	1	90	90				1	11 10	11 10
Boatswain.....
Messman.....							1	9 0	9 0
Total.....	30		2,475	29		2,552½	30		399 10

American owners.....	$2,475.00	U. S. S. B.....	$2,552.50
British, at $4.50.....	1,795.50	British, at $4.50.....	1,795.50
Difference.....	679.50	Difference.....	1,757.00
Difference:		Difference:
American scale (per cent).....	27	American scale (per cent).....	30
British scale (per cent).....	38	British scale (per cent).....	42

¹ Including allowance for superior certificate.

² Steward and cook.

Lake type.

[2,875 dead-weight tonnage; 2,000 gross; 2 boilers; coal burner; power tonnage, 3,800.]

Rating.	A. S. S. O. A., Class C.			U. S. S. B., Class E.			British scale, 1,001/3,000.
	Number.	Pay per man per month.	Total.	Number.	Pay per man per month.	Total.	Number.	Pay per man per month.	Total.
Master.....	1	$250	$250	1	$250	$250	1	£ 42 0	£ 42 0
First officer.....	1	155	155	1	150	150	1	19 10	19 10
Second officer.....	1	130	130	1	135	135	1	16 0	16 0
Third officer.....	1	115	115	1	120	120	1	13 0	13 0
Carpenter.....	1	70	70	1	70	70	1	12 10	12 10
Able-bodied seamen.....	4	47½	190	4	55	220	6	10 0	60 0
Ordinary seamen.....	2	35	70	2	40	80
Chief engineer.....	1	225	225	1	220	220	1	22 10	22 10
First engineer.....	1	155	155	1	155	155	1	19 10	19 10
Second engineer.....	1	130	130	1	135	135	1	16 0	16 0
Third engineer.....	1	115	115	1	120	120	1	13 0	13 0
Oilers.....	3	55	165	3	65	195	3	11 0	33 0
Firemen.....	6	50	300	6	57½	345	9	10 10	94 10
Coal passers.....	3	40	120	3	50	150
Steward.....	1	105	105	1	105	105	1	14 10	14 10
Second cook and baker.....	1	70	70	1	70	70	1	9 10	9 10
Mess boys.....	2	30	60	3	35	105	1	8 10	8 10
Radio.....	1	90	90	1	90	90	1	13 10	13 10
Messmen.....	1	40	40				1	9 0	9 0
Cook.....	1	90	90				1	13 10	13 10
Total.....	34		2,645	33		2,715	33		430 0

American owners.....	$2,645	United States Shipping Board.....	$2,715
British, at $4.50.....	1,935	British, at $4.50.....	1,935
Difference.....	710	Difference.....	780
Difference:		Difference:
American scale (per cent).....	27	American scale (per cent).....	28
British scale (per cent).....	37	British scale (per cent).....	40

¹ Including allowance for superior certificate.

Lake type.

[3,390 dead-weight tons; 2,256 gross tons; 2 boilers; oil burners; power tonnage, 3,656.]

Rating.	A. S. S. O. A., Class C.			U. S. S. B., Class E.			British scale, 1,001/3,000.
	Number.	Pay per man per month.	Total.	Number.	Pay per man per month.	Total.	Number.	Pay per man per month.	Total.
Master.....	1	$250	$250	1	$250	$250	1	£ 42 0	£ 42 0
First officer.....	1	155	155	1	155	155	1	19 10	19 10
Second officer.....	1	130	130	1	135	135	1	16 0	16 0
Third officer.....	1	115	115	1	120	120	1	13 0	13 0
Carpenter.....	1	70	70	1	70	70	1	12 10	12 10
Able-bodied seamen.....	4	47½	190	4	55	220	6	10 0	60 0
Ordinary seamen.....	2	35	70	2	40	80
Chief engineer.....	1	225	225	1	220	220	1	22 10	22 10
First engineer.....	1	155	155	1	155	155	1	19 10	19 10
Second engineer.....	1	130	130	1	135	135	1	16 0	16 0
Third engineer.....	1	115	115	1	120	120	1	13 0	13 0
Oilers.....	3	55	165	3	65	195	3	11 0	33 0
Firemen.....	3	50	150	3	57½	172½	3	10 10	31 10
Steward.....	1	105	105	1	105	105	1	14 10	14 10
Second cook and baker.....	1	70	70	1	70	70	1	9 10	9 10
Mess boys.....	2	30	60	3	35	105	1	8 10	8 10
Radio.....	1	90	90	1	90	90	1	13 10	13 10
Cook.....	1	90	90				1	13 10	13 10
Messman.....	1	40	40				1	9 0	9 0
Total.....	27		2,305	26		2,397½	27		367 0

American owners.....	$2,305.00	U. S. Shipping Board.....	$2,397.50
British, at $4.50.....	1,651.50	British, at $4.50.....	1,651.50
Difference.....	653.50	Difference.....	746.00
Difference:		Difference:
American scale (per cent).....	28	American scale (per cent).....	31
British scale (per cent).....	40	British scale (per cent).....	45

¹ Including allowance for superior certificate.

² Cook and steward.

SUBSISTENCE DIFFERENTIALS.

The seamen's act requires all merchant vessels of the United States, the construction of which had been begun after the passage of that act on March 5, 1915, to provide a space of not less than 120 cubic feet and not less than 16 square feet, measured on the floor or deck, for each seaman or apprentice lodged therein, and also requires a separate berth for each seaman and provides that not more than one berth shall be placed one above another. Various other requirements are also made with reference to light, drainage, heating, and ventilation. These requirements, while beneficial to the crew, make an additional cost to the American operator. Table 15, on page 472 of the hearings, shows the subsistence cost in American and British ships as of April 1, 1922, according to the minimum scales prescribed by statute, and discloses a differential per man per day of 12½ cents. This amounts to $3.67½ a month, or $44.10 per year. For a crew of, say, 35 men this would be an annual excess of $1,543.50. As a matter of fact, the difference in cost of subsistence between American and foreign crews is much larger than measured by these minimum statutory requirements. American seamen will not and should not be required to subsist on the same quality and quantity of food as is given to men of lower standards of living and intelligence.

Table 15 in the hearings agrees with the tables submitted by the president of the International Seamen's Union on pages 1364 and 1365, but the latter tables do not include prices.

It must be clear that these differentials in cost of construction and of operation of American ships make it necessary that Government aid be given to establish and maintain our American merchant marine until the business has been so firmly rooted as to be able to absorb these excess charges.

During my brief service of three years in the House I have voted Government aid to railroads, to agriculture, to roads and highways, to reclamation of arid lands, to public health, to education, to droughts, to floods and other disasters, to say nothing of the hundreds of millions which have been voted and expended both prior to and during my service to individuals and corporations for damages and losses sustained in the war which were not based upon legal contracts and therefore were not cognizable in the Court of Claims. Now, finally, when a great constructive proposition is laid before the Congress for the purpose of establishing and maintaining the greatest instrumentality for foreign trade and for domestic prosperity, we are met by the old familiar cry of favoring special interests and so-called trusts. The truth is that the Government through the Shipping Board to-day owns 80 per cent of all vessels documented under the American flag. The Government is the great trust in this business, and we are trying to distribute its property and facilities among the people in order to firmly establish private operation of its great fleet. Continued Government operation means enormous annual appropriations to pay losses in operation, still amounting to fifty millions per year (though reduced from two hundred millions per year within the last 18 months), and means also the continued deterioration of the ships without necessary upkeep and replacement or augmentation of types needed to balance the fleet and make it serviceable for all the different kinds of commerce. The present bill offers the only practicable, workable, and hopeful solution of one of the most difficult problems that has ever confronted our Nation, and at the same time affords an opportunity for the return of our beloved country to its proud position, held of old, as one of the great maritime nations of the earth.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 35 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. JEFFERIS].

Mr. JEFFERIS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, as a resident of the Central West I prefer to discuss this question in what I have prepared not from a partisan standpoint nor from the standpoint of retaining a seat in the great legislative body of the United States. I would prefer to discuss this question in what I have prepared from the standpoint of a more active, more extended United States.

The "do-nothing" policy of the Government for the aid and encouragement of an American merchant marine found this Nation practically destitute in the matter of water transportation 24 years ago at the outbreak of the Spanish-American War. The sudden emergency had to be met, regardless of cost, necessitating the expenditure of millions of dollars for the hire and purchase of vessels at exorbitant prices. In some cases the Government paid more for the hire of a small ship to carry a regiment of American volunteer soldiers from San Francisco to Manila Bay than the vessel originally cost.

When Admiral Dewey, at Hongkong, received orders to proceed to Manila and destroy the Spanish fleet he had to secure a steamer from a Hongkong steamship company to pilot the American fleet across the China Sea and into Manila Bay.

During the emergency and feverish excitement of the late World War the United States spent more than $3,000,000,000 for ship construction.

The loss to the Government through the operation of a portion of these ships during the fiscal year of 1920 was about $16,000,000 per month, or some $200,000,000 for the year, an enormous sum.

The Congress of 1920, in an effort to lessen the excessive drain on the Treasury and to assist in the utilization of the Government ships in the establishment of an efficient merchant marine in foreign trade, declared its policy by law to be the establishment of foreign trade routes in order to induce the sale of the Government ships to private owners and operators.

Under the management of a reorganized Shipping Board, as competent as can be obtained, the congressional policy of 1920 has been pursued, with the result that the Government is now operating some 400 of its 1,400 steel ships at a loss to the Federal Treasury of about $4,000,000 per month, some $50,000,000 annually. The remaining 1,000 ships are tied up, not in use, and deteriorating with the passing of time. Government operation of the 400 ships has discouraged private American ship operators, who receive no part of the $50,000,000 loss to the Government, and has destroyed all hope for the sale of the Government ships to private American operators as was intended by the shipping act of 1920. A continuance of this policy will make certain the ultimate destruction of the Government ships through deterioration and lapse of time.

These experiences and conditions prompt the administrative department and a joint committee of the Senate and House to offer a less expensive plan to induce the sale of Government ships to American operators in an effort to extend through their more flexible management a more extended and efficient merchant marine for the transportation of American foreign commerce.

My study of this business problem of the Government leads me to favor the pending bill to subsidize an American merchant marine—to extend Federal financial aid, if you please, to American ships based on their tonnage, speed, and miles traveled. I believe that the experience of the past teaches us that the United States will not have a merchant marine adequate for its needs until it grants financial assistance to private American ship operators, as have and do other nations to enable their ship operators to engage in the carrying of foreign commerce.

I believe that the granting of Government aid, direct and indirect as intended by this measure, to private enterprise to the extent of thirty millions of dollars yearly will create an efficient merchant marine and at the same time establish a new field of industry for the employment of an appreciable portion of American labor and capital; that the extension of such an industry upon salt waters instead of exerting its powers to further add to our ever-increasing surplus of land products will of itself create a better domestic market for them.

I further believe that the greatest needs of the United States for the future are new markets—foreign markets—for the consumption of its products.

To confine the labor and capital of our entire people to land production and transportation of supplies for our one hundred and ten millions of people in the 48 States will not spell progress and prosperity for the future, but that the employment of a considerable part of American labor and capital upon the seas as carriers of our surplus products to the billion six hundred millions of people of other nations will spell progress and prosperity for the future of the people of this Republic.

For 50 years prior to the World War the efforts of the Government and of its people have been largely directed to the production and transportation of products on land. During this period the greater possibilities of industrial expansion have been overland. Americans became a land-thinking people and the sea was well-nigh forgotten. We grew to think of trains and automobiles gliding along railroad tracks and hard-surfaced highways within the confines of our wonderful country. We lost sight of the ocean highways which surround us on three sides and which connect us with the rest of the world.

Much of the discontent among our people is caused by overproduction. To a considerable extent it exceeds the home consumption. This, according to the law of supply and demand, brings stagnation in our home markets which could be the more quickly and effectively relieved if a portion of our people were directly engaged in carrying our surpluses to the ever-increasing foreign markets. The relief and stimulation of the home markets thus obtained would allay the strife often manifested among various groups of producers which in times of depression contend for advantage, each thinking the others get the fat while they get the lean, and hence they drive each other about, so to speak, like squirrels in a cage—a fast and exciting race at times but one that ends just where it began—no new outlet is found, no permanent relief obtained.

If the different producing bands within the Nation would but consider the general welfare of all, they would willingly unite to support a reasonable compensation made possible by Federal aid, if you please, to induce a portion of America's capital and labor to buy and operate ships for the extension of American trade in the foreign markets of the world.

An American merchant marine of the required size and speed, sufficient to transport the Nation's foreign commerce, is of great economic importance. It would insure the retention to American labor and capital of the compensation we have been paying to the subsidized steamship lines of other nations to an extent of many billions of dollars during the last 50 years.

It is folly to believe that any nation is going to look to our interests before it does to its own.

Ship operators of other nations would like nothing better than to carry every ton of our foreign cargo in their ships at their own rates. They would not only monopolize the carrying of our foreign commerce but would take over the trade itself if possible.

American producers when shipping their products in vessels flying the American flag will have no fear of foreigners stealing trade secrets or losing customers, as is frequently the case where goods are shipped in foreign bottoms.

The American flag must not be torn from the ships' masts upon the high seas through the arts of nonaction, obstruction, or destruction. Our flag's place upon the ocean has not been bought by American dollars only; its value in American blood can never be estimated—God forbid that any attempt should ever be made to place an estimate upon that.

The time has come when America's future industrial development demands the operation of regular American steamship lines to extend the railroad routes of our commerce across the seas. We have the facilities to transport our surplus products to our coast ports. All we now need to complete our system are the St. Lawrence deep waterway and the extended arm of transportation to span the oceans as our railroads and highways do the land.

The proposed measure is not an effort, as some claim or seem to think, to provide exorbitant compensation to private American ship operators for the purpose of making millionaires at the expense of the Federal Treasury. Such arguments may appeal to the prejudices of some of our people but it can not appeal to their reason nor does it make for their progress or their domestic tranquillity.

A FORWARD-LOOKING MEASURE.

The construction loan fund as provided in this bill will result in additional savings to the taxpayers of the Nation. This provision will not place in the loan fund any appropriations made by law or any profits made by the operation of vessels.

It will cover into the fund all moneys received from the sale of vessels and all interest received therefrom at a rate of not less than 2 per cent, though I would prefer 4 per cent, annually, as in the discretion of the board the same is loaned from time to time for the construction of other and different types of merchant vessels. This will relieve the Government from the necessity of borrowing to create the fund and will call for no part of the taxes collected from the people. In fact, it will transform ships now tied up and deteriorating or which are operated at a loss to the Government into a loan fund for the building of new vessels or the remodeling of vessels now in existence. The interest which the Government is required to pay on bonds already issued and from the proceeds of which the ships were constructed goes on from year to year though the ships remain idle or are operated at a loss, whereas a transformation of the vessels into a fund of money, then loaned at some rate of interest, be it great or small, will produce a Government revenue which will ultimately recoup into the National Treasury a portion of the interest which the Government pays on the bonds from which the ships were originally constructed and also the proceeds from the sale of the vessels.

The American farmer and manufacturer between the Alleghenies and the Rockies are intelligent, thinking men. They know that they produce a greater volume of the products which constitute the outgoing cargoes of our foreign commerce than do the coastwise section of the Nation.

I believe that these producers would prefer to have an efficient, privately owned, and operated American merchant marine, aided, if you please, by the Federal Government to the maximum amount of $30,000,000 per year rather than to continue a Government operated one at a minimum expenditure and loss of $50,000,000 annually.

The National Government for years has appropriated millions of dollars to the Department of Agriculture. The scientific teachings of the department has stirred American farmers to greater activity and enabled them to become more efficient and productive producers. Why continue to spur the farmers of America to produce more and more, and only provide highways over which to haul his products to our 110,000,000 people when across the seas there live 1,600,000,000 people?

This bill is a real forward-looking, economic measure. It seeks to reduce Federal expenditures by $20,000,000 per year which is wasted through a competent but centralized government operation of some 400 vessels, while 1,000 vessels deteriorate and rot.

SUBSIDIES COMMON.

This measure invites the American producer to lift his vision to the extended markets across the waters. The ships that carry trade control it. Liverpool will control or seriously influence the grain markets of the world so long as British steamship companies determine the grain-trade routes of the seas and the rates and charges therefor.

The American farmer paid an enormous subsidy to foreign ship operators during the World War. Before the war was over it cost him 48 cents per bushel to transport wheat from New York to Liverpool. At the beginning of the war it cost the American cotton grower less than a cent a pound to transport cotton to Europe. Before the war was over it cost him 3 cents a pound.

Great Britain enjoys the distinction of being mistress of the seas. Americans know that in gaining this position she aided steamship lines.

Britain's contract with the Cunard Steamship Co. for mail service every Saturday from Southampton to New York provides for a payment amounting to $317,793.

The construction of the Lusitania and Mauretania was the result of a special contract between the British Government and the Cunard Steamship Co., which provided a mail subsidy of £68,000 per year for a period of 20 years, and a Government loan of £2,600,000, or nearly $13,000,000, at an interest rate of 2½ per cent.

Similar contracts of the British Government have been the inducing cause in establishing steamship lines and trade routes to all parts of the globe. France has subsidized steamship lines, and no doubt Germany will resume its previous practice in this regard.

The private operation of American ships in foreign commerce intended to be aided by this measure will provide the Nation with the flexible and more versatile management of different steamship companies. These managements will acquaint themselves with the conditions of trade and the wants of different markets more thoroughly than can a centralized government management. A company having its funds invested in ships will rustle business for different markets in an effort to profit by its enterprise, because no company can operate vessels for the mere Government aids provided in this bill.

Man from the beginning of time has advanced only when he was inspired by hope that he might gain some of the fruits of the world by honest labor and faithful endeavor. I am one of those who believe that every wise and just subsidy granted by Nation, State, county, or city has been a stimulus which has urged to more efficient action those who hoped to prosper in the battle and strife of life.

SHYING AT SHADOWS.

Why should Congress shy at the mere shadow of the word "subsidy," as it pertains to this bill, when it means a saving of more than $20,000,000 per year to the taxpayers of the Nation?

Why pay foreign shipowners to transport our ocean commerce and thus furnish profit to foreign labor and capital in the building, repairing, and operating their ships?

Why not grant aid for American enterprise upon the high seas, as the Nation, States, cities, and counties have done to aid land developments during the past 70 years of our Nation's history?

PRECEDENTS NUMEROUS.

Congress since 1850 has been granting subsidies to induce men to initiate, to invest, to risk their all in land pursuits for their immediate gain and compensation, though in a larger sense for the Nation's development and the general welfare of its people.

The Government by the homestead laws aided home building by prompting pioneer men and women to launch their prairie schooners upon the rolling plains, there to exercise their individual initiative, their strength and courage in the reclamation of the empire of the West—the real bread basket of the world.

States, counties, and cities have voted bonds aggregating millions of dollars and Congress has made land grants of more than 150,000,000 acres of land in the various States as stimulating aids to attract and induce investors and builders to construct railroads, wagon roads, and canals for the better transportation of domestic commerce and for the common welfare of the Nation. The railroads when constructed gave rebates as aids to induce business enterprises to locate along their right of way. Cities have granted franchises to persuade investors to construct gas and electric light plants, water systems, and street railway lines. Western States, to improve live-stock production and to conserve impounded irrigation waters in reservoirs and collaterals, have paid bounties to men and boys for the killing of wolves, coyotes, and other destructive animals. County fairs give prizes to stock raisers and grain growers to stimulate their efforts in the production of better and higher grade products for the mutual benefit of the individual producer and consuming public.

Congress in recent session has appropriated millions of dollars for the avowed purpose of aiding and inducing the people of the respective States to build better highways for the quicker transportation of their products to the near-by distributing and consuming centers.

To further facilitate the transportation and exchange of domestic products, Congress a few years ago, while catching the intrepid spirit of the immortal Roosevelt, built the Panama Canal as a water highway, at a cost of some $400,000,000, to induce men to venture upon the waters which dash upon our shores as carriers of commerce in the coastwise trade of the Nation.

May this the Sixty-seventh Congress catch the inspiration of President Harding, visualize America's opportunity, sell the Government ships to private owners and operators for extension of its trade in times of peace—its protection and defense in times of war—place an efficient American merchant marine upon the high seas, manned by American seamen, carrying American commerce beneath the American flag by the enactment of the pending measure. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JEFFERIS of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not a fact that at the time Great Britain loaned the £2,000,000 to the Cunard Line to build the Lusitania and the Mauretania England could borrow all of the money she wanted at 2½ per cent?

Mr. JEFFERIS of Nebraska. I do not know what the fact is in that respect. I said that I would prefer 4 per cent to 2 per cent.

Mr. BLANTON. I just wanted to make that clear, because we are proposing to loan the money at half of what the money costs us.

Mr. JEFFERIS of Nebraska. I did not happen to live over in England at the time, and I do not know the facts. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

IMMIGRATION FEATURES OF MERCHANT MARINE BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I support this merchant marine bill. We of the Pacific coast know what it is to be without American ships. We have seen British ships, Japanese ships, and tramp ships come in ballast for the wheat from the interior, or not come until the price was right. If other ships can come to us in ballast, our own ships may go one way without cargoes. Shipping Board ships carrying loads to Japan were taken off last year because of no return cargo. Of course not. The cargoes come in Japanese bottoms, and now they are taking out our cargoes—everything from the machinery of Pennsylvania and Ohio to the lumber of the north Pacific. There is a differential, mark that. We can meet it with this bill and probably in no other way. [Applause.]

I had intended to pay some attention to Title III of the bill before us, which relates to the transportation of immigrants by water and which contemplates that as nearly as possible 50 per cent of the immigrants which may be permitted to come to the United States shall come in vessels registered, enrolled, and licensed under the laws of the United States. As the hour is late, I shall postpone that part of my statement until the section in question is reached. I will say, however, that the principle involved is correct, and that once we have adopted it we can proceed with immigration legislation along much more scientific lines than has heretofore been possible and through control can set a standard—can set the standard desired by our people.

Some have thought that authority to carry approximately 50 per cent of incoming aliens on American ships might be an entering wedge, to be used later for the striking down of the heavy restriction of immigration. But I think not. I believe the immigration laws will be made still more strict, particularly when the people of the United States learn, as they will shortly from official records, that the average amount of cost for insane, feeble-minded, criminal, diseased, deformed, and dependent aliens in the penitentiaries and eleemosynary institutions of the various States is on an average 7 per cent of all the taxes collected by the States. That is the burden we are paying for carelessness in the past with regard to the admission of great numbers of immigrants. What we will pay in the future as the result of the undigested immigration now here time alone can tell.

Mr. Chairman, let me state that once more. The care of the foreign born in the prisons and eleemosynary institutions of the various States which comprise this Union costs 7 per cent of all of the gross income of the several State governments. That is about twice what the States pay for interest charges. Of course, States with great alien population, like New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and Illinois, pay more for the care of alien defectives than do States which have fewer aliens, but the average cost is 7 per cent of all State taxation. This does not include costs of aliens in county institutions, such as jails, hospitals, and poorhouses.

And yet because the restriction of immigration to 3 per cent of the various nationalities here in 1910 has played a considerable part in the increase of wages to common labor, the cry goes up from those who would benefit most that we must have more immigrants in order to supply us with more and cheaper labor. Joining in the chorus are those who would bring from Greece as many of the 1,000,000 refugees as can be brought and those who would bring all of the other stricken peoples from all parts of the world to our shores if they could. About one person in every five in Greece is a refugee from some place in Asia Minor.

Mr. Chairman, what are those who are demanding an influx of cheap alien labor thinking about? Do they think of profits, or of population, or posterity?

Do not they know that the quotas of immigrants permitted to come from the north countries of Europe are unfilled? Must they always have a hole at Ellis Island opened big enough to admit a million or a million and a half immigrants per year, so that they may give wretched employment to possibly one-fourth of that number? They talk of alien labor as they would talk of that many tenpenny nails. They seem never to think of the wives and children of these aliens, who must either come now or remain behind, to be part of the wretched wreckage of Europe.

Does not the pitiful story from Pennsylvania, printed the other day, of the alien mother of several children who received $1 a month from her wretched husband's miserable pay check for work in the coal mines, after it had been through the abominable "company store" process, make even a dent upon those who preach Americanization and yet want a million idle aliens always standing around waiting for jobs? As far as I am concerned, I shall stand to the last against the cry.

Let Mr. Gary, Mr. Mellon, and others read the editorial in the New York World of yesterday, which newspaper, by the way, opposes heavy restriction of immigration. The editorial is headed "No Americans need apply." It reads as follows:

NO AMERICANS NEED APPLY.

One reason why the coal industry of the country remains an unreliable and hand-to-mouth affair is brought home to New Yorkers by the demand of employment agencies for foreign miners to work in the anthracite field. Russians, Poles, Lithuanians, Magyars, and Scandinavians are listed as desirable. Even Englishmen will do. But no Americans need apply.

There is a very simple reason why the operators want foreigners in the mines. A man from Poland or Lithuania has not acquired the American standard of living and therefore can get along contentedly on small wages. He can't speak the language of his adopted country nor is he accustomed to its ways; he is therefore unsure of himself, unable to state his case, and easily frightened. He will work hard because he is used to hard work, and will ask for little because he is used to receiving little.

But when he has joined a union or learned his way about he begins to ask for more, and at that point his desirability as a miner begins to wane. The operators look around for other fresh and hopeful immigrants to take his place. If they employ Americans or retain foreigners who have picked up American ways, it is only because the immigrant supply is inadequate.

While this condition exists it will be impossible to standardize wages, output, profits, or prices in the coal business. The industry is built on the exploitation of cheap and ignorant labor, on the proposition that a laborer is worthy not of the wages he earns but of what he knows enough to get. Recurring strikes are inevitable as a protest against such a policy, and strikes again play into the hands of the operators by creating fuel shortage. The crux of the problem before the coal commission is patent in this discrimination against native-born workmen.

Mr. Chairman, for that editorial I forgive the World for all of its assaults on the policy of restriction and for all of its jibes at the emergency legislation. It has stated the situation, and it makes one of the points that has led myself and others to strive for restriction, even if industry and activity in the United States is slowed down, which will not happen.

Was James R. Howard, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, justified in saying at Syracuse Wednesday that—

Immigration restriction is undoubtedly affecting the prosperity of the country, and particularly of the farmer.

Mr. Howard declared the present law was limiting the amount of manual labor in this country, and one of its natural and inevitable results was a shifting of labor from the country to the city, presenting a tremendous handicap to the farmer in production.

Another phase of the question mentioned by Mr. Howard was that the restrictive law forced prospective immigrants to seek other shores and become natural competitors of American farmers, adding still more to the depression they had been fighting for three years.

"It is a big problem for Congress," Mr. Howard stated, "and revision of the present law undoubtedly is needed. I do not favor admittance of immigrants indiscriminately, nor do I favor the educational test, but I am in favor of letting in all good, honest persons who really want to be citizens. It is the hard-working, honest person who can be absorbed best in the citizenship of the country."

What plan has Mr. Howard for letting in hard-working, honest persons? Are not all persons potentially honest and willing to work, unless permeated with the ideas of socialism, bolshevism, sovietism, or revolution?

Do not the farmers know that the first big immigration following the World War—fiscal year ended June 30, 1921—brought to the United States more than 800,000 aliens, of whom only 2 per cent were farmers and only 3 per cent farm laborers? What do those who talk of selection and distribution mean? Who is to select? What have you to promise? How is distribution to be made, and how is the distributed alien to be made to stay at a given place?

The tailors, too, are joining in the cry of labor shortage, assuming that people generally do not know that the making of clothing is changing from bench to machine so rapidly that a custom-made suit will soon be as scarce as a hand-made shoe.

There is no real shortage of tailors in this country, though a shortage is felt by tailors in the smaller communities. Native Americans have been driven out of the tailoring business by alien workers, who congregate in the large tailoring centers—New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Baltimore, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Indianapolis, and Rochester.

The high cost of clothing is not due to a shortage of workers, but to the labor union known as the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, which recently received from the soviet government of Russia a concession to manufacture clothing in Moscow, an enterprise for which they sold $5,000,000 worth of stock among their own members in the United States.

This organization's weekly paper, Advance, is one of the "reddest" permitted to circulate in America. Only a small percentage of its members are skilled mechanics, but in the manufacture of clothing in the big shops the making of a garment is divided into so many operations that a new worker may easily be taught any one of them. Thousands of Russians without any experience in tailoring have come to this country, been inducted into the union without the payment of any dues whatever, and given jobs which enabled them to earn from $40 to $60 for a 44-hour week from the start.

And yet we profess not to be surprised to see in the substantial New York Times of only yesterday these flaming headlines:

Reds seek control of needle trades—Hope to combine unions into one "militant revolutionary organization"—William Foster is leader—Ladies' garment workers and clothing workers have felt force of movement.

This is followed by a story to the effect that radicals and communists under the direction of the Trade Union Educational League, headed by William Z. Foster, have launched a campaign to convert the needle trade unions of the city into "militant revolutionary organizations" and amalgamate them into one big industrial union. The news report continues:

Meeting in the New Star Casino on Monday night, the radicals laid their plans for the movement which will affect more than 200,000 workers in the ladies' and men's clothing trades, as well as the fur and cloth hat and cap makers. L. Reinsch, of Local 5, Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, and leader of the left wing group in that union, was selected to head the campaign.

The radicals have launched an attack upon the officials of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union and are attempting to stir up factional strife. The attack is made principally against Benjamin Schlesinger, president, who, after a recent visit to Russia, denounced communism.

General office officials of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union, which has already suffered at the hands of the radicals, were striving yesterday to save the New York organization from being completely wrecked. Efforts were being made to set up a temporary organization to function on behalf of the 50,000 men's clothing workers until the arrival of President Sidney Hillman from Russia next week.

We profess, too, not to be surprised when we learn that the radicals and internationalists ride around the country in groups on freight trains free of charge on their red cards—their red badges of revolution. No, gentlemen, the immigration bars will not be lowered, whatever the appeal. They should be tightened.

The House Committee on Immigration will be ready to hold brief hearings at the beginning of the winter session, with a view to the final preparation of the bill, which will correct the present quota act, further restrict immigration of undesirable, avoid the splitting of immediate families, increase the mental and health tests, and carry a clause denying permanent residence to those aliens not eligible to citizenship. Will the House vote for such a bill? I think so. Does the country want such a bill? Yes; and the country wants it now.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am really very much astonished to find that so many Members of this House and some of the leaders of the minority upon the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries do not see the absolute necessity, as well as the policy, of maintaining an active merchant marine at any cost. That merchant marine is the eye of the Nation in time of peace. It is the scout that builds and keeps our commerce and protects our trade, which we can not always trust to the vessels of rivals, who would look for our custom while they carried our goods. It is an absolute necessity as an aid to our Navy in time of war. It is for that reason that we spent $3,000,000,000 in building ships which were intended to carry food and men. It is for that reason that we have now 14,000,000 tons, or, reduced to active vessels, 10,000,000 tons of vessels now on hand; and it is beyond all belief that patriots would be so blind as to allow that merchant marine to rot at the wharves and be lost and leave us in the same position that we were before it was built, when the World War began. What we are seeking is to make it possible for Americans, not for the Government, to build, own, operate, and serve in ships. Nothing stands in our way except that if we man these ships by Americans we must pay American wages, and if we pay American wages we can not run the ships in competition with the ships of other countries without aid and protection.

There is one other question, and that is the question of taxation. Some of our towns have been foolish enough to tax ships that are owned by their citizens as if they were private property, in spite of the provision in the Constitution that no State shall lay any tonnage duty on ships. It has been held that they have the right to tax ships as property of their citizens, and if the shipowners pay 3 per cent or 4 per cent municipal tax in some towns on the total value of the ships, whether they run or not, they can not be kept, and American shipowners can not live.

Towns that have their own advantage at heart will sooner or later see the need of preventing that course. I think it ought to be prevented by this law, and that there should be a provision in this bill that any vessel wherever documented may be owned by a corporation of the District of Columbia, so as to be under the control of the United States, and that when so owned those ships should not be subject to local taxation. Of course the stock of that company owned anywhere else might be taxable, where the stockholder is residing, but the ships ought to be released from that burden.

However, as I said before, the main question is one of wages. If you will turn to page 2087 of the voluminous hearings you will find a statement that shows that at the present time a chief engineer in England receives from $110 to $122 a month and in America from $305 to $350 a month, or nearly three times as much, and that difference runs throughout all of the different ranks of mates, captain, and so forth. When you come to the total wages of the ship you will find a statement at the bottom of the page showing them on a vessel, I think, and showing that America pays its deck crew $1,948, while the British pay the deck crew $1,123, the Japanese $1,202, and the Norwegians only $795. The same difference runs through the engine and steward forces—engine: American, $2,677; British, $1,307; Japanese, $1,580; Norwegian, $900. The American always pays from two to three times as much for officers and engineers, and he pays at least nearly twice as much for all of the rest of the crew. On page 2108 there is a very careful recapitulation for ships of 5,000 tons, 8,000 tons, 11,000 tons, and 23,000 tons. On the 11,000-ton ships the total of all three departments—deck, engine, and steward—on the American is $11,715 a month and on the English $8,067 a month. On the 21,000-ton vessel the deck crew of the English costs $2,774 and of the American $6,162, while the engine crew of the English costs $6,080 and American $11,515.

On the 8,000-ton vessel the deck and engine crew cost $8,045 a month for Americans and only $3,931 a month for the English. But I need not go on with these figures.

The only thing that will enable Americans to run ships is somehow or other to make it profitable to do so in spite of the difference in wages. It is proposed by this bill to do this, and I shall support the bill. I have sometimes thought it could be done by a simple provision that the United States would repay to any American ship operator two-thirds of the wages of any American who was employed on board while engaged in the foreign trade, and one-third of the wages of all others, my idea being to induce vessels to employ Americans, because in time of war we want an American-manned ship as well as a ship American owned and flying the American flag, and so that in trade, in commerce, and in war we will have men ready to man our ships.

Let us also point out that before the World War there were still further difficulties attending American navigation, and that those difficulties are likely to return. It does not seem to be generally known that the great German liners in 1904 and 1906 were largely, if not almost exclusively, manned by men who had been called for military service and were allowed to do their military service by serving aboard the ships. That same policy was followed in France and in Italy, and that same policy will be followed again and we will have to meet it.

Nor is it generally known that in the endeavor to get trade Great Britain always, regardless of the protection of her working people, had gone more and more to the employment of lascars, men from the Indies or east of the Indies, as sailors, and their ships at that time had some 40 per cent of their sailors of those nationalities.

I think the same condition exists now, but I do not know. It may be that the men who went in during the war are now manning her merchant marine. But these conditions will come again. At that time our own Pacific fleet of merchant liners was employing Japanese and Hawaiians and lascars, and at that time our subsidy bill as then introduced dared only say that one-quarter of the crew shall be Americans. Thank God, we now have a provision that two-thirds of the crew shall finally be Americans.

My proposition, as above stated, would be to put a premium upon the employment of Americans by repaying more of their wages and to hope thereby that owners for self-interest would make the crews exclusively Americans, as they were in ancient days. I go back, my friends, to my recollection of the old sea tales and the time when American men and the crews on the fishing vessels, whaling vessels, and vessels that made various long voyages to unknown countries on unknown seas in the hope of profit, had every man on board share in the gain. I look back with pride to the days when those men in time of war, in the Revolution, in the War of 1812, fought our battles, and these same men in 1798 fought and captured French privateers. They stood up for the country as only seamen can do, for there is no other training for peace or war which so develops a man as training on the sea, where he has to meet new dangers from time to time and day to day and be always mobilized.

I am ready to sacrifice anything to get a bill which will make it possible for Americans to sail the seas. I am ready to vote for this bill, with all its imperfections, which I hope will be corrected elsewhere or corrected here as they are reached, but I can not see this crisis pass without remembering that the fleet we have will go to rot and ruin unless some such measure as this is passed, while the opposition proposes no alternative plan for providing an American merchant marine to sail the seas and to make it possible for Americans to do it.

Let us state our object again. It is that we shall have American ships built in American yards, manned by American seamen, flying the American flag, to carry the glory of this country all over the world in time of peace, to do the work of peace upon the great highways of the world, and to support and make effective the defense of this country in time of war. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would like to use a little time. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this subsidy bill reminds me of a study of inveterate criminal types made some time ago by a famous criminologist. He describes a criminal who was being led to the gallows. A kindly minister was by his side whispering into his ear words of consolation. Appearing to listen intently, the poor wretch by sheer force of habit proceeded to pick the pocket of the minister.

The Republican Party, under a sentence of death, proceeds to steal something from the Treasury of the United States. [Laughter.] They call it "a subsidy."

The war has been employed as a pretext to build up a private merchant marine at the expense of the Treasury of the United States.

Out of 2,300 ships constructed or acquired by the Shipping Board, 1,900 were constructed after the armistice, after the war had ended.

Three billion dollars have been expended for ships which we are told can not be sold for more than $200,000,000 now. How much of the $3,000,000,000 has been stolen will probably never be known. The stealing was largely legal stealing, the kind that is neither petty larceny nor grand larceny but is glorious larceny. The 100 per cent lip patriots have managed to get contracts providing for fabulous prices for anything they did for or sold to the Government.

Plutocracy has no flag and no country. Its thieving proclivities grow with the distress of the Nation.

Not only does the present bill propose to practically give away the ships to private shipping interests, but we are called upon to pay for years to come a contribution out of the National Treasury to the very same interests for their kind acceptance of the fleet. It is claimed that the Shipping Board can not operate the ships except at a minimum loss of $50,000,000 a year, and that the granting of a subsidy will save to the Treasury about $30,000,000 a year. An analysis of the proposed measure shows clearly that the subsidy will cost considerably more than $50,000,000 a year. The bill provides for the establishment of a special fund to which there shall be set aside sums in the neighborhood of $50,000,000, but the bill also provides for various tax exemptions, the aggregate amount of which can hardly be estimated with any degree of certainty.

There is nothing to the claim that the subsidy will really be a saving.

No effort has been made to build up or develop a Government merchant marine. How can the Government succeed when its announced object is to dispose of the ships to private interests? How can the Government succeed when the Shipping Board refuses to compete with privately owned ships? The hearings disclose that whenever private interests complained of the successful competition of Government-owned ships these ships were withdrawn.

This is certainly not a propitious time to create a merchant marine. The world has more than an adequate supply of tonnage. In order to succeed it would be necessary to take away from other countries with long-established merchant marines a part of their carrying trade.

Every discrimination against the ships or goods of other countries will be followed by retaliatory measures on their part, and we will find ourselves in the midst of a bitter commercial war. England is frequently mentioned as the country which we are to emulate in developing a merchant marine. How can England exist if the communication between the British Isles and the vast English dominions spread over every continent should be cut off? England's merchant marine is to England what the railroad system is to the United States. We should no more undertake to rival England's carrying trade than we should undertake to compete with Brazil in the production of coffee or with France in the production of champagne.

It seems that the Republicans are abandoning the old Republican tradition of a home market. The 110,000,000 people of the United States can furnish a mighty good market if the producers of America will but receive a just compensation for the service they render the Nation. This attempt to artificially develop a private merchant marine at the expense of the taxpayers, with the avowed object of supplanting the merchant fleets of other countries, is but a continuation of the imperialistic policy we launched upon in 1898 when we took possession of the Philippine Islands.

Strangely enough, the most successful period of American industrial and economic development was simultaneous with the almost complete disappearance of the American merchant marine.

We are not satisfied any more with a place in the sun, and a mighty big place at that, but we want the flag to sail over the seven seas, over an American-owned merchant marine. And who, pray, will be these American owners? It will be the Standard Oil corporation, the United Fruit Co., and similar benefactors of America and of humanity. It is rather significant that the proposed law excepts agreements between carriers which are to affect water transportation from the provisions of the antitrust laws.

I refuse to vote any money of the taxpayers to support a private monopoly.

If we must have a merchant marine, let it be owned and maintained by the Government of the United States for the people.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hicks] 25 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Hicks] is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, in the story of civilization the aspirations of nations and the ambitions of men lead to the salted seas and the lands beyond. In remote times, through the Middle Ages, down to the present moment, commercial advancement and trade development have been well-nigh universally synonymous with political ascendancy and material prosperity.

The desire for religious freedom, trade enlargement, and empire expansion have been the impelling forces to drive men across the pathless oceans, inspiring their hope and steeling their courage to brave the dangers of the unknown deep. America was the reward of those intrepid pioneer discoverers of the fifteenth century, whose goal was trade expansion and commercial profit, while the initial developments in the seventeenth century were founded on the sacrifice made to liberal thought and belief.

Conscious of our history and of our geographic position; conscious of our resources and our wealth; conscious of our advancement and of our destiny, the spirit of America calls us to develop the one great industry which for decades has been neglected, unconsidered, and unprotected by the Federal Government. We have been generous, and properly so, in safeguarding our agriculturists, our manufacturers, and our artisans from the lower standards of foreign pay.

By Federal aid we have rendered assistance to farmers and stockmen in the erection of irrigation dams and the creation of watersheds; we have expended vast sums for the eradication of animal and plant diseases and for the propagation of scientific information; we have aided transportation by land grants to railroads, by appropriations for the building of highways and for the construction of canals and the dredging of harbors. All these are benefits made possible by the funds taken from the Federal purse for the common good. By rendering aid to our merchant marine we are carrying forward the application of the same beneficent principle under a different designation and in a different way.

In discussing this vexed question of ship subsidies we are confronted not by any abstract question of the advisability of constructing a merchant marine but by the practical proposition of how best to handle a service now in existence. This bill injects into our national life no new policy, for we are on the seas now, and at a terrific cost, and we must decide what we are to do with vessels already built. We are facing an actuality, not a theory, for we find ourselves possessed of some 12,500,000 tons of shipping, of which 6,550,000 tons are Government owned.

In the problem there looms the annual cost to the Government in the operation and care of its ships, exclusive of depreciation or interest charges, of $50,000,000, which prudence and judgment command us to reduce. How best can we save the taxpayers' money and lessen the burden created by the frenzied program of war-time ship construction which drained the Public Treasury of $3,000,000,000? Let us forget that these ships are to-day worth probably not over $200,000,000; let us forget the mistakes that were made and the errors that were committed; let us eliminate partisan discussion and petty politics. Our problem is to curtail expenditures; to conserve our ships; to encourage shipbuilding; and to maintain in a high degree of efficiency a merchant marine under the American flag comparable with the dignity, the needs, and the position of America.

This bill, in my judgment, will best bring about the desired results. It has the support and approval of the President, whose inspired leadership, calm judgment, and patriotic impulse points the way to a return of our ships upon the pathways of the deep. The history of the past will be repeated in the future if we follow his lead, and the noble vision of the flag, wide flung upon the seven seas, will become a reality when this bill becomes a law. While there may be a difference of opinion among us as to the proper method of proceeding, I can not believe that there are many who feel that the United States should abandon the seas and consign our ocean shipments to foreign flags. I feel that the vast majority of our people have a real pride and recognize a real necessity in having the Nation become a great merchant-marine power. They recognize the economic advantage of utilizing our own ships to carry our surplus goods in the oversea trade rather than to employ our competitors.

I am convinced that the bill now before us will save money and will place the merchant marine on a firm basis to compete successfully in the carrying trade of the world. We are confronted by the question of whether the merchant marine now upon the seas shall be kept under Government ownership and operated at large Government expense or under private ownership with small Government aid. For one I am utterly opposed to Government operation, and I believe that the sad experience of the past in public operation of our railroads, with inefficiency in service and waste in operation should determine us decidedly against a repetition of this folly in Government ownership and operation of the merchant marine.

Direct aid to private merchant shipping is and long has been the established practice of all the maritime nations of the world. This may take the form of postal pay and naval retainers to certain regular lines, as in the case of Great Britain, by whose Government the subsidy policy as now known was initiated almost a hundred years ago. It may be postal subvention and naval retainer to regular lines and navigation bounties to all shipping, with direct bounties for shipbuilding, as in the case of France, Italy, and other countries, including at one time Japan.

Nations subsidize their maritime industries according to their needs or resources, precisely as nations, with now not one important exception, in some degree or another form their customs tariffs, so that they will not only yield revenue but favor their native manufacturing or their native agriculture. The motive of maritime subvention is exactly the motive of the protective tariff—to give national preference for national prudential purposes to national interests against their competitors of other lands.

Every commercial people with seacoasts and ports and sea-borne trade recognizes as by a strong instinct of self-preservation that it must not depend for the delivery of its exports and the bringing of its imports solely upon the ships and seamen of other governments, its rivals in trade and possible enemies in war. Every people with a foothold upon the ocean recognizes that its merchant marine, by which is meant not only the ships themselves but their officers and men, the yards which launched the ships, the mechanics who put them together, and the separate manufacturing plants and men that produced the equipment of the ships, constitutes altogether a peculiarly important "key industry" for either peace or war.

The United States is entitled to possess one of the greatest—perhaps, considering its vast water-borne domestic commerce, the very greatest—of all the merchant navies of the world. Rightfully, also, the United States is entitled to carry in its own ships the same proportion of its sea-borne trade as any of its competitors. As a matter of fact, American ships are now conveying only about one-third in value of the exports and imports of our country. A year and more ago American ships were carrying about one-half of our imports and exports.

According to data furnished by the Department of Commerce and the statistical department of the United States Shipping Board, the value of commodities exported by sea from the United States for 100 years, beginning with 1821, was $86,629,000,000. Of this total, vessels under the American flag carried about 24 per cent, leaving 76 per cent carried by alien flags. Figuring that freight and insurance approximated about 8 per cent of the value of the cargoes, it would mean that in the century, on our exports alone, this country paid to foreigners the stupendous sum of $5,267,000,000—money which went out of circulation in the United States. This represents so much revenue deducted from the resources of this country and retarded to that extent the expansion of our shipping industry and the commercial and agricultural interests of our country.

The great advantages of a merchant marine are fourfold—first, as a medium of transportation; second, as a stimulant in building up international trade; third, as an auxiliary for the Army and Navy in times of war; and, fourth, as an encouragement to shipbuilding.

TRANSPORTATION.

Ships are as necessary to the conduct of overseas trade as are railroads and ships to the domestic trade, but the character of the transportation in the overseas trade is even more important than in the domestic trade, because overseas transportation is open to the ships of all countries and is highly competitive, and the advantages therein accrue only to the efficient carriers, while internal transportation is carried on by individuals and companies of American nationality.

It is not only desirable but practically necessary that the United States should depend largely upon American ships for the carriage of its overseas trade.

The difficulties produced by the war brought home to practically every citizen our dependence upon overseas transportation services, and the remembrance of those trying times should make it unnecessary to enlarge upon the need of an American merchant marine.

TRADE DEVELOPMENT.

It is generally recognized that the country that has a large merchant marine thereby has an advantage in international trade. Ships are the servitors of commerce, and the very existence of a large tonnage of shipping under the national flag creates a condition favorable to the establishment and development of foreign trade enterprises. Moreover, ships are not only a necessary facility of foreign trade, they are one of several agencies that cooperate in making foreign trade successful. International trade on a large scale requires a world organization including manufacturing, producing, merchandising, international banking, marine insurance, ship brokerage, freight forwarding, and the construction, ownership, management, and operation of vessels.

Such an organization is most effective when it is completely developed and the ownership, management, and operation of vessels commensurate in tonnage and types with the volume and needs of trade give greater efficiency and potency to the commercial organization as a whole. Shipping under the national flag is to be regarded as an essential part of the facilities and organization of trade by which the people of the United States are to maintain and extend their commerce with all sections of the world.

AUXILIARIES.

While I do not care to emphasize the importance of a merchant marine flying the American flag as an important element of national defense in case of war, yet the fact remains, as bitter experience has shown, that it is of first importance.

The United States ought never again to be in the position in which it found itself during the early years of the war, when the great merchant fleet of Germany was entirely withdrawn from the world's carrying trade and those of Great Britain and of other countries largely so, and when, as a result of these conditions, a large part of our grain, cotton, meat products, lumber, copper, and manufactured goods available for export could not be moved.

In time of war—a condition we pray may never arise again—the need of auxiliary vessels is felt by both the Army and the Navy. The duties to be performed by the two services are interdependent. Unless the country is so weak in naval strength that its fleet will be reduced to coast-defense operations only, it will become necessary to carry on a campaign at a greater or less distance from its own bases, and it is the mission of the Navy to gain command of the sea. This once accomplished, the duty falls upon the Navy to safeguard the transportation of the Army overseas, should such an operation be deemed practicable. In order to make it possible for the fighting ships of the Navy to operate any distance from their home bases, it is necessary that they be accompanied by a large number of auxiliary vessels, and these vessels should be American.

In time of war an efficient merchant marine is as necessary as an efficient battle fleet. Without such a merchant marine the safety of our country might easily be imperiled. Should war come, we would need a large number of auxiliary vessels with our fleet, and a still larger number of supply vessels to serve the fleet. There would be no time to build these vessels after diplomatic relations had been broken, nor would there be opportunity to purchase or charter them from abroad. The only course open from the standpoint of national safety is to have these vessels form a part of our permanent merchant marine.

SHIPBUILDING.

The future of the shipbuilding industry in the United States depends upon the maintenance and successful development of the merchant marine. The war gave the activities of private shipyards in the United States a great impetus; but on account of the large tonnage brought into existence during the war—tonnage constructed by the Government as well as by private individuals—and on account of the severe world-wide depression in business American shipyards are now doing little work. Should there be a decline in the American merchant marine, or even a serious postponement of its development, the shipyards in this country would suffer greatly and probably not a few of them would be forced to liquidate. The efficient American shipyards should be kept in vigorous existence despite prospective restrictions in the Government's naval program. Well-equipped, efficiently managed, and profitable shipyards are a necessary basis of a large and progressively efficient merchant marine. It should be the policy of the people and Government of the United States to establish conditions favorable to the shipping business and to the industries associated with that business. The merchant-marine policy should accordingly have in mind shipyards capable of constructing economically and efficiently the ships required by a large merchant marine under the national flag and for making the repairs to those ships.

Government aid to our shipping interests is necessary from two points—first, the equalization of the difference in cost of operation between American and foreign vessels; second, the promotion and encouragement of desirable types of vessels or of necessary services which without aid would not—under present conditions, at least—be forthcoming. The situation is one which imperatively calls for national protection to the one great industry long left almost absolutely unprotected.

In its essence the maintenance and development of the American merchant marine is but another phase of the policy of protection to American industry. The differential against American ships lies in the national standard of living. To other industries threatened by competition on the part of nations having lower standards, protection is extended in our tariff laws. The overseas shipping industry in the early days of our Government was similarly protected. It can not now be protected under our tariff laws without the amendment of our general commercial treaties with other Governments, which amendment two administrations indicated an unwillingness to attempt. The indispensable alternative, therefore, is to protect this vital industry in some other way. The method of direct aid, together with what indirect aids may be applicable, is not only the effective way but is the method by which nearly every maritime nation to some extent or in some manner extends protection to its national shipping.

It has been demonstrated that economic conditions are such that good American ships, as good in every way as their competitors, can not be operated in overseas trade without the equivalent of that protection normally bestowed by the Government on the operation of American factories and farms.

Let it be remembered that American ships in the overseas trade compete directly and keenly with foreign ships of all the nations in the world in our own ports, along every mile of ocean to foreign ports, and in those foreign ports for every import cargo of American commerce, and that American ships do this against all wage handicaps plus generally the added handicap of foreign subsidy or other national assistance rigidly denied thus far to American shipowners.

My belief in the future success of the American merchant marine is based on two fundamental factors of our national life—efficiency and enterprise. Our ship owners, operators, builders, and seamen must be the equals and, if possible, the superiors of any men of their calling in the world. Historically, our men have excelled in energy and skill, but 60 years have sufficiently demonstrated that these two great human attributes can not succeed where the vital factor of national aid is withheld for any considerable time from the very best ship owners, builders, and seamen in existence. Let us pass this bill and restore the American flag to the proud position it once occupied when the American "clippers" carried the bulk of our commerce to the ends of the earth. Keep the flag flying!

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, stripping this subsidy of all camouflage, what are the indisputable facts? Is the immediate problem a merchant marine? The President says not, but merely a salvage proposition. His exact words are:

In the simplest way I can say it, our immediate problem is not to build and support a merchant shipping, which I hold to be the highest and most worthy aspirations of any great people; our problem is to deal with what we now possess. Our problem is to relieve the Public Treasury of the drain it is already meeting.

Thus our President spoke last Tuesday. Is there anything but a salvage proposition in the above language?

Mr. Chairman, to win the war we built 1,500 vessels that cost $3,000,000,000. Waste and extravagance? Yes; beyond comprehension, but it produced results worth while. Such an unprecedented building feat caused world amazement. Our enemies looked into the unconquerable faces of American soldiers and realized that all of our war equipment was in like proportion. The Kaiser and his generals were astounded. Ultimate ruin confronted them. The armistice was signed. War ceased. World carnage stopped. Lives of probable millions were saved. The relief of incalculable value it brought makes American fathers and mothers cease crying over the spilt milk of war waste and war extravagance. There was war waste because there were unpatriotic, greedy vultures willing to take advantage of their country in its extremity.

But, Mr. Chairman, the Congress is not under war stress and anxiety now. We have celebrated the fourth anniversary of the armistice. The people will tolerate wanton waste and extravagance no longer. The present Shipping Board is a peacetime parasite. Operating only a small percentage of its ships Mr. Lasker has surrounded himself with a swarm of 5,000 high-salaried employees, among which are 76 lawyers drawing an average salary each of $11,000 annually. The President said Tuesday that he is incurring an annual loss of $50,000,000. And besides the Government receives not one single cent of return for this $3,000,000,000 investment.

Now, let us analyze the President's proposed plan of salvage retrenchment. He admits that under this plan the most we may expect to recover from our fleet is $200,000,000. Now, what are we to do in order to obtain this sum? First, we are to pay a subsidy, which Mr. Lasker says will amount to $52,000,000 a year, to greedy shipping interests for 10 years, aggregating $520,000,000 of the people's money. Out of the $200,000,000 receipts we are to give Mr. Lasker $125,000,000 as a special loan fund, which he can loan to shipowners at 2 per cent annually in such a way that in all probability little of it will be repaid. And we make possible the keeping of Mr. Lasker's 5,000 high-salaried parasites on our pay roll for at least 15 years more to squander far more than the remaining $75,000,000 of receipts. If it is a mere question of salvage, it would be saving hundreds of millions of dollars to immediately disband the Shipping Board and distribute the remaining one thousand four hundred-odd vessels to the 48 States in proportion to their representation in Congress and rely upon State pride and friendly rivalry to see to it that all available ships are manned upon the high seas under our flag. To rid ourselves of them without any return whatever would mean a saving of at least $500,000,000.

Oh, it would have been a godsend to this country if our former great chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Mr. Good, had won the Congress to his policy, when in his righteous indignation from this floor he exclaimed that he was going to see to it that not another single dollar should be given out of the Treasury to this Shipping Board.

Yet for this Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet Corporation since July 11, 1919, this Congress has already appropriated out of the Public Treasury $471,487,545.48, and in addition to this enormous sum Congress gave them all the receipts for 1920 and 1921 and during 1922 has given Mr. Lasker use of receipts up to $55,000,000. Yet the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] intimates that this enterprise is run on a businesslike basis. If it is salvage retrenchment the President wants, he should have disbanded the Shipping Board and distributed these ships to the States immediately after assuming office, and he would have thus saved at least $500,000,000.

I take it that the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] is a responsible spokesman for the President's party. This morning when he was defending the unheard-of provisions in this bill I asked him the question if when they claim that we have the best genius and the most skilled shipping experts of the country at the head of the Shipping Board, with all ships furnished them free, with the prestige of our Government to buy supplies at the least money, if under these conditions the Shipping Board is unable to make some return on the investment, but on the contrary is running the ships at a loss of $50,000,000 a year, how could he expect a private enterprise to run them at a profit. Here was the reply, and I read it from his exact language, given me by the reporter:

Mr. LEHLBACH. Because there is not any line of human endeavor or human activity that can not be made to pay by private people whose heart is in the business and whose future is staked in the business, when it does not pay when run by Government officials.

Then the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] asked him if that was not an indictment against the Republican appointees in charge of this business. Here is the reply of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH]. I read from the reporter's transcription:

Mr. LEHLBACH. Oh, no; it is not an indictment of the operators. It is the experience of human nature in all walks of activity, under all circumstances, that a man will work with his heart in his work if he is working for himself, but that he will get what he can out of it if he is simply working temporarily for some one else, and has opportunity to use some other person's material.

Does this distinguished spokesman for the President's party intimate on this floor that the heart of these 5,000 highly paid officials and Shipping Board employees are not in the work? Does he mean to intimate that because they are working for the Government and not for a private enterprise that they, to use his language, "will get what they can out of it" simply because it is somebody else's business? I have not that idea of all public officials. It may be true with respect to the present Shipping Board. The thing that gives me most distrust in my mind concerning it is the fact that they have never yet permitted an adequate audit of their accounts. The former distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. Good, said that it was impossible to get an audit, that there was no auditor of the Government who could come within a hundred million dollars of where all the money had gone. That condition exists up to the present time, and in this bill they have a provision that there shall be no audit of their accounts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MACLAFFERTY].

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, you will pardon me after so short a stay in Washington for being bold enough to address you. There have been one or two things said here that have made me anxious to make reply. It has been said time and again that the people of the country in the recent election had given overwhelming evidence that they were against this bill. I want to say that I represent a district containing over 400,000 people, and one of the things that I stressed in this campaign was my advocacy of this bill. My name was on the ballot twice—once to fill out the unexpired term of our late lamented John A. Elston and once for the term beginning next March. I have to say to you that for the unexpired term I received a majority of 28,000, and for the term beginning next March—I have only the semiofficial returns to give you, but the newspapers said that I have a majority of 40,000.

Gentlemen, it seems to me that all phases of this question have been covered, but I want in the few minutes I have to give you a picture. I am not from the Corn Belt of Kansas, but the first breath of air that went into my nostrils—and which probably provoked a squall—was a breath of salt air. I have breathed the salt air all my life. I have lived on the shores of the Pacific Ocean all my life. I have seen the American flag driven off the Pacific Ocean in my lifetime. I have suffered the humiliation of seeing one ship after another—and I knew them well enough to love them, well enough to say I could call them by name—I have seen them sold to the Japanese or sent up the river to be tied up to rust and rot. I saw about 40 boats belonging to the Shipping Board a week ago lying there pitifully in the straits at Benicia, with their sides and decks rusted, going to wrack and ruin for want of use.

My father in about 1868 went to the Orient and he has told me over and again during my boyhood that everywhere he saw the American flag and everywhere we were carrying the commerce of the world.

I went to the Orient in 1916, and after leaving the port of Honolulu in four months' time I saw the American flag afloat only four times. One of those times was on the old U. S. S. Philadelphia, lying in the Whang-Po River at Shanghai, serving as the flagship of our Asiatic Fleet. Once was on an old tub, the name of which I have forgotten, in the harbor of Yokohama. Once was on the old Pacific Mail ship China, some 45 years old at this time, if I am not mistaken, but now owned by the Chinese, although under the American flag. The fourth time I saw it was on my way home, and I want you to get this picture. It is about all that I have to give to you to-day. We were crossing back to America in a British ship having 52 passengers, 50 of whom were American citizens and 2 of whom were Britishers. About 10 days out, one day, having seen nothing, we observed a little smudge of smoke in the distance. Naturally, everyone was alive in a moment, and we watched that little smudge as it grew through the glasses. The captain of our ship was a typical Britisher, a full-faced, noisy, good-hearted British seaman, and finally that little tub, for such she proved to be, a little American steam schooner coming from Puget Sound over to Japan, bobbing up and down on the face of the ocean like a cork, broke out the American flag, and what did the British captain say? I shall never forget it as long as I live, and it is one reason that I am in favor of this bill. He said, "Oh, by Jove, she is an American! I wonder what she is doing so far away from shore." There you have it!

Mr. Chairman, I saw the three magnificent ships running from San Francisco to Australia—the Sonoma, the Ventura, and the Sierra—finally taken off the route and tied up at Benicia. I saw the Alameda and the Mariposa, that had been 21 years in that trade, withdrawn and sent to Puget Sound to run from Seattle to Alaska. I saw, one by one, our ships disappear from the Pacific Ocean, and for every ship of ours that disappeared I saw two Japanese ships put into Pacific trade. Gentlemen of the eastern seaboard, get it out of your heads that Great Britain is our competitor of the future.

The competitor of the future for this country is Japan, and some day I hope to say more on this subject from this floor. The Japanese finally became the carriers of our Pacific coast commerce. Count their ships by the score. Take a map and trace out their routes, and then tell me that the difference in upkeep and cost of maintenance has nothing to do with the situation, when the Japanese coolie sailor gets his $12 a month and three messes of rice a day, while our American sailor, thank God, is the best-fed and the best-berthed man that floats on the ocean.

Yes, let us bring back to the position it once held the commerce of the United States of America as carried in American bottoms; and when one of the speakers a short time ago said it never can be done I was reminded of the fact that President McKinley, when he welcomed home the Minnesota boys from the Spanish-American War at St. Paul, said that no less a distinguished man than Daniel Webster had stood upon the floor of the United States Senate and fought the acquisition of all that wonderful country to the west of the Mississippi River, and that his great argument was that it was so far from the beneficent influences of the home Government at Washington that the country would become peopled and form alliances with other people and drift away. He was wrong, was he not? Yes; and so was the speaker wrong who said that we did not possess the ability and the ingenuity to build up a merchant marine to be what it once was, the greatest on the sea.

Gentlemen of the American Congress, I have but recently come among you, but let me tell you that in this country of ours there has grown up a lack of respect and a measure of contempt for this body, and I am going to tell you as one who has hardly yet gotten in that it seems to many people that the day is past when men are willing to get up on this floor and stand for a thing because it is right. We are not a democracy, we are a Republic. Our fathers gave us the first successful form of government this world had ever seen, and it was not to be ruled by the mob mind, but the laws were to be made by men elected for that purpose, who could study and think and argue and fight, and finally, after mature deliberation, say to the people, "This is what we have decided to do," and then go back to them for their verdict. That, it seems to me, is what we are here for. This is not a partisan matter. This is the American Congress, and I appeal to gentlemen on both sides of this House to, in the final analysis, vote as they believe is for the best interests of this country, and if you do, you will not have to worry about your constituents. I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, a member of the committee [Mr. GAHN].

Mr. GAHN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAHN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, as a Republican member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries I am opposing this ship subsidy bill because it is saturated with special privileges to a few shipping interests, because instead of granting possible needed aids as compensation for the performance of service it grants bonuses and exemptions that the majority of people do not enjoy.

I am merely serving my first term in Congress, and because of the inefficiency of some of the leaders in this Congress I am not privileged to come back, but I want to say that I am not going to take the easiest course while yet here, but I am going to follow my conscience just the same. [Applause.]

I think this is one of the worst bills presented to Congress since I have been a Member of it.

And I have seen in this Congress, when things are likely to be defeated, many Members, some of the leaders on the bill, clothe themselves with the Star-Spangled Banner, with the red, white, and blue stripes, and say, "You are unpatriotic if you do not support this measure." Nevertheless, I am against this bill, and I am a Republican Member, just as much a Republican as any member of that committee.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAHN. Does the gentleman doubt that?

Mr. EDMONDS. No; I do not; but the gentleman voted to report it favorably in June. It was a good bill then?

Mr. GAHN. Yes; I relied upon the gentleman's statement, that of Mr. Lasker, and a good many others at that time, but since then I have come to believe that the gentlemen are so imbued on the subject that they did not give me the exact information. [Applause.] The gentleman knows at that time I asked him to have an open discussion after the hearings were over so that the Democratic Members could be present, but it was put through the committee without any discussion when it was reported out to the House. I came back this session and I might have supported it but I found it was amended in many respects, making it a worse bill than before. In fact, the bill has been amended so frequently that one must doubt the proponents really understand it themselves.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I make the point of order the gentleman is discussing matters which occurred in the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman came to me and said he did not like the labor clause and if it was corrected it would be all right, and we did that and after that we reported the bill.

Mr. GAHN. That is about as accurate as some other statements. The amendment I proposed the gentleman said the Shipping Board experts would draw up, and when it came back it was not the amendment I proposed at all. It exempted passenger ships from the operation of this 65 per cent American seamen rule.

Mr. EDMONDS. It exempted the steward's department. The gentleman said it exempted labor on passenger ships. The engineer and deck crew are in the 65 per cent rule; it is only the steward's department.

Mr. GAHN. The gentleman says steward's department, and he knows this will exempt all subsidized ships because this subsidy is only for passenger ships, and the steward's department is exempted by the amendment.

Mr. EDMONDS. It is only the steward's department. The gentleman thought that possibly if the steward's department was put in it would be all right, and we did go as far as we could. The gentleman only asked 50 per cent of American labor and we gave 65.

Mr. GAHN. That is not correct at all. Whoever heard of you gentlemen giving more than was asked? The gentleman referred to cargo ships and I found out it was nothing more or less than a subsidy for the large passenger lines, and exempting the steward's department from the operation of the 65 per cent rule practically makes it impossible to have 65 per cent American labor on the ships. Did the gentleman from California desire to ask a question?

Mr. RAKER. I did, but I will defer it.

Mr. GAHN. I would just as leave argue with the members of the committee as to make a speech.

Mr. RAKER. It was said this bill was reported when only the majority members were present and the minority were not brought in until they were ready to report the bill. Is that a fact?

Mr. GAHN. So far as I know, the bill ought not to be considered in any partisan way at all, and I want to say right here I have not regarded it as a party measure. There is another thing. Every time a bill slips a little bit one side will try to appeal to party support and to make it a party measure. There is nothing in the party platform for a ship subsidy, and because the Shipping Board chairman may have gotten the President to be for it, does that make it a party measure? No. Most Republicans have repudiated a great many measures of this administration. I think this is going to indict the Republican Party for 1924. But if you doubt it, see what happens then. I want to say this: I have noticed that gentlemen of the committee have devoted much of their ability and their energy to the solving of the questions involved in this bill. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] might have ruined his health because of his untiring efforts on this bill, and there are other gentlemen who have devoted a great deal of their time to the study of this subject, including the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRIGGS], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], and others, and I do not think they have done that for partisan reasons, because really, gentlemen of the Republican side, if it were a partisan question the Democrats would let this bill go through in the most rotten shape you could get it, because then it would be much better from their standpoint.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman tell us what the caucus did about it? What did the country do last June?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAHN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania asked what the country had done last June. The gentleman has taken cognizance of a solemn referendum before the people, has he not? I mean in regard to this bill and party questions.

Mr. GAHN. I thought so at that time.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAHN. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. May a dirt farmer ask a question of my friend, whom I admire greatly?

Mr. GAHN. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. It seems to me that it would be a great deal better for some Members who are so opposed to this bill to offer some amendments to improve it, but I have not heard of any of them.

Mr. GAHN. So many amendments are necessary it would be better to recommit the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman informed me that he had some particular information to submit on a certain phase of this case.

Mr. GAHN. I am going to submit it. It has been said here that the cost of labor was the underlying feature that caused the administration and the Shipping Board to urge the passage of this bill. It has been argued by nearly every Member who favors this bill that there is a labor differential. As to that I have no less an authority here than the Nautical Gazette. It contains figures obtained from the Shipping Board which show that that is not true. It compares two ships, a Danish ship and a Shipping Board ship, of practically the same tonnage; the dead weight of the Danish ship being 7,200 tons, and the dead weight of the Shipping Board ship being 7,723 tons.

It is shown that the fuel cost is what handicaps the Shipping Board ship. The Danish ship was built in 1921 and the Shipping Board ship in 1920. The value of the Danish ship is stated to have been $258,508 and that of the Shipping Board ship $265,748. The number of the crew on the Danish ship was 38; the number of the crew on the Shipping Board ship was 30. The wages per month on the Danish ship were $2,355 and those on the Shipping Board ship were $2,105—a less amount than the amount paid on the Danish ship. The days occupied on the voyage were the same—44 days each. The fuel cost of the Danish ship was $2,907 and that of the Shipping Board ship $6,300. There is almost $4,000 difference on this one voyage. The monthly overhead expense, excluding wages but including subsistence, was $5,428 on the Danish ship and $5,393 on the Shipping Board ship. The total voyage receipts of the Danish ship were $19,468 and of the Shipping Board ship $20,416, being almost a thousand dollars more. The total voyage expenses of the Danish ship were $17,558 and those of the Shipping Board ship $21,030. The net result was a profit for the Danish ship of $1,910, and a loss for the Shipping Board ship of $614.

These figures show that in this instance the wage cost was higher on the foreign ship than on the American ship, due to the fact that the former, being a coal burner, carried eight more men, whereas the Shipping Board ship was an oil burner. The ships were valued at approximately the same amount, and the fixed charges, such as insurance, depreciation, amortization, and so forth, were almost equal, and the fact that they were of about the same size made them liable to the same tonnage dues and port charges, and they each paid the same amount in managing agents' commissions; and yet the Danish ship showed a profit of $1,910 and the American ship a loss of $614.

Unless the Shipping Board proceeds to make its vessels economical to operate, and run them with highly paid crews, the payment of a subsidy will never contribute to the establishment of its fleet upon the high seas.

Now, gentlemen, I want to touch on the taxation question. It seems to me that this bill, strictly speaking, is not a subsidy bill. It is a tax exemption bill to special interests. This bill is permeated with graft and saturated with exemptions and special privileges to a few. It is no wonder that our boats do not go out on the high seas, because the owners of these vessels have heretofore refused to let them go out unless you exempt them from certain expenses. They refuse to pay the taxes that the farmer has to pay, that the ordinary business man has to pay, or the man back home. You have got to pay them in the way of an exemption before they will invest in these boats and take them out. If not, they take foreign registry.

You are allowing 5 per cent exemption on a person's taxes if he merely ships in subsidized boats, in American bottoms. That will allow the Standard Oil a million dollars a year. In the case of the Leviathan alone, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] shows, you will give $900,000, and under the Shipping Board regulations, if they see fit, they may double that amount.

Why do you say that only $15,000,000 is going to be expended each year when your figures show that the passenger boats alone are going to get this $15,000,000 the first year?

Nowhere in the President's message is mention made of the fact that we are going to have a program of shipbuilding. Three or four times in that message mention is made of the fact that this bill is going to save $50,000,000 a year. I disagree with that, and I contend that that $50,000,000 will still be there, if not a higher amount. Unless you cut out the graft and discharge some of these highly paid and inefficient men employed by the Shipping Board you are going to have an annual expense just the same. [Applause.]

I do not wish to appear in opposition to the President's specific wishes, but it seems to me that he has been misguided and misled, quite innocently, by the great pressure which has been made to bear upon him in the representations that this is the only way to fully establish an American merchant marine.

In this connection let me quote from an editorial which appeared in the Cleveland Press, November 22, 1922:

PLUMS IN THE SUBSIDY.

President Harding told Congress in the ship-subsidy message that it was costing the taxpayers of the United States $50,000,000 to operate its fleet of ships, and that there would not be paid out more than $30,000,000 to private ship operators if his subsidy bill were made a law.

The President did not say what else the ship operators would get besides the $30,000,000 subsidy.

The President did not say what shipowners would get the subsidy and what shipowners would not.

The President did not say that a ship would earn just as much subsidy whether it carried a pound of cargo or whether it was loaded full.

The President did not say that only owners of ships running on regular lines would receive subsidy.

The President did not say that the ships that run on regular lines are those devoted not to commerce but to the hauling of passengers and mail—ships devoted to the hauling of goods owned by the owner of the ship, such as the Standard Oil tank-line steamers, the United Fruit Co. fruit ships, etc.

The President did not tell Congress that besides the $30,000,000 going out of the Treasury, a golden flood would be stopped from flowing into the Treasury by reason of the fact that those shipowners who enjoy subsidies—but no other American shipowner—could deduct from their income taxes their profits on the operation of the ships, and in case they were the owners—as in the case of the Standard Oil Co.—of the cargoes of the ships, 5 per cent of the estimated freight that they paid themselves for hauling their oil.

The President did not say that Mr. Lasker has expressed the faith that these income and tax exemptions to a favored few American shipowners would probably not exceed a mere $10,000,000 a year.

The President did not say that if a man bought a ship at junk price from the Shipping Board and sold it at a profit to be sailed under a foreign flag, he would not have to pay income taxes on that profit if only he would buy or build another ship.

The President did not say that the "tramp ship," which is what Great Britain and every other country means by the expression "merchant marine," will not get one penny of subsidy under the proposed bill, and their owners will not get any rebates, drawbacks, or exemptions, or other hand-outs from, through, or by the Treasury.

The President did not say that it was proposed to lend $125,000,000 to the preferred class of American shipowners at 2 per cent a year, while business men, farmers, manufacturers, and ordinary folk in general pay from 6 to 10 per cent.

Had the President told Congress all these things, he would have told them of a part but not all of the plums that are tucked away in the proposed Thanksgiving pudding—if the subsidy bill is passed on November 29.

It seems to me that the entire question should be more thoroughly studied and investigated. There were 34 days of hearings on the bill before the Merchant Marine Committee, but not one day was given for a full and complete discussion in the committee on the bill or on the hearings.

Public sentiment is against this bill, and it is folly for this House to endeavor to create public sentiment in favor of it by jamming it through. On the other hand, this House should reflect public sentiment, and each Member should truly represent the wishes of his constituents.

Let me read here an editorial of the Cleveland Plain Dealer of November 23, 1922, urging Congress to give more time and study to the perplexing questions involved in a proper solution:

THE SUBSIDY PROPOSAL.

When the members of the Shipping Board prepared the subsidy bill that the President so earnestly supported in his subsidy message of February and again of Tuesday the board had in mind the development of a great merchant marine under private ownership and operation. The board in effect admitted its own inability to operate the Government-owned ships successfully and proposed a new deal whereby private shipping interests might be induced to purchase the Government vessels and operate them under a system of direct and indirect subsidies.

When the war was declared in 1914 the gross tonnage of the United States registered in the foreign service was a trifle more than 1,000,000 tons. As a result of the shipping emergency created by the war the Government spent approximately $3,000,000,000 in ship construction. The end of the war found us with a merchant fleet of more than 12,000,000 gross tons. Of this tonnage, about half, more than 1,400 steel cargo vessels, are still in the hands of the Shipping Board. Less than 400 of them, however, are in operation as a result of depression in foreign trade and the inability of the board to compete with private shippers, both American and foreign, in the same trade routes.

The maintenance and operation of the Shipping Board fleet is costing the Government approximately $50,000,000 a year in addition to the heavy loss from depreciation of vessels that are tied up in American ports. The President contends that a subsidy which would transfer this fleet of vessels from the board to American shipping interests would relieve the Government of a portion of the present expense and at the same time assure this Nation of a place on the high seas and protection against any shipping emergency, commercial or military.

Whether the plan embodied in the administration bill would have the desired effect is a question. The testimony taken by the House committee last summer was conflicting in a high degree. But during the last four years private shippers to whom Government vessels were turned over for operation without any expense whatever have come back upon the board for deficits running into the millions. Successful private carriers accordingly contend that the pending plan which involves purchase and operation under a moderate system of subsidies offers no assurance of success.

In detail the plan would set aside a special subsidy fund to be created by withholding from the Treasury 10 per cent of the Federal revenues derived from customs, and this fund would be used by the Shipping Board or other Government agency to pay direct subsidies to ship operators in the foreign trade. The cost of the subsidy then would be determined by two outside considerations, the volume of imports and the scale of tariff duties. On the basis of recent import figures the direct cost of the subsidy would be somewhat but not greatly below the annual outlays and losses of the Shipping Board.

The subsidy advocates themselves are of the opinion that the steel cargo carriers now in the hands of the Shipping Board would not in themselves afford the Nation a well-balanced merchant fleet to compete with the well-established European lines. The majority of these vessels are of low speed and the need of this country is apparently for ships of a better class, particularly of fast combination cargo and passenger vessels and perhaps of a few passenger vessels of the finest type.

It is therefore proposed that the Government assist in the construction of the new units by creating a reserve fund of $125,000,000 to be loaned at low rates of interest to private shipping concerns. The rate of interest must not be less than 2 per cent and the Government must not advance more than two-thirds the value of the new ships to be constructed. This provision was deemed advisable by those responsible for the bill because of the difficulty experienced by shipping concerns in attracting capital. Replies of bankers to a questionnaire sent out by the Shipping Board indicate that the demand in this country for shipping shares is almost nonexistent and that construction funds can scarcely be provided from ordinary investment sources.

In addition to the proposed subsidies for operation and credit assistance in construction the administration bill contains provisions designed to increase the traffic of American-operated ships. Most important of these provisions is that which virtually compels one-half of the immigrants coming to America to secure passage on American vessels. This provision, along with that doubling all port and tonnage duties, is aimed directly at competing marines, and in the minds of many, even among the supporters of the bill, is unwise because of the probability of retaliation and international misunderstanding. In the opinion of still others this provision would, like that of the marine act of 1920 imposing discriminating import duties, be nullified by existing treaty agreements.

Before deciding to accept or reject this measure Congress should make a thorough study of all its important provisions. It should know whether the President's representations regarding costs are correct; whether there is good ground for believing that private shipping concerns would, with the subsidy bill passed, be any more interested in the purchase of the Government-owned vessels than without it; and whether even then they could, with a subsidy as proposed, meet competition from foreign sources. * * * The relation between labor costs and disadvantages sometimes ascribed to this country's merchant marine, such as fuel costs and bad ship design, should be more definitely ascertained. Congress should also consider carefully the probable significance of the immigrant-carrying clause and the possible demands that will be heard from other sources if it undertakes to provide capital to one industry at a rate well below the market rate.

When the hearings on this bill were being conducted Congress was absorbed in the tariff and in other legislation regarded at that time of greater importance. Called to give consideration now to the subsidy proposal it should study the measure carefully and thoughtfully in the light of the Nation's best interest.

It is argued and made propaganda for the support of this bill that a merchant marine is necessary as a navy auxiliary. But let me call your attention to the fact that the present fleet of the Shipping Board is unbalanced and that new ships will be necessary; that the present number of first-class ships is much in the minority of a fully equipped merchant marine necessary for a navy auxiliary. There is no evidence that the ships to be constructed will round out such an auxiliary. Might it not be possible that the discretion of the Shipping Board would be used in authorizing and approving the building of such new ships in such a way that it would be as much unbalanced as the former Shipping Board made it?

There is not as much differential in the subsistence cost as has been maintained in this debate. It developed during the hearings on this bill that the operators of the Shipping Board boats are paying entirely too much in subsistence expenses.

The Shipping Board has reduced the subsistence allowance on board of their ships to 65 cents per day per man. In the argument which they used to justify their position they claim that after investigation they discovered that some private shipowners were feeding their men on a subsistence cost ranging from 48 to 51 cents per day per man. In this statement they have refuted their testimony before the joint committee of the ship subsidy bill, where they claimed that the cost of subsistence on American ships was 82.5 cents per man per day. Mr. Merrill, the director of the bureau of research of the Shipping Board, in his testimony stated that, according to advices received from representatives of the Shipping Board in Japan, the Japanese cost of subsistence was 62.5 cents per day per man.

No matter how well our ships are managed from the shore, without an efficient seagoing personnel our shipping will never be successful. This fact is gradually being realized by those who have the handling of marine property. Ships to-day are larger, more valuable, move faster, and consume money at a greater rate than ever before. The need of trained men and officers is therefore greater than ever. Masters and officers have little time to devote to beginners. In old days one trip or voyage gave youngsters knowledge and experience. Therefore there should be every incentive to Americans to take up the profession of seamanship. This bill spells disaster to them, because it will actually destroy the American merchant marine. When you place a premium on inefficiency, there can be no other result.

The Shipping Board's historians appointed to make a study of the effects of subsidies on the merchant marine of other countries state that in no case—with the possible exception of Japan—have subsidies been of assistance in building up or in maintaining a merchant marine.

International trade, whether passenger or freight, was and is still competitive, and a share in its profits and power was only attained by merchants or ship operators with a thorough knowledge of business geography, assisted by officers and seamen who could make the quickest passages at the lowest cost and who were capable of keeping their vessels out of the repair yards.

The care and efforts of statesmen have been to foster and develop the highest possible skill in seamanship in officers and men, together with the highest skill in management. In the first self-interest was used, in the latter adaptability and training.

A nation's proper share in the profits and power derived from the use of the sea was, as far as I am able to discover, never obtained in any other manner, and I am therefore opposed to any subsidy as provided in this bill.

To me this subsidy spells disaster to the American merchant marine, because it substitutes Government aid for skill and efficiency. In other words, we propose to subsidize inefficiency.

Let us abide by the maxims adopted by our forefathers and protect the American people, supporting the greatest Government under the sun by maintaining equal rights to all and by refusing to grant special privileges to the few. Let us ever remember that this is a Government of the people, by the people, and for the people. Let us cling to our ideals of truly representing the people. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER].

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who has just left the floor [Mr. GAHN] gave an excuse for not being re-elected bad leadership on the part of some of the Republican leaders on this side, but since I have listened to his statement with regard to the nonpartisan Democrats on the other side who have so far elucidated this measure I have the idea that some of his constituents must have discovered that he possesses an unsophisticated mind.

Some of the potent arguments of our nonpartisan Democratic friends have been at least potent enough to bring about an action in the shipping stocks of England. I notice in the Evening Star of to-night this statement:

Europe hopes for the defeat of the ship subsidy. Administration officials pointed significantly to a brief dispatch which came over the wires to-day of one of the ticker news service as follows:

"LONDON.—Expected defeat of ship subsidy bill in the United States is having a marked effect on shipping shares here. Peninsular & Oriental Steamship Co. rose five points yesterday; Royal Mail three and one-half points, and Cunard one and one-half points to-day."

So that the arguments which have been made against the measure so far seem to have been potent in some sections of the world. Now, it had not been my intention to make a speech to-night, but—

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes; I shall be delighted to do so.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think we should take money out of the Treasury of the United States, paid in by the taxpayers of the United States, in order to keep the price of stocks of English shipping down?

Mr. SNYDER. Oh, no; not by any means; but as suggested by a friend who sits by me here, we do not know who is speculating in the London market, based on the speeches which are being made here. But there can be no question in the minds of those who are interested in using the sea routes, or the routes that may be installed in the future, of the necessity of continuing in operation, at least, the number of American ships which are in operation now, and if this subsidy measure will permit the Government eventually to get out of the shipping business and to put the shipping business into the hands of individual and private ownership, so that ships may be run in competition with the various carrying lines of other countries, we will have accomplished something.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the statement of the gentleman from California [Mr. MACLAFFERTY], because it was not so long ago that I had the pleasure of making a trip around the world, and there were not as many American flags on the ocean then as there were when the gentleman from California [Mr. MACLAFFERTY] traveled a few years ago. It was back in 1909 that I went around the world, and the only place in China where I saw an American flag was in the harbor of Hongkong, on a ship of the Standard Oil Co.

There was not another place on that whole trip where I saw the American flag except, I think, at Port Said, where I saw the old transport Kirkpatrick with a load of troops from the Philippines coming back to the United States.

So I favor this measure, because I believe it will be the beginning of an opportunity to carry the products not only of the farm but of the manufacturers of this country to markets in the world which we have never before had the opportunity to develop.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. BANKHEAD. At the time the gentleman refers to, when he saw very few ships flying the American flag, what was the condition of business generally in the United States?

Mr. SNYDER. In 1909, I think, the farmers were in just about as good a condition as they are to-day, compared with the difference in the standard of farming to-day and the standard of farming then. We must all admit that conditions on the farm have changed since then, and changed for the better, and that those improved conditions should be retained. The opening up of new routes for the sale of the surplus products of the farm, as well as the surplus products of the factory, will be a great factor in bringing the prosperity of this country up to the point where the farmer can maintain the standard to which he has risen during the period of the war.

We must not forget that, even as late as 1913 or 1914, there were very few farmers who had automobiles or tractors or power-driven machinery. Now all those things have come, and some of the farmers have not made enough money to pay for all of the improvements they have purchased; and it may be, as the President suggested in his speech the other day, that it will be necessary for this country to aid the farmers in some manner until they are able to meet the payments upon those things which were bought on more or less of a prospect. I believe in doing that, and I shall vote for any measure which comes up here later that will help the farmer to maintain the standard to which he has brought himself during this period.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman does not favor a direct subsidy to the farmers out of the Treasury, however, does he?

Mr. SNYDER. The farmer does not need any such thing. What the farmer needs is the same thing that any other business man needs, and that is credit; but here is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Would the gentleman go so far as to lend the farmers money at 2 per cent per annum?

Mr. SNYDER. I do not know whether I would or not. I would want to consider that matter. But if it were thought advisable to do it, I would not hesitate a minute. I believe that in order to have any permanent prosperity in this country the farmer must prosper and must participate in that prosperity equally with any other set of men or with any other industry. There can not be any question about that. There can not be any lasting prosperity in the country unless the farmer prospers.

We might as well consider that, but this bill is going far to make the farmer prosperous and give him an opportunity to ship his surplus products abroad at fair rates of freight and in American bottoms. That is one of the reasons why I favor this measure. I believe when we get down, notwithstanding the eloquence of the nonpartisan friends on the other side, we will have votes enough to put it through.

Now, since we have given Government aid to the construction of roads to the amount of seventy-five millions per annum, and have for many years appropriated millions for inland waterways, which are the simple arteries for the convenience of the producers and manufacturers of this country in the handling of the products of the soil and factories, anyone familiar with the great industries of the country must know that when we are producing at anywhere from 90 to 100 per cent of the maximum products of the soil or from our factories, a great surplus must be disposed of outside of our own country. Is it a great stretch of the imagination to conceive of Government aid for the purpose of opening up other arteries and avenues for trade through the use of the oceans of the world for the purpose of participating in the rivalry of the world's markets so far as may be possible in disposing of our surplus products?

By the present operation under the Shipping Board of the ships that we wish to dispose of under this bill we are creating a deficit of $50,000,000 per annum of such ships as can be operated by the Shipping Board. The money for this deficit is taken from the pockets of the people, and by this operation we are driving from the seas all private shipping under the American flag, for the reason that it can not be operated on a basis of profit in competition with Government-operated ships. Now, in connection with this deficit, which is created wholly by operation, we do not take into consideration at all the depreciation on the ships that are not in operation, that are tied up at various docks and in various places throughout the United States, which undoubtedly is now, at the present moment, creating a deficit of more than $100,000,000 per annum.

Of course, I do not suppose it is contemplated under this bill that all these ships will ever be disposed of, because many of them, due to their construction and size, never will be able under any circumstances to compete in the merchant marine business of the world.

Now, what does this bill propose to do?

First, it proposes to take the Government out of the shipping business.

Second, it proposes to discontinue the deficit from depreciation, which, as I have said, would amount undoubtedly to $100,000,000 per annum.

It proposes to turn over these ships to privately owned companies on such a basis that they can be operated at a profit and yet be able to compete with the other ship-carrying companies of other countries.

It was clearly shown in the able address of the President that the greatest amount in any one year of the cost to the Government would be $30,000,000, and that is based upon the maximum amount of ships which could be taken over and placed in successful operation.

Now, what does this expenditure of $30,000,000 mean? It means that for every available ship that the Government turns over to private operating companies, if we have an opportunity to use the $30,000,000, will be carrying from this market to some other market of the world its full cargo of merchandise; and this means that the business of this country, both as to the produce of the soil and manufactures, will be in full and successful operation, and that we shall enjoy the satisfaction of being able to ship these surpluses to such markets as we desire to ship them, anywhere in the world, in ships flying the Stars and Stripes.

It does not seem possible to me that a Representative from any section of this country could be opposed to a measure of this kind. I can not understand why it will not be just as helpful to the farmer who has wheat or corn or any other product, the surplus quantities of which must be shipped abroad, and why he would not feel that it was essential to ship these surpluses in American bottoms, particularly inasmuch as it would afford the Government an opportunity eventually to recover for much of the loss that has been made on the ships which we are to dispose of. It would eventually take the Government wholly out of the shipping business, thereby stopping all expenses, and finally at the expiration of 10 years the money that has already been paid out in subsidies would be coming back to the Government in profits earned by the ship companies over and above the 10 per cent limit.

And, therefore, Mr. Chairman, as a business proposition, as well as a patriotic proposition, I favor this measure and believe that as soon as the people of the country generally become familiar with the merits of the measure that there will be a reversal of the opinion of many people who are now disposed to oppose the measure, and that eventually it will be looked back to as one of the great achievements of this administration.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I regret exceedingly that I am out of line with the overwhelming sentiment of my colleagues on the Democratic side. There are only a very few of us on the Democratic side that will vote for this bill. I can not help thinking, though, that we are almost as illogical as some of our speakers have claimed the Republicans are in discussing this bill. As I understood some of the speakers on the Democratic side, the Republicans are illogical in having adopted the protective tariff, which naturally would restrict international commerce, and then clamor for a merchant marine bill which would have for its purpose the carrying of our commerce across the seas. Inferentially that leads me to the thought that our position in the matter of tariff is to remove as far as consistent with our purpose of deriving a revenue—to remove the restrictions from commerce that we can remove, and thereby foster and encourage and enlarge the international commerce of our country. If that be true, the inference is inescapable that we ought necessarily to be the prime movers in any purpose looking to the securing of the merchant marine in order to carry over the seven seas and across the great oceans that commerce which we apparently seek to enjoy with all the world.

No man, Mr. Chairman, in my judgment possesses the infallible touchstone of truth. Men equally honest and sincere will differ on a given state of facts and upon any issue that may confront them from day to day. I concede to my colleagues and to all men that which I trust they will freely grant unto me, and that is the sincerity of my professions and the convictions which I have the pleasure of uttering on the floor of the House of Representatives to-day.

I have always believed in a merchant marine. I have always thought it was necessary that we should subsidize our merchant marine in order to put it upon its feet, which would enable it to compete with the merchant marine of all the other nations on this earth. That has been my position as an American patriot and as a friend of labor.

I know, Mr. Chairman, that it is totally unnecessary for me to say to this House that I am friendly to labor, that I am glad at all times to act as the advocate and the champion of the wage earner. Why? Because I want my country, our country, to be and remain free; free industrially and commercially, as well as free religiously and politically; because I want the wage earner to be an upstanding, fearless American man and woman, who can feed, clothe, and educate their children so as to make for strength, courage, and ability to fight and win the Nation's battles. For then and only under such circumstances and conditions can you hope for men and women who will on some tremendous day fight and glory in making the supreme sacrifice for a land they know to be worth while. Poverty stricken, beaten to earth, ignorant people are indeed hewers of wood and drawers of water, and are vassals and hirelings in times of war and danger. The man of the hour, the brave patriot is the physically strong and mentally alert who battles for institutions and a country for a commercial and industrial system that has bestowed blessings and not misery upon them. And I had always thought, notwithstanding clashes between capital and labor, that it was an accepted truism that all American labor was more highly remunerated and better paid than foreign labor.

It was therefore somewhat humiliating and astonishing to me to hear declared on the floor by some of the great speakers on the Democratic side that there was no difference in the cost of construction, no difference in the comparative cost of our vessels and those of England, France, and other countries. The impressions of a lifetime are too strong, however, and I can not but resist the declarations that were made to that effect. I had always thought that the labor of America from every imaginable standpoint received a better pay, more adequate pay, and a higher standard, and enjoyed a better living than the wage earners or laborers of any country on the face of the earth. From every rostrum, on every occasion where labor was involved and discussed, men enjoying high positions, men in the pulpit, men from the floor, men representing gatherings, informed the American people that the American wage earner always occupied a higher and better and nobler position, in view of the splendid living he was enjoying, than the laborers of any other country on the face of the earth.

But here to-day to my astonishment I learned that the American laborer is as much a vassal as he is in the country beyond the seas; that he has had cause for complaint; that he is no better off than those who cry aloud for relief. During the great strikes of the past we were always told insistently day after day that in view of the higher and better position that he enjoyed over his foreign fellows the American workman had no just cause of complaint. Now we are told by some of the opponents of this bill that the American laborer, the American seaman, the wage earner from every imaginable standpoint is apparently in no better position than those we once were pleased by terms of comparison to call serfs in the industrial and commercial orders abroad.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Did not the gentleman hear the testimony read from the hearings that the chief engineer of one of the American boats gets $300 a month while the chief engineer of a British boat gets $110?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have no call to discuss that with the gentleman. I know that the American is better paid. I have known all my life that the American laborer is better paid.

It may not be inappropriate for me right here to insert an extract from the report of the merchant marine committee of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States:

"That is, the aid should extend over a series of years, in accordance with many established precedents, as, for example, aid for the construction of rural post roads, vocational education, operation of canals and other works of navigation belonging to the United States, removing obstructions in the Mississippi River, aid for highway construction, for purchase of land to protect watersheds of streams, and refunding tonnage taxes and light dues to citizens of the Philippine Islands.

"Before dismissing the question of Government aid it is of consequence to consider the fact that the questions of sale and subsidy are practically inseparable. Under present conditions no experienced person has the slightest confidence in the Shipping Board's ability to sell any considerable number of its ships unless the sale prices are so low as to constitute practically a gift of the vessels. Therefore to insure a market for the Government-owned ships there must be an assurance that the purchasers can operate them in competition with foreigners without loss, and this assurance can proceed only through aid from the Government. A few figures recently made public will tend to make this clear. An 8,000-ton cargo ship built in England as recently as 1920 can be bought for $240,000, or at the rate of $30 per dead-weight ton. Estimating interest upon this sum at 6 per cent, depreciation at 5 per cent, and insurance at 4 per cent, the yearly fixed charges would be $36,000. The difference in compensation for crews between an American and British ship of this tonnage will amount to substantially $800 per month. Assuming that both ships would be in operation for a period of 11 months in a year, the expense of the American ship for crew's wages for that period would be practically $8,800 more than of the British ship, which deducted from the fixed charges of the British ship would leave $27,200, or 15 per cent on $181,000, or $26.66 per ton, which is about what the American shipowner could afford to pay. This makes a difference in price of over $7 per ton, determined by wages alone, in favor of the British as against the American ship."

I have heard day after day from my earliest childhood that this was and is the land of golden opportunity, and the iterations and reiterations, the constant expression of what everyone regarded as an American economic truth, that it did cost more to construct a vessel in America, and that it did cost more to operate vessels as a result of higher labor costs; I am unable therefore to understand why it is now thrust upon us as an issue, as a question of doubtful fact.

Mr. Chairman, some months ago I read a paper issued by a great association—I believe it is the Chamber of Commerce—in the city of Chicago, the greatest inland city in the world, and on its front page was announced the names of the men whose joint intellectual effort this paper was and is, for it is still extant. In all probability it expressed the thought of that great city and its environs more accurately than any other paper that could come from any other 20 men in that great city. I recall that in that paper were similar expressions that I had read in another great paper, I believe issued by the Cleveland Association of Commerce. A few days ago I received a paper from the United States Chamber of Commerce, which I read with considerable pleasure, because it expressed my own viewpoint so powerfully, so clearly, so convincingly, and because I knew that the ideas had already taken root as a result of the splendid papers that I have already referred to and which had produced such an indelible impression upon my mind. I think it is one of the most interesting papers I have ever read.

I know that my Democratic colleagues will approve this sincere compliment that I wish to bestow upon the Chief Executive of our country at this time, although probably it is not so much a compliment as a statement of fact. I believe it is generally regarded that he has expressed the thought of those who favor governmental aid to a merchant marine as convincingly, as eloquently, as felicitously, and as powerfully as any man that ever appeared before the American public.

I believe that this paper, which I am going to read, is, next to that splendid address, to that great speech in Congress, in all probability one of the finest things that has ever come to my notice—clear-cut, cogent, definite, and irresistible in its logic and expression. At any rate, it expresses my viewpoint and, I believe, the viewpoint of many, many Americans among whom I was born and reared. To the south of us lie a thousand gold mines, metaphorically speaking, for under the magic spell and influence of a merchant marine the golden fleece would be brought home from all the ports of Central and South America. At some not far distant day the shores of the Gulf of Mexico will be to the United States of America what the shores of the Mediterranean have been for nigh onto 2,500 years to Europe—yes, to Africa. On the littoral of Europe's great sea the human race has played for centuries the greatest acts in the grand drama of life. It is on the banks and along the shore line of the Mexican sea that commerce will erect her strongholds and enthrone industry. Far to the south of us, but within easy striking distance of the ports of the South Atlantic and those of the Gulf, is a great, splendid country, unexplored commercially as yet by us, untouched by the wand of American genius. Down in Central America, that will yet be the home of millions of people, and farther down on both littorals of the Atlantic and the Pacific, on the seashores of the great South American continent, lie magnificent opportunities for our country and particularly for the southern portion of our country that has suffered as a result of past inability to bring its treasures to all peoples of the world and bring back to us the rich goods, wares, and costly fabrics of the globe. For true, indeed, it is that he that would bring home the wealth of the Indies must carry the wealth of the Indies with him.

Mr. Chairman, that part of the country ought in the very compensation of things ultimately to come into something like its own, to enjoy a part at least of the great commerce of the United States, and not have that commerce driven, to use a bromide, to use a much-abused expression, through the neck of the bottle, not constantly driven through the one great port of New York. The South Atlantic and Gulf ports should be put in a position, for the national welfare, to avoid the congestion at one great port, of taking care of a part at least of that commerce which shall go out and down into these southern seas to hundreds of millions of people in the near future. From Norfolk and Charleston and Savannah, from Mobile and New Orleans and Galveston, should established lines be maintained until we have won the commerce of the world and our galleons are the great American riders of the sea, making all of our country prosperous, not in spots but all of our country, North, East, South, and West, coast and inland, opulent and happy.

But let me take a Conradian swing from commerce and from her temples, citadels, and ocean carriers. Sometimes I think that the human race never will forget the terrors of a recent past. Dwellers along the banks of the Nile, the Tigris, and the Euphrates in ancient and bygone days would return to their ruined homes as a result of overflow and inundation and take up life anew. Those that lived on Vesuvius, on its slope, prior to the destruction of Pompeii and Herculaneum, and escaped its fiery and death-dealing lava, crept back to their homes, or what was once their homes, shortly afterwards. And ever since, whenever there has been an eruption and men and women have been driven frantically away, flying for their very lives, they have come back as soon as they could thereafter in order to redeem their homes and to live there regardless of its trials, its dangers, and its terrors. Such is the force of habit. We Americans, like all others, never will understand or keep in memory the terrors that have passed. Once gone they are soon forgotten. We all lay the flattering unction to our souls that there will never be another war. How on earth a country like ours that underwent the horror, the Golgotha, the agony of fraternal strife, where brother was arrayed against brother, can come to the fallacious conclusion that we will never engage in another war is incomprehensible to me. If we tore at each other's vitals for four and a half years, if we were at one another's throats, if we fought and clawed at each other's heartstrings, if it is a commonplace that under provoking conditions brother will fight brother, why should we believe that we will never meet a foe from across the Atlantic or Pacific and engage in a death grapple with him on the crest of their waves?

Mr. Chairman, I never like to mention Great Britain in any discussion in which I am engaged, for the reason that there is always probably in the minds of listeners what is deemed to be a justifiable belief that acrimony may be the parent of the thought that I might utter, though I disclaim it. I am first of all an American, and, secondly, an English-speaking person, standing and fighting to make their dreams come true and their aspirations a realization, but ever willing to denounce tyranny and aggression whenever practiced by any member of our great family. Let us suppose our quarrel had been with England in the World War and not with Germany. Do you believe for a single moment that the result would have been as glorious or would have been accomplished in as short a time as was our recent wonderful victory, written in fadeless, deathless lines in the pages of history? Could we have waged war against Great Britain and carried it across the Atlantic? Could we have transported a bale of cotton or an ounce of any commodity? Could we have shipped abroad a single dollar's worth of exports which make up our surplus production but which, in view of our economic, commercial, and industrial and agricultural organization, is indispensably necessary to our national existence? Of course, the terrors of the past are easily forgotten, so easily forgotten that there are times when I think that the "Recessional" should have been written for the Americans as well as for the Englishmen.

It is easy to be smug and to feel that there will be no more wars, although we grew great and powerful and strong and have come into the magnificence that we enjoy to-day, into a glory that was of Greece, a grandeur that was of Rome, as the result of wars. Yet the day that we ever cross the path, the day that we ever make it clear that we are likely to become the competitor of some great nation or of two great nations of Europe, war is imminent, and the blow will be struck when the converging lines of competition cross. Flatter yourselves as much as you wish that the millennium is at hand, that peace on earth, good will to men, reigns on this earth, but do not for the future of your country.

Delude your children into the belief that they can get along without a merchant marine, that they can go without a proper establishment that will keep and maintain this as a republic, at least for some centuries to come. Commerce and safety, national security, call to us to remember the lessons of the past. Assyria, Rome, Greece, Carthage, where are they? They are one with Nineveh and Tyre. They have gone into the abyss of time to join the other mighty states, kingdoms, and empires that grew rich, great, powerful, and strong and then tottered to their destruction and fall as a result of no longer being willing to pay the price of glory—of forgetting that kingdoms, commerce, industrial empires, by toil and blood and tears gained, must be by toil and sweat and vigilance maintained.

But, Mr. Chairman, "Why a merchant marine?" receives an oracular answer in the great paper which I will now read—next, I repeat, to the President's great, thrilling, American address, the answer will take its place in the history of the shipping bill. It is a wonderfully illuminating and instructive document and makes for a liberal commercial education in itself.

WHY A MERCHANT MARINE?

"Some months ago an influential trade journal published in the Middle West desired to be informed why one man should be taxed in order to provide ocean transportation for another man's goods; why, indeed, if the ships of other countries can carry our exports and imports more cheaply than can our own ships, should we be taxed to support an American merchant marine? More recently a United States Senator, somewhat distinguished for his zeal in promoting what he believes to be the best interests of an influential body of citizens, expressed the view, according to the newspapers, that the Middle West would not consent to the subsidizing of an American merchant marine. Ocean transportation, he said, is not particularly close to the people in the Middle West. The farmer would more readily vote for aid to the railroads to bring down his freight costs, and he will support the St. Lawrence Ship Canal, because it will mean lower carrying charges on export and domestic commodities.

"Unfamiliarity with marine subjects in this country, especially in positions of great responsibility, has caused and is causing the taxpayers losses amounting to hundreds of millions, while the lack of understanding of the true relation of a merchant marine to the economic welfare of the country, both in and out of Congress, makes the future of our merchant marine at times seem almost hopeless. A comparison that is illuminating and not wholly invidious will serve to illustrate how greatly we are handicapped in respect of our national lawgivers when maritime subjects are under consideration. In the British Parliament there are 21 shipowners, and probably 100 additional members that are indirectly interested in shipping. In the Congress of the United States there is not one in either category. Probably this could not be said of the national legislature of any other maritime country in the world.

"The reasons for this state of things are obvious and imply merely lack of opportunity in the past for the education of a sufficient proportion of our population to the ways of the sea to provide informed representation in Congress.

"Generally the answer to the question, 'Why a merchant marine?' is twofold.

"A merchant marine is needed for the national defense and for the economic welfare of the country and, it may be added as an answer of far from negligible importance, because it corresponds to the ambitions of millions of American citizens who, realizing that shipping is not to be considered merely as a convenience or luxury, sincerely desire that the Nation should possess a merchant marine under the American flag, and in connection therewith make use for the benefit of the Nation of the splendid facilities afforded by extensive coasts upon two oceans.

"In harbors admirably situated and equipped for overseas shipping the United States has great natural resources. The desire to develop and utilize these great resources and increase the means of livelihood and of business and industrial activity through use of the opportunity afforded for overseas shipping proceeds from exactly the same reasons as those which give rise to the desire for the development and utilization of any other great national asset. That the resource is at the seaboard in no way differentiates it in its possibilities for creating wealth and adding to national advantage, in which all may share, from a resource of some other kind perhaps situated far inland.

IN RESPECT TO THE NATIONAL DEFENSE THE ARGUMENTS ARE OBVIOUS.

"The President in his recent message to Congress well said: 'The merchant marine is universally recognized as the second line of naval defense. It is indispensable in the time of great national emergency. It is commendable to upbuild and maintain it, because it is the highest agency of peace and amity and bears no threat and incites no suspicion.

"And yet the American people have ever been slow to recognize this indispensability.

"Most business men can recall that when Admiral Dewey set out from Hongkong to make history for America at the Philippines he was compelled to purchase foreign vessels to transport his supplies. Again, when the White Squadron made its memorable voyage more than half around the globe the coal and other supplies were carried in foreign vessels. One need not conjecture what would have been the result of a war waged at any time in the past 50 years between the United States and any considerable power across the seas if dependence had been placed upon American vessels to do the necessary transportation. Every informed person knows what our extremities and anxieties respecting shipping were when the United States entered the World War.

"If we had been obliged to convey to France our troops, munitions, and supplies in our own ships the war would have been continued two years longer than it was, unless earlier terminated by the defeat of the Allies through lack of our cooperation. Because we did not possess a merchant marine of respectable proportions the Government projected itself into a hectic policy of shipbuilding, for which our inexperience and lack of facilities were so great that when the program was concluded we had spent over $3,000,000,000, a sum sufficiently large to have enabled us, had we been so minded, to buy all the merchant vessels afloat in 1915, and yet we had constructed but few vessels when the armistice was declared. Meantime over 70 per cent of our troops were taken across in foreign, chiefly British, ships, and of the remaining 30 per cent the greater part were carried across in seized German and Austrian ships. It was in the small but efficient coastwise vessels and the vessels engaged in Hawaiian and West Indian trades that the bulk of the carrying under the American flag was performed.

"With the scrapping of warships and declaring a holiday in naval construction, the words of Secretary of State Hughes at the opening of the Disarmament Conference that the importance of the merchant marine is in inverse ratio to the size of naval armaments take on added significance. If war comes now the need of auxiliary craft will be very greatly increased, and vessels of 14 to 20 knots, manned by an efficient personnel, immediately will become a necessity of the Navy. Our ability to meet this necessity is far below that of Great Britain, with its large fleet of swift vessels, a considerable number of them of great size, and all of them almost immediately available, as need may arise, for war purposes.

"Our limitations in respect of auxiliaries of the better class are considerable. As it will be constituted when the disarmament program is fully developed, our Navy will require as auxiliaries in time of war 65 passenger ships of 16 knots and above, ranging from 3,000 to 15,000 gross tons each, or a total of 432,500 gross tons; 35 freight and passenger ships, 5,000 to 7,000 gross tons each, total 195,000 gross tons; 10 refrigerating ships of 16,000 dead-weight tons each; 50 colliers of 10,000 dead-weight tons each; 125 tankers of 9,000 dead-weight tons each; 30 freighters of 7,000 dead-weight tons each; 25 yachts of at least 700 gross tons each, or a total of 340 vessels of 3,470,000 gross tons, besides several hundred mine layers and sweepers, aircraft vessels, tenders, tugs, and a great variety of other craft. In November, 1921, the American ocean merchant marine numbered 41 vessels of between 15 and 20 knots and only 6 of 20 knots and above. Of the other classes we have at present sufficient to meet the demand, and will have in the future, if circumstances permit the retention of these classes under the American flag. The significant thing is that of seagoing vessels having a speed of over 12 knots we have only slightly more than 20 per cent as many as Great Britain. Of vessels of a speed less than 12 knots the tonnage is about the same.

"Another impelling motive for the encouragement of our merchant marine as an element of national defense lies in the deduction that as we decrease our naval strength, prudence dictates that we increase our civil strength on the seas, so that we may have, responsive to instant call, a large body of men capable of being quickly trained in naval warfare. And for the same reason we should have shipyards and a force of skilled shipbuilders. The importance of these factors has been strongly expressed by Admiral Sims in a statement made on a recent occasion to the effect that 'the Navy of the United States would be of very little value as a defense of the United States and our possessions if it were not for the merchant marine.'

"Should the present period of business depression be followed by a decline in American shipping, or even by a serious postponement of its development, the shipyards in this country will greatly suffer, and probably many of them will be forced to go out of business. This would be a serious misfortune, since these yards are necessary to national defense as well as to the healthy development of a merchant marine.

THE ECONOMIC REASONS FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A MERCHANT MARINE ARE VARIOUS.

"In all the history of the world nations have been great and rich as a rule in proportion to their power on the sea as merchants and fighters. Humboldt said that contact with the ocean had been one of the chief influences in forming the character of nations as well as in adding to their wealth and power. As our own Emerson, who saw most things clearly, has put it: 'Chiefly the seashore has been the point of departure to knowledge, as to commerce.'

"The most advanced nations are always those who navigate the most.' Another has said that 'no nation is free that has not a merchant marine to carry its goods to all markets.' Scores of students of the subject, including Admiral Mahan, the leader among them, concur in their testimony as to the importance of a merchant marine to the economic welfare of nations. And at no time since men began to employ ships as agencies in the great enterprise of barter has a merchant marine been so important an element in the activities that enter into the prosecution of world trade as it is to-day. International commerce on a large scale under the present conditions of competition requires a world organization of industry, trade, and shipping. This organization begins with manufacturing and includes merchandising, international banking, marine insurance, ship brokerage, freight forwarding, and the construction, ownership, and operation of vessels. When this interrelated organization has been completely developed, as it has been by the people of Great Britain, foreign commerce can be carried on under the best of conditions. If shipping under the national flag is absent from the organization, as developed by the people of any country, the organization is less effective. Shipping under the national flag and an adequate tonnage of vessels of different types are in fact essential parts of the trade facilities and organization with which the people of the United States will be able to extend their commerce to all sections of the world. In other words, if we are going to succeed in foreign trade not only our wares must compare favorably with those of our competitors but our service as well, of which shipping is an important factor.

"It was not so very long ago that only 12 per cent of our exports consisted of manufactures. To-day that proportion is 30 per cent or more, and during the war it was considerably higher. The product of our expanded industries, taken as a whole, is so much greater than our national requirements as to create a serious situation that will be reflected on every farm and in every shop, and in every home as well, unless markets for the surplus can be found abroad. A prominent writer on trade subjects assures us that we shall be obliged to export in the future twice the volume of exports that we sent abroad before the war.

"Not many readers of this page realize the variety of our shipments to foreign lands or how widespread is their production. To state all this information in detail would require a catalogue of no mean proportions. Last year our exports totaled $4,485,122,696 and our imports $2,529,025,403. There is not a State in the country that does not make a contribution to our export trade, and single cargoes often contain commodities from many and widely separated parts of the country. It is said that an analysis made of a cargo recently shipped to South America from a southern port disclosed that practically every community in the United States, manufacturing and agricultural, had a part in the production of that cargo.

"But it is asked by the uninformed, why emphasize the importance of our foreign trade? It is only a fraction of our total trade, and the loss of it could easily be offset by a well-directed expansion of our domestic trade. One of our half dozen greatest manufacturers has pointed out that the last fractional part of a given industrial production often represents the profit of the whole output, and that a market for the last part, outside the saturated limits of our domestic market, is essential to the success of the manufacturer's venture. Furthermore, while in some industries the percentage of product exported is not large, it is to be kept in mind that of cotton, wheat, and copper from 20 per cent to 30 per cent and even 50 per cent is exported.

"Many fairly informed people imagine that the United States is practically a self-contained nation. It will surprise them to learn that quebracho (whatever that may be), necessary to the tanning industry, comes from Argentina; rubber from Brazil and the Far East; nickel from Canada and New Caledonia; tin from the Malay Straits and Bolivia; raw silk from China and Japan; wool from Australia and Argentina; flax from Russia and Belgium; jute from India; sisal from Yucatan; coconut and other vegetable oils from the Dutch East Indies and the Pacific Islands; coffee from Brazil; tea from various countries; cocoa from Venezuela; sugar from Cuba; rice from the Far East; spices from the East Indies; platinum from Colombia; and vanadium from Peru. And this by no means fully discloses our dependence upon foreign lands for many of the essentials that enter into the production of our food and clothing, and of others that enter into the prosecution of our farming and manufacturing industries.

"In meeting the transportation requirements of this export and import trade it does not seem logical to employ exclusively the ships of our competitors. Particularly as to exports, there seems to be no good reason why we should not perform this service for ourselves.

"No sane merchant would permit competitors to deliver his daily sales, even if the competitors should offer to do it more cheaply. There is a psychological element in the relation of seller and buyer which every dealer in commodities realizes and which is greatly diminished, if not wholly lost, by the employment of a competitor as an intermediary at any point between purchase and delivery. This business principle applies to deliveries by ship. Ships entering the ports of the world flying the American flag advertise to the nations that these vessels are the delivery wagons, so to say, of our country's commerce. Not only that, but a laden vessel sent to a foreign country becomes a drummer there, or a trade missionary, not only for the sale of the goods carried out but for cargoes to bring back. If there is not at hand a cargo to bring back, the shipowner seeks one; may even buy one if it can be obtained in no other way. The return cargo may be something which can be sold here in the United States at a profit representing reasonable freight rates. In this way the owner gets his freight charge and establishes a new trade. Also, American ships visiting foreign ports lead to the establishment in those ports of American branch houses, fighting for a portion of the carrying trade for American ships and for the participation of American merchants in the world's business. Foreign agents will not work full-heartedly for American interests, especially when in so doing they will be working against the interest of their own nationals. In other words, 'trade follows the flag' to a considerable extent, even in these times, as men of world-wide experience in trade realize. In determining the accuracy of this statement one has merely to reflect upon one's own reaction toward the wares of a country whose trading ships are constantly in evidence, as compared with the wares of another country that has no ships; or toward a city shop whose delivery wagons are always to be seen on the streets, and another that has no delivery wagons. Only exceptional circumstances will maintain equality in trade inducement in such cases.

"In refutation of this seemingly obvious proposition it has been suggested that European debtor nations of the United States should be permitted freely to do our ocean carrying, since ocean transportation is a commodity, and it is mainly through payment by commodities that foreign indebtedness can be liquidated. This theory is thought to be illustrated by the case of the merchant who terminates his contract with an express company for the delivery of his daily sales and undertakes to make his own deliveries, despite the fact that the express company happens to be largely in his debt, and under the new arrangement will be deprived to a considerable degree of the means of paying what it owes.

"It is easy for the uninformed to make brief and specious statements respecting economic questions that can be effectively answered only by extended explanations. In this instance it must suffice to point out that if affording opportunity for foreign nations to pay their debts to us through commodities is to result in the ruin of important American industries it might be the better plan wholly to discharge the debts. In the case of the merchant of the illustration it might or might not be advisable for him to terminate his contract with the express company. That would depend upon a variety of circumstances. The Government aid generally recommended by the advocates of an American merchant marine is based upon a tonnage requirement for the transportation of only 50 per cent of our imports and exports. Our foreign debtors, who are likewise among our competitors in the carrying trade, will be the last to complain of any measures that we may adopt to promote our national well-being if there is still left to them the transportation of substantially half the merchandise that constitutes our foreign commerce. The express company also doubtless would not complain of the merchant if the latter in advancing his interests by making deliveries on his own account still permitted the company to deliver 50 per cent of the total.

"Still another advantage arising from national ships is the opportunity afforded merchants in foreign ports to secure favorable rates for special shipments of merchandise when a reduced rate is necessary to success in competing with foreigners in respect of such shipments. A shipowner, being human, will always favor his own.

"There are still other reasons upon which the maintenance of an American merchant marine may be justified.

"The modern ship which enters into a merchant marine offers no service, and its owner has none to sell, except transportation, and it offers this service essentially as a common carrier. The owner differs from the shipowner of an earlier era who in large measure loaded his vessel with his own goods, or goods he purchased, and sent them abroad to sell on his own account. Such a shipowner was primarily a merchant.

"This does not mean that there are not many vessels to-day which are used by their owners to transport cargoes they themselves own, and there are many instances of industries which, for their own convenience, own their own vessels and use these vessels to fetch raw materials and to carry abroad, often to their own foreign branches, their own products. Usually, such vessels are specialized in one way or another for the peculiar service for which they are intended.

"The typical modern vessel, however, runs on an established route as a cargo or a passenger liner, or is a tramp, seeking and carrying cargo wherever it may be found. These are the vessels which constitute the merchant marine of a country, in which all industries and all classes of population are most directly interested.

"This interest is very real and highly practical. It rests upon the national importance of having vessels on the seas which will afford facilities of transportation to bring in essential raw materials and to carry exports. There is an equal interest in the country being in a position, through having vessels under its flag, to have something to say with respect to the rates for ocean transportation paid upon its essential imports and charges for the carriage of its exports to other markets. With respect to adequate facilities for ocean transportation of imports and exports and with respect to reasonable rates for such transportation, there is exactly the same public interest as in adequate railroad transportation at reasonable rates within the country. Without an American merchant marine which can engage in the overseas trade the American public interest can not be assured and reasonable rates for ocean transportation can not be enforced.

"For the promotion of the public interest in these respects, however, it is not necessary that all American imports and all American exports should be carried in American vessels, but it is essential that the American merchant marine should be of such character and of such capacity that it can be used to assure that American interests will not be neglected, either in the ocean transportation that is available or in the rates that are charged.

"And these observations deserve consideration from the advocates of the St. Lawrence Ship Canal equally with those who advocate a merchant marine and Government aid therefor, independently of whether the canal is or is not built, either with or without Government funds. It is almost unthinkable that the patriotism of the farmers, who, it is assumed, will be the chief beneficiary of the new access to the sea, will permit the practically exclusive use of it by foreign ships. Nor is it to be assumed that the farmers will oppose subsidizing shipping as a special industry if the need for it is clearly shown, recalling, as they will, that they have received consideration for their products in all the tariff laws, a bounty on sugar when the duty was removed in 1890, and sympathetic treatment during the crises in their economic condition during recent months. The truth is that no class of our population is more deeply concerned in this question of a merchant marine than the men who live on the western farms. And there are evidences that they are arriving at a realization of the fact.

"Pursuing the subject of justification further, one of our consuls recently pointed out that it was noticeable that American goods freighted on foreign vessels were never handled, warehoused, or delivered as carefully as those originating in countries from whence the foreign vessels hailed. Shipowners and ships' personnel will always advance the trade interests of their own country to the disadvantage of the trade of other countries, even when they are being paid for transporting competing foreign goods. Instances have been brought to the attention of officials in Washington where American goods being carried abroad in foreign ships have been with intent delayed in transit, while other goods of the ship's nationality have been sent forward to meet the market and fill specific requirements. Admittedly, these are extreme cases and have not often occurred, but they illustrate what is constantly occurring in less objectionable form. It is perfectly futile to expect that the United States will ever attain the position in foreign trade which it must attain, if it is to be commercially successful, unless it employs methods that have always obtained among the trading nations of the world; that is to say, unless the salesmen, the banks handling the financial matters involved, the ships, the agents to whom they are consigned, and the underwriting are practically all American. The futility of dependence upon foreign agents in these relations is well expressed in the words of a former American minister to a country with which it is of the highest importance the United States should sustain the closest possible trade relations: 'There were but few American commission houses. In most cases goods manufactured in America were handled through houses of other countries, which gave but scant attention to promoting American trade and used American products only when those of their own respective lands could not be obtained.'

THE UNITED STATES SHOULD NOT PLAY A SECONDARY OR UNIMPORTANT RÔLE ON THE HIGH SEAS OR IN INTERNATIONAL COMMERCE.

"The control of trade routes, time schedules, and rates are important to the development of commerce. Ocean freight rates are commonly fixed in conferences of steamship owners. The nation that is without a merchant marine can have no voice in these conferences, nor is it in a position to demand the consideration in such matters that equality of possession usually compels, as Germany so frequently proved when she forced for herself a place in the carrying trades of the world.

"It is also to be observed that foreign trade is dependent not only upon participation in established markets, but also upon the creation of new enterprises in foreign lands. Engaging in the operation of ships naturally leads to establishing connections with such enterprises, especially in undeveloped countries, such as lie to the south of us. Where ships go there go also merchants of the same nationality to establish themselves in business and promote their country's commerce. In the early part of the nineteenth century many of the owners of our fleet of sailing ships amassed great fortunes through investments abroad that were the direct result of the contact established through the operation of their ships. Again, merchants and consular officers in foreign ports are quickened in their efforts to increase trade, through cooperation with ship-owners and shipmasters.

"In the event of war when tonnage is withdrawn from its ordinary employment, a neutral nation possessing its own ships, through the exercise of government control, can be assured of lower freight rates than can the nation without ships. In connection with this statement it should be remembered that during the Boer War when Great Britain employed a considerable part of its merchant fleet for war purposes the scarcity of tonnage available for this country caused rates sharply to advance, while there was a considerable decline in the volume of our exports. During the World War, and for the same reason, our merchants were compelled to pay foreigners for the carriage of goods rates that now seem like an unpleasant dream.

"For many years foreign ships have carried practically all mail destined from this country to those parts of the world reached by sea. Before the war much of the mail dispatched to South America was first carried across the Atlantic to European ports and there transhipped to its destination. And the same circuitous route was followed by mail sent to the United States. Besides the injurious effect upon business relations arising from the delay thus incurred, there was also involved the hurt to national pride because our letter carrier's uniform was red, or some other color, instead of gray.

"If it is to be the policy of the country to develop new trade routes overseas, as seems to be the desire, particularly of the business men of the Middle West, undeniably this end will be attained most readily by the employment of American ships, and especially will this be true if close alliance is sought with the railroads of the country. In view of the newly aroused interest in the disclosed connection between certain of our prominent railroads and foreign steamship interests it is doubtful if the country would approve such extension of this relation with foreigners as would be necessary to accomplish its purpose.

"Brief reference may be made to a phase of this subject that commonly receives but little consideration. England has always had a balance of trade against her; in other words, she imports in value more than she exports. But this balance in the exchange of commodities has been corrected by her 'invisible exports'; that is, the interest on her loans and investments abroad and by her freight money. As the great carrying nation of the world all other nations have made contribution to her, and the largest of these contributors has been the United States. In 1920 the United Kingdom's net national income from shipping, as estimated by a leading English shipping journal, was 340,000,000 pounds. The economics of this situation afford opportunity for argument, but it may suffice for the present purpose to say that, when our merchants sell goods for delivery abroad, if the freight money is paid to a foreign ship, that money, or at least the transportation profit involved, is deducted from the nation's capital and is added to the 'invisible exports' of the carrying nation; if the goods are carried in an American ship the freight money is retained here and the profit in the transaction is added to the nation's wealth. Our contributions of freight money to other nations in the last half century will aggregate a sum in millions quite impossible of estimation.

"It is interesting at the moment to read the thought expressed by President Grant upon the subject in a message to Congress in 1870: 'Building ships and navigating them utilizes vast capital at home; it creates a home market for the farm and the shop; it diminishes the balance of trade against us precisely to the extent of freight and passage money paid to American vessels, and gives us a supremacy of the seas of inestimable value in case of foreign war.'

"In view of the reasons here set forth, it is hardly conceivable that the people of the United States will be willing to withhold from their merchant marine the comparatively moderate amount of money needed to sustain it, permit the flag that has been recently shown in every part of the world to be wholly withdrawn from the seas, and the ships their patriotism and sacrifice brought into being sold to foreigners and employed as carriers for the commerce of the United States under alien flags.

"Given such support by the Government as the exigencies arising from higher costs of construction and operation and present lack of experience demand, there is every reason to believe that in a few years the American shipowner will regain that prestige which his predecessors in the sailing-ship days commanded, and that we shall again see the country's flag flying in every port of the seven seas. When that day arrives it may be reasonably assumed that the American shipowner will have attained the self-reliance and the capacity to compete on equal terms with the rest of the world his earlier prototype acquired by long and hard experience, because 'the ocean knows no favorites. Her bounty is reserved for those who have the wit to learn her secrets, the courage to bear her buffets, and the will to persist, through good fortune and ill, in her rugged service.'

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the gentlemen of the committee for their patient hearing, and I ask the privilege to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 12817 had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent—

Mr. GALLIVAN was granted leave of absence for 10 days on account of death in family.

Mr. BURTON was granted leave of absence for five days on account of illness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an extract from the Valdosta Times of Wednesday, November 15, 1922, containing an address of my colleague [Hon. W. C. LANKFORD], delivered in Valdosta, Ga., at an armistice day celebration, November 11, 1922, and have the same printed in 8-point type.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

[From Valdosta Times, November 15, 1922.]

The following is the full text of the excellent and patriotic armistice day address, delivered in Valdosta, last Saturday, by Congressman WILLIAM C. LANKFORD, of the eleventh district:

Ladies and gentlemen, I appreciate very much this opportunity of addressing the American Legion membership and their friends of Valdosta, of Lowndes county, and of the surrounding counties of Georgia and Florida.

It is my purpose to speak at this time of the service which has been rendered our country by our patriots now still in life as well as by those who have passed off this stage of action and of the duty we owe to them, to ourselves, and to those who shall live after us.

That great and matchless leader, Robert E. Lee, said, "Duty is the sublimest word in the English language," and he was right about it. The due and true performance of duty to ourselves, to our fathers, mothers, relatives, and friends, to our country, and to our God constitutes the supremest patriotism. Duty, as Lee saw duty, and as was truly performed by Lee under all circumstances in war and in peace, in all relationships with his fellow man, with his native State and his native Southland, and with his God, constituted the all of human greatness. When duty is fully performed by any man or set of men there arises a reciprocal obligation on the part of those benefited by that performance of duty.

A father and mother discharge fully the duty they owe their children, and there arises the blessed obligation on the part of the children to love, honor, obey, and help with the tenderest care those to whom they owe their all. A good citizen helps under all circumstances his fellow man, and his fellow man owes him a reciprocal obligation. A nation's bravest and best marches away to battle and win their country's cause; and, with some dead, others crippled and blind, but all crowned with everlasting glory, they come marching back to take their places again in civil life, and the country owes them a debt of gratitude which can never be fully paid in money. Oh, the never-ending debt of love we owe to the memory of those who gained our independence and who sacrificed at Lexington, Valley Forge, and Yorktown! How our hearts swell within us as we recall the heroism and patriotism of our noble men and women in every emergency, from Bunker Hill to the armistice, which we are met here to commemorate, and from the first trip of white men under Capt. John Smith up the Potomac to the present site of our Nation's Capital to the day of the airplane. The half has never been told of the sacrifices at home and overseas of our people in the great World War. Our boys faced an enemy such as was never faced before, and our boys fought as men never fought before—and won.

All honor and glory to our boys who went across, and all honor and glory to their fathers and mothers who stayed at home and suffered all the agonies of all battles while they knew their dear ones were risking their all fighting the most terrible war ever staged and fought by wild and frenzied men. Men and women all over our land did nobly their parts, and victory is ours.

Ladies and gentlemen, I would gladly build, and I am sure you all would gladly build with me, a monument to our heroes and heroines of all our wars and of peace times—a monument the apex of which would reach the highest heavens. We can not build such a monument of brass or of marble, but we can build such a monument by preserving the principles for which our people have fought and sacrificed and upon which our Nation was founded by honoring and teaching our children to honor our great men and women and our great citizenship of common people; by preserving our institutions; and by making our Nation steadfast, secure, and imperishable. We can build such a monument to heaven by the prayers of a God-fearing and God-loving people ascending to the throne of the great I Am, seeking divine guidance for us and our posterity, that our great principles and great institutions might be preserved and our Nation not perish from the earth.

Shall this "Government of the people, for the people, and by the people" perish from the earth?

We want to believe that our Nation is steadfast and secure and that it is as imperishable as the sun. But we must remember that the expression, "That this Government of the people, for the people, and by the people shall not perish from the earth" was not uttered as a prophesy, but, rather, as a prayer that our Nation might never fall. The greatest monument we can possibly build to our heroes and patriots of the past and present, living and dead, and of the conflicts of war and of the pursuits of peace is to make our Nation imperishable and preserve inviolate in this Nation every true principle and every noble institution for which they sacrificed and for which they died.

It is easy enough for us to say this Nation shall never perish. Let us see what all-sufficient reasons we have for the faith that is within us. Shall our great expanse of territory, with Alaska and our island possessions, be sufficient to save us? Has territory ever saved any nation? We are not superior to England in this respect. What about the territory of Russia and Siberia? What about the territory of China? The territory of Alexander the Great was bounded only by the rising and setting sun, and yet as a nation it failed. Our great territory alone can not save our Nation. Shall our great resources make our Nation permanent? What of the resources of other nations? What about the resources of Argentina? What about the oil fields of Mexico, the diamond fields of Africa, and the mineral and other resources of European countries? Our resources will help us, but we need yet other things to perpetuate our Government.

Can we rely on our great Army and the wonderful fighting qualities of our American men? Caesar's legions grandly and proudly marched out of Rome with their helmets and bayonets glistening in the rising sun, and yet where is the mighty Roman Empire for which they fought? Napoleon's mighty army at one time it seemed would overrun all of Europe, and yet the tiny snowflakes of the north became the winding sheet of thousands of his bravest and best and forced him to retreat, only later to meet defeat at Waterloo and die in exile on St. Helena's barren coast.

Kaiser William thought he would overrun all of Europe and the world with his mighty fighting machine, only to meet the most crushing and humiliating defeat. Surely a mighty army without more can not save our Nation. Is our Navy sufficient to make our Nation imperishable?

Can we put our faith in the Navy of Perry, of Decatur, of Farragut, of Sampson, of Schley, and of Dewey? Can we rely on the Navy which carried the boys over and brought them back in the last war? If any country could expect its navy to save it from failure, we could, but no nation can build a navy large enough to preserve it without other saving forces. The great armada went down in defeat. Then, again, as fast as a navy is builded it becomes antiquated and is discarded. The airplane makes the battleship as a fighting machine only problematical, and yet no nation can rely on the airplane for its preservation. Neither can we feel assured of our Nation's security because of the inventive genius and learning of the American people. We are proud of American progress and accomplishments; but we must remember other nations and peoples are progressive and our own inventions help to make other nations strong.

If we can not rely on our territory, resources, Army, Navy, or learning, either separately or collectively, then shall our Nation perish, or is there saving power in other factors? Is there no Strong Lion of the tribe of Judah to loose the great seals and open the great book of mystery and let us read of our Nation's future and learn what we shall do to save our country? The seals are loosed, the great book is open; there is no mystery about the plan of our national salvation. Our forefathers have shown us the way. That for which our forefathers and their families braved the perils of the Atlantic and faced the wild beasts and savage Indians of an unknown country and for which they later fought their mother country is all sufficient. The same factors which were sufficient to establish on this continent our form of government and which have preserved it to this good hour are sufficient in the future to save this Government.

The preservation of three factors in our Nation's existence will make our Nation imperishable. These essential factors are our great principles, our great men and women, and our great institutions. Our country is great because of the great principles embraced in the Declaration of Independence, in our Constitution, and in the very beginning and life of our Government. Among the great principles which must be preserved are "the separation of church and State"; "the right to worship God according to the dictates of one's own conscience"; "religious freedom"; "equal rights to all and special privileges to none"; the theory that "all men are created equal"; the right of each community, so far as practical, to govern itself; the right of local self-government; "State rights"; "freedom of the press"; and the right of public assembly and free discussion of matters of public concern. I shudder with fear when I see these principles disregarded and laws enacted in violation of them. There is a tendency now to get away from the old moorings. The theory of no class legislation is now a theory or principle in name only. Nearly all national legislation is for special classes and against the great mass of common folks. This is true of the so-called protective tariff system. Then there is the great centralization of power in Washington and the depriving of the people of local self-government and of State rights. The people of the different sections of our country need different legislation, so local self-government is best for all. If we centralize fully all power at the Nation's Capitol, then carry to the full limit the theory that to the victor belongs the spoils, and give the Chief Executive a large Army to enforce the decrees of himself and his spoilsmen, then we have as bad form of government as the sun ever shone on.

Another great principle of our fathers was that our National Government should be divided into three great branches or divisions, to wit, the legislative, the executive, and the judicial, and that neither of these should overlap or encroach on the prerogatives of the other. Much of present national legislation is contrary to this principle.

Only recently the President was given the right to manipulate tariff rates in defiance of this principle. Lump-sum appropriations, with the right to some appointive officer to distribute the funds, is also contrary to this principle. There is scarcely a single great principle of our forefathers which is not now being overridden. It is time to stop, take our bearings, ascertain where we are drifting, and turn aside before it is too late.

Our great danger of downfall is not from invading armies; it is from decay on the inside. We want to get back to the principles for which our forefathers contended. My noble young men of the American Legion, your victory is in vain unless you and the rest of our citizenship can preserve our great principles, our great men and women, and our great institutions. We honor our great men and women. We honor our first President, and we honor our great men and women who have written their names on history's page. But we must remember that Washington did not cross the Delaware alone. He did not force the surrender of Burgoyne single handed. He was not the only man present at the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown.

Robert E. Lee, great and good and beloved as he was, did not stage the great defense of the South alone. In this, the greatest defense of home, of true principles, and of sacred rights ever made since the stars first sang together, Robert E. Lee and "Stonewall" Jackson had the aid of the other southern generals, had the aid of the brave, gallant, southern men who fought under them, and the aid of the great, splendid citizenship of the entire South who could not take part in the battles, but who remained at home and sacrificed and suffered there as patriots have never suffered before or since.

Thus it has always been and always will be. The great men and women of our country are not only those whose names appear on history's pages or who accumulate great wealth or who hold office, but the great men and women of our country are those who do their part with never a thought of show but with only the desire to serve nobly and well their family and neighbors and to render acceptable service to their country and to their God.

Of more value to us than all the great expanse of territory, all the resources, all of the standing armies, all of the navies, and all the learning of a scientific nature is the great noble citizenship of our country, which must be preserved and kept pure if our Nation is to endure. Young men of the American Legion, ladies, and gentlemen, you have done well your part in the past; now your duty and my duty is to preserve that for which you have fought and saved our Nation by saving our great folks and giving them a fair deal. We must fight to preserve our great principles, to secure proper legislation for the laboring man, the farmer, and the great citizenship which preserves our Nation in war and in peace, and we must all fight to keep pure and sacred our institutions, our homes, our schools, our ballot box, our form of government, our courts, and our churches. We all love the name of Washington, and the American people have builded to him yonder in Washington, on the banks of the Potomac which he loved so well, a most beautiful monument of granite, rising 555 feet into the sky. I have studied that monument in all parts of Washington and for miles and miles up and down the Potomac and from the surrounding country. I have seen it on a clear day, a beautiful shaft of white piercing the blue sky, and I have said, "How like the character and life of Washington, without a blemish, sublimely grand and towering to the sky."

Again, I have seen it with the dark clouds gathered about it and with the lightning of the storm flashing thick and fast about its magnificent shaft and yet it stood unharmed, and I said, "How like the immortal Washington in war"; and then the storm clouds rolled away and I saw a rainbow, emblematical of peace on earth and good will to men, hanged from the Virginia hills over the monument and over the Nation's Capitol to the waters of the Chesapeake, and I said, "How like Washington and the country for which he fought after the storm clouds of the Revolution had passed away."

Again, I have seen the base of that Monument completely hidden by the low-lying clouds along the Potomac while the top of the Monument was aglow with the sunshine above the clouds, and then I said, "How like the eternal principles for which Washington and his men fought, which tower above the clouds of petty strife and dissension into God's everlasting sunshine of right." But, my friends, beautiful and magnificent as the Washington Monument is, it could not stand for a single second of time unless its base went down through the mud of the banks of the Potomac and was tied into the granite foundations of the earth. So it is with the great and glorious Washington. Unless he had been supported by a great citizenship of patriotic Americans, his greatness would have never been known and he could not have towered to the skies as the great patriot, general, and statesman that he was. We must preserve our great principles, our great men and our women, and our great institutions if our Nation is to long endure. We must preserve the sacredness of the ballot box and the selection of our officials by popular vote. We must let every man, woman, and child feel that they are part of this Government and that the Government is giving all a fair deal and equal protection, and all must not only feel this way, it must be this way. As our people lose the right to legislate for themselves and to control their local affairs they become less satisfied and the Nation becomes weaker.

Not only must the sacredness of the ballot box be preserved but every voter should feel that he is performing a sacred duty when he casts his ballot, and he should be influenced by no motive but that of his country's good, and that vote when cast should have its full effect in shaping the destiny of his or her country. I can not express too often my great fear of the centralization of power in Washington and the abridgment of the rights of the States to control their own affairs. Neither can I warn you, my friends, too much of the danger of appointment of officers by the President to manage our local affairs.

What good is the right to vote if that vote is to count for naught? Let us look well to these things. We must preserve our form of National Government, our form of State and county government, and other local government as our forefathers intended, not as some would have us make them now. Three other institutions which I would specially mention as most essential to our national existence are the American school, the American church, and the American home. Our American schools mean the upbuilding of our Nation or its undoing. Much education along the wrong line is bad. Education along the right line is good. Our boys and girls should be taught not only book knowledge but should be inspired to live better and nobler lives. The purest and best patriotism should be instilled in them, and by patriotism I do not mean the love of military affairs and the love of war. Patriotism oftentimes means anything but things of a military nature and means the abhorrence of war. True patriotism only countenances war as the only and last honorable alternative in a crisis of a country. Patriotism is love of country, and there can be no love of country without the love of boys and girls and their fathers and mothers.

Our schools must teach loyalty to our Government first, last, and all the time, and our Government must remain worthy of that loyalty. There must be countenanced no loyalty to any foreign power or potentate. Our Nation must be first in the love of our people. I would that every school in our land had the Declaration of Independence on one wall and the Constitution of our Nation on the other, with the American flag waving overhead, and with teachers training our boys and girls to be great men and women of a great citizenship and to stand for the great principles of our fathers, to love our great men and women, and to preserve our great institutions. In our schools the guardians of our Nation's future are being made. We must preserve our schools in all the purity of thought and patriotism of the days of long ago. We must preserve the principles of religious freedom and of separation of church and state brought to this side of the Atlantic by our forefathers. The Government must not interfere with the right of all to worship God according to the dictates of each one's own conscience, and no religious denomination should be allowed to interfere with the matters of state for the purpose of furthering the interest of that denomination.

I fear very much the great tendency to do away with the American Sabbath. Many people believe that freedom of religious thought means freedom from religious thought. I shudder at the prevalent propaganda staged for the purpose of causing the young manhood and womanhood of the country to forget the churches of our ancestors. Our ancestors came over to the New World full of patriotism and full of the desire to worship God unmolested by the Government, each under his own vine and fig tree, as suited him or her best. Our Government was founded on these principles, and fail we shall as a Nation when we stray from them. When the fathers and mothers out in the country and in the cities gather their children about them on the Sabbath day and go to the church of their own choosing, we have a splendid exemplification of the times of our fathers and mothers of long ago and know that there is a growth of love of home, love of neighbors, love of native land, and love of God which should be an inspiration to all of us. We need in some sections of this country a new baptism of patriotism. There are too many profiteers and not enough patriots. There is no higher patriotism and love of people, native land, and God than that taught in the old book of our fathers, the Bible of our mothers. Real patriotism is that expressed in service of our fellow man, and there are no higher and grander lessons of service than those taught by Christ.

Christ teaches us to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, care for the sick, and visit those in prison, and then says, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye did it to me." So it is with those who help bring about conditions which enable our great common people to feed, clothe, and care for properly themselves and their children.

When we help the farmers and our great citizenship of people who feed, clothe, and save our Nation, we save not only them but our Nation also.

We must preserve our great principles, our great citizenship, and our great institutions, and of our great institutions none is greater than the American home. By the home I do not simply mean a house where people live, I mean a real home with home influence. Some one has said home is a place where mother lives. "Be it ever so humble there is no place like home." Home may not be a mansion—it oftentimes is a simple cottage. Most real homes are humble abodes where father and mother live and where children romp and play, and where the future great men and women of our Nation are growing up. Our Nation can not endure without the American home and with the American home saved our great principles, our great citizenship, our great institutions will be preserved and all will be made steadfast.

No move worth while was ever made which was not to make homes and home life better and happier. No law worth its place on the statute books was ever enacted which did not mean protection and assistance to home life. No army ever fought for a just cause unless that army fought for the homes of its men. If our homes are pure, our Nation is pure, and if our homes fail and are without the power to raise great children to preserve our principles and institutions, then our Nation is rotten at the heart and can not endure. As the Mississippi flows on its way to the great ocean a pure sweet stream flows in to purify it, and then a dark muddy stream flows in to make it muddy and black, and so it is with the home life of our people—the great Mississippi of our Nation. If the influences of whatever nature they may be that come into the home life of our people are pure and sweet, then our home life and our national life is pure and sweet and imperishable, but if the influences coming into the homes of our people are dark and corrupt, then our homes fail and our Nation will perish.

My friends, thank God the war is over, and may we never have another war, but the battle for the right is still on. The great monster of sectional intolerance, of political hatred, and of financial greed still raises his awful head, grinning defiance to all we hold sacred and seeking to destroy our institutions, our schools, our churches, our homes, our children, our people, and our Nation. Let us fight as our fathers fought to save our loved ones and to save our country.

Let us all take part in the conflict to make our Nation imperishable. May we and those following us keep up the fight so nobly carried by our fathers, and at last when all are gathered before the great white throne may it be found that our Nation proved to be imperishable, and may our flag still wave, kept and redeemed by the only blood which has the power to save.

HOOR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama, just before leaving a few minutes ago, said to me that in view of the requests for time for debate on this matter it would be very agreeable to him, if agreeable to the majority, to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts object?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I told people we would not meet until 12, but I have no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman make that request?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 12859. An act to provide for certain expenses incident to the third session of the Sixty-seventh Congress.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the privilege of including in the revision of my remarks the address referred to in said remarks and have it printed in 8-point type—that is, the address from the United States Chamber of Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, November 25, 1922, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

708. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a list of disbursing officers of the Navy who have been relieved of losses to and including November 15, 1922, under the provisions of the naval act approved July 11, 1919; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

709. A letter from the Postmaster General, transmitting a list of claims on account of loss by fire, burglary, etc., acted upon by the Postmaster General from July, 1921, to June 30, 1922; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. MOORES of Indiana: Joint Select Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers. Report No. 1259. A report on the disposition of useless papers in the Navy Department. Ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bill and executive communication, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12978) granting a pension to Mary E. Grayson; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A letter from the Acting Postmaster General, transmitting a statement showing the post offices where it was necessary to employ clerical assistance at a higher rate than $1,200 a year and the amount authorized at each office; Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads discharged, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BLANTON: A bill (H. R. 12997) granting relief to the Metropolitan police and to the officers and members of the fire department of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. VOLSTEAD: A bill (H. R. 12998) to create a commission to recommend to Congress amendments necessary in order to simplify the pleading, practice, and procedure in certain Federal courts; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WINGO: A bill (H. R. 12999) to permit public access to national cemeteries on Armistice Day, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BOIES: A bill (H. R. 13000) granting the consent of Congress to the city of Sioux City, Iowa, and to Union County, in the State of South Dakota, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Big Sioux River  $2\frac{1}{2}$  miles north of the mouth of said river; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 13001) to enlarge and extend the post-office building at Haverhill, Mass.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 13002) to increase the pensions of those who have lost limbs or have been totally disabled in the same in the military or naval service of the United States; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BEEDY: A bill (H. R. 13003) providing for the erection of a public building at Portland, Me., and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. ANTHONY: A bill (H. R. 13004) authorizing the Secretary of War to lease to the Kansas Electric Power Co., its successors and assigns, a certain tract of land in the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SUMNERS of Texas: A bill (H. R. 13005) amendatory of and supplemental to an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Co., and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871, and acts supplemental thereto, approved, respectively, May 2, 1872, March 3, 1873, and June 22, 1874; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ARENTZ: A bill (H. R. 13006) to authorize the acquisition of a site and the erection of a Federal building at Lovelock, Pershing County, Nev.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. ROUSE: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 392) providing for the delivery of mail notwithstanding failure to provide receptacles therefor; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. RAINEY of Illinois: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 393) providing for the appointment of a joint committee of Congress to investigate the holding of initiations and ceremonies in the United States Capitol and other public buildings by the Ku-Klux Klan; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. FAIRCHILD: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 394) limiting the operation of the immigration act of May 19, 1921, as amended by joint resolution of May 11, 1922; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. ROUSE: Resolution (H. Res. 451) directing the Postmaster General to transmit to the House of Representatives certain information relative to the manufacture of covers of door slots and mail receptacles for use of the United States City Delivery Service; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CHINDBLOM: A bill (H. R. 13007) granting a pension to Alonzo G. Hindman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COLE of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 13008) granting a pension to Allie Powell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13009) granting a pension to Rebecca M. Pickel; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13010) granting an increase of pension to Lula Reeder; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13011) granting an increase of pension to Catherine Boardman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13012) granting an increase of pension to Ralph Waite; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13013) granting an increase of pension to Mary C. Cole; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CROWTHER: A bill (H. R. 13014) granting an increase of pension to Martin G. Lyons; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13015) granting a pension to William Schuyler; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13016) granting an increase of pension to Catherine Brower; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: A bill (H. R. 13017) granting an increase of pension to Alexander LeClaire; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GREEN of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 13018) granting a pension to George H. Howe; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LONGWORTH: A bill (H. R. 13019) granting an increase of pension to Caroline Carruth; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13020) granting a pension to Susan Brunaugh; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MCKENZIE: A bill (H. R. 13021) granting a pension to Angie Page; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MAPES: A bill (H. R. 13022) granting a pension to Elijah Burt; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13023) granting a pension to John Bernhard; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MONDELL: A bill (H. R. 13024) for the relief of August Nelson; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. MOORE of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 13025) granting a pension to Anna Danison; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROBSION: A bill (H. R. 13026) granting an increase of pension to William S. Arnold; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SNELL: A bill (H. R. 13027) granting an increase of pension to Alice Howe; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13028) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Cashmere Russell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VESTAL: A bill (H. R. 13029) granting an increase of pension to Dennis Conner; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. VINSON: A bill (H. R. 13030) granting an increase of pension to Thomas M. Benton; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. VOLSTEAD: A bill (H. R. 13031) to permit Mahlon Pitney, an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, to retire; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

6459. By Mr. COLE of Ohio: Petitions of the various churches of Upper Sandusky, Ohio; the Methodist Protestant, Methodist Episcopal, and Presbyterian Churches of Forest, Ohio; and the Methodist Episcopal and Methodist Protestant Churches of Arlington, Ohio, indorsing H. R. 9753, providing for Sunday observance; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

6460. By Mr. KAHN: Petition of 4,716 citizens favoring an amendment to the so-called Volstead prohibition law, allowing the manufacture and sale of light wines and beer; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

6461. By Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: Petition of the Sons and Daughters of Liberty, members of Turtle Creek Valley Council, No. 191, and citizens of Pennsylvania, asking for the passage of the Towner-Sterling bill, for the creation of a department of education; to the Committee on Education.

6462. Also, petition of the legislative committee of the American Legion, urging passage of the adjusted compensation measure; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6463. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of Francis M. Savage, Northwest Savings Bank, Washington, D. C., regarding the Riggs National Bank opening a branch bank at Eighteenth Street near Columbia Road, District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, November 25, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

In this moment of silence, our Heavenly Father, speak to us, Thou alone art able to whisper to the human heart. Do Thou vitalize all good purposes, all noble vows, and all desires after the best things of life. May we never forget Thy benefits and may our memories be quick to retain all Thy gracious mercies. O God, be with our country. In all our material greatness may there be at its roots the fear of God and the love of virtue. Enable us as a people to grow in moral energy, expand in intellectual happiness, and contribute to the spiritual hope and salvation of mankind. In the name of Jesus, our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12817.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12817. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] will resume the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12817, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12817, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] please use some time?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of taxation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of taxation. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to present to the House later on the correspondence with Secretary of the Treasury Mellon in regard to the enforcement of section 220 of the revenue law, 1921, and suggested legislation to meet the situation. I will place it in the RECORD next week, and I think it may be of sufficient interest to mention it at this time. I trust that the Members will give it some attention when it is placed in the RECORD. It will submit proposed tax measures and other bills disclosed by the correspondence to be necessary in my judgment.

Mr. Chairman, in the few moments given to me I can only touch on one phase of this ship subsidy bill. It has been well covered in other particulars by competent speakers.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of maintaining American shipping and likewise good American standards of living for those who pay the bills. What will this bill do? In a direct and indirect subsidy it may cost the Government $75,000,000 or more every year. That statement is made by those who claim to know the effect of its provisions. The present wasteful yearly cost of Government shipping controlled by Lasker is about one-half that amount. I want to get away from Lasker's control, but, to my mind, several serious objections are presented by this bill.

After finding that the bill takes from the Treasury $125,000,000 for a fund to build more ships, we learn: First, we have 1,400 ships belonging to the Government which cost us $3,000,000,000, according to the President's statement. Now, they are worth only $200,000,000, or 7 per cent of their cost, according to Mr. EDMONDS, of the committee. It takes 20 or 30 years to dispose of these ships under the Lasker administration; no one knows. It is a bad situation from any viewpoint, but from the frying pan into the fire may become infinitely worse. The hearings show that Standard Oil and Steel have the greatest fleet of ships now afloat. They will reap the largest benefits from the bill, I understand. Those two companies are now dividing about $1,500,000,000 in stock-dividend melons between them, made up of extra profits that have been extorted from the American public, and Standard Oil has exacted about 77½ per cent net profits from the people annually during the past 10 years, which includes profits on its great fleet of ships. This bill, I will show, is a thanksgiving turkey for Standard Oil.

I quote from page 42 of the hearings:

Mr. MERRILL. There are 1,600,000 gross tons of cargo ships, about the same amount of privately owned tankers, and about a half million gross tons of passenger ships registered for foreign trade under the American flag, privately owned, but the greater portion of that tonnage is employed with the near-by or contiguous countries, such as the West Indian or Mexican oil trade and the Caribbean countries.

Mr. HARDY. About a million and a half of tankers, did you say?

Mr. MERRILL. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Who are the principal owners of that tonnage at the present time? What American companies are the chief owners and operators of that tonnage which you have just described?

OUR GUARDIAN ANGELS.

Mr. MERRILL. I think the largest single private American owner would be the Standard Oil Co. The United Fruit Co. is a large owner. The United American Line combination have a large tonnage; the Luckenbach Line; the Gulf, Tidewater & Sinclair Oil Co.; the American flagships of the International Mercantile Marine; the W. E. Grace Co.; the Steel Products Co.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Who are the Steel Products Co.?

Mr. MERRILL. That is the export end of the United States Steel Co. Mr. BANKHEAD. Those are the principal owners. As a matter of fact, there are only a very few individual owners?

Mr. LASKER. Yes, sir. That is what I meant.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly.

Mr. EDMONDS. Please just make that the United States Fruit Co., so as not to confuse it with the United Co., of New York.

Mr. FREAR. I am glad to do so. The Gulf & Sinclair Oil Co. is now consolidated with the Standard Oil of Indiana, I understand. This is known as the Mellon Oil Co. I propose to show in the Mellon correspondence that Mr. Mellon started the stock dividends melon cuttings with the Gulf Oil Co. for the Standard Oil and other companies, which later followed suit with over a billion and a half dollars in the aggregate.

I sat here the other day feeling great sympathy for our distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS], whom I admire very much, while his eyes filled with tears as he told about the sad sensation that came over him when the Magnolia or Mongolia left the shores of the Orient for home. I believe he was standing there at the time on the dock thinking of home. He wept copiously, and I do not blame him. Understanding him as I do, it is fair to say my eyes also filled with tears as I stood on the dock at Shanghai two years ago, but for a different reason. I stood there on the wharf—that is the Standard Oil wharf, the only real wharf of any kind there is at the anchorage below Shanghai. I stood there while they loaded up with 3,000 barrels of crude oil for our vessel, the Great Northern. I said to the captain, "What are you paying for your oil?" He answered, "$7 per barrel." Seven dollars a barrel on oil placed in Shanghai at about 50 cents by Standard Oil. Fourteen hundred per cent profit, practically, charged Uncle Sam by Standard Oil. That is the particular concern that is especially favored by this bill, and as I stood on the dock and noted the extortion my eyes filled with tears from indignation. [Applause.] That was in August, 1920, and the record of Government purchases will show whether or not my statement is correct, or rather whether the information the captain gave me was correct. It was $7 a barrel for crude oil in Shanghai, or $21,000 for fuel paid to this great monopoly that now comes to us hat in hand through this subsidy bill.

This great Standard Oil Co. will get enormous benefits under this bill. Let me tell you what it will get. Standard Oil and Steel are to buy more ships under this bill at 4 per cent interest rates—page 2—or less than the Government pays for the money it borrows to loan these great companies. The farmers of the country generally pay from 7 per cent to 10 per cent interest on their loans, and the farmers of my State are selling potatoes at 23 cents and wheat around $1 per bushel, while the average net income of 10,000,000 farmers last year was far below $500.

Standard Oil under this bill can borrow from the Government at 2 per cent for 15 years—page 7—while the Government pays more than double that rate for the same money and the farmer often pays four times that rate.

Under this bill Standard Oil gets many millions annually for its ships that carry its own oil, that is thereafter sold at 77½ per cent net profit. Our farmers are paying higher freight rates than ever before and selling their produce often below cost.

Standard Oil gets a tax rebate for 1921—page 9—and tax deductions for nine years. How much? Nobody knows from the record. Farmers get no tax rebates.

Again, Standard Oil gets a tax rebate for 1921—page 12—and tax deductions for nine years. How much? Nobody knows. Labor gets no tax rebates.

Again, Standard Oil gets a tax rebate for 1921 on page 17. How much? Echo answer, "Much."

Again, Standard Oil gets a tax deduction from 1914 to 1921—page 18—for decreased value of about 200 ships. During this same time of war it made its greatest profits of sometimes over 100 per cent annually, and we are to give back millions of war taxes to such monopolies. How much are we giving to farmers and labor?

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly.

Mr. EDMONDS. I just wanted to state that we are merely perfecting the Jones Act, which was passed by the House and by the Senate. All of those things you are talking about have already been passed upon by the House and the Senate.

Mr. FREAR. I say this, that if the gentleman had at heart the interests of the country, and not alone the interests of these oil and shipping people who are interested here; if he had at heart the interest of the people who vote in the elections, who pay the bills, he would strike these things out of the bill, no matter where they originated. No man in this House can explain what those tax features mean. It took an expert to draw them.

But think about this proposition: The Standard Oil, with its enormous war profits, again comes up and takes this additional tax rebate, and it does that while it is getting 77 per cent net profit on its annual past earnings for 10 years.

Mr. EDMONDS. We only do that in order to carry out the express will of the House and the Senate.

Mr. FREAR. If he has expressed the will of the House and the Senate through that 2 per cent 15-year interest rate to these great monopolies, then the gentleman from Pennsylvania indeed was not wise. Let me say before I go further that I believe that Pennsylvania, the old Keystone State, would have failed to return my good friend, of whom I think so much, if this proposal had occurred before election—because we lost New York, we lost Maryland, we lost New Jersey, we lost so many States of the country, just due to bills of this character, and this is worse than anything I have ever seen in all my experience here as a Member. [Applause.]

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not believe the question of that tax entered into the campaign at all.

Mr. FREAR. No; but the whole bill did. I concede that; and I say if it had it could be shot so full of holes by any man who undertakes to do so that it would look like a sieve, and I do not pretend to be an expert in the business.

Under the bill war profits and excess profits are rebated, page 19—

Mr. EDMONDS. Let me ask you one question: Did you vote for the merchant marine act of 1919?

Mr. FREAR. I presume I did; I do not know; and that is just the serious joke on Members. You put through things like that. Among the many bills we have to trust you, because we can not have any idea what they are. We accept your judgment until we learn it is not safe to do so, and this thing we know about. You were afraid to bring this bill up before election. Days and days we dallied here in the House and you never brought it up. Now you are trying to jam it through, when you know that three months hereafter it would not stand the ghost of a chance of passage.

Mr. EDMONDS. I was not afraid to bring it up before the election.

Mr. FREAR. I do not know that the gentleman from Pennsylvania was. I am speaking of those who were responsible for it, and I do not think the gentleman himself is largely responsible for it. I assume it is Mr. Lasker and the gentlemen whom Mr. Lasker represents.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] would never have stood for this if he had known or understood what they stood for.

Mr. FREAR. I think he would not, because I admire him very much.

Mr. EDMONDS. All this money is to be used for new ship construction; the gentleman realizes that.

Mr. FREAR. I realize that you are putting these hundreds of millions of dollars into the pockets of a few favored monopolies, and that you could not go before the country for a moment with your proposition, and you dare not let it go for three months until the new Congress meets. You know it and so do I, and I do not believe it will stand the ghost of a chance of getting through the Senate; but I do not want my good friends here, on the Republican side, whom I have tried to persuade to stay in the straight and narrow path in the past—I do not want them to fall down at this time, because I want them, all of them, to be here two years from now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FREAR. May I have five minutes more?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will give the gentleman 10 minutes more if he desires.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. FREAR. Thank you. I will not use it all.

Under the bill war profits and excess profits are rebated, page 19, so that the bill reeks with favoritism, for Standard Oil and Steel were among the great war profiteers.

Who prepared these tax refunds and how many additional millions will be lost to the Treasury? Nobody knows within $100,000,000 during the next five years. Who will pay the bill? The patient public always does.

What applies to Standard Oil and United States Steel ships will apply to other vessels that receive subsidies under the bill. No one knows the amount that will be involved because deductions are based on individual cases. Lasker is only a publicity man who buys newspaper space with Government money and floods Congress with propaganda for his bill. He does not know how much this bill will cost the Government annually. Nobody knows. Nobody can know.

Every newspaper this morning comes out with editorial notices or with news notices telling us we ought to vote for this bill. I should like to say what are behind these interests. Most men know. Why do these newspapers demand this? Why do these newspapers demand the passage of a sales tax upon the people? They do not represent the people. My friends, they are not in touch at all with the people outside of Washington and possibly New York. I mean New York City. I do not mean New York State. And they have little influence in New York City, because New York City went 400,000 against them, with practically every newspaper favoring their candidate. The press has little influence when it is not fair, and Lasker's propaganda will not deceive many Members.

President Harding vetoed the soldiers' bonus bill because it did not have a sales tax, and we now face a $670,000,000 Treasury deficit due to the repeal of the excess-profits tax. This subsidy bill will take many millions more from the Treasury in tax refunds that are already estimated to reach upward of $500,000,000. How much will be lost the Treasury under this bill again nobody knows. President Harding asked indefinite postponement of the soldiers' bonus bill. If we could wait over four years before considering this ship subsidy bill and a vetoed soldiers' bonus bill, why not wait three months longer and take up both propositions intelligently with the new Congress at a special session? Why this haste?

I recommend that question to the committee that has presented this bill. Why was the bill not brought up before election? It is an indictment of the whole proposition to try to jam it through this expiring Congress when a certainty exists it would be overwhelmingly defeated if presented four months hence to the new Congress coming fresh from the people.

I do not believe anyone knows within $25,000,000 annually what this bill will cost the country in tax rebates alone, and I am not criticizing the members of the committee, but why is Mr. Lasker and his publicity board now forcing the bill upon the administration and on Congress? No legislative body should continue an appropriation for 10 years. That objection to the bill alone is vital to any action now and discredits a measure that was only saved by a special rule against the point of order. I leave that to any ordinarily fair-minded man. That objection in itself alone is vital to any action now, and discredits a measure that was only saved by a special rule against the point of order.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the President has been imposed upon—

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield again, please?

Mr. FREAR. Briefly; yes.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman has referred to tax refunds that he says are already estimated to reach upward of $500,000,000. The gentleman means, of course, covering a period of 10 years?

Mr. FREAR. I am not referring now to the shipping bill at all. That refers to the tax refunds that we are making from the Treasury on taxes heretofore paid, refunds under the secret methods in vogue there, and it is estimated that they will reach $500,000,000 in the aggregate.

Mr. EDMONDS. Who estimates that they will reach $500,000,000?

Mr. FREAR. The New York Commercial, the New York Times, and I will put all that in the Record in my Mellon correspondence. This $500,000,000 tax-refund loss is in addition to the fact that the Treasury is $670,000,000 in the hole now, according to Secretary Mellon, due to the repeal of the excess-profits tax.

Mr. EDMONDS. Does the gentleman mean $500,000,000 a year?

Mr. FREAR. No; in all the tax refunds that they are proposing against the money collected. I am not referring to the shipping bill when I speak of $500,000,000 in tax refunds. I can not explain to the gentleman any further. The refunds proposed in this bill are in addition to the $500,000,000 in tax refunds now being made.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman ought to be fair about it.

Mr. FREAR. I am certainly trying to make my statement fair.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the President has been imposed upon. I believe the President has been badly advised regarding this bill and its effect on American shipping. I do not believe this ship subsidy will recommend itself to 1 per cent of the farmers and laborers of the country, who eventually are said to pay the bills. It fattens profits for Standard Oil, United States Steel, and other monopolies, and little benefit will trickle down to the country.

From my own viewpoint, much as I hesitate to differ from its supporters, gentlemen on this Republican side whom I admire—and you are all friends of mine—I believe the bill is indefensible and ought to be defeated. [Applause.] I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back five minutes.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] 20 minutes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I wish to preface my remarks by saying that I am glad this very serious debate is tinged with some humor. It is humorous indeed to see the gentlemen on my right applaud the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], who has just addressed us, when you well remember that whenever he appears speaking to this same committee with reference to appropriations for rivers and harbors you hiss him. So it is not entirely without humor. Now, to the matter in hand.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. I want to say that the old-fashioned pork barrel has gone out of existence and we have substituted the Budget bill.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. To the mind of the gentleman from Wisconsin it will be back in the next Congress, and his vituperation will be renewed with all its vehemence.

Mr. FREAR. And I hope to have the gentleman from Indiana with me.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Against any needless waste, but not against necessary public improvements.

Although there can be no questioning the fact that the shipping industry of the world to-day is in a most unfavorable situation, the usual statement that this is due to world-wide depression is not strictly correct. Foreign trade figures expressed in values show a tremendous falling off in that trade; but careful compilations of the movements by volume of quantity show that, for the United States at least, much more cargo is being moved in the foreign trade than before the war and only a relatively small amount less than during the boom years of 1919 and 1920. The cause for the depression does not lie wholly with lack of cargoes, but must be sought elsewhere.

The United States increased its merchant marine, counting both privately and nationally owned, from a total of 1,066,288 gross tons registered for the foreign trade in 1914, to 11,077,898 tons similarly registered for the year 1921. This was an increase of our own foreign-going merchant marine of 1,000 per cent. The average annual increase in gross tonnage of the world's merchant marine immediately prior to 1914 was about 2,800,000 gross tons per year. In the United States, from 1918 to 1921, our total merchant marine increased from 9,924,518 tons to 18,282,136 tons, an increase in three years of 8,357,618 tons, or an average increase of 2,785,873 tons. In other words, the United States merchant marine alone increased for three years at the rate which the world's shipping increased, before the war.

Of course, during the war there was a heavy demand for shipping, and at the same time there was much tonnage withdrawn from commercial operation by military requisition or by internment. After the armistice and after the repatriation of the allied troops the requisitioned and the interned tonnage was released and thrown upon the market. This amount of tonnage, taken on a collapsing speculative market, completely glutted all demands for shipping.

While it is true that there is both a shortage of cargo and a surplus of shipping facilities, if factors so interrelated can be considered separately, it is equally safe to state that the real cause for the present shipping depression lies in the surplus of tonnage with relation to the 1914 figure rather than to any decrease of cargo from that figure.

Such a condition is not new, although it is one which has not particularly interested this country before. British owners have more than once, in depressed times, considered mutual lay-up of tonnage by agreement, with a view of stabilizing the market for the balance of their ships. It was the tremendous production of American yards as a war emergency that conspicuously overtonnaged the world from a peace standpoint, and to-day the greater part of surplus shipping of the world is laid up under the American flag. The future can not be forecast without considering the disposition of this surplus.

The American tonnage in foreign trade is largely the Government tonnage. The Government can not dispose of its holdings, now being operated at heavy loss, until private enterprise has established adequate services to an extent equivalent to the Government services. On the other hand, private owners can not establish such services alongside Government lines and in competition with them, for competition is so keen to-day that only the cheapest-run ships can live, and American vessels are almost the most expensive to operate.

In addition to its purpose of bringing into being new ships of special types, one of the greatest advantages of the subsidy bill at present under consideration by Congress lies in the fact that it should remove sufficient of the handicap under which the American owner suffers to permit him to buy out the active Shipping Board tonnage. This would be a step in advance of immeasurable worth.

But overshadowing any purchase of Government tonnage there is one fear which has not so far been removed. This shadow is what Chairman Lasker, of the Shipping Board, has called "the menace of surplus." It is doubtful if, under the happiest conditions, the American flag will need the Shipping Board tonnage in its entirety, and ways and means must be found to dispose of such of the good tonnage as remains so that American interests will not be hurt. Under no circumstances must the surplus that America can not absorb be disposed of so as to bankrupt those who buy from the Government at current prices.

Automatically the poor tonnage must be done away with. For if we permit a potential surplus to remain—with the possibility of its use in only abnormally prosperous times, when any tonnage can be profitably operated—the burden of loss will fall on the good tonnage in times of adversity without full enjoyment of profit in time of prosperity, and thus we depress the price of all of our tonnage, and so it will come to pass that we shall liquidate the whole for less than we could liquidate the good part.

It is the unneeded surplus, in ships as in all else, that determines the market, and the same circumstances that forced some farmers to burn their corn last winter demands that, at least in so far as the uneconomical 3,000,000 tons of freighters go, we recognize that one of our problems is to force its disappearance from the market. If we are to induce private investment in American ships, it must be under an assurance as to what will be done with the surplus tonnage, plus an assurance that the Government will retire from operation, for private owners can not live and can not finance themselves with those two swords of Damocles hanging over their heads.

If the carefully considered measure of Government aid now before Congress be passed substantially unchanged, and if the threat of the unsold ships be guarded against in an effectual manner, I believe that much of the cause of the present over-tonnaging will be removed, and that the health of the world's shipping industry, particularly with regard to the nascent American merchant marine, will show immediate and remarkable improvement.

The situation to-day is radically different from that on any previous occasion when aid to our merchant marine has been considered by Congress. Three recent developments create this difference.

First. Our national prosperity depends upon our having a merchant marine. No nation, not even ours, though it is dowered with the greatest natural wealth of all, is to-day self-sufficient. Modern civilization is so complex that every country is dependent upon others for vitally necessary materials. As industry develops this interdependency becomes greater.

Not only is our interdependence naturally increasing, but our national trade balance has been reversed by the war. No longer do we seek abroad to finance American development. No longer do our foreign creditors welcome the products of our farms, mines, and factories in payment of the interest on the debts we owe them.

To-day those same nations owe us billions of dollars. They can only pay their debts by production. They are competing with us for the same markets. If we can not deliver our own goods, we need not expect our competitors to aid us in so doing.

Second. Our national defense demands a merchant marine. By international agreement the war-time powers are limiting their fighting fleets. Our allowed strength will be only a paper ratio without a strong and diversified merchant fleet.

We have never been able to supply enough auxiliaries to coal and supply our Navy or to transport an army. With lessened numbers of warships the large fast merchant vessels become potential fighting ships themselves. Our lack of these is almost complete.

If merchant ships are not built, our shipyards, denied naval work, will decay. Thousands of skilled artificers will seek other employment. The art of shipbuilding will become a well-nigh lost one, and with it will go the power to increase, should war clouds bank, a deficient fleet or quickly to repair a damaged one.

Third. The question of a merchant marine is no longer academic. Hastily built, unbalanced, and partly unsuitable as it is, we have to-day a merchant marine. Our problem is, What shall we do with it?

The Government is maintaining this fleet until the effective tonnage can be sold and the ineffective vessels disposed of. Meanwhile it is operating on essential trade routes about one-third of its ships. The maintenance and operation of this fleet costs $50,000,000 a year in operating loss alone.

Our fleet is deteriorating, our losses are great, and we are providing nothing for the future. The private shipowner can not afford to purchase from us under present conditions, yet continued governmental operation will drive him, our potential customer, off the seas.

We can not sell the ships we have nor induce the construction in our yards of the vital types we sorely need because of the American standard of living. Labor in America is better paid than in any other maritime nation. Our shipowners must bear the higher costs of ships built by American labor and of crews obtained in American ports, and with this burden struggle for the trade of the world against ships built and manned by cheaper labor.

We must insure the continuance of our shipbuilding industry, and we must have a force of Americans trained to the sea for national defense, if for no other reason. But obviously we can not expect the shipowner to bear alone the higher cost of these necessities, especially when it is remembered that America will be a newcomer in the field.

Other nations are entrenched in the trade, established, organized, with years of experience, reputation, and good will to carry them. We must begin at the beginning and, overcoming the inertia of trade, divert it to ourselves. This, under depressed shipping conditions and while carrying the highest labor costs, is beyond the power of any shipowner unaided.

Because an efficient merchant marine is essential, because we can not lose what progress we have made, because shipping is the one key industry unprotected and impossible of protection, we must grant it aid. It is not a question of subsidy or no subsidy; it is a question of achieving the greatest result with the least outlay. The method only is open to discussion, for we are to-day subsidizing our State-owned ships far more than would maintain them against foreign competition were they in private hands.

If it be accepted that America must have a merchant marine, built and manned by workmen under the American standard of living, then America must help bear the cost. Sixty years of history have shown that we can not compete unless the difference between American and foreign standards be compensated for.

Accordingly it is proposed that a system of direct aid in part compensation of this difference be extended. All possible indirect aids are to be provided, and the money compensation becomes applicable only if the indirect aids do not suffice. The result will be to develop and strengthen our foreign commerce, give us effective naval auxiliaries, and permit the sale at reasonable prices of the Government's war-time shipping.

Previous measures in aid of shipping have failed in instances because of changing conditions. Others, for the same reasons, have given too much. Legislation can not be all-foreseeing. We must grant sufficient aid—for inadequate aid is utter loss and is worse than none at all—but we can not allow any semblance of profiteering.

We Americans pride ourselves sometimes on being a good business people. And yet a view of the statistics on the shipment of commodities overseas during 100 years will prove conclusively that we have not been as wise as we might have been. Millions of dollars that should have remained at home have gone abroad. I am not taking a narrow view of international relations. We want nothing that the peoples of other countries are entitled to, but I maintain that it is our duty to see that we get our fair share, the share that in justice belongs to us.

Figures compiled by the Department of Commerce show that the value of commodities exported by sea from the United States for 100 years, beginning with 1821, was $86,629,076,814, while the imports for the same period amounted to $62,174,102,566, making the total commerce in foreign trade by sea $148,803,179,380. Of this total, vessels under the American flag carried only $35,631,382,909, or about 24 per cent, leaving 76 per cent carried by alien bottoms. As the British merchant marine represents about 50 per cent of the foreign tonnage engaged in this trade, it therefore is evident that their participation in our commerce would amount to about 38 per cent of the total amount, or $56,545,208,164.

It is safe to say that of this sum 25 per cent was paid out for freight, insurance, banking, and other charges which went into the hands of foreigners. Thus the American vessels during that 100 years earned $8,907,845,754 for American interests; the sum of $28,292,949,118 went to foreign interests. This is in sharp contrast to what happened between 1821 and 1862, when we had a real merchant marine. During that period an average of 80 per cent of our total commerce was carried in American bottoms. Between the Civil War and the World War we carried but 19 per cent of our commerce, and the outflow of American dollars was steadily increased. As a result of World War conditions, shipping increased from 1914 to 1920. Our tonnage grew. Rates were high. During this period the total commerce by sea was $47,626,671,810; of this amount American-flag vessels carried $12,129,630,431, or about 26 per cent of the total. On the other hand, the foreign-flag vessels carried $35,497,041,379, or about 74 per cent. Of the foreign countries Great Britain carried the lion's share, namely, $19,811,387,720, or about 42 per cent of the total commerce. Applying the factor of 25 per cent for transportation and other charges, we find we have enriched British shipping interests in only seven years with $4,952,846,930, and other foreign countries to the extent of $3,921,413,415, a total outgo of $8,874,260,345, while on the same basis our American tonnage retained in the country $3,032,407,608, or approximately but 24 per cent of the total revenue accrued from the carriage of our commerce during a period that was memorable for high freight rates and an enormous demand for our products.

Now, let us consider again the hundred-year period from 1821. I have shown that in that time we allowed foreign interests to take from us $28,292,949,118 which should have been spent in America. What does that sum represent?

From the foundation of the Government until now our total expenditures for the improvement of rivers and harbors and canals, exclusive of the Panama Canal, were only $1,036,079,202.35. The Panama Canal, including its fortifications, cost $479,851,938.98, bringing the total for all waterways up to $1,515,931,141.33, or about one twenty-fifth of the amount we gave foreigners in 100 years.

So much for the past. Let us consider the present. During the past year the Shipping Board has been giving as good an example of Government ownership and operation as can be expected. And yet its operation of ships is costing the Government around $50,000,000 a year. And this fifty millions goes for the operation of one-fourth the ships that should be in service under the American flag if a real merchant marine were afloat. At this rate, supposing further reductions in the cost of operation might be made, to operate an adequate Government-owned merchant marine would cost at least $150,000,000 a year.

Subsidy? Mr. Chairman, we have a subsidy, an uneconomical subsidy, a wasteful subsidy, running full blast. Congress forbade the Shipping Board to build new ships, therefore what tonnage we have is deteriorating daily. Of the 1,500 ships we own, 1,100 are tied up, 400 are being operated, and as they wear out we will have no good ships to replace them. But our competitors will. As well tell a factory owner to confine himself to old machinery while his rivals are using the most modern equipment the market affords.

As long as we continue Government operation we will make it practically impossible for private operators to exist. The calculated cost of operating the Government fleet does not take into consideration the original cost of the ships. It is simply the difference that lies between the man who has a farm given to him and one who has to buy a farm of the same size. The former has no mortgage to pay off, no interest on that mortgage to meet. The latter starts with too big a handicap. Therefore the longer the Government operates its ships the more harm it is doing to the real development of an American merchant marine.

Furthermore, the longer the Government operates ships the deeper it is digging into the Treasury, the heavier the burdens it is laying upon the taxpayers of the country. Even by efficient operation tens of millions of dollars will be lost annually.

President Harding has made it plain that it costs $50,000,000 a year to operate Government ships, as against $30,000,000 for a subsidy to private operation. But, as I pointed out, that $50,000,000 is being paid out for only one-fourth of a real merchant marine, while the $30,000,000 for subsidy to private owners will go for a full-fledged, well rounded out merchant marine in keeping with the needs of the country. It will go to encourage building of ships in American yards. It has been estimated that about 75 per cent of the subsidy will go to American labor. It will reach down into the mines, where the ore is dug; thence to the smelters, where that ore is turned into steel; thence to the metal trades, where the steel parts that go into ships are made; and, finally, so far as building is concerned, to the shipyard workers, who will assemble that metal into ships; and finally to the American seamen, who will man the ships, for the majority of all crews must be Americans.

Just now the Government is offering for sale the land and buildings that go to make up the famous Hog Island shipyard, outside of Philadelphia. That shipyard, built in war emergency, cost the Government $65,000,000. If the Government had taken care of its merchant marine prior to the war we would have had enough shipyards running, enough skilled shipbuilders employed, to meet the sudden demands of war. But our shipyards and our ships had been neglected—in fact, we had no ships—and so we had to lavish money on shipyard development. The cost of that one yard—$65,000,000—would pay the proposed subsidy, when running at a maximum, for two years. Another case of mistaken economy on the part of a nation that prides itself on being businesslike.

Now, as to the sale of our ships. Who is going to pay anything for a ship now when he knows he will have to go into competition with the Government, which cares nothing for what its ships cost? Remove the Government as a competitor with private citizens and the private citizens will go into the trade. They will make work for shipyard laborers, but the Government will not. Congress has told the Shipping Board to build no more ships.

Opponents of this bill have said it is designed to enrich the few at the expense of the many. What about freight rates? Remove American ships from the seas and the foreigners will raise the rates. The rates are lower to South America to-day than ever. Why? Because before the American war-built merchant marine went into the South American trade the foreigners had complete sway, the British taking the lead. They charged what they pleased and gave what service they chose.

Do the grain producers of the country remember 20 years back? What happened when the Boer War broke out? British ships that had been carrying American grain were suddenly withdrawn to meet the war needs of their country. American grain was banked up along the railroads that led into the Atlantic ports, and heavy losses were sustained. If we have no ships of our own we are at the mercy of the foreign shipping interests.

An adequate, efficient, and well-rounded merchant marine is an essential to the continued prosperity of the agricultural producers of the country.

Our farmers produce more than the country can consume, and the price realized for the annual output depends upon the extent to which the surplus can be marketed in other countries.

The only foreign States that touch our borders are farming countries. Our farm products, therefore, can only be sold to overseas nations. To reach these markets ocean transport is required, and any inadequacy of our shipping facilities means curtailment of exports and oversupply of the local market.

Since the World War conditions have radically changed. The United States is no longer a debtor nation, and her goods no longer help pay the interest on the debt. Instead Europe owes us billions of dollars, and everything she buys from us increases the adverse balance and further affects her depreciated exchanges. Her effort is now to avoid buying from us and to obtain everything possible from other countries, especially those which are her own colonies or dominions.

The growth of Canada, Australia, and the Argentine as exporters of cereals has been rapid, and as a result the United States no longer holds her premier position as the world's granary; she must compete for her markets, and the competition will be keen, indeed.

Now, it is obvious that our farmers are poorly equipped to meet competition if the empire whose dominions are our chief rivals as grain producers controls our sea transport. Our surplus of cereals can only be marketed at such figure and to such extent as that empire elects. Naturally the interests of the American farmer will only be looked out for after those of the Canadian and the Australian grower.

A great Englishman, referring with proper pride to the place of his nation in history, said:

Time, and the ocean, and some guiding star
In High Cabal have made us what we are.

No country has a monopoly on time, on ocean, on guiding star. These are all ours to use and enjoy to the fullest degree if we will but take advantage of the present opportunity.

It remains to be seen whether we will embrace this opportunity, and by so doing maintain the place we should maintain as the foremost nation in world affairs, or whether we will permit this opportunity to be frittered away and in humiliation again see our flag disappear from the ocean. Aside from the economic advantage of a merchant marine, if we are to perform the part we should in the rehabilitation and uplift of this weary old world the best way to do it is to keep the Stars and Stripes floating at the masthead in every port on all the seven seas.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] 20 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, when the World War was declared the United States found itself without ships. We were about to transport to the field of war a large force of soldiers. Nobody knew how many millions we would be called upon to send to the other side. One of the important elements in the success of our arms was ships. Ships were needed not only to transport men but supplies of all kinds. We were in a very embarrassing situation. We had to call upon European nations to transport our troops to France. We authorized the administration to acquire ships either by construction, requisition, or commandeering, or in any other way they found it advisable to acquire them. They began the work. They worked intensively at the problem, and yet we were called upon to send the most of our troops in French and English ships. It was an impossible thing for the administration to provide the ships in time for the immediate urgent need. Nobody expected the administration to be able to do that. They did the best they could under very difficult circumstances. When the war was over we had ships to bring the troops back, and the administration did a first-class job in returning the soldiers from France. I think it may be safely said that no such achievement was ever accomplished in so short a time. We have been trying to operate the ships that the war left us. That was an inheritance of the war. Everybody agreed that we must have the ships. They were built in response to a great national need. Of course they cost a lot more money than you can sell them for, and much more than you could build them for now. But everything cost more then than it cost before or will cost after.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. LITTLE. I notice the gentleman speaks of bringing the troops home. Do I understand that we transported no troops until after war was over?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, no; we did transport some of the troops, but the most of the troops were sent over in foreign ships. We invested $3,300,000,000 in these ships. They were built for war purposes and war purposes only at the beginning. It was thought by the administration then in power that we ought to establish a merchant marine, and they built many more ships than were needed for the war. They did not cease the shipbuilding program until April, 1921. When the war was closed we had 437 ships as the result of our effort to meet the needs of the war. When the shipbuilding program was completed we had about 2,300 ships, and we find ourselves with over 10,000,000 dead-weight tons of shipping.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that after the armistice was signed any additional contracts for building ships were made?

Mr. MADDEN. I did not say that. I said continued building ships.

Mr. GARNER. But the inference would be that they continued to build ships after the armistice as public policy. As I understand, no ship was built except what had already been contracted for.

Mr. MADDEN. I would not like to say about that definitely, for I do not know.

Mr. GARNER. I am asking for information. My impression has been that no new contract was made after the armistice was signed.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not desire to make any misstatement in connection with anything I may say here. I have no desire to bolster up anything for the present administration or run anything down that was done by the previous administration. I am trying to state the facts. But I would like to state that if the existing shipbuilding contracts had been canceled when the armistice was signed we would not now be confronted with the present problem and the Treasury would probably be two billions better off.

Mr. GARNER. If any member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine knows about it, I think it would be interesting. I do not know.

Mr. MADDEN. I think there were, but I would not be certain about it.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. If the gentleman will allow me, I think there were no new contracts made after the armistice, except it was for some minor ships to round out and carry out the program. It was of a negligible amount.

Mr. MADDEN. So, you see, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] admits there was a program. What could the program be if not to establish a merchant marine? The war was over, and unless a merchant marine was contemplated wisdom would have dictated the cancellation of the contracts. But they were not canceled, and now we have the solution of the problem before us.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. It is scarcely worth considering, whatever it was.

Mr. GARNER. But no public policy was adopted toward increasing the merchant marine—that is, a Government-owned or a Government-built merchant marine—other than what was arranged for, for war purposes.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know about that.

Mr. LITTLE. Am I correct in the understanding that they built about 1,900 more ships after the war closed?

Mr. GARNER. Yes; on contracts made before the armistice.

Mr. MADDEN. However that may be, we find ourselves in the possession of about 10,000,000 dead-weight tons of ships as the result of those contracts.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. How much has the Committee on Appropriations been called upon for to complete the ships since the armistice?

Mr. MADDEN. Between four hundred and fifty and five hundred millions, and no one knows how many hundred millions previously appropriated was unexpended when the armistice was signed. We find that in the attempt to operate these ships since the war very great losses have been incurred, something about $200,000,000 a year, up to a year ago or a little more. We find that if you add the losses which were incurred in the operation of the ships to the cost of ship construction that we have about $3,900,000,000 invested in the enterprise. Under the present Shipping Board management we have been able to reduce the losses to about $48,000,000 a year. Thirty-six million dollars of those $48,000,000 of loss is not due to ship operation; it is due to the cost of maintaining the ships that are tied at the docks or tied together in the streams—the ships that are idle; and about $12,000,000 a year is lost because of the operation of the ships that are in service.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Will the gentleman please explain how there can be that expense to take care of idle ships tied up?

Mr. MADDEN. You can not take care of idle ships without putting men on board of them, and you can not take care of them without hiring docks in many cases against which you can tie the ships, and then there is the expense, whatever is necessary, that must be incurred in order to prevent the ships from deterioration and from sinking at the places where they are tied. That involves the expenditure of a large amount of money.

Mr. Chairman, as I say, we have reduced the losses to about $48,000,000 a year. It is said by those who presume to know that the total cost of a so-called subsidy under this act, if it becomes an act, will never exceed $50,000,000 a year. It must be manifest to everybody that if we are losing $48,000,000 a year to-day, that we are paying it, and how are we paying it? We are paying it out of the Treasury of the United States, of course; so that in effect we are paying a subsidy to-day. It must be manifest also to everyone that if we continue as a Government agency to operate the ships we will continue to operate them at a loss. More than that, at the end of a period, and I do not know how long the period will be, we will find that we have no ships to operate or to compete in the transportation of commodities with the ships of the world.

Why do I say that? Because we are not going to rebuild ships. We are going to operate the ships we have already built, and if we operate them long enough they will wear out, and if we substitute nothing in their place the American merchant marine will go off the seas. Everyone will agree to that. The question now arises whether we would prefer to have the Government, through the Shipping Board, operate the ships with a certainty at the beginning that the ships will be operated for only a certain period of time until they wear out, and that during all that period of time we will be losing at the rate of forty-eight or fifty million dollars a year, or shall we turn these ships over to private enterprise and have the private enterprise accept the ships at a reasonable price upon condition that we pay them something in order that they may successfully meet the competition against the ships of the world; and I understand we propose to sell the ships only upon the condition that the men who take them will renew the ships as the present ships wear out. In that way we will continue to have ships flying the American flag, carrying American commerce to every nation in the world.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. EDMONDS. Does the gentleman think his committee would look kindly on a request from the Shipping Board for $125,000,000 with which to round out the fleet at the present time?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think we would; and, as far as I am concerned, I am not in favor of granting to the Shipping Board any such power or placing at their disposal any such sum of money for any such purpose.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The gentleman said that these ships would be sold to private enterprise under obligation that the private enterprise continue to keep the ships in operation.

Mr. MADDEN. If they are not sold upon that condition there would not be any use of selling them.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Is there anything in the bill that provides for that?

Mr. MADDEN. If there is not, there should be. I would say that personally I have never voted for a subsidy bill, and I am frank to say that I would not vote for one now if I did not believe that we have an obligation to meet which ought to be met courageously. What is that obligation? We are the trustees for $3,300,000,000 of an investment by the American people. How are we going to manage this trust? Are we going to permit a Government agency to attempt to operate the ships, when everyone knows, on the face of the facts, that they can not do it without loss? Everyone knows that a Government agency can not operate a business as economically as a private agency can. Why is that so? In the first place, it does not matter how patriotic the men may be who are in charge of the Government agencies or how much they may favor system or economy in the conduct of the business with which they are charged, because every time they try to economize anywhere by cutting expenses there will be an avalanche of protests from men in every walk of life, and many times from Members of Congress, against the reduction they propose to make, and if it means that the forces are to be reduced, then everybody everywhere who wants the patronage will demand that the employees be retained. Therefore, after all, no matter how able the Government agency may be, it is always handicapped; no matter how honest those in charge of it may be or how determined they are to economize, they are forced into a system of extravagance by the pressure that is brought to bear upon them.

Are we ready now to say that that is what we want to continue, or are we ready to say that we want to eliminate the possibility of any such practice? There can be no state of doubt in the mind of anyone that we can not conserve this property under a Government agency, but there is every reason to believe that if we turn the property over under proper conditions to private management we will be able to keep our merchant marine flying the American flag, carrying the products of American labor to every port in the world.

I do not say, and I suppose no one can say with definite assurance of the outcome, that any bill we pass will do what is anticipated, but we have an obligation to try. If we can not sell the ships under the provisions of this bill, there will be no subsidy paid. That is as sure as that the sun will shine to-morrow. If we do sell them and they are operated successfully, we have a reasonable assurance that we will have a merchant marine and that the cost of the merchant marine will not exceed the cost which is now being paid out of the Federal Treasury. Are you willing to continue to pay because you can do it without saying "subsidy," or are you willing to say that you will not pay under another system because you will have to say "subsidy"? It is as broad as it is long, so far as the payment goes. You will have to pay in any case, but in the one case you have a reasonable assurance that you are going to get returns, that you are going to get a merchant marine flying the American flag, that you are going to have auxiliary ships to operate in a war-time emergency, whereas if you let the fleet that now exists fade away from the face of the earth and from off the seas you will be again confronted with the problem that confronted us in the early days of the war just closed, and you will have to solve it again.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman if he looks with favor upon the provision of the bill with respect to permanent appropriations?

Mr. MADDEN. Well, I can say this: I think that ordinarily a permanent appropriation ought not to be made in any event in connection with any activity that engages it, but it must be clear to all—it is clear to me—that unless you make a permanent appropriation you can not enter into a contract under this bill with anybody who may want to buy American ships. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHAELSON].

Mr. MICHAELSON. Mr. Chairman, as an aftermath to the war which cost the world so much of blood and treasure the United States finds itself in the possession of a fleet of 1,700 or more ships, built and acquired during that war to serve an emergency and paid for with approximately $3,000,000,000 of the people's money, which it has been repeatedly admitted was expended feverishly, extravagantly, wastefully, and impractically.

The Government, through its Shipping Board, has been engaged for the past three or four years making use of a good many of these ships in the shipping business, thereby competing with old-established, highly successful shipping corporations, with the result that the profits of these corporations have been considerably reduced and the Government has sustained losses and deficits now reported to be at the rate of $52,000,000 per year.

The wail and the cry of those who complain of and condemn the meddling of Government in business has been heard. Behold! It is now proposed that the Government retire from the shipping business, thereby reducing the people's losses and deficits in this instance by 50 per cent, contract for the sale of the ships to those now engaged in the business or desiring to engage therein at a greatly reduced price, and to pay to these persons or corporations so engaged a bonus to insure them against possible losses or deficits, and further, to exempt from the payment of Federal income tax the money so invested or set aside for such investment and also to provide a loan to shipowners of a revolving fund of $125,000,000 at 2 per cent interest for 15 years at a time and up to two-thirds of the cost of the ships upon which the loans are to be made.

All this, if enacted into law as proposed in the bill now before us, will, its proponents assure us by extending the fervent hope that it will, provide a market for our idle, unused ships, save millions of dollars to our already overtaxed people, and give to the United States a great merchant marine commensurate with our commercial importance.

Let us stop a moment and view the situation as it really exists. It may be we are not familiar with the facts.

Is it not a fact that the fundamental law of supply and demand governs in the shipping business as in every other trade activity of the human race? Does it not follow then, as a matter of course, that if there are more ships than cargoes some of the ships must be idle?

Is it not a fact that as a result of the war emergency there is now a great surplus of ships and that even with the passage of a ship bonus bill the surplus would still exist and remain idle?

Does anyone believe that any amount of legislation or any particular bit of legislation having for its purpose the granting of a bonus to the owners of ships or exempting them from the payment of income tax will create cargoes of goods where there are none or provide a market for idle ships which must of necessity remain idle?

And is it not a fact that even if a demand for ships was suddenly created a good many of our idle ships could not be brought into service for transocean trade because of the fact that they were built with bunker capacity insufficient to carry the fuel necessary to take them across the ocean?

What evidence has been presented that the demand for ocean trade will at any time in the near future be great enough to supply even a part of our idle ships? Does anyone contend that by any kind of legislation the sum total of the world's shipping can be increased?

The disturbing element in this entire situation is the fact that in our feverish haste during the war emergency a large proportion of the ships were impractically built. Let us not then in our haste to legislate attempt by passing laws to make from bad ships a proud merchant marine or to turn a white elephant into a modern locomotive. In either case the offer of a substantial bonus would but serve to make the effort more ludicrous.

The great item of expense which bears most heavily upon business and cuts deepest into its profits is the overhead. So it is with government. With added legislation creating new activities comes added expense in the form of overhead. The Government produces nothing. It levies taxes and spends. The people pay, suffer, and complain as the cost of government steadily advances due to added governmental activities. When overhead in business reaches the point where it becomes greater than the earnings, thereby closing the door to credit or the ability to borrow, bankruptcy follows. When the overhead burden of taxation laid upon the people assumes the same proportion, government will break down and revolution will follow. The efforts of Congress now in all its legislation should be directed toward reducing the tremendous overhead cost of government, which now runs into the billions and is steadily on the increase.

The question is, Will this bill reduce overhead? Where are the figures that say so and how much?

Nothing more definite than a hope that it will has been suggested. On the contrary, if this bill is passed the already irresponsible, extravagant Shipping Board will be clothed with greater powers, greater authority, greater permission to spend, waste, and give away than it has had heretofore.

Nowhere in the bill is it even suggested that a single $35,000 a year lawyer be dispensed with.

In fact, the bill, if passed, will not only fail to reduce expenses to the taxpayers but will increase them, because it commits the Government to a permanent, unknown, undefined expense for at least 15 years and bargains away income for the next 10 years which would otherwise be paid by the shipping interests into the Public Treasury as income tax, and in addition gives a bonus to shipping corporations estimated to reach the sum total of $500,000,000 in 10 years.

Is it not a fact that the bill contains no provision for lower freight rates or for anything that would benefit the people at large by reducing the cost of commodities carried on these ships?

If the passage of this bill will bring about the results and produce the conditions so fondly hoped for by its proponents, why has it been found necessary in urging its passage to appeal to sentiment and patriotism?

If, then, after due consideration, it becomes apparent that the passage of this bill will not reduce the expenses of government, and that it will not create a market for our ships, what, then, is the real purpose of the bill?

Does it not appear that the only purpose the bill can serve is to put an end forever to troublesome competition in the shipping business caused by the operation of the Government-owned ships engaged therein and the granting to the ship-owning corporations, representing billions of dollars of invested capital, that which was denied to our soldiers and sailors—a bonus?

There are in the United States to-day at least 76 ship-owning corporations which own and operate 1,952 ocean-going ships of 500 tons and over, no one of which owns less than 6 ships and ranging in number from there to 79 owned by the Standard Oil Co. of New York, many of which companies are capitalized for hundreds of millions of dollars and paying enormous dividends, which by the passage of this bill would be granted a bonus insuring them even larger profits, said bonus to be paid from taxes paid into the Treasury by the people of the United States.

The 14 following-named ship-owning corporations, representing assets of $5,046,000,000, are among those who will receive help from the Government in the form of a bonus to be paid to them from taxes levied by Congress and collected from the people:

ASSETS.
Standard Oil Co. of New York.....	$833,000,000
Associated Oil Co. of New York.....	100,000,000
Atlantic, Gulf and West Indies Steamship Lines.....	103,000,000
Atlantic Refinery Co.....	111,000,000
Gulf Refinery Co.....	272,000,000
Pan American Petroleum & Transportation Co.....	111,000,000
American International Corporation.....	69,000,000
Reading Co.....	333,000,000
Southern Pacific Co.....	395,000,000
Standard Oil Co. of California.....	276,000,000
United States Steel Co.....	2,339,000,000
Texas Co.....	335,000,000
United Fruit Co.....	160,000,000
Vacuum Oil Co.....	109,000,000
Total.....	5,046,000,000

Should this bill pass it may be rightly said that we have millions for the ship-owning corporations but not one cent for the soldiers. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the ranking member of the minority on the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY]. [Applause.]

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, if I understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] right, he is what might be termed a "recent convert" to the idea of subsidy. I thought he said he had never voted for a subsidy heretofore, and the basis of his conversion appears to be that we have a great merchant marine now, owned by the people, in charge of the Shipping Board, which board can not find cargoes enough to fill and operate, and that it was costing $50,000,000 to pay upkeep and repair, and operating expenses and overhead charges of the Shipping Board. If I remember aright, he thought about $32,000,000 of this alleged $50,000,000 of annual expenditure by the Shipping Board arose out of the care and repair of existing ships not now being used from lack of cargo, and his statement was that some $12,000,000 of losses occurred, as I understood him, from the actual operation of the ships we are operating.

I wonder if we sold those ships to private owners would those private owners be able to furnish cargoes for a greater percentage of the ships than the Shipping Board can get now. In other words, would not the private owner have to carry the same $32,000,000 losses growing out of care and repair of idle ships, and would they not operate the ships for which cargoes are found at the same loss at which they are now operating them, since our only prospective buyers are the very companies that now operate them for the board? It is a strange thing when a man who has always fought ship subsidies comes before us and says that because we have a great property we must therefore give it away and add a magnificent bounty or bonus to the gift in order to get rid of what we can not use ourselves. That is substantially the gentleman's position. We have the ships. We can not use them; nobody else can use them except at a loss. Why not sink them or burn them?

Mr. YATES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I am going to ask not to be interrupted at this time, because I can not get through in an hour's time with what I have to say. If I have the time later, I will be glad to yield.

Mr. YATES. The gentleman is quoting the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] as making a certain statement.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I try to quote him correctly, and if not I apologize.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas desires not to be interrupted.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I wish to refer to the argument of the gentleman on that side of the House [Mr. Wood of Indiana] who preceded the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. It was a lengthy résumé of facts and figures persuasively put together in favor of this bill of graft, particularly to a certain great industry. You know our line-up is generally largely influenced by our sympathies, and it is a remarkable fact that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] has been quoted all over this country and his speech in Congress has been sent all over the country by the Steel Trust, after the Standard Oil the biggest beneficiary, perhaps, under this bill that there is to be found. What is the Steel Trust? Mr. Wood, whose address was mailed by the corporation all over the United States, calls it "a corporation with a soul." Well, maybe it is, but let me give you some of its soul as I showed it here in a speech on the tariff. The Steel Trust is not only one of the most magnificent beneficiaries under the tariff generally, with its hands out to receive money from the people, but they have always, as proponents urge this bill, urged their high tariff on the ground that they wanted to benefit labor—the American workman. What do I find in reference to the Steel Trust? From the report which Mr. Schwab himself made I quoted, on the 22d day of September, a statement giving the number of employees of that vast corporation, the number of dollars of the pay roll, and the total net earnings of the company. From 1902 to 1915, inclusive, this great industry has claimed protection for the benefit of its labor employed during those years an average approximately of 200,000 laborers, and they paid to labor the total sum for those 15 years of $2,122,001,774 as a total of wages, while the total net earnings of that company amounted to $1,669,148,034. The net earnings of that great corporation in 15 years nearly equaled the gross amount of wages paid to 200,000 employees.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Do they still maintain the 12-hour shift for labor?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. These laborers were many of them foreigners who can not speak our tongue, and they work 12 hours. So in 15 years this great corporation with a soul has taken out in net profits an amount nearly equal to the entire wages paid all their employees, and those employees, many of them, had to live hard in order to live at all on the wages received. It may be a corporation with a soul, but it is the same corporation that in 1908, as testified by Mr. Carnegie, permitted independents to run if they did not get in their way, but which wrung from the masses of the people just such profits as they were enabled to do by virtue of being allowed to fix the price of their products as they saw proper. Let me tell you who this bill is going to favor; the Standard Oil Co., the Steel Trust, the United Fruit Co., and all that kind and class who ship their products in their own vessels and come and use the United States for a hand-out by way of subsidy, and every man on this floor who votes for this bill ought to know and figure how much is given to the United States Steel Trust, the Standard Oil Co., and the United Fruit Co. It has been stated here that the Standard Oil has 1,600,000 tons of tankers. These, I think, are mostly engaged in foreign trade. If they average 10 knots per hour, allowing for two months lost time per year, they would, at the rate of one-half cent per ton per 100 miles, earn $5,760,000 in subsidy. We may allow for one-fourth of their time in port and the Standard Oil Co. would still earn a $4,320,000 subsidy annually. The United Fruit Co. has many passenger ships which draw higher subsidy than the slow tankers of the Standard. What its subsidy would be, I do not know; but perhaps the greater part of the subsidy under this bill will go to the fast passenger ships.

I repeat, that every man on this floor who votes for this bill ought to know and figure out how much he is giving the United States Steel Trust, how much he is giving to the Standard Oil, how much to the American Fruit Co. Let me tell you: Give me the right to fix the price of raw material when I buy it and then manufacture it into the finished product, and then give me the right to fix the price of the finished product, and what have I got? I will illustrate it, not by the Steel Trust, but by the Standard Oil, because it is clearer and plainer. The Standard Oil goes into every oil field in the United States. All over Texas it establishes its pipe lines, and immediately after it has established its pipe lines it puts over its window this little sign:

We take your oil at 50, 60, or 70 cents a barrel, as long only as you are willing to deliver it and we are willing to take it.

As a result of that little contract with the oil producers, both the landowner as to his royalty and the man who operates the well, they buy the oil from the producer at 50 cents or $1 a barrel, or whatever price they fix, because the producer can not help himself. He has nowhere else to sell it. Then they refine the oil. For 20 years they have refined the oil in the district that I live in and turned it into kerosene oil. From a barrel of crude oil they make 22 gallons of kerosene. And then they state that the things made in addition to the kerosene, by-products, you might say, pay all the cost of refining and the marketing and the pipe-line cost.

What does that mean? It means they bought a barrel of oil at a dollar and turned it into kerosene, 22 gallons, worth 10 cents a gallon. That gave them out of every barrel of oil that came out of the ground in the Corsicana field $1.20 profit. It is clear that the Standard Oil made more money in that field than all the owners of the land that it came from and all the wildcat operators in the field combined. They received more net profits than the gross receipts of everybody else in the business put together.

Gentlemen, all over Texas they have done the same thing. A new field is opened up. At Beaumont, Tex., the prices got so low that it sold for less than 5 cents per barrel. I was interested in a company that in 1901 sold 150,000 barrels at from 3 cents to 5 cents a barrel. Yet the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] says that when they send it to Shanghai they sell it for $7 a barrel. They were paying in 1901 50 cents a barrel at Corsicana, and from 3 cents to 5 cents a barrel at Beaumont. Now they pay $1, or maybe $1.25, per barrel at Corsicana.

Gentlemen, if you will let me buy the crude oil at the price I fix and let me sell the finished kerosene at the price I fix, and let me make from the sale of by-products an amount equal to the total expense of operation, I can levy on the people of the United States such a tribute as no Roman provincial governor ever thought of levying in the days of widest Roman supremacy. Yet this is one of the great beneficiaries of this bill.

Ship owning is one of the economies that this company uses. It uses its own vessels to send its cargoes of oil from Mexico and the United States across the western seas to far-away Shanghai and the other ports of the world over there; and we propose by this bill to give to this autocratic concern, which has the power of making levies on the people at its discretion and making such a profit as they see proper—we propose to give them out of the Treasury one-half a cent per ton for every hundred miles they sail. They buy the oil in Mexico; they take it to Canton, China, or to Shanghai. We never get a touch or a smell of it—as pleasant as the smell of oil is—when we pay that subsidy. I do not know how many miles it would be to go around from Tampico, Mexico, through the Panama Canal and on over to Shanghai or Canton. Perhaps it is 12,000 miles. You can figure it out yourself. If we do not belong to the Standard Oil and Steel Trust to-day, this bill will help give them and like concerns a clear title to our bodies and souls.

The rate I have figured on is the cheapest rate that we are to pay. If they can increase the speed of the vessel on a trial trip, they get more. They do not have to make 12 knots on a regular voyage to increase the subsidy; but if they make a trial trip and they go over that, they get an increase of the subsidy.

Gentlemen, I am limited in time, and I find I am incapable of getting an argument together that will read coherently and logically; but I want to take up certain things about this bill. I maintain that the bill will not eliminate the $50,000,000 that it is claimed the Shipping Board is now expending beyond its receipts in administering this property. I think it has been shown by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] that if you pass this bill, for the first year or two the overhead charges of the Shipping Board and the care of the ships will remain practically what they are now, because in the first 12 months you might sell only 20 ships. I think they could sell 13 of them pretty soon. Why do I think so? Because Thomas H. Rossbottom, directly operating these ships for the Shipping Board, has demonstrated that his line to Liverpool and Bremen can be operated and is being operated at a profit, and consequently private shipowners will be glad to buy the ships which constitute that line, which is the only illustration existing in the United States of what can be done under Government operation. Mr. Rossbottom running these ships directly for the Government has made a success, and private capital will want to take them from the board.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I would just like to ask the gentleman whether he thinks that is a fair illustration? Those are the greatest ports in the world.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I think it is more than fair, because those ships go to the ports where they have the most vigorous competition that there is in the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If there is anywhere under the shining sun a route where the American ship operator can not compete, it is between here and Liverpool and Bremen. Yet Mr. Rossbottom appeared before our committee and said, "Gentlemen, I came up here because the Shipping Board asked me to take charge of the American Line, a line that was sold to a private corporation at a high price, and they got tired and came and asked the Shipping Board to take it back, and they took it back, and then they sent for me to run it."

The Shipping Board, in this one instance, found already in Government employ Thomas H. Rossbottom, who for 20 years had run a Government line from Panama to New York and other ventures at a profit, and they put him in charge. It is a great pity they did not employ other good ship operators at a salary to operate other ships of the board instead of turning them all over to great corporations owning their own ships and not in any way interested to make the board's ships a success.

Mr. MADDEN. I hope the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him just a moment.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman did not mean to say that this shipping company that preceded the United States Line asked to have the ships taken back. They were forced back. They took them back under a court order.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I understand so; but how much monkey business there was in that I do not know.

Mr. MADDEN. That is the truth.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I know they were sold shortly after the war, and sold for a good price, and the company that bought them by easily surrendering them to the Shipping Board got out from under and vanished into thin air, and the Government had them on its hands. What did they do? They got Mr. Rossbottom, a practical shipping man, a man of ingenuity and American initiative, a man who had made a success of what it was prophesied would be a failure when he took charge of the Panama Steamship Co., a man who reduced the cost of the Panama Canal by hundreds of thousands if not millions of dollars. He reduced that cost by taking the freight necessary to construct that canal at 50 per cent less than private shipowners were asking to take it. He reduced the cost by carrying their workmen, their laborers, their employees at $25 a head when other ships would have charged $75. With all those savings to the Government and its employees he still maintained a profit after allowing for insurance, repairs, depreciation, and interest on the capital investment of the ships.

For 20 years he has proved a success, and they sent for him. I would not impute sinister motives, but I doubt if the Shipping Board thought when he got in charge of this United States American line that he would make a success of it. They may have expected that he would only add to the proof that the Government can not operate these ships successfully or do anything except fold its hands and look up to some master capitalist, some captain of industry, and say, "Come and deliver us, ride us, tax us." He did not do that. What did the Shipping Board do? They gave him 13 ships. Among them were 4 first-class ships, 2 moderate-class ships, 2 very poor ships, and 5 ships that rank from worthless to worse than worthless, so that, as a whole, his fleet was one that almost precluded successful operation. Nevertheless, he gave us his receipts and expenses, and during the three months before he came and testified before us, he had a net balance from operating of some $600,000 with these ships all on his hands. Some of them ran him in debt, some of them made good profits, some of them made less profits; but he said, "Gentlemen, if you will give me a fleet like the four best ships I have got, I will not take off my hat to anybody. I will run in competition, without a subsidy, with any shipping nation on the face of the earth," and he demonstrated that he could do it. Well, as I said, gentlemen have contended, with a plea they have made here, based on assertions which they hope will be impressive, that the effect of this bill will be to save $50,000,000 annually that the Shipping Board is paying out now for operating losses, and will only convert that $50,000,000 loss into $50,000,000 or $30,000,000 subsidy. But let me tell you what is the fact. The subsidy, the first year, may not be over $30,000,000, because you will not have to pay subsidy to any but privately owned ships and the Shipping Board ships will not draw a subsidy until they are sold; but there are already quite a number of ships owned by private individuals, and all these will begin to draw subsidies at once, without lessening the Shipping Board expenses in any way.

There are enough ships owned by private individuals to-day to cause the Shipping Board, with its extreme sensitiveness to private interests, to take out of the trade many of the Shipping Board ships, lest they might compete and interfere with the profits of some privately owned ships, and the Shipping Board is not doing what it ought to do in order to reach out and try to get trade for its ships, because it is afraid it will interfere with some privately owned ships. They tried to take the Government owned and operated ships of the Panama Steamship Line away from Rossbottom, at the behest of private shipowners, because he was making it pay and extending its operations by able administration. I do not know how many privately owned American ships there are now, but those privately owned ships will begin to draw their subsidy at once. I understand there are about 2,000,000 tons of such ships, and they will draw under this bill at least $15,000,000 per annum. I presume that somebody would take over the Leviathan, upon which we are spending $8,200,000 to put it in good repair. It is generally understood—and that from the intimations of the Shipping Board—that after we get it in good repair the Shipping Board will sell it for about $7,000,000 or $7,500,000. In other words, we are now going to spend as much or more on the Leviathan as we expect or anticipate by any possibility to get out of it when we turn it over to private ownership. Do you know what you will do when you do that? You are going to turn over the Leviathan to a private owner for less than we are now prepared to spend on it and are spending on it to put it in good repair, although she could not be replaced for twice as much. It must be remembered that the subsidy is based on the speed traveled. When the Leviathan is turned over to the private owner it will run over 23 knots an hour, and when it goes on the seas it will earn, on the basic rate of this bill, 2.6 cents, or in round numbers 2½ cents, per ton per hundred miles. Now figure that up.

My colleague, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] said the vessel was 54,000 tons. I have it as 55,000 tons; but we will take it at 54,000 tons. Now, you figure its mileage and let it run 23 knots per hour 10 months in the year, and you figure the subsidy at 2½ cents per ton per hundred miles. It will naturally travel in 10 months over 144,000 knots. It will travel 480 knots, earning 12 cents per ton, or $6,480 for the whole ship per day, and this multiplied by 300 will give $1,944,000 a year, which you will pay on that ship alone to the party to whom you have given it. Oh, you did not simply give it. They would not take it, they said, and consequently the Shipping Board have decided to spend $8,200,000 and give it to somebody for $7,500,000. And that is to help the farmer, who never will see even the outside of the Leviathan and will never be benefited a dollar. Surely the farmer will be benefited, because he will have to dig for the money, and the "Lord loveth whom he chasteneth." You propose to give this money to the purchaser of the Leviathan notwithstanding the United States Treasury, according to Mr. Mellon, faces a deficit of between a half billion and a billion dollars for the coming year, and notwithstanding you have no money to pay the soldier bonus.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman will admit that the Government was ready to sell that ship for $4,000,000, in its then condition, and an injunction was issued against the sale.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I am glad to say that I was on the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and we tried to help the then chairman of the Shipping Board, John B. Payne. We tried to help him to sell it, but we had one of the big fish in the country, William R. Hearst, the editor of great papers in this country, who came down here and enjoined the sale. He prevented the sale of that ship for $4,000,000, as it then stood net to the Government. He attacked Chairman Payne viciously, and said he was sacrificing our ships for too little. Now, with all his great papers he is backing this bill to give away the Leviathan and sell all our ships for a song. Mr. Hearst must have seen a great light. Maybe so the people will see a great light before this bill is passed. Surely, sir, we could have gotten $4,000,000 net for the ship two and a half years ago.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I will.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Was there a law passed to prevent ships being sold to foreign countries?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. It was then on the statute book.

Mr. MADDEN. They were authorized to sell ships to Americans, and had some ships offered for sale, but there was a resolution passed by the Senate suggesting that they withdraw it.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes; Congress butted in and, as usual, muddled the waters. We had a chance to get $4,000,000 out of the coffers of some great company, and then it was stopped by William R. Hearst and Congress, and since then Members of Congress have never ceased to criticize the old board for not selling ships.

Gentlemen, I have shown you the subsidy that will be paid on one ship. The Shipping Board will make a 10-year subsidy contract with the purchaser of the Leviathan, under which the Government will pay back all the purchase money and more.

Now, these gentlemen say that the Government must further help the farmers by loaning ship companies the money to build two bigger ships than the Leviathan, at 2 per cent interest. So you will have thirty million to build those two vessels loaned by the Government at 2 per cent interest added to the subsidy of 2½ cents per ton per 100 knots, and then the two new ships would cost in subsidy about three millions per year. In 10 years' time the Government will pay on the Leviathan and these two new ships more than enough to wipe out their cost to the owners, and be ready to make another 10-year contract. Well, who does it go to? It is not necessary to say.

Let me read a little article that, I think, presents a fair question:

Those who oppose the subsidy policy for developing an American merchant marine also oppose Government ownership and operation of ships in peace time, yet say they want our flag on the seas.

That is absolutely true, as to permanent Government ownership and operation. The article continues:

By what plan can our flag be restored to the seas if Uncle Sam is not to do the job himself or encourage private enterprise to do it?

Well, by what plan can we raise cotton if Uncle Sam, when cotton is selling at a loss, refuses to do the job and refuses to pay bounties to those who do it? Every farmer in the United States has sustained a loss, if he is a big farmer, in the last two years. Did we hear the Government proposing to hand out anything to keep him in business? Not at all. The article continues:

We have waited long for private enterprises to accomplish the purpose unaided, and we have waited in vain.

That is absolutely true; and I want to tell you why we have waited in vain. We have not waited in vain for private enterprise to have a merchant marine engaged in the coastwise trade, have we? We have the biggest merchant marine of any country except Great Britain to-day. Up to the war we had a great merchant marine, but it was all engaged in the coastwise trade. To hear some of the advocates of this bill you would think that we had no ships prior to 1914. We had many magnificent ships prior to 1914, ships capable of sailing all the seas, capable of carrying any amount of cargo, but they were engaged in the coastwise trade. We did not have them sailing under our flag in the foreign trade, but we had them under our flag in the coastwise trade. We had under our flag six or eight million tons of shipping engaged in the coastwise trade, and we had under foreign flags owned by American citizens something like a million tons engaged in the overseas trade. Why is it that American private capital prior to 1914 put what ships it owned under some foreign flag and declined to build up our foreign-going merchant marine under our flag? That is the question, is it not? If you know the cause that prevented Americans before 1914 from engaging in overseas trade in ships under the American flag and compelled them if they engaged in such trade at all to do so in ships under foreign flags, ought you not to try to remove the cause? I can surely and clearly show you what that cause was.

Judge DAVIS yesterday went over the history of our merchant marine, and he showed that we had the greatest merchant marine up to 1860 in the world. Why, let me tell you. Up to 1860 in our shipyards on the coast of New England, at Baltimore, and other places in the United States we built the cheapest ships that were built in the world, character and quality considered.

That sounds strange, does it not? But it is true. They built the best ships and you could not get as good ships for the same money built anywhere else. We paid bigger wages in the shipyards than Great Britain did, and we built a better ship for the same money. We paid better wages to the seamen on the ships, but we carried the cheapest freight. The fact was that up to 1860 the United States seagoer carried the cheapest unit of freight in the world. Why? Because he could sail faster—he could make two trips in a clipper-built ship from Baltimore to Liverpool while the English ship was making one and a half trips. In other words, he could make four trips to the English ship three. What else? By superior ships, by better running, having abler seamen, our owners could get better rates of insurance. We could outinsure them, we could outsail them, we took less time to turn around in the ports, and we could get cargoes when they could not. As was said the other day, our ships in a foreign port could get a cargo at a higher price than other ships, because the owner or shipper of the cargo knew that it would go faster and safer, and knew it was a better venture even at a higher rate. What else? Under these conditions the American commerce spread in proportion to our production all over the world.

Under these conditions the American ship sailed the seas everywhere and paid higher wages to the crew. And without any Government aid to our ships or any Government burdens or restrictions or discriminations against foreign ships coming to our ports, we carried from 68 per cent to 90 per cent of all our outgoing and incoming commerce, and carried millions of dollars' worth of commerce between foreign ports; that is, the international commerce of foreign countries. But our shipbuilders hustled; they were building ships for the world. Our seamen hustled; they were beating the seamen of the world. Our ship captains hustled; they were better paid than any other captains; they earned the money; and with the better crews they made better time, had fewer repair bills, and secured better cargoes. Our ship companies were backed by the bankers and merchants at home, and they hustled. They had their agents and business scouts and connections in all countries, and generally the shipowner himself was like Robert Dollar tells you in an article published recently, a wide-awake, hustling business getter. They did not build up their business connections and success overnight, but through patient, persistent effort.

When the honest student of merchant-marine problems grasps the lessons of merchant-marine history he will know that it is not cheap labor or subsidy or discriminations that bring success, but business enterprise and administrative ability, that adopts the best ship equipments and improvements and time and labor saving devices, and secures the best business connections at home and abroad, and the best and fullest cargoes to and from every port the ship enters. But initially you must give to American capital the privilege of putting the cheapest ship he can get in the world under our flag, or he will buy the cheapest ship he can get, and put it under some other flag, which is what was happening all during the years from 1865 to 1914.

But to go back: From 1830 to about 1855 or 1860, when we were building better ships for the money than England, what happened?

What happened then? When we began to build ships cheaper than England could, then England, with the wisdom that has characterized her conduct of shipping operations always, said that if America could build a better or cheaper ship than England could, she would let her merchants go to America and buy the ship and put it under her flag and sail that ship in competition with ours, lest British capital should invest in ships under the American flag. So England repealed her old law that prohibited any but British-built ships from flying the British flag. She made her British builders compete with the American. But what happened later? Along in 1854 England had been progressing in iron and steel manufactures because of the proximity and the immense quantity of coal and iron ore there. She was producing iron and steel cheaper than we, and she began to build ships of iron and to put steam motive power in them and so to build superior ships. Some of our New Englanders, wedded to the past, said that it was not reasonable to suppose you could make iron float and do the service of a wooden ship on the seas as cheaply as you could build and sail wooden ships, and they clung to their old sailing vessels and their old wooden ships, which they would have had to junk if they got up to date and bought the British ships, and from 1854 to 1860 the British shipping was gaining on us because they had a newer and a better type of ship for the money. What did we do? Did we do as Great Britain did? Did we say to our merchants who wanted to engage in the overseas trade: "Our builders have gotten behind; you go and buy your ship in Great Britain and put it under our flag so you can compete with Great Britain."

Oh, no. Of course, those were troubled times; the war was coming on, and we can not greatly blame the statesmen of that day for not resorting to the wiser course. They had too many other troubles. The war came on in 1860, when we were in that condition; and yet, notwithstanding that fact, when the war came on we were carrying, mostly in the antiquated sailing ships of ours, 68 per cent of all of our commerce, incoming and outgoing. After 1860 the Confederate cruisers became a menace to the merchant shipping of the North. Some of them were sunk—I do not know how many—but 800,000 tons of New England shipping were sold abroad, and who bought that shipping? Why, Great Britain, in utter disregard of any protest that may have been made by British shipbuilders, and she put her flag on those ships and sailed them in all her trades. Under the same circumstances, I regret to say, that we would have allowed—in fact, we did allow—ourselves to be throttled by the shipbuilders of the United States. Great Britain merely said to her shipbuilders, "We are going to buy these ships, and you will build ships for us when you can or when we need them if you can build them better or cheaper than we can get them elsewhere."

We have been the victims of our foolish purpose to build up and maintain a shipbuilding monopoly in this country at the expense of every other interest and industry in the United States. We coddled and hothoused our shipbuilders until they became, in their own eyes at least, helpless and hopeless incompetents, and they ceased to try to build a ship except for the protected coastwise trade. Uncle Joe, you remember the days when our ships were the best ships on the ocean. I was born about the time the English began to creep up with their iron ships, and we clung to our old law that forbids buying any ships built anywhere but in the United States.

In the sixties we added to our shipbuilders' difficulties by placing a very high tariff on shipbuilding material. We did this to coddle the steel industry. There should never have been a day when there was one cent of duty on material imported into the United States with which to build ships. Yet, after 1860, we laid a duty of 50 per cent on shipbuilding material, and in 1874 the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries appointed a committee of investigators to go out and find out what was the matter with our overseas merchant marine. They came back and said that because we laid a heavy tariff on shipbuilding material we thereby prevented our shipbuilders from competing in price, and that we ought to take off the tax on shipbuilding material. However, they were so wedded to the iron and steel interests that instead of taking off the duty frankly and freely and fully, they passed a law taking off the tax on shipbuilding material but providing that a ship built with any imported material should never touch our coastwise trade, and if it did ever engage in our coastwise trade it would have to go back and pay the duty. The result of that limitation was that but one ship was built with foreign material, and the owners of it were in such constant fear all of the time that the vessel would touch and carry a cargo in the coastwise trade and they were so hampered by the prohibition against carrying any coastwise cargo that they never repeated the experiment and built another ship with foreign material.

When the Democrats came into power in 1914 we absolutely took off all duty on shipbuilding material so that an American shipbuilder could get his steel and iron—if he saw proper—in Great Britain or in Germany or in any other place and pay no duty upon it. That was the hardest fight in which I ever engaged since I have been in Congress. Why? The Steel Trust said that if we put shipbuilding material on the free list we would destroy the iron and steel industry of the United States in shipbuilding material. But what happened? We put it on the free list and the shipbuilders of the United States did not have to go anywhere except to our own manufacturers to get all the steel and iron they wanted at the same price they could get it in England.

Our iron and steel manufacturers did compete from that time on with the manufacturers of steel and iron in Great Britain. Not only so, but they were competing before that time, only they would not sell to our shipbuilders at foreign prices until they were forced to. They were selling ship plate cheaper in England than they were selling it here, and Mr. Schwab before one of the congressional committees testified that they could produce a ton of steel in the United States for $12 and deliver it over there, while England could not produce it at home for that price, much less send it here at that price—and, mark you, our steel industry is supposed to pay American wages, as much as our shipbuilders.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. EDMONDS. What would have happened in 1917 if we had not had the shipyards?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I will tell the gentleman. In my judgment, had we pursued the policy I have been advocating, first, of giving the shipbuilder untaxed shipbuilding material and then of allowing the American ship buyer to buy where he could find the cheapest ship, the American shipyards in 1914 would have been bigger and stronger than they were and would have for many years been building the far greater part of the ships in our overseas and coastwise trade and at the same time been running a neck and neck race with England in building ships for all the world.

John Roach, a great shipbuilder, appeared before the Merchant Marine Committee in the eighties and testified that if you would give him free iron and steel he could build ships in competition with any country. Other shipbuilders then and since that time have given the same testimony, and their ability to compete was demonstrated even under the tariff on steel when under competitive building American shipyards secured the contract to build a battleship or battleships for the Argentine Republic a few years ago. Moreover, the commerce on the Great Lakes has been competitive between Canada and the United States, and in Lake ships the United States shipbuilders have had to compete with foreign shipbuilders, and they—that is, the United States shipbuilders—have put it all over the shipbuilders of other countries in the building of the Lake type of vessel.

Mr. Chairman, not only would our shipyards have been bigger and stronger in 1914 than they were, if my policy had been in force for 50 years but every ship owned by American capital in the foreign trade would have been under the American flag and not subject to British requisition, and, in my judgment, instead of the few hundred thousand tons we had in the foreign trade under our flag and the half million American-owned tons in the foreign trade under foreign flags we would have had at the breaking out of the Great War some four or five million tons of shipping in the foreign trade under the American flag.

When was it that J. P. Morgan started to organize a great shipping combine? Some 10 years ago, was it not? He would have organized it, too, if he had not been prevented by death or Government interference. The syndicate would have been American owned or controlled, but the ships would have been under foreign flags unless our shipbuilders had competed with foreign builders, because Mr. Morgan would not have paid higher prices for his ships in order to place them under the American flag. I am persuaded, however, that if the American shipbuilder had been confronted with the question of whether he would compete or lose all chance of building any of those ships he would have competed.

I was about to touch upon this very subject when the gentleman from Pennsylvania asked his question. I ask a similar question. What would have happened in 1914 if we had not had the steel plants? They said if we put steel on the free list they would go out of business. The shipbuilders now say that if we put ships on the free list they will go out of business. The same thing will happen in the shipping industry as has happened in the steel industry. They never lost the sale of a ton of steel because of the removal of the tariff on ship material, and when you put ships on the free list our American yards will build for our American owners and for shipowners and operators all over the world. Let me get that plain. The Steel Trust said that if we put shipbuilding material on the free list they could not compete with the British producer of iron and steel and that we would destroy the industry here. We put it on the free list and it did not destroy the industry. They continued to manufacture and they undersold the British. They then manufactured not only for our shipbuilders but for the British shipbuilders and for the shipbuilders of Europe, of France, of Italy, of everywhere.

You let the American shipbuilder alone, let him have free shipbuilding material, and then tell him to go out with his infant industry and fight for his success and his prosperity. Mr. Chairman, I repeat it, man after man from the shipyards and from the shipbuilding companies of the United States came before our committee and said that if we would give them as cheap material as other countries had—and I can give you the names of those companies—as cheap material as they have in England, and then give them standardized ships to build—that is, give them ships in quantity—they could build as cheap a ship as they could on the Clyde. You can find that scattered all throughout the hearings, and I know they can do it.

We have got cheaper coal and more abundant in the hills of Virginia and the other mining sections of the country. What else? We have got timber right here in our country, while England must import it. What else? We have got on hand a supply of 1,500 ships, nearly 10,000,000 tons of ships good to be used. If the shipbuilders of the United States now do not go out and build ships in competition with the builders in any other part of the world and sell their ships abroad they will have to go out of business for 10 years. The point I am making is that the shipbuilders of the United States, purblind as all interested parties always are, ought to be able to see that unless they can build in competition with the world they must go out of business.

Let me revert to the reason why our flag left the foreign trade. Mark it. Our foreign shipping flourished when we had the cheapest-built ships and furnished ships for the transportation of the world. After 1860 and after the destruction and sale of our shipping from 1861 to 1865 we were still carrying about 32 to 38 per cent of our ingoing and outgoing commerce. What carried that? We carried it in the old ships that the New England shipowner still had left over that had neither been sold or sunk, and that amount of tonnage was still engaged in the foreign trade. They were mostly sailing ships, mostly small ships, all old ships. What happened then? We had then a duty on steel material. Then we had a law that no ships not built in the United States should fly the American flag. Consequently when one of those old ships sunk—when a storm came and the ship of 2,500 or 5,000 tons went down—and the owner looked around and wanted to replace it, he found that if he bought an American ship it would cost him 50 per cent more than he could buy the same ship for in Great Britain. Why? Because the Government of the United States said, "You can not fly my flag on a ship unless it was built here." And the shipbuilder said, "Because my ship can engage in the coastwise trade and the British ship can not, you have got to pay more for my ship." Well, what do you do? You make up your mind whether you want to go into the coastwise or the foreign trade, and if you want to stay in the foreign trade you perhaps enlarge the size of the ship and buy a 10,000-ton ship, foreign built, and put it under a foreign flag.

In 1910 a 10,000-ton ship built here cost about a million dollars, and you could go over to the Clyde and buy that ship for $600,000 and put it in trade between New York and Liverpool. What would you have done as a business man? You would have bought the British ship and put the British flag on it. Consequently when one of the American ships went down it was not replaced. Gentlemen, from 1865 to 1914 the condition was this: Every time a ship went down on account of weather at sea, every time one of those old American ships which were carrying 32 per cent of our commerce at the close of the war was lost the owner, if he replaced it at all, went over to the Clyde and bought a ship there and it went under the British flag. Now, gentlemen, do you want any better demonstration of why it was that one by one as the autumn leaves fall and the snow begins to gather that one by one American ships sunk beneath the waves and never came back, or if replaced went under the British flag? I know I am giving you the right solution of why our flag disappeared from the sea.

I know it was because of the higher cost of the American ship, and that higher cost was because of the duty on shipbuilding material and the monopoly given to American-built ships in the coastwise trade. Suppose you are in New York and you want to buy a ship to use in trade to Liverpool and you find two ships just alike, sister ships, in the harbor, both for sale. One of them you can sail both in the coastwise trade and the overseas trade; the other you can sail only in the overseas trade. Will not that privilege alone make one bring a premium on the market? And just because it brings that premium it can not be used in the overseas trade where the cheaper ship can be used. The American-built ship brings a premium because the owner in the case of a sorry season or small cargo for Europe can go from New York to Savannah and carry a cargo to Savannah, and from Savannah to Pensacola and carry a cargo there, and from Pensacola to Galveston and carry a cargo, so he can carry a cargo to those various points and then at Galveston load cotton or grain, whereas if his ship was a foreign-built ship he has to make an empty voyage or in ballast to Galveston.

Let me try to make plain the dilemma our laws have left our shipowners in. Any American citizen wishing to go into ship operations has been compelled to choose between two evils. First, buy a cheaper foreign-built ship and put it under a foreign flag. In that case he can not engage in our coastwise trade at all. When he brings a European cargo to New York and has to go to New Orleans for a return cargo, he is not allowed to carry any goods from New York to New Orleans, but must go empty or in ballast, at great cost, or if business should be slack between America and Europe our rich coastwise trade is closed to him; his ship must find business somewhere else or lie idle. Second, buy the far higher-priced American-built ship and put it under our flag. In that case he may participate in our coastwise trade. He may carry goods or passengers from all our American ports to all our other American ports, and in this trade he is protected by absolute prohibition against competition of any foreign ship. But he is practically barred from the European or foreign trade, because his ship cost is so much greater than the cost of the ship of his competitor. The result has been that the American ship operator has retired from the foreign trade almost entirely, or if he has engaged in it at all he has done so by buying the cheaper foreign-built ship and sailing it under some foreign flag. He has in fact confined himself in the main to our coastwise trade. For that reason when the Great War came we had practically no ships in foreign trade under our own flag. While our citizens owned considerable tonnage in the foreign trade under foreign flags, the amount of such tonnage so owned is hard to get at, and it was all subject to requisition by foreign governments.

Why, James J. Hill, when he was asked why the American merchant marine disappeared from the seas in the foreign trade, said it was clearly because it cost the American merchantman 50 per cent more to buy a ship and put it under the American flag than to buy the same kind of ship and put it under a foreign flag. It is that dilemma I wish to solve by giving our ship operators the same right that the nationals of every other country in the world have; the right to buy a ship where he can buy it cheapest, and sail it either in our coastwise or overseas trade.

Gentlemen, that is what I want to urge, because it is the only way we ever can or will have a great overseas merchant marine. I know I am up against the pet doctrine of the Republican Party, the protection absolutely of the shipbuilders of the United States against any foreign competition, not by a tariff but by the absolute exclusion of foreign-built ships from our flag, and the question that was asked me just now, "What would you have done if we had not had any shipyards?" means to assert that we could never build ships in competition with the world. I deny this and I assert that without this law of exclusion we would have had bigger and better shipyards. We would have had the shipyards just as we have got the steel industry to-day. Do you tell me that America, with cheaper coal, with cheaper iron, with cheaper steel, simply because it pays a little higher wages—although the wages are not so much different—can not build a ship? "Oh," they say, "we are talking about a subsidy now." It used to be that the only sound argument for a subsidy was the greater initial cost of our ships, but to-day, even without any change in the law, we have got 700 first-class ships, according to the testimony of the chairman of the Shipping Board, ready to be sold to the American ship operator cheaper than any other ships in the world can be bought, so that the ship owner to-day does not have to pay a dollar more for an American ship than if he bought it abroad. We are offering those ships, and the bill of 1920 authorized and directed the Shipping Board then to sell the ships at world prices for ships. Why, then, should they have a greater initial cost? Why should they be given a subsidy?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Assuredly.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is assuming that there is no handicap against the American shipowner. If that is so, why does it happen that, with all the capital and all the enterprise of America, we have not gone into the shipping business?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. If the gentleman had been here a moment ago he would know. I have said that the gentleman as a sensible man would not buy a ship and pay a million dollars for it for the privilege of putting it under our flag when he could buy the same ship for $600,000 and put it under the British flag. If the gentleman can not see that, he is hopelessly blind. But now American ships are offered by the Shipping Board for less than world market price, and have been offered at world market price ever since 1919.

Mr. MONDELL. If so, why has not American capital embarked in the trade, if there is no handicap against them?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The answer is that American capital did embark in the trade, or tried to. In 1920 the best shipping man in the United States, Mr. P. A. S. Franklin, the head of the International Mercantile Marine Co., wrote to the Shipping Board and said: "I want to buy a good many of your vessels. I want to put them in the lines between New York and Liverpool and between New York and Bremen." He said, "I have got my connections in the interior of Germany, and I have got my connections all over Europe, the port and the inland connections, and I can run those ships in competition with anybody in the world. I want them at the market price." That was in 1920. Later in the same year he wrote to the Shipping Board and said, "As soon as you are able, give us the price." That was at the time we had the trouble with Hearst about the sale of the Leviathan and other ships. "If you can not sell them I want to charter them," he said. "Give me a bareboat charter," he said, "to run them to those ports, and I will guarantee that I will keep up the lines."

There is the answer to the gentleman's question. Franklin knew what he could do, and he was not alone in wishing to buy these ships and run them without any subsidy. But what happened then? The gentleman knows we had a Republican Congress criticizing the Shipping Board for everything it did or did not do. Congress spent weeks and months wrangling over a policy for the Shipping Board as to the sale of these ships. The great depression came in shipping, as in everything else. Investors quit buying anything. And then they began to talk subsidy, and the American Shipowners' Association met. They said:

We can put one over now. We are now able to get Congress, in the presence of the world-wide shipping losses and this vast number of ships they must carry till times get better—this white elephant that they have on their hands—to give us the ships and a subsidy, too.

And so they concoct this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman was undertaking to give facts a while ago. Now he is dealing in fancy. As to the facts, if Mr. Franklin and others can run American ships, why do they not buy them and run them?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I have just answered that question.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; but the gentleman answered it by getting into the realm of fancy.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Let the gentleman keep himself in patience for a moment. I have given the facts on which I am basing my reasoning. Those are the facts. Mr. Franklin did offer to do it, and he did it more than once. He persistently asked the Shipping Board to name him a price, and others also were seeking to buy the ships. John Barton Payne testified that they could sell a great many of these ships, but he was enjoined, and finally the subsidy proposals of the present Shipping Board put an end to any possibility of sale until prospective buyers have exhausted their efforts to drive Congress into giving them a subsidy. The constant desire of the shipowner is to get something for nothing, seeking to acquire additional profit, and he has been right here periodically. The strongest men in Congress—Republicans and Democrats—have turned them down, but every once in a while we find a stalwart opponent falling into their meshes and then coming out on the other side, like my friend from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who is now for this subsidy, and he is for it now in the presence of a condition that is more favorable to American shipowners than ever before, and of a condition of the Treasury that is less favorable to granting this graft than ever before.

Gentlemen, if you represented a great corporation, a great association of corporations, as Winthrop L. Marvin does, and you thought there was a chance of getting for your great corporations such bounties and bonuses as the world never dreamed of before, would you spoil all that by saying, "We can build a merchant marine without any subsidy; we can run ships without Government bounties?" Not at all. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] And so, when the Ship Owners' Association got together under this administration, with the present Shipping Board chairman formulating and promulgating and doing all kinds of "ating" that you can think of, they said they could frame a bill; and I do not believe there is a paragraph in this bill that was not framed by the Steamship Owners' Association and sponsored by them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MONDELL. I take it that the gentleman's position is that America has not gone into the shipping business in the last 50 years because those who might go into the business are all hoping for a subsidy?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. No; I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. MONDELL. That is what I understood the gentleman to say.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I said since 1920; since Mr. Lasker was made chairman of the Shipping Board they had bought no ships; first, because of injunctions, and later because with Lasker promising them a subsidy—

Mr. MONDELL. What was the trouble prior to that time?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Prior to 1920 we had sold a goodly number of ships to buyers who were not expecting a subsidy. In 1920 the Republicans passed a bill authorizing the appointment of a new Shipping Board. The term of part, at least, of the old board expired and the remaining members were acting by a kind of sufferance, and President Wilson could not appoint one that had any chance of being confirmed by the Senate, and everyone knows, and the gentleman knows, that all things were in a state of confusion, and it was not known what could be done; and then the President put Mr. Lasker in charge.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman will allow me—

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman made the statement that he did not believe there was a paragraph in this bill that was not written or inspired by the American Ship Owners' Association. You do not want to make that statement, do you?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Let me say right here that Winthrop L. Marvin was introduced before our committee, and an article was read, written by him, in which he claimed most of the credit of having written the bill, and he boasted of his handiwork.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Was there not a committee of shipbuilders and ship operators that went before the Shipping Board—I do not know whether it came before your committee or not—and formulated a specific series of demands? And are they not practically all incorporated in the bill?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The gentleman is right, and Winthrop L. Marvin's testimony shows that this bill was gotten up for and by the United States Ship Owners' Association, of which he was the paid representative, with the assistance, I do not doubt, of able men like my friend from Pennsylvania. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. EDMONDS. No steamship owners' association assisted me in framing the bill.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. It is recorded in the Journal of Commerce, and you will find it in the Library, that this shipowners' association did meet with the gentleman from Pennsylvania. His name is specifically mentioned, as well as that of the chairman of the other committee, and they discussed these demands with him.

Mr. EDMONDS. That is true.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The real fact is that this is the shipowners' bill.

Mr. EDMONDS. I want to say to the gentleman right now that the 10 per cent limitation was put in by myself. It was never suggested by the shipowners.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. What limitation?

Mr. EDMONDS. The 10 per cent limitation on profits.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That was very kind of you.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Oh, I do not doubt there is some little trimming here and there, some little something that you did not get from them; but ask Winthrop L. Marvin, and he will say that substantially all the demands of the shipowners' association are in this bill, and that 10 per cent limitation you speak of is one I would be ashamed to father. Why, it requires the Government to subsidize ships up to a 10 per cent net profit, and the Esch railroad bill had been damned by the people because it directs the Interstate Commerce Commission to let the railroads earn a net 6 per cent profit.

Mr. EDMONDS. There are 15 or 20 sections of this bill written by the subcommittee that aided me in drafting the bill—the subcommittee of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. We talk to those favoring a measure and get their views and demands, and become so permeated with their views and desires that they might just as well be handling the pen as you or me. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield me some more time?

Mr. BANKHEAD. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Oh, give me an hour for the present, and I will get through as briefly as I can.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman from Texas is the ranking minority member of the committee, and he is entitled to that time. I yield to the gentleman one hour.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman's time will be extended for one hour, or such part of it as he may wish to use. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I have shown, gentlemen, how it was that from 1865 to 1914 every ship that bore our flag in the overseas trade, if it sunk was replaced by one bearing another flag, and how under those circumstances our flag gradually disappeared from the ocean until in 1914 all the ships we had were a few old sailing craft, 30, 40, or 50 years old, and two or three big liners that bore a subsidy paid from the Treasury of the United States; that was all.

Mr. MONDELL. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I have got only an hour and want to get through, but ask your question as quickly as possible.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman just stated that in 1914 we had practically no merchant marine except such as was subsidized. Now, if that is true, as the gentleman insists, that Americans can run a merchant marine as cheaply as foreigners can, why did we not have a merchant marine at that time, with all the capital and all the seamen in America?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I have answered this question more than once, but the gentleman asks it again and I will try to enlighten even him. The reason was because if you are a business man and you go to New York and you find two ships there, and you desire to engage in the overseas trade, and one of those ships is British and one of them is American, and you find you can buy the British ship for $600,000 and that the American ship will cost you $1,000,000, if you have any sense at all you will buy the British ship and fly the British flag because you are not permitted to fly the American flag. Consequently no man who wanted to engage in the overseas trade before 1914 ever bought an American ship.

Mr. MONDELL. Then except under extraordinary conditions there is a handicap, which without Government subsidy can not be overcome by the man who wants to sail ships under the American flag.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. There was a handicap that did exist when American ships cost 50 per cent more than British ships, and an American citizen was not allowed to put the American flag over any but an American-built ship.

Mr. MONDELL. And the gentleman—

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Wait now. Hold on.

Mr. MONDELL. And the gentleman was just as much opposed to a subsidy then as he is now—just as much against it then as he is now.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Just wait a minute. Will the gentleman just hold himself until I can answer. There was that handicap, and no man denies it, but the answer was then to remove the handicap and let your American buy a British ship. The answer to-day is that there is no handicap, because American ships are freely offered to American citizens at the lowest price ever known anywhere in the world.

Mr. MONDELL. In other words, let the foreigner do our work.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. That is the gentleman's idea, that no American can compete with a foreigner in building a ship, and that if you give the American the cheapest ship in the world he still can not compete with the foreigner. I deny it.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman himself just said that.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I said no such thing. Do not interrupt. Let me make my own speech. You said I favored letting the foreigner do our work. I deny it. You said we could not compete. I deny it. After we made the hardest fight in the world to get free shipbuilding material, men like the gentleman from Wyoming then said we wanted England to make our ship iron and steel; we denied it. We put it on the free list, and then the American steel and iron industry competed with the foreign steel and iron industry and continued to produce all our ship iron and steel, and if you will put ships on the free list the American shipbuilder can and will compete and will build ships for Americans and for foreigners also. That is all there is to it.

Mr. MONDELL. That is, if you let the foreigner build our ships, then the American will build them.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I did not say that. We said, "When you put iron shipbuilding material on the free list the foreigner will not furnish it, but the American steel and iron industry will furnish it," and we proved to be right. After we put iron and steel on the free list the American manufacturers of iron and steel sold to our shipbuilder the material cheaper than he could get it on the Clyde; and our steel plants furnished not only material for our shipbuilding but they began to sell it to shipbuilders all over the world. I trust the American people are not too dense to understand that.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield for me to say a word?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The gentleman wishes to ask a question?

Mr. EDMONDS. No.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Then I can not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield for me to ask a question in relation to a question propounded by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I understood the gentleman to say that along in 1920 Mr. Franklin, who, as I understand, operates ships under the American flag, wished to buy some of these ships owned by the Government, and he made some definite proposal in that regard. Since this agitation for a ship subsidy has arisen, has Mr. Franklin followed up his desire to acquire the ships, or is he waiting for the enactment of this bill?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I have not heard from Mr. Franklin, and I presume he is waiting; I presume he is like all the rest of us—he is for his own interest. If he can get a bonus of a million dollars for running a great passenger ship he will be glad to get it.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I notice that the J. P. Morgan firm is interested in the White Star Line and some others—will these ships come under this proposition?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Every ship that flies the American flag, with the full right to fly it, will come under this bill, if I understand it right, and I think I do. The bill says, "The board is authorized to enter into a contract with any citizen of the United States who is owner of a vessel for the payment," and so forth.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him there? The ships flying the American flag will have to be owned by a line before they can get a subsidy.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. That is a qualification that I had not seen, not even in any paper. If that is so, it only adds to the viciousness of the bill. If an independent owner can not get a subsidy, and only the great lines can get it, you are building up worse than ever.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman knows that that is not correct.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I do not think it is correct, but the gentleman just said it was.

Mr. EDMONDS. What I mean is, and what the gentleman must know is, that a man owning 50 per cent of foreign ships and 50 per cent of American ships can not get the subsidy.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Oh, that is an attempt to confine the ownership to our country. Am I right that every ship that flies the American flag can get a subsidy unless the owner is interested in a foreign line?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I do not find any fault with that restriction, except that I think it can be easily evaded and will be evaded by every big ship-owning interest. They will organize one corporation to operate the foreign-built ships and a different corporation, which will be "a citizen," to operate the American ships and draw the subsidy.

Now, I want to tell you another thing: Mr. Franklin in 1920 was anxious to buy these ships, and not only he but others were anxious, and the chairman of the Shipping Board thought he might sell several hundred thousand tons of ships, but our policy was in the balance. Congress was debating it, but the chairman of the board, I think, did all he could, hampered as he was. He offered some and did sell quite a few ships, perhaps all he could sell, but he was rightly directed to sell only at the market price; and after the Hearst injunction he sold no more. What else? Not only Mr. Franklin seemed to have strong faith in the ability of American ships to run without Government aid, but another man, who appeared as a witness before the committee, Thomas H. Rossbottom—and I have said something about him before—took 13 ships, more than half of which were not first class, and with those ships he did engage in competition and he did sail them and is sailing them now under the American flag at a profit. One of the ships made $625,000 in three months' time, clear profit. And, further, he said that if you would give him a fleet of ships like that he would enter into competition with the strongest lines in the world and would come out with a profit. His expression was that if we would give him a fleet of first-class ships he would not take off his hat to anybody.

Now, gentlemen, what I wanted to do was to ask this question: What would I do, what would you do, if you had a great property, with unlimited capacity and capital to hold and manage it? What would you do with these ships if they were yours and you were not hard pressed for money so that you had to sell them, but could hold them as well as could anybody else? Would you give them away and then give somebody to whom you gave them a bounty to take them? No. You would say "I am going to keep these ships for the present and either operate them myself or sell them to somebody who will give me what they are worth and operate them; I have operated some of these ships without a loss, and some I must maintain at a loss, anyhow, because at the present there is no cargo to fill them, either for me or anybody else."

Do you believe that by throwing them all on the market and selling them that you are going to increase cargoes? The simple truth is that we might possibly sell the 400 ships now in operation and the balance of the 1,500 will remain unsold and idle, and you have got to expend the money required to take care of them. You will sell those that are in commission, now being operated, and you will keep the others and have to care for them. I say that the bill presents this phase, that private owners might possibly come in and buy the ships already operating on definite lines with a profit, or with such income, as with the subsidy added, would make it a profit. Nobody is going to buy the useless ships now, but as times get better ship companies would begin to come in and buy those which you had been keeping all the time, and as times got even better they would come in and buy some more. The result of this bill will be that in the immediate future you would begin to pay the subsidy to all the ships now privately owned, and you would begin paying subsidy on each of the present Government-owned ships, as the board gave it away or sold it for a song. You would not decrease the actual loss that you are paying for overhead, for repairs, and for care of the idle ships. You would have that to pay still.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. What proportion of the $50,000,000 a year probable loss on these ships now is occasioned by taking care of the 1,500 ships that we are not operating?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Apparently all of it is occasioned by that, and by the overhead charges of the Shipping Board, since, I understand, there is very little, if any, loss now on ships actually running.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Then the gentleman means that the shipping that is being operated is just about paying expenses?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Now; yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. And the gentleman figures that for 10 years to come, or at least during the life of these loans, we would probably have to maintain that same Shipping Board organization?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. We would have to maintain that organization, and at the end of the 10 years it would be costing twice as much as it should legitimately cost us to-day; and in the meantime the creeping up of the subsidy would continue. There never would come a day when the subsidy and the Shipping Board expenses combined would be as little as they are to-day.

You ask me what I would do. I will tell you what I would do if this property were mine, or what I think ought to be done. I would pursue very nearly the policy very clearly defined in the Jones Act of 1920. It was under that act, that does not hint of subsidy, that Mr. Franklin made his offer. He made the offers—to buy ships, to charter ships, or to run them under commission as an agent. In trying to show that the great ship companies can not operate ships for the Government but could do it for themselves Mr. LEHLBACH made a magnificent indictment of all the shipowners of this country. If I believe what he says about it, then I believe they would gouge and steal and do anything else. He says that these same companies who are to-day operating these ships, without any investment at all, without any capital or depreciation or repair or interest charges and losing money for the Shipping Board, if they bought the ships, would turn them into a profitable venture. If a man like Mr. Munson, if companies like the great companies to whom the Shipping Board has farmed out these ships under what is called the M. O. 4 contract—a contract by which they get 5 per cent of the outgoing and incoming freight and 5 per cent of the outgoing passenger fare and 10 per cent of the incoming—if men like that can buy these ships even for a song and work them for themselves, the same managers and operators, and make a profit and can not or will not now make an operating profit for the Shipping Board, then something is rotten in Denmark.

The very statement is an indictment against the honesty and the integrity and the patriotism of those men, which puts them down with the thieves and the thugs of this land or any other land.

I think that Mr. Rossbottom has demonstrated that if the Government has to do it, it can pursue the policy declared in the Jones Act. The Jones Act said, "Here, you have a great number of ships belonging to the Government, obtained at a vast cost to the people, and you have got to do something with them," and that act directed, first, that they sell the ships if possible to American citizens, but that in selling them they must not sell as a debtor forced to sell at a sacrifice, but at a fair world market, and it then directed if they could not sell them to charter them to private operators who will pay a proper price to the Government for them and operate them as charterers. And then directed that if they could neither sell nor charter the ships, then the Shipping Board should put those ships into operation themselves, and with their operation establish such lines of trade as the commerce of our country needs to help build up our commerce and our trade with the world. That act provided that if they could not get private capital to either buy or charter the ships to operate, say, between here and the Argentine, if that is a desirable route, they were then to put them in and operate them themselves.

That is a clear policy, an affirmative policy, but it has not been pursued.

That act provided that if they could not get private capital to buy or charter ships to go between New York and Liverpool they were to put them on that route themselves and operate them. They were to continue to operate them along those lines until they had so well established the trade that private capital would come and buy out the line. It also provided that if they could not make a line profitable they would stop the operation of the line after its failure was demonstrated. It was a clear, strong policy.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, here is the thought in my mind along that line: How can you interest private capital in buying a line of that kind if constantly over them is the threat of the Government possibly competing with them?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. There never was any such threat. I am very glad that the gentleman has asked that question, because the Jones Act answers it by providing that any line established should be sold to citizens as soon as a buyer could be found.

Here is a line, we will say, to Habana, Cuba, from New Orleans. We think that the commerce of the country demands that line. Nobody is willing to buy a ship from the Government and put it on that line. Nobody is willing to take the chance of its being prosperous enough to warrant their chartering the ship. Therefore we say to the Shipping Board you start that line. As long as losses are being incurred no one would expect anyone to come and buy it, but if they finally establish the line as a profitable line then private capital will want to buy it, and the Jones Act directed the board to sell it to them, and the Government then goes out of that line.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I would state in that connection that one of the Shipping Board witnesses—I believe Mr. W. J. Love, one of those $35,000 experts—stated that there were no Shipping Board vessels at all now being operated in competition with any private lines; that they had taken off all that were in competition with any private line.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. That is true. The Shipping Board is so sensitive to private ship-owning interest that they always place that above the interest of Government ownership.

But I want to discuss another feature of this bill. Its advocates say that we must have a subsidy in order to compensate for the difference in wages paid to American labor and to the labor of other countries. Here is an article written by Daniel J. Sullivan, and read at the Society of Naval Architects and Marine Engineers held in New York November 8, 1922. Mr. Sullivan is an advocate of subsidy, but I want to read some of the things that he says in answer to some of the arguments that are made. He says:

So in the efficient operation of any ship, every person who has had a part in designing, in building, and then in operating that ship is responsible for his part, and if each and every one has produced perfect results, then the result as a whole should be perfect.

In theory this is true, but in practice we find too many exceptional conditions, which expression has been used to cover a multitude of blunders in the past, as well as in the present. So in the study of this subject we must admit to ourselves that each of us is responsible for the results attained and that on the blunders of the past we can erect a perfect organization for successful operation.

Further:

In studying the cause of the gain or loss of the supremacy of the seas, it appears to be true that the nation which can build ships for less than others, and whose vessels can transport cargoes faster and cheaper than others, will rule the seas.

Mr. Chairman, if we do not reach the point where we can build ships in America as cheaply as they can anywhere in the world, we will never rule the seas. If we do not reach the point where we can transport commodities as cheaply per unit of freight as any other nation in the world, we will never be supreme on the seas. I want to call your attention to the fact that those who can build the ships for less than others, and whose vessels can transport cargoes faster and cheaper than others, will rule the seas, and until we make up our minds that with all of the advantages that the immense cargoes this country furnishes, the United States can build and operate ships in competition with the world, we will never get anywhere on the seas.

But now they say, leaving out the question of building, leaving out the cheapness of the ships, we can not operate them because of the greater cost of our labor in running the ships. It is absolutely necessary for the subsidy advocate to make that contention to-day, because we are going to give the American ship buyer the cheapest ship in the world. Is the labor-cost claim honest and candid or is it a mere pretext?

Mr. Chairman, we passed the seaman act in 1915, and one of the great purposes of that act was to equalize the labor cost on foreign and American ships. It is too large a subject to go into here, but I make the positive assertion that since 1916, when the seamen's act went into effect as to foreign ships in our ports, the wages of seamen on American and foreign ships entering and leaving our ports have been practically equal. The Labor Review of October, 1919, of the Department of Labor, proves this. Moreover the entire wage cost of a cargo ship is only from 8 per cent to 12 per cent of the whole operating cost, and any difference in that cost therefor is negligible.

Subsidists have even tried to make the public believe that the difference in subsistence cost requires a subsidy.

Now let me give you what Mr. Sullivan says about this. He compiled the actual cost of the different elements of operation. Here are three different ships, and the cost of operation is not the same on any two ships. An efficient manager will cut down the cost where a poor one will increase it. What do we find? I am going to give the whole of this table. Here it is:

EXHIBIT A.

Efficiency in the operation of steamships.

	Example A.	Example B.	Example C.
	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.
Fuel.....	23.6	29.9	27.9
Stevedoring, tally, watching, clerks.....	20.6	16.0	22.9
Wages on ship.....	11.2	14.4	13.0
Insurance.....	10.4	8.1	12.0
Wharfage.....	7.7	1.9	2.2
Agency and brokerage.....	4.9	3.4	2.7
Grain fittings.....	3.1	2.9	.....
Food for crew.....	3.0	3.0	1.4
Stores department.....	2.0	2.9	2.9
Stores engine department.....	2.5	3.4	3.6
Stores steward department.....	0.2	0.3	0.25
Advertising.....	2.4	0.4	0.3
Towboats.....	1.8	1.5	1.4
Pilotage.....	1.3	1.3	1.4
Port charges.....	1.4	1.8	1.6
Repairs.....	1.6	5.1	3.6
Miscellaneous.....	2.1	3.5	2.6
Laundry.....	0.2	0.2	0.25
Total.....	100	100	100

Take Example A: Wages, 11 per cent, and food for crew, 3 per cent, makes 14 per cent as total cost of food and subsistence for the crew. The other items make up 86 per cent of the total cost of operation. Now let us get his figures comparing American and British wages of officers and crew. I want to show you. This man who favors this bill gives these facts, and I am going to put them all in.

Wage scale effected on July 1, 1922.

	Private owned American actually paid.	British.
		£.	$4.40
Master.....		£45	$198.00
First mate.....	$150.00	21-10	94.60
Second mate.....	125.00	16	70.40
Third mate.....	100.00	13	57.20
Wireless.....	90.00	13-10	59.40
Carpenter.....	45.00	12-10	55.00
Boatswain.....	45.00	11-10	50.60
A. B. seaman.....	35.00	10	44.00
Ordinary seaman.....	25.00	5-10	24.20
Chief engineer.....	240.00	24-10	107.80
First assistant engineer.....	150.00	20-10	90.20
Second assistant engineer.....	125.00	16	70.40
Third assistant engineer.....	100.00	13	57.20
Deck engineer.....	45.00	11-10	50.60
Oiler.....	40.00	11	48.40
Fireman (oil).....	35.00
Fireman (coal).....		40.00	10-10
Wiper.....	25.00		46.20
Coal passer.....		35.00	10
Steward.....	100.00	90.00	14-10
Cook.....	80.00	75.00	13-10
Baker.....	45.00	60.00	9-10
Messman.....	35.00	40.00	8-10
Mess boy.....	35.00	35.00	47.40

Gentlemen, I hope you will read these tables, that do not come from me and do not come from an opponent of this bill, but come from a man supporting this bill. You will find the difference in labor cost on an American and British vessel is just the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee. Our ship officers get some more pay, while the crew generally get more on the British ship.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. It is higher than Sweden?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The able seamen and ordinary seamen get more on Danish and Swedish ships than on our ships, but our officers get more. Put the two together—that is, officers and unlicensed members of the crew—and the aggregate labor cost on a British and American ship are practically the same, and the Swedish and Danish ships also are nearly equal.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Did not Mr. Hurley, after viewing conditions in Europe, come back and report to the Shipping Board that the labor cost was about equal?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Every impartial man who has investigated it tells the same story. The difference is small, and here is a man who stands for this bill and yet admits that the wages of seamen are higher in Great Britain and Denmark and Sweden than they are here, and they are our competitors. Mr. Sullivan makes one statement I want to impress on you. He says:

From a study of the data available, the writer is of the opinion that American ships can be made efficient and, excepting the excessive first cost, depreciation, and overhead expense, can hold their own against any competition. To accomplish this result there should be closer relations between the executives of companies and the masters of their vessels. Masters should be selected for their efficiency and given absolute authority over the operation of their vessels. Chief engineers should be selected likewise and given absolute authority over their own department. The master should be furnished with complete cost data so that he can remedy high cost over which he has control and show the owner the excessive cost over which he has no control.

In the statement just quoted Mr. Sullivan strikes at the very root of the alleged inability of American ships to compete. They simply need efficient and economic management, because we now have to give to our shipowners the lowest priced ships in the world.

Mr. Chairman, the Shipping Board will probably sell the ships in time to the American capitalists, perhaps to a syndicate, who will distribute it and dominate it and make a combination of it. I think we are making a mistake in refusing to sell to anybody but Americans. The United States had 10,000,000 tons of shipping that cost the people $3,000,000,000. I would not let these ships rot; I would put them on the market, and say to the Americans, "If you do not buy I will sell them to anybody who wants to buy them," and when I got the money I would put it in the Treasury. I would then operate the ships that I could not or did not want to sell, for the benefit of American commerce, to take the products of the farmers of this country to all the markets of the world as cheaply as any competitor can do it. I would put Rossbottoms in charge to run these ships until American capital gets tired of waiting for the carcass to stink and ready to pay what this property is worth. You can not expect private ship operators to come and buy ships as long as they can get them for nothing, as they can apparently from the present shipping policy. Let us have a little sense. If an American wants to buy the ships, I would give him the preference, but if he will not buy I would sell to somebody else, and when he gets ready I would let him buy the ship of me or anybody else. If the American ship operator after awhile comes to the conclusion to buy that ship elsewhere, I would say to him, "You go and buy that same ship from that party who bought it from me and bring it here and put it under my flag." By all means let us sell these Government-owned ships if we can do so, and at the same time keep up all our essential trade facilities and lines, but let us not so limit the sales that we practically prevent any competition among buyers.

When we shall have sold all the Government's ships, I would say to the shipbuilders of the United States, "You are full grown; get out and compete with the world." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Oh, that is the only salvation for our merchant marine. Let your American commerce be free. Knock the shackles from off your merchant marine. Give us the same right and liberty on the ocean that every other nation has, that England has always asserted; give us the same privilege that England gave her people when we sold them 800,000 tons of our shipping during the Confederate war. Give us the right that England gave her marine interests when we were building cheaper and better ships here than she could build. She said, "We will give you the right to buy your ships in America."

With our supply of coal, unequaled anywhere else in the world, our shipbuilders should go ahead. With our oil supply, enabling our ships to operate with oil burners, with all our fuel here cheaper and more plentiful than elsewhere, with our oil selling at $7 a barrel in Shanghai and selling at $1 a barrel here—with cheaper fuel, I say, and cheaper everything except human labor, and that only a difference between tweedledum and tweedledee, if we can not be free men now and compete we shall never be free men and compete. It is time for America to awake. It is time to quit allowing the American Steamship Owners' Association to dictate a policy of graft to the United States. It is time for us to go out into the world and compete in shipping, because we can not do otherwise and survive. Gentlemen, it is not right. You do not want to impose this burden.

They say this is a tariff proposition. No, it is not a tariff proposition. My friend from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] and I differ a little on that proposition. He says one thing that keeps us from operating our ships is the fact that our tariff laws keep us from importing anything, and that our ships that go out laden must come back empty on account of the tariff. That is true, but the same situation is met by foreign ships trading to our ports. They, too, must come here empty. It applies to both of us. The difference is very plain between a subsidy and a tariff. A subsidy is a bounty. We tried it once in sugar. We said our sugar growers needed aid, but we said the people needed cheap sugar. We said if we put sugar on the free list the Louisiana cane growers and the beet-sugar men would be bankrupt. But the people would not stand for high-priced sugar produced under a high tariff, and therefore we tried to satisfy the people by free sugar and the sugar growers by a bounty, but the people would not stand for the sugar bounty.

Gentlemen, give us free ships. Give to the United States, to the American, the opportunity to go in and compete, even while paying higher wages. From 1830 to 1860, though paying higher wages, we built better ships; we sailed them all over the world. We can do it again. But we never will do it as long as the ship owner thinks that there is pap in the Treasury of the United States that he can get.

The elements of success in competition are full cargo, quick voyage, quick turn-round, safe navigation, small repair bills, economic appliances, economy in handling cargo on ship and shore, good business connections, and good business management generally.

In comparison with these, the wages paid, even the higher first cost of the ship, are minor matters.

But any owner can make as quick trips, secure as good cargo, and do all the things that give success just as well when he pays only $60 per ton as he could if he should pay $100 per ton for that same ship or one just as good. Therefore he buys the cheaper ship, and under our law if that ship is foreign built he must put it under some foreign flag. J. P. Morgan, Robert Dollar, or P. A. S. Franklin will not pay more for his ship just to put it under our flag. That is the whole story of our flag disappearing from the foreign trade in the years between 1865 and 1914.

Inability to compete never drove our flag from the sea, but unwillingness of sensible men to pay more for a tool to work with than they had to pay, did. The remedy, the only remedy, is to give our merchantman the right to buy the cheapest ship he can find, and put it under our flag, with all the rights and privileges of an American vessel.

I wanted to dwell at some length on the Shipping Board powers under this bill. I can only mention some of them. What are those powers?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Will you review those?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes. They have the right to say first to the big man or to the little man, "We will not give you a dollar of subsidy; or we will give you a double subsidy." Here is a ship line that runs in competition with you, and they will say, "We will give them a half of one cent on each ton per hundred miles, but you can not get a dollar." They will say, furthermore, to this corporation, "If that is not enough we will double it. We will give a cent a ton for each hundred miles." They will say, "Here is a company that has a big passenger ship. Two and a half cents is not enough for them. We will give them five cents." All that is absolutely in the discretion of the Shipping Board. It says to this man, "Live," and he lives, and it says to that man, "Die," and he dies.

Then, further, when you have one of these ships belonging apparently to the American people, but really belonging to the Shipping Board—we thought we owned it, but really it belongs to the Shipping Board—if Mr. NELSON comes along and says "Here is a 2,000-ton ship, and I want to buy it," they may refuse to sell it to him, but here is a corporation they wish to favor, and instead of selling it to Mr. NELSON for $250,000, according to Mr. NELSON's offer, they may sell it to a corporation for $125,000. It is so outrageous a situation that there is no comparison with anything ever existing before. They can go ahead and act as though they were the Treasury Department and determine what the real profits are, under rules prescribed by themselves.

Not only that but when you have passed this bill they will never come to Congress for an appropriation. They will have a revolving fund of $125,000,000 there that they can do as they please with. They can loan this fund to their favorites at 2 per cent, and all this without coming to Congress, simply by Mr. Lasker drawing his draft on the United States Treasury.

Ten per cent of all the tariff duties that you collect at your customhouses does not go into the Treasury of the United States, except as a special fund which you can not touch for any other Government need. You might want money with which to enforce prohibition, but you can not touch this 10 per cent. That money is paid out on warrants of the Shipping Board, and the Treasury is bound to validate them.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. That is in reference to contracts?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes; the 10-year subsidy contracts to be made by Chairman Lasker. If you pass this bill you turn the birds of prey loose to fly in the free air of heaven and incur any expense that it seems proper to them to incur, limited only by the amount of revenue set aside.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. What about contracts?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Why, if you pass this bill the Shipping Board can make enough contracts in a year or two years or three years' time to tie a millstone around the Treasury's neck for 10 years.

The people may get sick of the law and want it repealed. Can you do it? No; because by the terms of this bill you permit this Shipping Board to enter into a contract with the Standard Oil for 10 years, by which the Standard Oil will be given one-half of 1 cent, or 1 cent, for every ton per 100 miles traveled in transporting its own commodity. It can do the same thing with the Steel Trust. It can do the same thing with railroad-owned lines. This Shipping Board can contract with every passenger ship that runs or can run 23 knots to pay that ship 2½ or 5 cents per ton per 100 knots for 10 years. It can give that great subsidy to one-line or one ship and refuse to give any subsidy to another.

Suppose you have got in competition a very extensive shipping line of fast passenger ships. You want 5 cents per ton for every 100 miles. They may say, "We think it is reasonable," and then they give you a contract for 10 years to give you 5 cents per ton per 100 miles. Then suppose they refuse to give your competitor any subsidy whatever. That means you will have no competitor; you can have no competitor.

The Leviathan seems to be destined to some great ship company on which perhaps the Shipping Board even now has its favoring eye. And there is talk of building two more ships even bigger than the Leviathan out of the 2 per cent, $125,- 000,000 loan fund. Suppose you try to compute the aggregate subsidy that will be paid to these three ships under a 10-year contract at 5 cents per ton per 100 knots.

A company owning these three ships alone can draw from the Treasury between thirty and sixty million dollars in 10 years, at 2½ cents per ton per 100 knots. After these contracts are signed under this bill the people may squirm, but they are helpless. The Government will be bound for 10 years from the date of any contract the board may hereafter make.

Gentlemen, when you pass this bill you put your hands together and tell the Shipping Board and the big Shipping Trust, "Put the handcuffs on me, and bind me forever and ever." As soon as this bill is passed they will make contracts for the 10 years, but whenever they see an agitation in Congress for the repeal of this law they will make renewal contracts, they will abandon the old contract and make others to operate for 10 years from the date of the new contract. If you ever repeal this law you will find every contract made for 10 years extending from about the time you repeal the law, and you will have it in force for 10 years after the repeal.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Would we not have to pay in the Court of Claims, even if this were broken, where there were damages on account of contracts, in honor as well as legally?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. It might be called damages. It would be a straight contract that we pay that subsidy for 10 years from the date of the contract, whatever the date of the contract was, provided it was during the time when this law was on the statute books. If the law expired the next day, and the contract was made for 10 years, the contract would be good, and we would be bound to pay it in conscience and in law. The Government might say it was deceived and defrauded into passing the law and repudiate its contract, but I take it that the United States will never do that.

Mr. GERNERD. What did our Government pay to Great Britain for every soldier she carried across in her transports, and what did that amount to?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I do not know and I do not care. I know that we paid what we had to pay, and I know that if you will get the figures you will find that Great Britain did not charge us as much as some of our own shipowners charged us in the Spanish-American War for the use of the old hulks that we then had.

Mr. GERNERD. My recollection is that we had to pay $57,000,000, or $183.50 per man.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The gentleman will have to verify his own figures.

Mr. GERNERD. I thought you knew.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. It is a matter to which I have paid no attention.

Mr. GERNERD. I think it is important.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I will wager you that if we hired ships of any American shipowner, we paid him as much as we did the British shipowner, but that matter does not bear on this bill.

Mr. GERNERD. Here is another question.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Does it bear on this bill?

Mr. GERNERD. Exactly. I think it is mighty important.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Go ahead and be quick.

Mr. GERNERD. You said there was no free competition, and that you desired to have free competition. Now, why was there not free competition in shipbuilding prior to 1914?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. My friend, if you have not heard that, you have not heard anything I have said.

Mr. GERNERD. I have listened to you.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I said that the United States passed a law under which no ship could fly the American flag unless it was built in the United States. Perhaps the gentleman does not know it, but that law was on the statute books until 1914.

In 1914 we permitted them to come under our flag to engage in the foreign trade. That law, absolutely prohibiting an American from buying his ship where he could buy it cheapest, killed our merchant marine, and that law, if continued, will kill it again. Not only so. We put shipbuilding material on the free list in 1914 or 1915, and your last tariff act puts it back on the dutiable list, and you are going to travel the same old pathway that you trod for 60 years, which will result as it did before in the destruction of your merchant marine. That will be the fate of the American merchant marine if you let your party adopt the policies that you seem bent on adopting now. You are going to adopt a policy that will kill the American merchant marine naturally, and then you are going to depend on riding on the backs of the people to support an abnormal and unnatural enterprise—that is all. [Applause.] Gentlemen, you can not do it.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. May I ask the gentleman to give his opinion as to the value of tax exemption to the shipowners and the value of the 5 per cent to the shippers?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. It was claimed prior to the World War that we were paying foreign shipowners an average of $300,000,000 per year for freight. Our total freight bill now is perhaps twice that much. If this bill should ever be a success, our freight bill at present rates being doubtless twice that, the total freight paid would be $600,000,000. If this bill is a success and half of our freight is carried in American bottoms there will be $300,000,000 of freight money paid by American shippers to American shipowners. Five per cent of that sum would be $15,000,000 a year, and that $15,000,000 a year is what the great big capitalists, the shippers, would deduct from their income taxes otherwise payable into the Treasury of the United States, and I do not doubt that that feature of this bill will keep from going into the Treasury, which is the same as taking it out of the Treasury, $15,000,000 annually on these deductions of taxes. Now, what was the gentleman's other question?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. The total value of the tax exemption to the shipowners on all the foreign freight, which Senator RANSDELL says is a billion dollars, and which the committee says is a fabulous amount.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. He says it is a billion dollars earnings?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Earnings.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. If I remember aright that is an exemption going to ship operators from any tax on any of their income.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. On European trade.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes. On any of their income from the overseas trade. Now, they are not required to pay any tax on that income. A big overseas shipping line may earn a million dollars per year clear profit. If it earns it in the foreign trade, it is not required to pay any tax on it.

In other words, it operates so that ship corporations engaged in foreign trade will escape all income taxation of the Government of the United States. Mr. Lasker himself said that the indirect benefits of the bill were incomparably greater than the direct benefits. The subsidy is the direct benefit. The tax exemptions and forced Government patronage and other features are the indirect benefits. There are indirect benefits of many kinds, and he says that they are more than the direct. We know or can compute what the direct benefits are. There are annually $450,000,000 of customs, and 10 per cent of that is $45,000,000, and that all goes to subsidy, and there are other sums specifically set aside for subsidy.

Gentlemen, there is no way of estimating what the bill will cost the American people as a whole, but the most careful and conservative estimate I can make is that it will be between $75,000,000 and $100,000,000 a year.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Will the gentleman give us an estimate of the transport service?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. You mean for the Army and Navy. I have understood that the transport service would represent a profit of $6,000,000 a year, but I am not definite about that.

Mr. EDMONDS. The transport service will not cost that sum.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. The mail services are in the thing, too?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. They are to take the place of the present mail subsidy.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. The foreign secretary says that it will amount to $6,000,000 in this country. Is that correct?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I expect it is.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman is incorrect. This bill does not put any mail service into the subsidy. The amount involved is $1,800,000, but that goes direct to the ships, as it does now.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The whole mischief of the business is that you turn it loose and you have no control over it; the amount to be spent can not be controlled by Congress. And yet the bill does not give even the Shipping Board any control of rates.

Now, there is one other thing. Under the terms of this bill the great transcontinental railways that control all the freight going out of this country may become the owners of great ship lines, and the great ship lines were in combination before the war began and they will be in combination hereafter. The lines running from New York to Seattle, to San Francisco, the Southern Pacific running up to San Francisco will own their conjunctive steamboat lines, and your independent shipowner, if there ever is any such, will have no more chance than the snowball in that tepid or torrid and far-famed country below. [Laughter.]

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Did not Mr. Munson find that before we went into the war these shipping lines did not compete?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. We got undisputed proof, when the Shipping Board bill was before us, of that fact; that every line was in the combination, and if you pass this bill the great railroad lines of the country will combine. They will buy the shipping lines, and when they buy them the European and the American shipping lines will combine, and there is no power in this bill to regulate the freight rates. They will fix the rates themselves and ride the people to death.

Mr. EDMONDS. There is nothing in the law to-day that prevents the great railroad lines from that.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I do not think there is, but there ought to be. Instead of making things better you are making them worse. [Applause.] Up to to-day there was no one power that owned such a vast number of ships that could turn them over to one combination of capital. I mean that under this bill the Shipping Board may turn over from seven to ten million tons of shipping to one syndicate or combination.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. There was some bar against railroads owning ships passing through the Panama Canal.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I do not know whether that is repealed by this bill or not. A rail-owned ship can not now go through the canal unless the present Congress has repealed that law. If it has not it will do so, I think.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. What is the value of the preferential rates to the railroad?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I have not time to go far into that, but it will enable the railroads to route all foreign commerce over their ship lines. The railroads in order to favor a particular shipping line can give preferential rail rates to goods going by their ships and refuse such preferential rates to goods carried by other ships. If you have an independent ship it does not get the benefit of the preferential rates fixed by the railroads. The fact is you have got the Government now in one concentrated body owning 10,000,000 tons of shipping that it is ready to sell. You have got the great railroads concentrated in management and operation, and we have heard a capitalistic official who says it is likely that a great syndicate can be formed to buy the ships in part or in whole. You make conditions under which the railroads can easily combine and a great syndicate can go to the Shipping Board and make them an offer to take these ships and that will automatically throw the ships under the management of this vast combination which can fix the rates at their sweet will, and they will do it to the oppression of the people, and you do not reserve one single thread of authority to regulate or mitigate these rates by this bill. There is nothing else but a sure prospect of combination, monopoly, and outrageous oppressive rates governing the freight of the American goods by these lines which will go to the Japanese, the British, the French, and the German lines and combine with them, and nothing will prevent them from fixing the rates at their own sweet pleasure in order to levy on the American people the tribute that commerce must pay.

It is the old story—tax the traffic all it will bear and then go into the Treasury and get what you can out of the Treasury by virtue of your tax exemptions and your subsidy. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, with a subject too vast and varied in its aspects for any brief presentation, and with interruption frequent and welcomed, my discussion has been desultory and disjointed, but I have done the best I could to give to the public such high lights as may expose the most vicious features of the bill. I have for 10 years had a vision of an American merchant marine, self-sustained; in giant strength breasting the seas bravely, meeting and conquering the competition of the world. Pass this bill and my vision vanishes, our merchant marine shrivels to a milk-fed, puling baby and dies. Defeat it and pass a law to give us free ships and the dawn of our commercial and maritime supremacy is here—my vision comes true. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG].

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, after listening for a couple of days to the discussions of the bill, the inaccurate statements that have been made lead me to believe that I am meeting the Democratic campaigners out in the field. It is the same old cry, the same old story, when you listen to any kind of a debate. Either the opponents to this bill willfully misrepresent the figures and the facts or carelessly state them without making a search. There is another peculiar thing to which I would direct your attention. If you make a little study of where the opposition to this bill lies, on either side of the House, you will find that 90 per cent of the opposition lies in the States that will pay only about 10 per cent of the subsidy, whether that subsidy be $50,000,000 or $300,000,000 a year. It is a rather significant thing to me to hear the cry of sectional benefit raised from a section that does not pay but a fraction of the subsidy, from a section of the United States that has been the chief beneficiary of more direct Government subsidy since they have been opening it up than all of the rest of the country together. It would seem to me that if those arguments were true that the East and the Coast States were going to be the chief beneficiaries of this subsidy, that your generosity ought to go to the extent of permitting us to pay our own bills, because I will show you by the figures before I am through that you people who are raising the loudest noise in objecting to the passage of this bill will pay, per capita, the very least of anybody. In Tennessee and in Texas and in some of the States where you are crying aloud against it your people will not pay more than one-third of what it will cost the people in my State and in New York, Pennsylvania, and Illinois.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. No; I can not yield. The gentleman consumed three hours and would not yield to me yesterday. When you are making a speech and have no thought of being checked up, it is the easiest thing in the world to cry graft and scandal. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] yesterday in his remarks said that if this bill were passed there would be the greatest scandal ever in American history grow out of the Shipping Board. The thing that puzzles me is how he knows that fact. There is no argument in such a statement. It seems to me it is about time that men who come to Congress begin to vote as they believe, and not be influenced by scare headlines or scare speeches about scandal and graft, and the hearings are full of graft and scandal talk. The man who is always hollering scandal and graft is the man that I want to watch. I think the Members of this Congress are honorable and honest men, and with the man who does not agree with this bill I have no quarrel, if he is honest and conscientious; but I do not like to see anyone as prominent as the gentleman from Tennessee try to scare the public mind by crying that there will be a scandal and that it is an open bid for graft. He owes it to the country to prove his case or withdraw such statements. Such thoughtless statements from a distinguished gentleman like the gentleman who made them brings the whole Government into disrepute with the uninformed class.

The statement was made on the floor the other day by the minority leader [Mr. GARRETT], and, I think, by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] yesterday, in arguing the question of the rule, that if the President were correct in admitting that the Government under Republican administration is unable to operate the merchant fleet without a loss, it is a sad commentary on Republican efficiency. On the contrary, it is the highest eulogy, because the figures, which are an open book to any man, show that the Shipping Board is being operated at a cost of about $7,000,000 annually less than it was under the gentleman's own party, and yet even in the face of the economies that are being practiced, even in the face of every kind of cut that has been made, we are running behind at the rate of $50,000,000 a year.

Under the Democratic administration there were 8,324 employees and at the present time there are 4,479, and that means a saving annually of $7,628,677 in salaries alone. If you call that Republican inefficiency, what adjective would describe the management under the Democratic control?

We have had enough of Government ownership to eliminate that. We have the merchant marine, and the question to be decided is not whether we will acquire a merchant marine. The only question that is before this Congress is, What will we do with that which we have? The fact that the war produced the merchant marine is conclusive proof that if we have another war we will have to have a merchant marine, and it seems to me that we should not put it into the discard. The only question is, How will we continue to maintain and build up the merchant marine which we already have? With those who advocate Government ownership of public utilities, I have no quarrel. The United States Government every time that it has touched a public utility in the way of operation and control has been successful in making it expensive and inefficient, and until we can demonstrate that Government control of great utilities is both economic and efficient, I stand on the side of private operation of all public utilities. That being true, there is nothing to do other than get rid of this fleet. The opposition has offered no solution but contented themselves with destructive criticism. That never solved a problem.

I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], who is opposed to this proposition, why it is, if it is possible to operate this fleet without a subsidy, that never before has any man been found with astuteness for finance—and we have produced some of the greatest financiers in the world—sufficient to induce him to go into the shipping business and make a success of it on a big scale. That answers the whole proposition itself. If American ships can be operated without a subsidy, and pay two or three times the wages of other nations, their competitors and they subsidized, why have not men invested their capital and gone into the shipping business?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Does the gentleman wish an answer to that question?

Mr. BEGG. Oh, I heard the gentleman speak for two hours, and I could not get any answer to that.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Then the gentleman does not ask the question with the view of having it answered.

Mr. BEGG. It would seem to me that American business would have produced some man with genius enough to operate this fleet during the past 100 years. Remember, the United States flag flew on the seas alongside that of every other nation on the globe at one time. After the invention of the steel ship the United States was driven off the seas because of the competition, and we are now confronted with the proposition of maintaining the flag on the seas or seeing it disappear again. Let me put this proposition to you: Suppose I were to go into business alongside of some other man in New York or Philadelphia—and I am perfectly willing to take any one of the great businesses of either of those cities. Permit me to do his hauling of the different articles he offers for sale from the point of shipment, the dock or the freight house, and at the same time let me compete with him in the running of the store, and I will put him in bankruptcy inside of a year. Is not that exactly the position of the United States to-day? We are in competition with every nation in the world. Are you going to ask Great Britain or France or Italy or Belgium or Japan to come to New York or Philadelphia or Boston and load on the American products and haul them to the markets of the world and sell them in competition with their own? If you do that, then you have absolutely signed your own death warrant economically. If your competitor does your draying and can charge what he will you are at his mercy. The fact is so flagrantly potent that the smallest merchant does not allow his business to become dependent on his competitors' hauling charges. Would Henry Ford let John Willys do his draying and charge what he wanted to? If he would there would be no Ford cars on the market. You men who oppose this bill put yourselves in the attitude of forcing the United States to look to her competitors, Great Britain and Japan, to haul our products to market from our ocean ports. The United States might build up the finest transportation system in the world, but if it stopped at the ocean front she would be a helpless nation pitied by her very rivals for her short-sighted policy.

When war opened the United States found herself in just that condition. No transportation beyond her boundaries. Suppose, men, England and Germany had been allies in the last war, could America have gone to the defense of civilization? Who would have carried her men and munitions? The loyalty of the opponents to this bill must be unquestioned but their ability to visualize the national future can certainly be doubted. Your policy will keep the United States a second-rate world power while the policy established by this bill will make her a world power on the sea as well as on the land, and in commerce as well as in war, and will do more to establish those unselfish American principles and civilization throughout the world than all the other devices of man down to date.

When the Boer War came Great Britain raised the freight rate from New York and Boston to the markets of the world 30 per cent, and if you will take the time to figure the amount of money on the tonnage that passed at that rate you will find that you have enough money to pay a subsidy for the ten years, or for the life of this law.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. BEGG. If it is brief.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Does the gentleman think that American-owned ships under the British flag would play us false also? We had a great many of them.

Mr. BEGG. It is not a question of what I think, and the trouble with the gentleman seems to be that most of his argument is as to what he thinks. Go and look at the freight rates before the Boer War; look at the 30 per cent increase during the war. Go to the Department of Commerce and make the calculations yourself and you will find that we almost paid for the English cost of the Boer War out of the American cost for our drayage. Are you willing to continue to be dependent?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Does the gentleman mean to say that in the Boer War the entire ships were British?

Mr. BEGG. All.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Did the ships owned by Americans charge as high?

Mr. BEGG. Now, in my speech I want to show the cost of this subsidy which would fall on the men defending it or on their State, and I want to give a few figures to back up that statement. The State of Tennessee seems to offer the most pronounced opposition to this bill. The total amount of money paid into the United States Treasury by Tennessee, according to the Treasury reports in 1921, was, in round figures, $35,000,000, which is one-hundred-and-fortieth of all the revenue. Now, supposing the subsidy is $30,000,000, the State of Tennessee would pay one one-hundred-and-fortieth of the $30,000,000 or $214,286, or 9 cents per capita. I would like to ask the Congressman from Tennessee—you admitted in your speech, every one of you, that the United States must have a merchant marine, and the only argument made here against it, putting it in a nutshell, is this, that now is not the time. I ask you, even though now is not the most propitious time, would you be willing to cripple the whole United States merchant marine in favor of some foreign country for 9 cents per capita tax on your people? Is that the measure of your statesmanship?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman want me to answer that?

Mr. BEGG. On the other hand, the National Government this year subsidized the State of Tennessee for educational purposes alone $131,045, which is more than 50 per cent of the total assessment against Tennessee if the subsidy is really $30,000,000.

Mr. MADDEN. They are paying this subsidy now out of the Treasury of the United States just the same.

Mr. BEGG. They are paying more than that. I am trying to show that the subsidy is not a payment against their State, even though they are not paying it right now. For health for the State of Tennessee they are receiving $12,978 out of the Federal Treasury. For roads they receive $6,228,137. What for? To build highways so that the people in Tennessee can have better methods of transportation for their products to the market. We people in Ohio pay taxes to build your roads in Tennessee and subsidize you to get to the market, and yet you are not willing to vote 9 cents levy to enable the Eastern States to get an outlet for their products on the high seas. [Applause.] Even though it would be more benefit to the East than to the West, the whole Nation should be benefited, and the man who argues otherwise is certainly narrow as to his viewpoint in regard to the national welfare. South Carolina pays $29,000,000, which would be one one-hundred-and-sixty-eighth of the total subsidy. On a basis of $30,000,000, it would pay $178,690. She received for educational purposes alone $105,000 as a direct subsidy from the United States Government out of the Federal Treasury. Alabama paid $18,000,000 last year, which is one two-hundred-and-seventy-second part of the total amount paid, and her share of the subsidy of $30,000,000 would be $110,000. She received out of the Federal Treasury $129,000 for education alone, and it would seem to me that opposition to a subsidy bill on a basis which makes 5 mills against every man, woman, and child in that State ought to be quiet when they are getting more for one item than it would cost them for the ships. They received for roads $5,776,000. Where is it to come from? Certainly not out of the taxpayers' pockets of that State alone, but it comes mostly from those States now asking for a merchant marine. Can not you see that by helping get a merchant marine you are making it possible to continue to help educate your children and improve your roads?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BEGG. The State of Texas. There is a good deal of opposition from that State. Texas paid $81,000,000, which is one one-sixtieth of the total revenue. Their part of subsidy would be $500,000 that the State would be compelled to pay if the subsidy was $30,000,000. The State of Texas alone received $200,000 for education, $23,000 for health, and $16,000,000 for good roads. Texas's share of the subsidy would levy a per capita tax of 11 cents per annum against her people, or in 10 years $1.10. Do you men from Texas believe your people would begrudge $1.10 in 10 years to insure the American flag flying over the boats carrying their cotton, beef, and oil to the markets of the world, or do you think your citizens would prefer to keep their 11 cents annually and then see the British and Jap flags fly over United States products. Tell them what it will cost and then ask them which they prefer. Would you rather pay tribute to Great Britain and Japan to carry your products to the markets of the world than tax your people 11 cents a head annually? [Applause on the Republican side.]

We have had a good deal of opposition from Wisconsin. Seventy-one million dollars is the total amount of revenue paid by that State in 1921, or one sixty-sixth of all the revenue. Four hundred and fifty-five thousand dollars would be the assessment against the State of Wisconsin if the subsidy is $30,000,000 and no more. Yet the State of Wisconsin received $150,000 last year for education alone. In 10 years that would be $1,500,000, or nearly the cost of four years of subsidy. For health they received $14,000. For roads they received $7,400,000 that has been appropriated to build highways in Wisconsin; and if this subsidy bill is passed and costs $30,000,000 each man, woman, and child in Wisconsin will pay 17 cents in order that Duluth and the lake ports bordering on that State may have an outlet and incentive and inducement to build a boat line that will go through the canal loaded with the grain of the Northwest and dock in Liverpool or anywhere else abroad.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BEGG. I regret I can not yield.

I want to ask the advocates of the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence waterway. Where are you now? There could not be a piece of legislation going on the statute books that could help us out in the West and Middle West more than this. We realize the importance of the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence waterway, but we want men to invest in boats big enough to dock in the ports of the world. Every time a ship enters a foreign port it is entitled to a subsidy under this bill. But if she comes back and sails through the Soo and unloads at any of the Lake ports, she again becomes entitled to a ship-subsidy award. And you gentlemen who are advocating the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence Canal should get awake and realize that this is a distinct contribution to our cause, instead of championing the bit on the theory that it is going to benefit New York or any other particular State.

Most of you men in Ohio and Illinois and New England and New York and Pennsylvania are favorable to this legislation and believe that it is a national asset to build a merchant marine along the line we have outlined. I want to show you gentlemen what it is going to cost us. Take the State of Illinois. She paid into the Treasury $398,000,000, or one-twelfth of all the revenue collected in the United States. Think of it, one-twelfth of all the revenue came from the State of Illinois. Now, get this: There may be some Congressmen from Illinois opposed to this bill, but I have not heard of them if there are any. But if this subsidy passes and it costs $30,000,000, the State of Illinois will pay $2,500,000 of that alone, or an assessment on her people of 39 cents per capita. Now, if the boys from Illinois are not afraid to put a tax of 39 cents per capita on their people to insure the Stars and Stripes continuing to fly on the high seas, why, in Heaven's name, are the boys in Tennessee scared at a 9-cent tax?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman desire more time?

Mr. BEGG. I would like to have more, if I could have it.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. How much?

Mr. BEGG. Oh, 15 minutes.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 15 additional minutes.

Mr. BEGG. Now, let us take the State of Ohio. It is fair for me to speak of my own State, favorably or otherwise. We paid $208,000,000 into the Treasury last year, or one-seventeenth of the total, and if this subsidy passes and it costs $30,000,000, I, by my vote, will help to impose upon my home people a tax of $1,764,706, or a per capita tax of 31 cents. There has been a good deal said about whether the poor farmer will get anything out of this or not. My farmers are intelligent. My farmers prefer to tax themselves 33 cents per year to having Great Britain and Japan tax them any amount they wish by increasing the freight rates 30 per cent, as they did during the Boer War. Our ancestors fought Great Britain to escape taxation, but the opponents of this bill are fighting their own people to make it possible for Great Britain and Japan to tax us indirectly at will. The people of my district would pay any necessary tax levied by their own Government, but they refuse, as did their fathers, to pay a tribute even if levied as an indirect tax.

I am convinced that this bill if made a law will be a national asset, and I would be false to my oath and untrue to my constituency and the Nation if I did not do that which I believe to be right, even if some of them, through a lack of understanding, should be opposed to it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman primarily is not looking for a personal life raft, as some gentlemen seem to be doing?

Mr. BEGG. No; I think I have an opportunity of getting more information than anybody in my district, and although it may sound like conceit, I think that my people believe I have the courage to come and tell them the truth; and if you present the facts to my people, that for 31 cents assessment per man they can have a permanent merchant marine over which flies the Stars and Stripes there would not be a single criticism, but, on the other hand, all would applaud my stand. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Take the State of Michigan. Two hundred and seventy-four million dollars were paid into the Treasury by her last year, or one-eighteenth of the total revenue. If this bill passes they will pay $1,666,667, which is a 45-cent assessment against the people of Michigan for every man, woman, and child in that State; and so far as I have been able to find out, nearly all the Congressmen representing that State believe that this bill ought to be passed. It may be with some amendments; I do not know. But the principle of the subsidy ought to be enacted into law, so that our merchant marine can compete with Great Britain and Japan.

Pennsylvania paid into the Treasury $598,000,000, or one-ninth. I do not know any Pennsylvanians who may be opposing this bill, but Pennsylvania's contribution under this subsidy would be $3,303,000, or a 38-cent tax on each man, woman, and child. Now, if the people of Pennsylvania and Ohio and Illinois and Michigan and Indiana are going to be taxed and their Representatives are not afraid to put that tax on, why should Representatives from the other States be afraid?

Now, I want to give you the figures relating to New York: They pay $1,330,000,000 taxes; they paid that last year, or one-fourth of all the revenues; and if the ship subsidy becomes a law and the cost of it is $30,000,000, the State of New York alone will pay as her share $7,500,000. I do not know of any New York man who is opposed to the ship subsidy, because they see first hand what it costs the United States not to own their fleet and not to carry the American flag on the high seas. If this bill becomes a law it will cost every man, woman, and child in the State of New York 73 cents. If this bill becomes a law the State of Massachusetts will make an assessment of 43 cents against every one of her citizenship. Why are you from Texas afraid of 11 cents apiece, and from Tennessee 9 cents apiece, and Alabama 5 cents apiece as your tax for this purpose in the face of the above figures? Most taxes are supposed to be equitably levied. It so happens that in this case it will not be an equitable distribution. And if it is true that the East will be the greatest beneficiaries it is also true that the East will pay two-thirds of the cost of the whole bill, let that cost be what it may.

I want to refer to one other criticism of this bill, and then I am through.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion right there?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has already called attention to the fact that we are now paying some $50,000,000 for the maintenance of the fleet, the small portion of it that we keep on the high seas; so that after all these sums which the people would be called upon to pay are not new levies or new burdens. They are burdens that they now bear in a larger amount, with practically no permanent benefit, than they would bear under this bill.

Mr. BEGG. That is correct. The President brought that out so forcefully and so well in his speech that it seems to me an utter waste of time to discuss that phase of it. I have tried to accept the argument that has been propounded by the opponents of this bill, namely, that it was going to be a tax on the great mass of the people and no benefit to them, and it has been from their own argument that I have tried to prove my case.

Now, I want to refer to something in the testimony. I want to show you some of the kinds of opposition that there have been to this bill. One Benjamin Marsh testified to the extent of about 30 or 40 pages in the hearings. On page 1608 Mr. EDMONDS asked him this question:

I understood you made the statement this morning before I came here that the President was lending his help to an insidious campaign to rob the people of the United States.

The reply of Mr. Marsh was this:

I denounce the subsidy bill as an insidious steal. If the President indorses the ship subsidy bill, I repeat that the President is indorsing an insidious steal to put over on the American people, and I am going to go all over the country saying that.

In a statement on page 1581, Mr. Marsh says:

Before I get through, I want to read you the letters I have written to the President asking him to do his constitutional duty and prosecute the men who have robbed the Government of scores of millions under the Shipping Board. He has not done it; I do not know whether he will or not; but why is this invitation to graft put in this bill—this mandate to graft, I might almost say?

Here is something he says about us. In speaking of a financial organization that is interested in the shipping business, on page 1576, he says:

And if this financial syndicate were able to get a high bounty or bonus or subsidy, so as to make their business very profitable on their very small investment in ships, which they are seeking to get, it would not be so hard for them to control certain Members.

Mr. MONDELL. Is this gentleman a shipping expert?

Mr. BEGG. He claims to be a farmer, so I understand. His title shows him to be at the head of some farm organization.

Mr. MONDELL. Who is he?

Mr. BEGG. Benjamin Marsh.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. He is not a farmer.

Mr. MONDELL. A farm organization that exists only on paper.

Mr. BEGG. I can not give you his biography. He is not in Who's Who, and I was not permitted to search the records of the lower East Side of New York a few years ago, so I can not give it. But I want to say this regarding any man who by insinuation or otherwise accuses any Member of Congress or the President of being a party to graft ought to be confined in the penitentiary unless he proves his charge. Such an assassin of character if called to an accounting would be the first to cry, "Free speech." [Applause.] I do not care who he is, he is a cowardly kind of an assassin who never would say that to your face. It is unfortunate that any man in the discussion of any bill will insinuate that there is scandal connected with it, or crookedness, because if there is, and if he himself is a decent American citizen, he will file his charges and bring the man to an accounting.

So far as I am concerned I am convinced that every man on this side and on the opposite side in his consideration of this bill is motivated only by the highest purposes to serve his country best. If I were a member of the committee I would not permit a man to testify like that unless he filed his charges and proved his case, and I would not waste the paper to record his testimony. When he thus insults the President of the United States and insinuates against the men in Congress, it is the easiest and about the most despicable thing a man could do.

Now, in conclusion, let me say that I know President Harding has only the best interests of all the country at heart in coming before us and advocating the passage of this bill. I know he knows that he will probably lose some votes and support in certain sections of the country for doing it. But history will accord to such a man a place who has the courage to do his duty as God has given it to him to see his duty, and I commend President Harding and I honor him and I honor you for voting your convictions regardless to which side those convictions may lead you. But I want to say for my part that I will do anything I can do to lend support to the acquirement of a merchant marine for to-day's peaceful business and commerce, and for to-morrow's war if we have one, so that when another war comes we will not plead to Germany or England or France, "Please come and take our men and our munitions and our supplies." Why, not one-tenth of 1 per cent of the American men and supplies were carried across in the bottoms of the American merchant marine. The greatest nation in the world ought to have every man and every gun and every cartridge of ammunition transported wherever she wanted her flag to go in American bottoms. If we pass this subsidy bill we will have a merchant marine, not simply as good as that of England but the best merchant marine that flies the flag on the high seas; and the best is none too good for an American citizen in these times. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] 10 minutes.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I can add little if anything to the admirable speech just delivered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG]. But I feel I have something I wish to say on a bill of as great importance as the one now before the House.

The main argument against the bill, and in the last analysis perhaps the only argument, is that it taxes the many for the benefit of the few. Well, it is true that the bill does tax the many for the benefit of the few, and if it did nothing more than that the argument would stand. But it does, I think, vastly more than that. It taxes the many for the direct benefit of the few in order that all may indirectly benefit. We have done that frequently, and we know we were justified in doing it because the growth, development, and prosperity of our country are largely attributable to carrying out exactly that policy.

A few years ago, I think in the year 1916, the gentlemen from the Mississippi Valley came before this House and asked us to authorize the appropriation of a large amount of money to improve the Mississippi River. They said the project was for the general welfare, that it was affected with a public interest. Of course, it proposed to tax the many for the benefit of the few. It directly benefited all the people who owned land in the Mississippi Valley, and yet we passed that bill in this House because we knew that though it directly benefited the people in the Mississippi Valley it was an indirect benefit to all the people in our great land to have the magnificently fertile land of the Mississippi Valley reclaimed and turned over to agriculture.

We now are told, as a result of the war, that the money we then provided is insufficient to build all the levees and do all the revetment work necessary to save this section of our country, and I understand that these same gentlemen from the Mississippi Valley are coming back here to ask for more money in order to complete the work, although we know the expenditure of that money directly benefits the few. It will also directly benefit the few in greatly differing degrees. There are some along that river who are much better off than others and do not need Government aid as much as others do. It is exactly so in the shipping world. We passed the beneficial legislation for the people of the Mississippi Valley in order that it might indirectly benefit the whole Nation; but the benefit to the people as a whole is not nearly so clear, is not nearly so sure, as the benefit to all of the people of our land by the upbuilding of an American merchant marine which will give us international commercial contact with all the markets of the world, and which is absolutely vital if we are to market our goods at the best price and the least cost.

I was talking a few days ago with a very prominent admiralty lawyer who happens to represent British shipping interests. He was opposed to this legislation, and he appealed to me to vote against it. He said it was unfair for the United States, with its boundless resources, with its great wealth, to enter the field and drive England from the seas; that England was more dependent on overseas commerce than we were; that she was a little island with little agriculture, and that all her interests were manufacturing; that in order to live she must find markets over the seas; that her overseas commerce was vitally necessary to her. He said in addition to that, "How can you expect Great Britain to pay her debt to the United States if you take away from her the one means of payment, her overseas commerce?"

I said to him, the United States has no idea of entering this field and driving Great Britain from the seas; nothing is further from her thought. We are not animated by the same spirit that moved Germany when she entered on her policy of commercial expansion with the direct purpose of wresting control from Great Britain on the seas if it was possible for her to do so. I said, "Oh, no; we do not expect to monopolize all the commerce of the world; we hope to get a comparatively small share of it; but we do want a merchant marine, in order that we may exchange our products in all the markets of the world on the best possible terms." This is necessary to our continuance as a great commercial nation. The time is past when we can depend on British bottoms to carry our cargoes. In the past Great Britain was the great creditor nation, and we, with all nations of the world, were indebted to Great Britain. It was to her interest to see that our goods were transported to the markets of the world, because when a cargo of American goods went over the seas in British ships it went to pay our British debt. That condition no longer prevails. We to-day are the creditor nation of the world and Great Britain is debtor to us. There is no strong reason now why Great Britain should be so careful, so zealous, so attentive, in looking after our shipping interests. We must now look after our own; we must protect our rights; we must protect our manufacturers; we must protect our farmers; and we must have our own American merchant marine, built in America, owned in America, manned by Americans, and sailing under the American flag if we are to have a merchant marine which appeals to the virile Americanism of our people. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, we once had a great merchant marine. There was a time in the old days, before steam, when our ships sailed the seven seas and carried a large percentage of the cargoes of the world. They were the glory and the pride of the American people. But we laughed at steam. We thought the time would never come when our great clipper ships could be surpassed by any ship that sailed the seas, and when the Civil War came on Great Britain had her chance, and she attained a supremacy, which she has always held, and which Germany alone has challenged. The Great War gave us our chance, and foolish would we be and deserving of the reprobation of future generations if we fail in our turn to take advantage of it and keep our flag where it should be, proudly flying on all the seas and in all the harbors of the world.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FREE].

Mr. FREE. Mr. Chairman, although perhaps my physical condition will not justify me in standing here to-day, yet in view of the experience that California has just had in the matter of transportation, I feel it my duty for just a few moments to say something in favor of this bill. On the western coast we are a long way from our markets. Our markets are on the eastern coast, our products are largely perishable, and unless we can get them to market at the time they are ripe and ready for market they are a total loss to us. In the season that has just passed California sustained a loss of from fifty to one hundred million dollars by reason of the fact that she could not get the transportation to take her products from her land to the markets in the East. There has always been a shortage of refrigerator cars. There has always been a shortage of ventilated cars, and with the strike the combination was such that it was impossible to get to our markets. We turned to the sea because we are on the sea, and yet there we were afforded no relief from the condition that existed. My farmers are for this bill; they want transportation on land and sea, and they want it on the sea in American ships.

My attention was first called to the extreme to which this country was driven a few years ago when I was in the city of Seattle. I met there a manufacturer from the city of San Francisco. I asked him what he was doing in Seattle, and he told me that he was trying to get some goods transported to the Orient. I asked him why in Seattle, and he told me there was no regular line leaving San Francisco for the Orient that would take his goods, and that in order to get those goods to the Orient in time to fill the orders he had to send them from San Francisco to Seattle and then let them lie on the docks at Seattle until a Japanese ship would come along and take them.

While he was there in Seattle such a ship did come, but, owing to the fact that the company that owned the ship was tied up in some sort of way with a company that was antagonistic to this gentleman's company, he had to wait for another ship, and the goods were six weeks on the docks at Seattle before they got aboard a ship to go to their destination. At that time I made a little study of the conditions of transportation in American bottoms; and, bringing that study down to date, I am going to quote some figures.

In 1830 we carried in American bottoms 94 per cent of our imports and 86 per cent of our exports. In 1840 it was a little less—86 and 80. In 1850 it was 78 and 65, and in 1870 it was 33 and 37, and so it went on down until in the year 1910 we carried in American bottoms only 7.5 per cent of our exports and 10 per cent of imports. In a recent normal month foreign ships carried 76 per cent of our exports, while American ships carried but 24 per cent, and of that 24 per cent 19 per cent was carried in ships of the Shipping Board and only 5 per cent in ships privately owned. This decrease from 86 per cent of exports down to 7 per cent and from 94 per cent of imports down to 10 per cent went on while our exports were increasing tremendously. For instance, in 1855 we exported $193,000,000 worth of goods. Five years later it amounted to $316,000,000. Ten years later it was $377,000,000, and each 10 years the exports went up until in 1920 they had increased to $7,949,000,000. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] yesterday gave us to understand that our merchant marine had kept pace. Perhaps he said that it did not decrease. What does it matter if it does not decrease, if it does not increase proportionately to the increase of exports and imports of the United States? If you have a city of 10,000 people, with homes to house them, and the city grows to 100,000 people and you still have the same number of homes, you are not taking care of the conditions.

That is the condition in which we found ourselves when the war came on. We then hurriedly built our fleet. True, it is not a rounded fleet. We have lots of slow-going cargo vessels, but we are short of good passenger vessels and we have practically no refrigerator ships. Out of the vessels that we have we have only 16 that will go 15 knots an hour, so taking that fleet as it is it is impossible for the Government of the United States, without spending a lot more money, to ever maintain it as a Government owned and controlled fleet.

This experiment of a partially balanced fleet, carrying but 19 per cent of our trade, nevertheless was costing when this administration went into power $16,000,000 a month, and through the care of the present Shipping Board that has been reduced to $4,000,000 per month. Some 4,000 employees have been discharged, useless in most instances. I am a member of this committee, and I admire the frankness of the members of the Shipping Board in exposing the weaknesses of that board, and I think the Shipping Board is to be commended for what they have done in bringing down this tremendous cost and endeavoring to do what they can for an American merchant marine.

I think there is no question but that all of us here want an American merchant marine. We have tried private ownership and it has failed. My good friend from Texas [Mr. HARDY] goes on in a theoretical way to tell us that we will somehow have it, but we have not got it. The merchant marine has declined for 50 years. Then we tried Government control and Government ownership, and that was a failure. In my judgment it is a failure for this reason: I do not believe that any company or Government can handle a merchant marine unless it has the right to buy cargoes to bring back in its ships, and the Government of the United States may send out its ships loaded, but they come back empty because the Government can not buy cargoes and bring them back.

If those cargoes are sold for no greater amount than merely enough to pay the freight, in addition to the actual cost of the cargoes, they come out whole on the cargo; thus the private concern can outmaneuver the Government owned concern. Both private ownership and Government ownership have failed, and so we have left Government assistance to privately owned boats. Who will benefit by this? A great deal has been said about the farmers. I know that my farmers will benefit because they will get transportation which they need. Glancing casually over the exports of this country I was surprised to find that for over 50 years over 50 per cent of the exports of the United States have been farm products. In 1855 they amounted to 77 per cent, in 1860 to 82 per cent, running down to 1900, 61 per cent, and in 1910 they were 50 per cent.

In 1919, 56 per cent of the cotton of the United States was exported and 23½ per cent of the wheat was exported. And, taking the average of 10 years, the cotton export was 55.1 per cent of our crop raised, while the wheat export was 23.1 per cent of our crop. And I say to the gentleman from Ohio who spoke a moment ago that no wonder his farmers will support him if he will stand up and tell those farmers the truth. I have never listened to a debate or argument where there has been so many extravagant statements and so many half truths told as here. The bugaboo is held before us of serving private interests—subsidy. One statement was made that if the Leviathan were taken over we would pay in subsidy on that boat very considerably over $1,000,000 a year. That statement is made utterly disregarding the fact that in this bill we have this provision:

(b) Whenever the board determines that the rate of compensation authorized under section 404 is excessive under the special circumstances of any particular case, it shall, in making the contract for compensation, provide therein for the decrease of the rate of compensation to such an extent as it deem advisable.

I have not been here long, but I believe most officials are honest and try to do what is right, and I believe that when any vessel is to get too much money under this bill any administration, whether this administration or any other, will take that section of the bill and make a contract so the terms in reference to that vessel will be fair. The most ridiculous statements, however, were made in the speech of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARN] yesterday, who inserted in the Record a newspaper editorial. He incorporated it as a part of his speech, and I therefore infer he approved the statements made therein. I can not refer to all the misstatements, but let us take a few. One is:

The President did not say that only the owners of ships running on regular lines would receive subsidy.

Well, of course he did not say it because it is not true, and I say to this House that before you vote on this measure for heaven's sake take the bill and read it and see what is in the bill itself. Another statement is made:

Those shipowners who enjoy subsidies—but no other American shipowner—could deduct from their income taxes their profits on the operation of the ships.

There is absolutely nothing in the bill which limits the tax exemption of shipowners receiving a subsidy. Take another statement.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREE. I have not the time.

As in the case of the Standard Oil Co.—of the cargoes of ships, 5 per cent of the estimated freight that they paid themselves for hauling their oil.

Section 200 of the bill does not permit a shipowner to transport his property and get 5 per cent of the tax credit. It is only for money paid. Furthermore, the section contains a careful provision to prevent the claiming of the credit by any shipper who is in any way affiliated with the shipowner.

One more:

The President did not say that the "tramp ship," which is what Great Britain and every other country means by the expression "merchant marine," will not get one penny of subsidy under this proposed bill, and their owners will not get any rebate, drawback, or exemptions, or other handouts from, through, or by the Treasury.

That is absolutely false. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] a moment ago told you that statement was false, and yet that is the sort of thing that is put in as an argument against this bill. Now, in reference to the gentleman's statement as to Rosbottom handling the various lines. He has been very emphatic that Rosbottom has handled his lines at a profit and would handle these lines at a profit. Let me give you the figures:

United States Line's figures, showing results of operation under commercial conditions.
(P. 363, hearings.)

Outcome for four months:

September-December, inclusive, 1921 (this does not include repairs nor any fixed charges).....	$535,000
Repairs.....	138,500

Surplus to meet fixed charges.....	396,500
Surplus per month.....	99,125
Surplus per year.....	1,189,500

This figure is what under commercial operation would cover interest, insurance, and depreciation, which can be estimated at a minimum of 15 per cent per annum upon the book value of the vessel. As it is difficult to state just what the book value of that fleet was, the 106,500 gross tons of ships whose operating results are given are estimated at two extremes—a book value of $10,000,000 and a book value of $20,000,000.

At book value of $10,000,000:
Annual fixed charges, at 15 per cent.....	$1,500,000
Surplus available to meet this fixed charge.....	1,189,500

Annual deficit.....	310,500
---------------------	---------

At book value of $20,000,000:
Annual fixed charges, at 15 per cent.....	3,000,000
Surplus available to meet this fixed charge.....	1,189,500

Annual deficit.....	1,810,500
---------------------	-----------

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREE. I have not the time.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I just wanted to say there was included in that some old ships which were no good.

Mr. FREE. Three alone cost $7,000,000 each. The gentleman is not claiming that $10,000,000 is an overestimate?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Some are old ships that lost money and would have lost money under any conditions, and they were charged up; still you have them.

Mr. FREE. Now what have we before us? No matter how favorable you may stretch your imagination you have got to agree that we have no merchant marine that is privately owned. You have got to agree that for 50 years our merchant marine has been going to nothing. You have got to admit that we have no marine. How are we going to get one? We are proposing something constructive which we figure will cost less than we are paying at the present time. What does the opposition offer? The gentleman from Tennessee on yesterday offered this: That we keep these ships that we have and maintain the expensive organization which we have and hold those ships until such time as private owners will take them over. You know and I know that is impossible, because if private owners could not handle them for 50 years they are not going to come in and take ships off our hands in that way. The result would be these ships would deteriorate from year to year and we would have no merchant marine. The only other suggestion that comes out of the opposition is the one of the gentleman from Texas, who says that the way to meet this situation is to buy our ships in Europe.

Personally, I believe in home production. I believe in the maintenance of our factories and our mills and our shipyards and our farms in this country, and I have never been able to get through my poor head how we can build up as a people if we buy manufactured things abroad, if we pull our trees out of the ground, and quit growing our products and buy our stuff abroad. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have followed this debate very closely and very carefully in the hope that some of those who are opposed to the pending measure might propose something in the way of a substitute for it.

I assume that something must be done. There was a time when the question of the establishment of an American merchant marine savored largely of theory. We had no merchant marine worth the name, and the question was, first, was it worth our while to attempt to build up an American merchant marine and, second, could that be accomplished at any cost that the people could afford or were willing to pay?

On the questions thus presented there was a very considerable difference of opinion. First, there was the natural objection—the objection which finds lodgment in the hearts of all men—to Government subsidy if it can be avoided and, second, the question as to whether or no, if a subsidy were paid, the result sought would be secured. From these viewpoints of doubt and questioning there came to be, and there was, I think in the country, a majority—not a large one, but something of a majority—unfavorable to what was known as the ship subsidy bill or ship subsidy proposition.

But we are no longer confronted wholly with a theory. We have before us a condition; a condition requiring action; a condition which we can not dodge and can not blink; a condition which we can not close our eyes upon, and which, as honest men and as legislators charged with responsibility, we must settle or attempt to settle one way or another.

During the war we set out to build a bridge of boats. We did the work, as we did most of the work, as perhaps it is inevitable most work must be done in time of war, in a very expensive way. We paid out the money of the American people in a sum aggregating nearly $3,000,000,000 for the building and for the management and maintenance of a fleet.

We have the major portion of that fleet, costing $3,000,000,000, on hand. We are trying to operate it through governmental agencies. We are operating it as far as we can under present conditions and under our present plan, and we are able to keep in commission only about one-third of the steel ships of the fleet. It cost us about $150,000,000 annually to operate the fleet over and above all income until the present administration took charge of affairs. By putting into effect first-class business methods, by bringing to our aid first-class shipping men familiar with the shipping trade, we reduced the cost of the fleet, the actual outlay, to $50,000,000 per annum.

But we are utilizing only a third of the fleet, and the balance lies rotting in our harbors. If we utilize more, it would cost us more; and as we utilize less the depreciation of the ships tied up increases the loss to the people.

What are we going to do about it? One gentleman who discussed the matter seemed to rise no further than to view the whole proposition from the standpoint of the now very common slogan of "safety first." His mind, instead of dwelling on the problem as one that must be solved and settled in some way, seemed to be entirely taken up with the question of personal political fortunes. He thought not of the problem of the fleet but of a political life raft or lifeboat.

